transportation. Legislation of this character began with the first General Assembly (1819), and continued, at intervals, with reference to one or two of the more important interior rivers of the State, as late as 1867. Besides the Illinois and Wabash, still recognized as navigable streams, the following were made the subject of legislation of this character: Beaucoup Creek, a branch of the Big Muddy, in Perry and Jackson Counties (law of 1819); Big Bay, a tributary of the Ohio in Pope County (Acts of 1833); Big Muddy, to the junction of the East and West Forks in Jefferson County (1835), with various subsequent amendments; Big Vermilion, declared navigable (1831); Bon Pas, a branch of the Wabash, between Wabash and Edwards Counties (1831); Cache River, to main fork in Johnson County (1819); Des Plaines, declared navigable (1839); Embarras (1831), with various subsequent acts in reference to improvement; Fox River, declared navigable to the Wisconsin line (1840), and Fox River Navigation Company, incorporated (1855); Kankakee and Iroquois Navigation & Manufacturing Company, incorporated (1847), with various changes and amendments (1851-65); Kaskaskia (or Okaw), declared navigable to a point in Fayette County north of Vandalia (1819), with various modifying acts (1823-67); Macoupin Creek, to Carrollton and Alton road (1837); Piassa, declared navigable in Jersey and Madison Counties (1861); Rock River Navigation Company, incorporated (1841), with subsequent acts (1845-67); Sangamon River, declared navigable to Third Principal Meridian—east line of Sangamon County—(1822), and the North Fork of same to Champaign County (1845); Sny-Carty (a bayou of the Mississippi), declared navigable in Pike and Adams Counties (1859); Spoon River, navigable to Cameron's mill in Fulton County (1835), with various modifying acts (1845-53); Little Wabash Navigation Company, incorporated and river declared navigable to McCawley's bridge—probably in Clay County—(1826), with various subsequent acts making appropriations for its improvement; Skillet Fork (a branch of the Little Wabash), declared navigable to Slocum's Mill in Marion County (1837), and to Ridgway Mills (1846). Other acts passed at various times declared a number of unimportant streams navigable, including Big Creek in Fulton County, Crooked Creek in Schuyler County, Lusk's Creek in Pope County, McKee's Creek in Pike County, Seven Mile Creek in Ogle County, besides a number of others* of similar character.

NEALE, THOMAS M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Fauquier County, Va., 1796; while yet a child removed with his parents to Bowling Green, Ky., and became a common soldier in the War of 1812; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1824, and began the practice of law; served as Colonel of a regiment raised in Sangamon and Morgan Counties for the Winnebago War (1837), and afterwards as Surveyor of Sangamon County, appointing Abraham Lincoln as his deputy. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, for a number of years, at Springfield. Died, August 7, 1840.

NEECE, William H., ex-Congressman, was born, Feb. 26, 1831, in what is now a part of Logan County, Ill., but which was then within the limits of Sangamon; was reared on a farm and attended the public schools in McDonough County; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1858, and has been ever since engaged in practice. His political career began in 1861, when he was chosen a member of the City Council of Macomb. In 1864 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1869, a member of the Constitutional Convention. In 1871 he was again elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1878, to the State Senate. From 1883 to 1887 he represented the Eleventh Illinois District in Congress, as a Democrat, but was defeated for re-election in 1890 by William H. Gest, Republican.

NEGROES. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

NEOGA, a village of Cumberland County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 20 miles southwest of Charleston; has a bank, two newspapers, some manufactories, and ships grain, hay, fruit and live-stock. Pop. (1890), 829; (1900), 1,126.

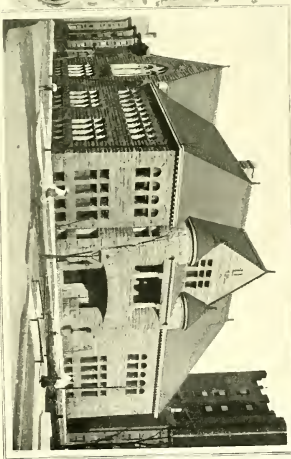

NEPONSET, a village and station on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, in Bureau County, 4 miles southwest of Mendota. Population (1880), 652; (1890), 542; (1900), 516.

NEW ALBANY & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

NEW ATHENS, a village of St. Clair County, on the St. Louis & Cairo "Short Line" (now Illinois Central) Railroad, at the crossing of the Kaskaskia River, 31 miles southeast of St. Louis; has one newspaper and considerable grain trade. Population (1880), 603; (1890), 624; (1900), 856.

NEW BERLIN, a village of Sangamon County, on the Wabash Railway, 17 miles west of Springfield. Population (1880), 403; (1900), 533.

Newberry, an early business man of Chicago, who left half of his estate (aggregating over $2,000,000) for the purpose. The property bequeathed was largely in real estate, which has since greatly increased in value. The library was established in temporary quarters in 1887, and the first section of a permanent building was opened in the autumn of 1893. By that time there had been accumulated about 160,000 books and pamphlets. A collection of nearly fifty portraits—chiefly of eminent Americans, including many citizens of Chicago—was presented to the library by G. P. A. Healy, a distinguished artist, since deceased. The site of the building occupies an entire block, and the original design contemplates a handsome front on each of the four streets, with a large rectangular court in the center. The section already completed is massive and imposing, and its interior is admirably adapted to the purposes of a library, and at the same time rich and beautiful. When completed, the building will have a capacity for four to six million volumes.

NEWBERRY, Walter C., ex-Congressman, was born at Sangerfield, Oneida County, N. Y., Dec. 23, 1835. Early in the Civil War he enlisted as a private, and rose, step by step, to a colonelcy, and was mustered out as Brevet Brigadier-General. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Fourth Illinois District in the Fifty-second Congress (1891-93). His home is in Chicago.

NEWBERRY, Walter L., merchant, banker and philanthropist, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Sept. 18, 1804, descended from English ancestry. He was President Jackson's personal appointee to the United States Military Academy at West Point, but was prevented from taking the examination by sickness. Subsequently he embarked in business at Buffalo, N. Y., going to Detroit in 1828, and settling at Chicago in 1833. After engaging in general merchandising for several years, he turned his attention to banking, in which he accumulated a large fortune. He was a prominent and influential citizen, serving several terms as President of the Board of Education, and being, for six years, the President of the Chicago Historical Society. He died at sea, Nov. 6, 1863, leaving a large estate, one-half of which he devoted, by will, to the founding of a free reference library in Chicago. (See Newberry Library.)

NEW BOSTON, a city of Mercer County, on the Mississippi River, at the western terminus of the Galva and New Boston Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway. Population (1890), 445; (1900), 703.

NEW BRIGHTON, a village of St. Clair County and suburb of East St. Louis. Population (1890), 868.

NEW BURNSIDE, a village of Johnson County, on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 53 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1880), 650; (1890), 596; (1900), 468.

NEW DOUGLAS, a village in Madison County, on the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad; in farming and fruit-growing region; has coal mine, flour mill and newspaper. Population (1900), 469.

NEWELL, John, Railway President, was born at West Newbury, Mass., March 31, 1830, being directly descended from "Pilgrim" stock. At the age of 16 he entered the employment of the Cheshire Railroad in New Hampshire. Eighteen months later he was appointed an assistant engineer on the Vermont Central Railroad, and placed in charge of the construction of a 10-mile section of the line. His promotion was rapid, and, in 1850, he accepted a responsible position on the Champlain & St. Lawrence Railroad. From 1850 to 1856 he was engaged in making surveys for roads in Kentucky and New York, and, during the latter year, held the position of engineer of the Cairo City Company, of Cairo, Ill. In 1857 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, as Division Engineer, where his remarkable success attracted the attention of the owners of the old Winona & St. Peter Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern system), who tendered him the presidency. This he accepted, but, in 1864, was made President of the Cleveland & Toledo Railroad. Four years later, he accepted the position of General Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the New York Central Railroad, but resigned, in 1869, to become Vice-President of the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1871 he was elevated to the presidency, but retired in September, 1874, to accept the position of General Manager of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad, of which he was elected President, in May, 1883, and continued in office until the time of his death, which occurred at Youngstown, Ohio, August 25, 1894.

NEWHALL, (Dr.) Horatio, early physician and newspaper publisher, came from St. Louis, Mo., to Galena, Ill., in 1827, and engaged in mining and smelting, but abandoned this business, the following year, for the practice of his profession; soon afterward became interested in the publication of "The Miners' Journal," and still later in "The Galena Advertiser," with which Hooper Warren and Dr. Philleo were associated.

In 1830 he became a Surgeon in the United States Army, and was stationed at Fort Winnebago, but retired from the service, in 1832, and returned to Galena. When the Black Hawk War broke out he volunteered his services, and, by order of General Scott, was placed in charge of a military hospital at Galena, of which he had control until the close of the war. The difficulties of the position were increased by the appearance of the Asiatic cholera among the troops, but he seems to have discharged his duties with satisfaction to the military authorities. He enjoyed a wide reputation for professional ability, and had an extensive practice. Died, Sept. 19, 1870.

NEWMAN, a village of Douglas County, on the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railway, 52 miles east of Decatur; has a bank, a newspaper, canning factory, broom factory, electric lights, and large trade in agricultural products and livestock. Population (1890), 990; (1900), 1,166.

NEWSPAPERS, EARLY. The first newspaper published in the Northwest Territory, of which the present State of Illinois, at the time, composed a part, was "The Centinel of the Northwest Territory," established at Cincinnati by William Maxwell, the first issue appearing in November, 1793. This was also the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. In 1796 it was sold to Edmund Freeman and assumed the name of "Freeman's Journal." Nathaniel Willis (grandfather of N. P. Willis, the poet) established "The Scioto Gazette," at Chillicothe, in 1796. "The Western Spy and Hamilton Gazette" was the third paper in Northwest Territory (also within the limits of Ohio), founded in 1799. Willis's paper became the organ of the Territorial Government on the removal of the capital to Chillicothe, in 1800.

The first newspaper in Indiana Territory (then including Illinois) was established by Elihu Stout at Vincennes, beginning publication, July 4, 1804. It took the name of "The Western Sun and General Advertiser," but is now known as "The Western Sun," having had a continuous existence for ninety-five years.

The first newspaper published in Illinois Territory was "The Illinois Herald," but, owing to the absence of early files and other specific records, the date of its establishment has been involved in some doubt. Its founder was Matthew Duncan (a brother of Joseph Duncan, who was afterwards a member of Congress and Governor of the State from 1834 to 1838), and its place of publication Kaskaskia, at that time the Territorial capital. Duncan, who was a native of Kentucky, brought a press and a primitive printer's outfit with him from that State. Gov. John Reynolds, who came as a boy to the "Illinois Country" in 1800, while it was still a part of the "Northwest Territory," in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," has fixed the date of the first issue of this paper in 1809, the same year in which Illinois was severed from Indiana Territory and placed under a separate Territorial Government. There is good reason, however, for believing that the Governor was mistaken in this statement. If Duncan brought his press to Illinois in 1809—which is probable—it does not seem to have been employed at once in the publication of a newspaper, as Hooper Warren (the founder of the third paper established in Illinois) says it "was for years only used for the public printing." The earliest issue of "The Illinois Herald" known to be in existence, is No. 32 of Vol. II, and bears date, April 18, 1816. Calculating from these data, if the paper was issued continuously from its establishment, the date of the first issue would have been Sept. 6, 1814. Corroborative evidence of this is found in the fact that "The Missouri Gazette," the original of the old "Missouri Republican" (now "The St. Louis Republic"), which was established in 1808, makes no mention of the Kaskaskia paper before 1814, although communication between Kaskaskia and St. Louis was most intimate, and these two were, for several years, the only papers published west of Vincennes, Ind.

In August, 1817, "The Herald" was sold to Daniel P. Cook and Robert Blackwell, and the name of the paper was changed to "The Illinois Intelligencer." Cook—who had previously been Auditor of Public Accounts for the Territory, and afterwards became a Territorial Circuit Judge, the first Attorney-General under the new State Government, and, for eight years, served as the only Representative in Congress from Illinois—for a time officiated as editor of "The Intelligencer," while Blackwell (who had succeeded to the Auditorship) had charge of the publication. The size of the paper, which had been four pages of three wide columns to the page, was increased, by the new publishers, to four columns to the page. On the removal of the State capital to Vandalia, in 1820, "The Intelligencer" was removed thither also, and continued under its later name, afterwards becoming, after a change of management, an opponent of the scheme for the calling of a State Convention to revise the State Constitution with a view to making Illinois a slave State. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

The second paper established on Illinois soil was "The Shawnee Chief," which began publication at Shawneetown, Sept. 5, 1818, with Henry Eddy—who afterwards became a prominent lawyer of Southern Illinois—as its editor. The name of "The Chief" was soon afterwards changed to "The Illinois Emigrant," and some years later, became "The Shawneetown Gazette." Among others who were associated with the Shawneetown paper, in early days, was James Hall, afterwards a Circuit Judge and State Treasurer, and, without doubt, the most prolific and popular writer of his day in Illinois. Later, he established "The Illinois Magazine" at Vandalia, subsequently removed to Cincinnati, and issued under the name of "The Western Monthly Magazine." He was also a frequent contributor to other magazines of that period, and author of several volumes, including "Legends of the West" and "Border Tales." During the contest over the slavery question, in 1823-24, "The Gazette" rendered valuable service to the anti-slavery party by the publication of articles in opposition to the Convention scheme, from the pen of Morris Birkbeck and others.

The third Illinois paper—and, in 1823-24, the strongest and most influential opponent of the scheme for establishing slavery in Illinois—was "The Edwardsville Spectator," which began publication at Edwardsville, Madison County, May 23, 1819. Hooper Warren was the publisher and responsible editor, though he received valuable aid from the pens of Governor Coles, George Churchill, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, Morris Birkbeck and others. (See Warren, Hooper.) Warren sold "The Spectator" to Rev. Thomas Lippincott in 1825, and was afterwards associated with papers at Springfield, Galena, Chicago and elsewhere.

The agitation of the slavery question (in part, at least) led to the establishment of two new papers in 1822. The first of these was "The Republican Advocate," which began publication at Kaskaskia, in April of that year, under the management of Elias Kent Kane, then an aspirant to the United States Senatorship. After his election to that office in 1824, "The Advocate" passed into the hands of Robert K. Fleming, who, after a period of suspension, established "The Kaskaskia Recorder," but, a year or two later, removed to Vandalia. "The Star of the West" was established at Edwardsville, as an opponent of Warren's "Spectator," the first issue making its appearance, Sept. 14, 1822, with Theophilus W. Smith, afterwards a Justice of the Supreme Court, as its reputed editor. A few months later it passed into new hands, and, in August, 1823, assumed the name of "The Illinois Republican." Both "The Republican Advocate" and "The Illinois Republican" were zealous organs of the pro-slavery party.

With the settlement of the slavery question in Illinois, by the election of 1824, Illinois journalism may be said to have entered upon a new era. At the close of this first period there were only five papers published in the State—all established within a period of ten years; and one of these ("The Illinois Republican," at Edwardsville) promptly ceased publication on the settlement of the slavery question in opposition to the views which it had advocated. The next period of fifteen years (1825-40) was prolific in the establishment of new newspaper ventures, as might be expected from the rapid increase of the State in population, and the development in the art of printing during the same period. "The Western Sun," established at Belleville (according to one report, in December, 1825, and according to another, in the winter of 1827-28) by Dr. Joseph Green, appears to have been the first paper published in St. Clair County. This was followed by "The Pioneer," begun, April 25, 1829, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, with the indomitable Dr. John M. Peck, author of "Peck's Gazetteer," as its editor. It was removed in 1836 to Upper Alton, when it took the name of "The Western Pioneer and Baptist Banner." Previous to this, however, Hooper Warren, having come into possession of the material upon which he had printed "The Edwardsville Spectator," removed it to Springfield, and, in the winter of 1826-27, began the publication of the first paper at the present State capital, which he named "The Sangamo Gazette." It had but a brief existence. During 1830, George Forquer, then Attorney-General of the State, in conjunction with his half-brother, Thomas Ford (afterwards Governor), was engaged in the publication of a paper called "The Courier," at Springfield, which was continued only a short time. The earliest paper north of Springfield appears to have been "The Hennepin Journal," which began publication, Sept. 15, 1827. "The Sangamo Journal"—now "The Illinois State Journal," and the oldest paper of continuous existence in the State—was established at Springfield by Simeon and Josiah Francis (cousins from Connecticut), the first issue bearing date, Nov. 10, 1831. Before the close of the same year James G. Edwards, afterwards the founder of "The Burlington (Iowa) Hawkeye," began the publication of "The Illinois Patriot" at Jacksonville. Another paper, established the same year, was "The Gazette" at Vandalia, then the State capital. (See Forquer, George; Ford, Thomas; Francis, Simeon.)

At this early date the development of the lead mines about Galena had made that place a center of great business activity. On July 8, 1828, James Jones commenced the issue of "The Miners' Journal," the first paper at Galena. Jones died of cholera in 1833, and his paper passed into other hands. July 20, 1829, "The Galena Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald" began publication, with Drs. Horatio Newhall and Addison Phillee as editors, and Hooper Warren as publisher, but appears to have been discontinued before the expiration of its first year. "The Galenian" was established as a Democratic paper by Phillee, in May, 1832, but ceased publication in September, 1836. "The Northwestern Gazette and Galena Advertiser," founded in November, 1834, by Loring and Bartlett (the last named afterwards one of the founders of "The Quincy Whig"), has had a continuous existence, being now known as "The Galena Advertiser." Benjamin Mills, one of the most brilliant lawyers of his time, was editor of this paper during a part of the first year of its publication.

Robert K. Fleming, who has already been mentioned as the successor of Elias Kent Kane in the publication of "The Republican Advocate," at Kaskaskia, later published a paper for a short time at Vandalia, but, in 1827, removed his establishment to Edwardsville, where he began the publication of "The Corrector." The latter was continued a little over a year, when it was suspended. He then resumed the publication of "The Recorder" at Kaskaskia. In December, 1833, he removed to Belleville and began the publication of "The St. Clair Gazette," which afterwards passed, through various changes of owners, under the names of "The St. Clair Mercury" and "Representative and Gazette." This was succeeded, in 1839, by "The Belleville Advocate," which has been published continuously to the present time.

Samuel S. Brooks (the father of Austin Brooks, afterwards of "The Quincy Herald") at different times published papers at various points in the State. His first enterprise was "The Crisis" at Edwardsville, which he changed to "The Illinois Advocate," and, at the close of his first year, sold out to Judge John York Sawyer, who united it with "The Western Plowboy," which he had established a few months previous. "The Advocate" was removed to Vandalia, and, on the death of the owner (who had been appointed State Printer), was consolidated with "The Illinois Register," which had been established in 1836. The new paper took the name of "The Illinois Register and People's Advocate," in 1839 was removed to Springfield, and is now known as "The Illinois State Register."

Other papers established between 1830 and 1840 include: "The Vandalia Whig" (1831); "The Alton Spectator," the first paper published in Alton (January, 1834); "The Chicago Democrat," by John Calhoun (Nov. 26, 1833); "The Beardstown Chronicle and Illinois Bounty Land Advertiser," by Francis A. Arenz (July 29, 1833); "The Alton American" (1833); "The White County News," at Carmi (1833); "The Danville Enquirer" (1833); "The Illinois Champion," at Peoria (1834); "The Mount Carmel Sentinel and Wabash Advocate" (1834); "The Illinois State Gazette and Jacksonville News," at Jacksonville (1835); "The Illinois Argus and Bounty Land Register," at Quincy (1835); "The Rushville Journal and Military Tract Advertiser" (1835); "The Alton Telegraph" (1836); "The Alton Observer" (1836); "The Carthaginian," at Carthage (1836); "The Bloomington Observer" (1837); "The Backwoodsman," founded by Prof. John Russell, at Grafton, and the first paper published in Greene County (1837); "The Quincy Whig" (1838); "The Illinois Statesman," at Paris, Edgar County (1838); "The Peoria Register" (1838). The second paper to be established in Chicago was "The Chicago American," whose initial number was issued, June 8, 1835, with Thomas O. Davis as proprietor and editor. In July, 1837, it passed into the hands of William Stuart & Co., and, on April 9, 1839, its publishers began the issue of the first daily ever published in Chicago. "The Chicago Express" succeeded "The American" in 1842, and, in 1844, became the forerunner of "The Chicago Journal." The third Chicago paper was "The Commercial Advertiser," founded by Hooper Warren, in 1836. It lived only about a year. Zebina Eastman, who was afterwards associated with Warren, and became one of the most influential journalistic opponents of slavery, arrived in the State in 1839, and, in the latter part of that year, was associated with the celebrated Abolitionist, Benjamin Lundy, in the preliminary steps for the issue of "The Genius of Universal Emancipation," projected by Lundy at Lowell, in La Salle County. Lundy's untimely death, in August, 1839, however, prevented him from seeing the consummation of his plan, although Eastman lived to carry it out in part. A paper whose career, although extending only a little over one year, marked an era in Illinois journalism, was "The Alton Observer," its history closing with the assassination of its editor, Rev. Elijah P. Lovejoy, on the night of Nov. 8, 1837, while unsuccessfully attempting to protect his press from destruction, for the fourth time, by a pro-slavery mob. Humiliating as was this crime to every law-abiding Illinoisan, it undoubtedly strengthened the cause of free speech and assisted in hastening the downfall of the institution in whose behalf it was committed.

That the development in the field of journalism, within the past sixty years, has more than kept pace with the growth in population, is shown by the fact that there is not a county in the State without its newspaper, while every town of a few hundred population has either one or more. According to statistics for 1898, there were 605 cities and towns in the State having periodical publications of some sort, making a total of 1,709, of which 174 were issued daily, 34 semi-weekly, 1,205 weekly, 28 semi-monthly, 238 monthly, and the remainder at various periods ranging from tri-weekly to eight times a year.

NEWTON, the county-seat of Jasper County, situated on the Embarras River, at the intersection of subsidiary lines of the Illinois Central Railroad from Peoria and Effingham; is an incorporated city, was settled in 1828, and made the county-seat in 1836. Agriculture, coal-mining and dairy farming are the principal pursuits in the surrounding region. The city has water-power, which is utilized to some extent in manufacturing, but most of its factories are operated by steam. Among these establishments are flour and saw mills, and grain elevators. There are a half-dozen churches, a good public school system, including parochial school and high school, besides two banks and three weekly papers. Population (1890), 1,428; (1900), 1,630.

NEW YORK, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY (Nickel Plate), a line 522.47 miles in length, of which (1898) only 9.96 miles are operated in Illinois. It owns no track in Illinois, but uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad (9.96 miles in length), of which it has financial control, to enter the city of Chicago. The total capitalization of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis, in 1898, is $50,222,568, of which $19,425,000 is in bonds.—(HISTORY.) The New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad was incorporated under the laws of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois in 1881, construction begun immediately, and the road put in operation in 1882. In 1885 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1887, and reorganized by the consolidation of various eastern lines with the Fort Wayne & Illinois Railroad, forming the line under its present name. The road between Buffalo, N. Y., and the west line of Indiana is owned by the Company, but, for its line in Illinois, it uses the track of the Chicago & State Line Railroad, of which it is the lessee, as well as the owner of its capital stock. The main line of the "Nickel Plate" is controlled by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway, which owns more than half of both the preferred and common stock.

NIANTIC, a town in Macon County, on the Wabash Railway, 27 miles east of Springfield. Agriculture is the leading industry. The town has three elevators, three churches, school, coal mine, a newspaper and a bank. Pop. (1900), 654.

NICOLAY, John George, author, was born in Essingen, Bavaria, Feb. 26, 1832; at 6 years of age was brought to the United States, lived for a time in Cincinnati, attending the public schools there, and then came to Illinois; at 16 entered the office of "The Pike County Free Press" at Pittsfield, and, while still in his minority, became editor and proprietor of the paper. In 1857 he became Assistant Secretary of State under O. M. Hatch, the first Republican Secretary, but during Mr. Lincoln's candidacy for President, in 1860, aided him as private secretary, also acting as a correspondent of "The St. Louis Democrat." After the election he was formally selected by Mr. Lincoln as his private secretary, accompanying him to Washington and remaining until Mr. Lincoln's assassination. In 1865 he was appointed United States Consul at Paris, remaining until 1869; on his return for some time edited "The Chicago Republican"; was also Marshal of the United States Supreme Court in Washington from 1872 to 1887. Mr. Nicolay is author, in collaboration with John Hay, of "Abraham Lincoln: A History," first published serially in "The Century Magazine," and later issued in ten volumes; of "The Outbreak of the Rebellion" in "Campaigns of the Civil War," besides numerous magazine articles. He lives in Washington, D. C.

NICOLET, Jean, early French explorer, came from Cherbourg, France, in 1618, and, for several years, lived among the Algonquins, whose language he learned and for whom he acted as interpreter. On July 4, 1634, he discovered Lake Michigan, then called the "Lake of the Illinois," and visited the Chippewas, Menominees and Winnebagoes, in the region about Green Bay, among whom he was received kindly. From the Mascoutins, on the Fox River (of Wisconsin), he learned of the Illinois Indians, some of whose northern villages he also visited. He subsequently returned to Quebec, where he was drowned, in October, 1642. He was probably the first Caucasian to visit Wisconsin and Illinois.

NILES, Nathaniel, lawyer, editor and soldier, born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1817; attended an academy at Albany, from 1830 to '34, was licensed to practice law and removed west in 1837, residing successively at Delphi and Frankfort, Ind., and at Owensboro, Ky., until 1842, when he settled in Belleville, Ill. In 1846 he was commissioned a First Lieutenant in the Second Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Colonel Bissell's) for the Mexican War, but, after the battle of Buena Vista, was promoted by General Wool to the captaincy of an independent company of Texas foot. He was elected Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives at the session of 1849, and the same year was chosen County Judge of St. Clair County, serving until 1861. With the exception of brief periods from 1851 to '59, he was editor and part owner of "The Belleville Advocate," a paper originally Democratic, but which became Republican on the organization of the Republican party. In 1861 he was appointed Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but the completion of its organization having been delayed, he resigned, and, the following year, was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirtieth, serving until May, 1864, when he resigned—in March, 1865, receiving the compliment of a brevet Brigadier-Generalship. During the winter of 1862-63 he was in command at Memphis, but later took part in the Vicksburg campaign, and in the campaigns on Red River and Bayou Teche. After the war he served as Representative in the General Assembly from St. Clair County (1865-66); as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; on the Commission for building the State Penitentiary at Joliet, and as Commissioner (by appointment of Governor Oglesby) for locating the Soldiers' Orphans' Home. His later years have been spent chiefly in the practice of his profession, with occasional excursions into journalism. Originally an anti-slavery Democrat, he became one of the founders of the Republican party in Southern Illinois.

NIXON, William Penn, journalist, Collector of Customs, was born in Wayne County, Ind., of North Carolina and Quaker ancestry, early in 1832. In 1853 he graduated from Farmers' (now Belmont) College, near Cincinnati, Ohio. After devoting two years to teaching, he entered the law department of the University of Pennsylvania (1855), graduating in 1859. For nine years thereafter he practiced law at Cincinnati, during which period he was thrice elected to the Ohio Legislature. In 1868 he embarked in journalism, he and his older brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, with a few friends, founding "The Cincinnati Chronicle." A few years later "The Times" was purchased, and the two papers were consolidated under the name of "The Times-Chronicle." In May, 1872, having disposed of his interests in Cincinnati, he assumed the business management of "The Chicago Inter Ocean," then a new venture and struggling for a foothold. In 1875 he and his brother, Dr. O. W. Nixon, secured a controlling interest in the paper, when the former assumed the position of editor-in-chief, which he continued to occupy until 1897, when he was appointed Collector of Customs for the City of Chicago—a position which he now holds.

NOKOMIS, a city of Montgomery County, on the "Big Four" main line and "Frisco" Railroads, 81 miles east by north from St. Louis and 52 miles west of Mattoon; in important grain-growing and hay-producing section; has water-works, electric lights, three flour mills, two machine shops, wagon factory, creamery, seven churches, high school, two banks and three papers; is noted for shipments of poultry, butter and eggs. Population (1890), 1,305; (1900), 1,371.

NORMAL, a city in McLean County, 2 miles north of Bloomington and 124 southwest of Chicago; at intersecting point of the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads. It lies in a rich coal and agricultural region, and has extensive fruit-tree nurseries, two canning factories, one bank, hospital, and four periodicals. It is the seat of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, founded in 1869, and the Illinois State Normal University, founded in 1857; has city and rural mail delivery. Pop. (1890), 3,459; (1900), 3,795.

NORMAL UNIVERSITIES. (See Southern Illinois Normal University; State Normal University.)

NORTH ALTON, a village of Madison County and suburb of the city of Alton. Population (1880), 838; (1890), 762; (1900), 904.

NORTHCOTT, William A., Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 28, 1854—the son of Gen. R. S. Northcott, whose loyalty to the Union, at the beginning of the Rebellion, compelled him to leave his Southern home and seek safety for himself and family in the North. He went to West Virginia, was commissioned Colonel of a regiment and served through the war, being for some nine months a prisoner in Libby Prison. After acquiring his literary education in the public schools, the younger Northcott spent some time in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., after which he was engaged in teaching. Meanwhile, he was preparing for the practice of law and was admitted to the bar in 1877, two years later coming to Greenville, Bond County, Ill., which has since been his home. In 1880, by appointment of President Hayes, he served as Supervisor of the Census for the Seventh District; in 1882 was elected State's Attorney for Bond County and re-elected successively in '84 and '88; in 1890 was appointed on the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy, and, by selection of the Board, delivered the annual address to the graduating class of that year. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Congress for the Eighteenth District, but was defeated in the general landslide of that year. In 1896 he was more fortunate, being elected Lieutenant-Governor by the vote of the State, receiving a plurality of over 137,000 over his Democratic opponent.

NORTH PEORIA, formerly a suburban village in Peoria County, 2 miles north of the city of Peoria; annexed to the city of Peoria in 1900.

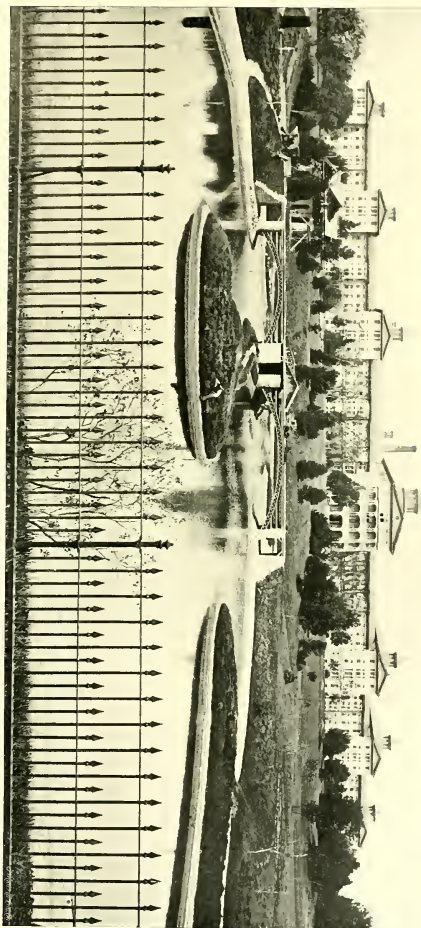

NORTHERN BOUNDARY QUESTION, THE. The Ordinance of 1787, making the first specific provision, by Congress, for the government of the country lying northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi (known as the Northwest Territory), provided, among other things (Art. V., Ordinance 1787), that "there shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three nor more than five States." It then proceeds to fix the boundaries of the proposed States, on the assumption that there shall be three in number, adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided, however, and it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan." On the basis of this provision it has been claimed that the northern boundaries of Illinois, Indiana and Ohio should have been on the exact latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan, and that the failure to establish this boundary was a violation of the Ordinance, inasmuch as the fourteenth section of the preamble thereto declares that "the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."—In the limited state of geographical knowledge, existing at the time of the adoption of the Ordinance, there seems to have been considerable difference of opinion as to the latitude of the southern limit of Lake Michigan. The map of Mitchell (1755) had placed it on the parallel of 42° 20', while that of Thomas Hutchins (1778) fixed it at 41° 37'. It was officially established by Government survey, in 1835, at 41° 37' 07.9". As a matter of fact, the northern boundary of neither of the three States named was finally fixed on the line mentioned in the proviso above quoted from the Ordinance—that of Ohio, where it meets the shore of Lake Erie, being a little north of 41° 44'; that of Indiana at 41° 46' (some 10 miles north of the southern bend of the lake), and that of Illinois at 42° 30'—about 61 miles north of the same line. The boundary line between Ohio and Michigan was settled after a bitter controversy, on the admission of the latter State into the Union, in 1837, in the acceptance by her of certain conditions proposed by Congress. These included the annexation to Michigan of what is known as the "Upper Peninsula," lying between Lakes Michigan and Superior, in lieu of a strip averaging six miles on her southern border, which she demanded from Ohio.—The establishment of the northern boundary of Illinois, in 1818, upon the line which now exists, is universally conceded to have been due to the action of Judge Nathaniel Pope, then the Delegate in Congress from Illinois Territory. While it was then acquiesced in without question, it has since been the subject of considerable controversy and has been followed by almost incalculable results. The "enabling act," as originally introduced early in 1818, empowering the people of Illinois Territory to form a State Government, fixed the northern boundary of the proposed State at 41° 39', then the supposed latitude of the southern extremity of Lake Michigan. While the act was under consideration in Committee of the Whole, Mr. Pope offered an amendment advancing the northern boundary to 42° 30'. The object of his amendment (as he explained) was to gain for the new State a coast line on Lake Michigan, bringing it into political and commercial relations with the States east of it—Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York—thus “affording additional security to the perpetuity of the Union.” He argued that the location of the State between the Mississippi, Wabash and Ohio Rivers—all flowing to the south—would bring it in intimate communication with the Southern States, and that, in the event of an attempted disruption of the Union, it was important that it should be identified with the commerce of the Lakes, instead of being left entirely to the waters of the south-flowing rivers. “Thus,” said he, “a rival interest would be created to check the wish for a Western or Southern Confederacy. Her interests would thus be balanced and her inclinations turned to the North.” He recognized Illinois as already “the key to the West,” and he evidently foresaw that the time might come when it would be the Keystone of the Union. While this evinced wonderful foresight, scarcely less convincing was his argument that, in time, a commercial emporium would grow up upon Lake Michigan, which would demand an outlet by means of a canal to the Illinois River—a work which was realized in the completion of the Illinois & Michigan Canal thirty years later, but which would scarcely have been accomplished had the State been practically cut off from the Lake and its chief emporium left to grow up in another commonwealth, or not at all. Judge Pope’s amendment was accepted without division, and, in this form, a few days later, the bill became a law.—The almost superhuman sagacity exhibited in Judge Pope’s argument, has been repeatedly illustrated in the commercial and political history of the State since, but never more significantly than in the commanding position which Illinois occupied during the late Civil War, with one of its citizens in the Presidential chair and another leading its 250,000 citizen soldiery and the armies of the Union in battling for the perpetuity of the Republic—a position which more than fulfilled every prediction made for it.—The territory affected by this settlement of the northern boundary, includes all that part of the State north of the northern line of La Salle County, and embraces the greater portion of the fourteen counties of Cook, Dupage, Kane, Lake, McHenry, Boone, DeKalb, Lee, Ogle, Winnebago, Stephenson, Jo Daviess, Carroll and Whiteside, with portions of Kendall, Will and Rock Island—estimated at 8,500 square miles, or more than one-seventh of the present area of the State. It has been argued that this territory belonged to the State of Wisconsin under the provisions of the Ordinance of 1787, and there were repeated attempts made, on the part of the Wisconsin Legislature and its Territorial Governor (Doty), between 1839 and 1843, to induce the people of these counties to recognize this claim. These were, in a few instances, partially successful, although no official notice was taken of them by the authorities of Illinois. The reply made to the Wisconsin claim by Governor Ford—who wrote his “History of Illinois” when the subject was fresh in the public mind—was that, while the Ordinance of 1787 gave Congress power to organize a State north of the parallel running through the southern bend of Lake Michigan, “there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring such additional State to be organized of the territory north of that line.” In other words, that, when Congress, in 1818, authorized the organization of an additional State north of and in (i. e., within) the line named, it did not violate the Ordinance of 1787, but acted in accordance with it—in practically assuming that the new State “need not necessarily include the whole of the region north of that line.” The question was set at rest by Wisconsin herself in the action of her Constitutional Convention of 1847-48, in framing her first constitution, in form recognizing the northern boundary of Illinois as fixed by the enabling act of 1818.

NORTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, created by Act of the Legislature, approved, April 16, 1869. The Commissioners appointed by Governor Palmer to fix its location consisted of August Adams, B. F. Shaw, W. R. Brown, M. L. Joslyn, D. S. Hammond and William Adams. After considering many offers and examining numerous sites, the Commissioners finally selected the Chisholm farm, consisting of about 155 acres, 1½ miles from Elgin, on the west side of Fox River, and overlooking that stream, as a site—this having been tendered as a donation by the citizens of Elgin. Plans were adopted in the latter part of 1869, the system of construction chosen conforming, in the main, to that of the United States Hospital for the Insane at Washington, D. C. By January, 1872, the north wing and rear building were so far advanced as to permit the reception of sixty patients. The center building was ready for occupancy in April, 1873, and the south wing before the end of the following year. The total expenditures previous to 1876 had exceeded $637,000, and since that date liberal appropriations have been made for additions, repairs and improvements, including the addition of between 300 and 400 acres to the lands connected with the institution. The first Board of Trustees consisted of Charles N. Holden, Oliver Everett and Henry W. Sherman, with Dr. E. A. Kilbourne as the first Superintendent, and Dr. Richard A. Dewey (afterwards Superintendent of the Eastern Hospital at Kankakee) as his Assistant. Dr. Kilbourne remained at the head of the institution until his death, Feb. 27, 1890, covering a period of nineteen years. Dr. Kilbourne was succeeded by Dr. Henry J. Brooks, and he, by Dr. Loewy, in June, 1893, and the latter by Dr. John B. Hamilton (former Supervising Surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service) in 1897. Dr. Hamilton died in December, 1898. (See Hamilton, John B.) The total value of State property, June 30, 1894, was $882,745.66, of which $701,330 was in land and buildings. Under the terms of the law establishing the hospital, provision is made for the care therein of the incurably insane, so that it is both a hospital and an asylum. The whole number of patients under treatment, for the two years preceding June 30, 1894, was 1,797, the number of inmates, on Dec. 1, 1897, 1,054, and the average daily attendance for treatment, for the year 1896, 1,296. The following counties comprise the district dependent upon the Elgin Hospital: Boone, Carroll, Cook, DeKalb, Jo Daviess, Kane, Kendall, Lake, Stephenson, Whiteside and Winnebago.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution, incorporated in 1884, at Dixon, Lee County, Ill., for the purpose of giving instruction in branches related to the art of teaching. Its last report claims a total of 1,639 pupils, of whom 885 were men and 744 women, receiving instruction from thirty-six teachers. The total value of property was estimated at more than $200,000, of which $160,000 was in real estate and $45,000 in apparatus. Attendance on the institution has been affected by the establishment, under act of the Legislature of 1895, of the Northern State Normal School at DeKalb (which see).

NORTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, an institution for the confinement of criminals of the State, located at Joliet, Will County. The site was purchased by the State in 1857, and comprises some seventy-two acres. Its erection was found necessary because of the inadequacy of the first penitentiary, at Alton. (See Alton Penitentiary.) The original plan contemplated a cell-house containing 1,000 cells, which, it was thought, would meet the public necessities for many years to come. Its estimated cost was $550,000; but, within ten years, there had been expended upon the institution the sum of $934,000, and its capacity was taxed to the utmost. Subsequent enlargements have increased the cost to over $1,600,000, but by 1877, the institution had become so overcrowded that the erection of another State penal institution became positively necessary. (See Southern Penitentiary.) The prison has always been conducted on "the Auburn system," which contemplates associate labor in silence, silent meals in a common refectory, and (as nearly as practicable) isolation at night. The system of labor has varied at different times, the "lessee system," the "contract system" and the "State account plan" being successively in force. (See Convict Labor.) The whole number of convicts in the institution, at the date of the official report of 1895, was 1,566. The total assets of the institution, Sept. 30, 1894, were reported at $2,121,308.86, of which $1,644,601.11 was in real estate.

NORTH & SOUTH RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway.)

NORTHERN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, an institution for the education of teachers of the common schools, authorized to be established by act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1895. The act made an appropriation of $50,000 for the erection of buildings and other improvements. The institution was located at DeKalb, DeKalb County, in the spring of 1896, and the erection of buildings commenced soon after—Isaac F. Ellwood, of DeKalb, contributing $20,000 in cash, and J. F. Glidden, a site of sixty-seven acres of land. Up to Dec. 1, 1897, the appropriations and contributions, in land and money, aggregated $175,000. The school was expected to be ready for the reception of pupils in the latter part of 1899, and, it is estimated, will accommodate 1,000 students.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. The name formerly applied to that portion of the United States north and west of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The claim of the Government to the land had been acquired partly through conquest, by the expedition of Col. George Rogers Clark (which see), under the auspices of the State of Virginia in 1778; partly through treaties with the Indians, and partly through cessions from those of the original States laying claim thereto. The first plan for the government of this vast region was devised and formulated by Thomas Jefferson, in his proposed Ordinance of 1784, which failed of ultimate passage. But three years later a broader scheme was evolved, and the famous Ordinance of 1787, with its clause prohibiting the extension of slavery beyond the Ohio River, passed the Continental Congress. This act has been sometimes termed "The American Magna Charta," because of its engrafting upon the organic law the principles of human freedom and equal rights. The plan for the establishment of a distinctive territorial civil government in a new Territory—the first of its kind in the new republic—was felt to be a tentative step, and too much power was not granted to the residents. All the officers were appointive, and each official was required to be a land-owner. The elective franchise (but only for members of the General Assembly) could first be exercised only after the population had reached 5,000. Even then, every elector must own fifty acres of land, and every Representative, 200 acres. More liberal provisions, however, were subsequently incorporated by amendment, in 1809. The first civil government in the Northwest Territory was established by act of the Virginia Legislature, in the organization of all the country west of the Ohio under the name "Illinois County," of which the Governor was authorized to appoint a "County Lieutenant" or "Commandant-in-Chief." The first "Commandant" appointed was Col. John Todd, of Kentucky, though he continued to discharge the duties for only a short period, being killed in the battle of Blue Licks, in 1782. After that the Illinois Country was almost without the semblance of an organized civil government, until 1788, when Gen. Arthur St. Clair was appointed the first Governor of Northwest Territory, under the Ordinance of 1787, serving until the separation of this region into the Territories of Ohio and Indiana in 1800, when William Henry Harrison became the Governor of the latter, embracing all that portion of the original Northwest Territory except the State of Ohio. During St. Clair's administration (1790) that part of the present State of Illinois between the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers on the west, and a line extending north from about the site of old Fort Massac, on the Ohio, to the mouth of the Mackinaw River, in the present county of Tazewell, on the east, was erected into a county under the name of St. Clair, with three county-seats, viz.: Cahokia, Kaskaskia and Prairie du Rocher. (See St. Clair County.) Between 1830 and 1834 the name Northwest Territory was applied to an unorganized region, embracing the present State of Wisconsin, attached to Michigan Territory for governmental purposes. (See Illinois County; St. Clair, Arthur; and Todd, John.)

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE, located at Naperville, Du Page County, and founded in 1865, under the auspices of the Evangelical Association. It maintains business, preparatory and collegiate departments, besides a theological school. In 1898 it had a faculty of nineteen professors and assistants, with some 360 students, less than one-third of the latter being females, though both sexes are admitted to the college on an equal footing. The institution owns property to the value of $207,000, including an endowment of $85,000.

NORTHWESTERN GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway.)

NORTHWESTERN NORMAL, located at Geneseo, Henry County, Ill., incorporated in 1884; in 1894 had a faculty of twelve teachers with 171 pupils, of whom ninety were male and eighty-one female.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, an important educational institution, established at Evanston, in Cook County, in 1851. In 1898 it reported 2,599 students (1,980 male and 619 female), and a faculty of 234 instructors. It embraces the following departments, all of which confer degrees: A College of Liberal Arts; two Medical Schools (one for women exclusively); a Law School; a School of Pharmacy and a Dental College. The Garrett Biblical Institute, at which no degrees are conferred, constitutes the theological department of the University. The charter of the institution requires a majority of the Trustees to be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the University is the largest and wealthiest of the schools controlled by that denomination. The College of Liberal Arts and the Garrett Biblical Institute are at Evanston; the other departments (all professional) are located in Chicago. In the academic department (Liberal Arts School), provision is made for both graduate and post-graduate courses. The Medical School was formerly known as the Chicago Medical College, and its Law Department was originally the Union College of Law, both of which have been absorbed by the University, as have also its schools of dentistry and pharmacy, which were formerly independent institutions. The property owned by the University is valued at $4,870,000, of which $1,100,000 is real estate, and $2,250,000 in endowment funds. Its income from fees paid by students in 1898 was $315,288, and total receipts from all sources, $482,389. Co-education of the sexes prevails in the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Henry Wade Rogers is President.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL, located in Chicago; was organized in 1859 as Medical School of the Lind (now Lake Forest) University. Three annual terms, of five months each, at first constituted a course, although attendance at two only was compulsory. The institution first opened in temporary quarters, Oct. 9, 1859, with thirteen professors and thirty-three students. By 1863 more ample accommodations were needed, and the Trustees of the Lind University being unable to provide a building, one was erected by the faculty. In 1864 the University relinquished all claim to the institution, which was thereupon incorporated as the Chicago Medical College. In 1868 the length of the annual terms was increased to six months, and additional requirements were imposed on candidates for both matriculation and graduation. The same year, the college building was sold, and the erection of a new and more commodious edifice, on the grounds of the Mercy Hospital, was commenced. This was completed in 1870, and the college became the medical department of the Northwestern University. The number of professorships had been increased to eighteen, and that of undergraduates to 107. Since that date new laboratory and clinical buildings have been erected, and the growth of the institution has been steady and substantial. Mercy and St. Luke's Hospital, and the South Side Free Dispensary afford resources for clinical instruction. The teaching faculty, as constituted in 1898, consists of about fifty instructors, including professors, lecturers, demonstrators, and assistants.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY WOMAN'S MEDICAL SCHOOL, an institution for the professional education of women, located in Chicago. Its first corporate name was the "Woman's Hospital Medical College of Chicago," and it was in close connection with the Chicago Hospital for Women and Children. Later, it severed its connection with the hospital and took the name of the "Woman's Medical College of Chicago." Co-education of the sexes, in medicine and surgery, was experimentally tried from 1868 to 1870, but the experiment proved repugnant to the male students, who unanimously signed a protest against the continuance of the system. The result was the establishment of a separate school for women in 1870, with a faculty of sixteen professors. The requirements for graduation were fixed at four years of medical study, including three annual graded college terms of six months each. The first term opened in the autumn of 1870, with an attendance of twenty students. The original location of the school was in the "North Division" of Chicago, in temporary quarters. After the fire of 1871 a removal was effected to the "West Division," where (in 1878-79) a modest, but well arranged building was erected. A larger structure was built in 1884, and, in 1891, the institution became a part of the Northwestern University. The college, in all its departments, is organized along the lines of the best medical schools of the country. In 1896 there were twenty four professorships, all capably filled, and among the faculty are some of the best known specialists in the country.

NORTON, Jesse O., lawyer, Congressman and Judge, was born at Bennington, Vt., April 25, 1812, and graduated from Williams College in 1835. He settled at Joliet in 1839, and soon became prominent in the affairs of Will County. His first public office was that of City Attorney, after which he served as County Judge (1846-50). Meanwhile, he was chosen a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1850 he was elected to the Legislature, and, in 1852, to Congress, as a Whig. His vigorous opposition to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise resulted in his re-election as a Representative in 1854. At the expiration of his second term (1857) he was chosen Judge of the eleventh circuit, to fill the unexpired term of Judge Randall, resigned. He was once more elected to Congress in 1862, but disagreed with his party as to the legal status of the States lately in rebellion. President Johnson appointed him United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois, which office he filled until 1869. Immediately upon his retirement he began private practice at Chicago, where he died, August 3, 1875.

NORWOOD PARK, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad (Wisconsin Division), 11 miles northwest of Chicago. Incorporated in City of Chicago, 1893.

NOYES, George Clement, clergyman, was born at Landaff, N. H., August 4, 1833, brought by his parents to Pike County, Ill., in 1844, and, at the age of 16, determined to devote his life to the ministry; in 1851, entered Illinois College at Jacksonville, graduating with first honors in the class of 1855. In the following autumn he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York, and, having graduated in 1858, was ordained the same year, and installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Laporte, Ind. Here he remained ten years, when he accepted a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Evanston, Ill., then a small organization which developed, during the twenty years of his pastorate, into one of the strongest and most influential churches in Evanston. For a number of years Dr. Noyes was an editorial writer and weekly correspondent of "The New York Evangelist," over the signature of "Clement." He was also, for several years, an active and very efficient member of the Board of Trustees of Knox College. The liberal bent of his mind was illustrated in the fact that he acted as counsel for Prof. David Swing, during the celebrated trial of the latter for heresy before the Chicago Presbytery—his argument on that occasion winning encomiums from all classes of people. His death took place at Evanston, Jan. 14, 1889, as the result of an attack of pneumonia, and was deeply deplored, not only by his own church and denomination, but by the whole community. Some two weeks after it occurred a union meeting was held in one of the churches at Evanston, at which addresses in commemoration of his services were delivered by some dozen ministers of that village and of Chicago, while various social and literary organizations and the press bore testimony to his high character. He was a member of the Literary Society of Chicago, and, during the last year of his life, served as its President. Dr. Noyes was married, in 1858, to a daughter of David A. Smith, Esq., an honored citizen and able lawyer of Jacksonville.

OAKLAND, a city of Coles County on the Vandalia Line and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, 15 miles northeast of Charleston; is in grain center and broom-corn belt; the town has two banks and one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 995; (1900), 1,198.

OAK PARK, a village of Cook County, and popular residence suburb of Chicago, 9 miles west of the initial station of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, on which it is located; is also upon the line of the Wisconsin Central Railroad. The place has numerous churches, prosperous schools, a public library, telegraph and express offices, banks and two local papers. Population (1880), 1,888; (1890), 4,771.

OBERLY, John H., journalist and Civil Service Commissioner, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1837; spent part of his boyhood in Allegheny County, Pa., but, in 1853, began learning the printer's trade in the office of "The Wooster (Ohio) Republican," completing it at Memphis, Tenn., and becoming a journeyman printer in 1857. He worked in various offices, including the Wooster paper, where he also began the study of law, but, in 1860, became part proprietor of "The Bulletin" job office at Memphis, in which he had been employed as an apprentice, and, later, as foreman. Having been notified to leave Memphis on account of his Union principles after the beginning of the Civil War, he returned to Wooster, Ohio, and conducted various papers there during the next four years, but, in 1865, came to Cairo, Ill., where he served for a time as foreman of "The Cairo Democrat," three years later establishing "The Cairo Bulletin." Although the latter paper was burned out a few months later, it was immediately re-established. In 1872 he was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1877, was appointed by Governor Cullom the Democratic member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, serving four years, meanwhile (in 1880) being the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. Other positions held by him included Mayor of the city of Cairo (1869); President of the National Typographical Union at Chicago (1865), and at Memphis (1866); delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Baltimore (1872), and Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee (1882-84). After retiring from the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, he united in founding "The Bloomington (Ill.) Bulletin," of which he was editor some three years. During President Cleveland's administration he was appointed a member of the Civil Service Commission, being later transferred to the Commissionership of Indian Affairs. He was subsequently connected in an editorial capacity with "The Washington Post," "The Richmond (Va.) State," "The Concord (N. H.) People and Patriot" and "The Washington Times." While engaged in an attempt to reorganize "The People and Patriot," he died at Concord, N. H., April 15, 1899.

ODD FELLOWS. "Western Star" Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., was instituted at Alton, June 11, 1836. In 1838 the Grand Lodge of Illinois was instituted at the same place, and reorganized, at Springfield, in 1842. S. C. Pierce was the first Grand Master, and Samuel L. Miller, Grand Secretary. Wilkey Encampment, No. 1, was organized at Alton in 1838, and the Grand Encampment, at Peoria, in 1850, with Charles H. Constable Grand Patriarch. In 1850 the subordinate branches of the Order numbered seventy-six, with 3,291 members, and $25,392.87 revenue. In 1895 the Lodges numbered 838, the membership 50,544, with $475,252.18 revenue, of which $135,018.40 was expended for relief. The Encampment branch, in 1895, embraced 179 organizations with a membership of 6,812 and $23,865.25 revenue, of which $6,781.40 was paid out for relief. The Rebekah branch, for the same year, comprised 422 Lodges, with 22,000 members and $43,215.65 revenue, of which $3,122.79 was for relief. The total sum distributed for relief by the several organizations (1895) was $144,972.59. The Order was especially liberal in its benefactions to the sufferers by the Chicago fire of 1871, an appeal to its members calling forth a generous response throughout the United States. (See Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home.)

ODD FELLOWS' ORPHANS' HOME, a benevolent institution, incorporated in 1889, erected at Lincoln, Ill., under the auspices of the Daughters of Rebekah (see Odd Fellows), and dedicated August 19, 1892. The building is four stories in height, has a capacity for the accommodation of fifty children, and cost $36,524.76, exclusive of forty acres of land valued at $8,000.

ODELL, a village of Livingston County, and station on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 82 miles south-southwest of Chicago. It is in a grain and stock-raising region. Population (1880), 908; (1890), 800; (1900), 1,000.

ODIN, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the Chicago branch of the Illinois Central and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railways, 244 miles south by west from Chicago; in fruit belt; has coal-mine, two fruit evaporators, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,180.

O'FALLON, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 18 miles east of St. Louis; has interurban railway, electric lights, water-works, factories, coal-mine, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,267.

OGDEX, William Butler, capitalist and Railway President, born at Walton, N. Y., June 15, 1805. He was a member of the New York Legislature in 1834, and, the following year, removed to Chicago, where he established a land and trust agency. He took an active part in the various enterprises centering around Chicago, and, on the incorporation of the city, was elected its first Mayor. He was prominently identified with the construction of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad, and, in 1847, became its President. While visiting Europe in 1853, he made a careful study of the canals of Holland, which convinced him of the desirability of widening and deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal and of constructing a ship canal across the southern peninsula of Michigan. In 1855 he became President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railroad, and effected its consolidation with the Galena & Chicago Union. Out of this consolidation sprang the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company, of which he was elected President. In 1850 he presided over the National Pacific Railroad Convention, and, upon the formation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, he became its President. He was largely connected with the inception of the Northern Pacific line, in the success of which he was a firm believer. He also controlled various other interests of public importance, among them the great lumbering establishments at Peshtigo, Wis., and, at the time of his death, was the owner of what was probably the largest plant of that description in the world. His benefactions were numerous, among the recipients being the Rush Medical College, of which he was President; the Theological Seminary of the Northwest, the Chicago Historical Society, the Academy of Sciences, the University of Chicago, the Astronomical Society, and many other educational and benevolent institutions and organizations in the Northwest. Died, in New York City, August 3, 1877. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.)

OGLE, Joseph, pioneer, was born in Virginia in 1741, came to Illinois in 1785, settling in the American Bottom within the present County of Monroe, but afterwards removed to St. Clair County, about the site of the present town of O'Fallon, 8 miles north of Belleville; was selected by his neighbors to serve as Captain in their skirmishes with the Indians. Died, at his home in St. Clair County, in February, 1821. Captain Ogle had the reputation of being the earliest convert to Methodism in Illinois. Ogle County, in Northern Illinois, was named in his honor.—Jacob (Ogle), son of the preceding, also a native of Virginia, was born about 1772, came to Illinois with his father in 1785, and was a "Ranger" in the War of 1812. He served as a Representative from St. Clair County in the Third General Assembly (1822), and again in the Seventh (1830), in the former being an opponent of the pro-slavery convention scheme. Beyond two terms in the Legislature he seems to have held no public office except that of Justice of the Peace. Like his father, he was a zealous Methodist and highly respected. Died, in 1844, aged 72 years.

OGLE COUNTY, next to the "northern tier" of counties of the State and originally a part of Jo Daviess. It was separately organized in 1837, and Lee County was carved from its territory in 1839. In 1900 its area was 780 square miles, and its population 29,129. Before the Black Hawk War immigration was slow, and life primitive. Peoria was the nearest food market. New grain was "ground" on a grater, and old pounded with an extemporized pestle in a wooden mortar. Rock River flows across the county from northeast to southwest. A little oak timber grows along its banks, but, generally speaking, the surface is undulating prairie, with soil of a rich loam. Sandstone is in ample supply, and all the limestones abound. An extensive peat-bed has been discovered on the Killbuck Creek. Oregon, the county-seat, has fine water-power. The other principal towns are Rochelle, Polo, Forreston and Mount Morris.

OGLESBY, Richard James, Governor and United States Senator, was born in Oldham County, Ky., July 25, 1824; left an orphan at the age of 8 years; in 1836 accompanied an uncle to Decatur, Ill., where, until 1844, he worked at farming, carpentering and rope-making, devoting his leisure hours to the study of law. In 1845 he was admitted to the bar and began practice at Sullivan, in Moultrie County. In 1846 he was commissioned a Lieutenant in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's regiment), and served through the Mexican War, taking part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. In 1847 he pursued a course of study at the Louisville Law School, graduating in 1848. He was a "forty-niner" in California, but returned to Decatur in 1851. In 1858 he made an unsuccessful campaign for Congress in the Decatur District. In 1860 he was elected to the State Senate, but early in 1861 resigned his seat to accept the colonelcy of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers. Through gallantry (notably at Forts Henry and Donelson and at Corinth) he rose to be Major-General, being severely wounded in the last-named battle. He resigned his commission on account of disability, in May, 1864, and the following November was elected Governor, as a Republican. In 1872 he was re-elected Governor, but, two weeks after his inauguration, resigned to accept a seat in the United States Senate, to which he was elected by the Legislature of 1873. In 1884 he was elected Governor for the third time—being the only man in the history of the State who (up to the present time—1899) has been thus honored. After the expiration of his last term as Governor, he devoted his attention to his private affairs at his home at Elkhart, in Logan County, where he died, April 24, 1899, deeply mourned by personal and political friends in all parts of the Union, who admired his strict integrity and sterling patriotism.

OHIO, INDIANA & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Peoria & Eastern Railroad.)

OHIO RIVER, an affluent of the Mississippi, formed by the union of the Monongahela and Allegheny Rivers, at Pittsburg, Pa. At this point it becomes a navigable stream about 400 yards wide, with an elevation of about 700 feet above sea-level. The beauty of the scenery along its banks secured for it, from the early French explorers (of whom La Salle was one), the name of "La Belle Riviere." Its general course is to the southwest, but with many sinuosities, forming the southern boundary of the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the western and northern boundary of West Virginia and Kentucky, until it enters the Mississippi at Cairo, in latitude 37° N., and about 1,200 miles above the mouth of the latter stream. The area which it drains is computed to be 214,000 square miles. Its mouth is 268 feet above the level of the sea. The current is remarkably gentle and uniform, except near Louisville, where there is a descent of twenty-two feet within two miles, which is evaded by means of a canal around the falls. Large steamboats can navigate its whole length, except in low stages of water and when closed by ice in winter. Its largest affluents are the Tennessee, the Cumberland, the Kentucky, the Great Kanawha and the Green Rivers, from the south, and the Wabash, the Miami, Scioto and Muskingum from the north. The principal cities on its banks are Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, Evansville, New Albany, Madison and Cairo. It is crossed by bridges at Wheeling, Cincinnati and Cairo. The surface of the Ohio is subject to a variation of forty-two to fifty-one feet between high and low water. Its length is 975 miles, and its width varies from 400 to 1,000 yards. (See Inundations, Remarkable.)

OHIO & MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY. (See Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad.)

OLNEY, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Richland County, 31 miles west of Vincennes, Ind., and 117 miles east of St. Louis, Mo., at the junction of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern and the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central and the Ohio River Division of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroad; is in the center of the fruit belt and an important shipping point for farm produce and live-stock; has flour mills, a furniture factory and railroad repair shops, banks, a public library, churches and five newspapers, one issuing daily and another semi-weekly editions. Population (1890), 3,831; (1900), 4,260.

OMELVENY, John, pioneer and head of a numerous family which became prominent in Southern Illinois; was a native of Ireland who came to America about 1798 or 1799. After residing in Kentucky a few years, he removed to Illinois, locating in what afterwards became Pope County, whither his oldest son, Samuel, had preceded him about 1797 or 1798. The latter for a time followed the occupation of flat-boating, carrying produce to New Orleans. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1818 from Pope County, being the colleague of Hamlet Ferguson. A year later he removed to Randolph County, where he served as a member of the County Court, but, in 1820-22, we find him a member of the Second General Assembly from Union County, having successfully contested the seat of Samuel Alexander, who had received the certificate of election. He died in 1828.—Edward (Omelyny), another member of this family, and grandson of the elder John Omelveny, represented Monroe County in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), and was Presidential Elector in 1852, but died sometime during the Civil War.—Harvey K. S. (Omelveny), the fifth son of William Omelveny and grandson of John, was born in Todd County, Ky., in 1823, came to Southern Illinois, in 1852, and engaged in the practice of law, being for a time the partner of Senator Thomas E. Merritt, at Salem. Early in 1858 he was elected a Justice of the Circuit Court to succeed Judge Breese, who had been promoted to the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1861. He gained considerable notoriety by his intense hostility to the policy of the Government during the Civil War, was a Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and was named as a member of the Peace Commission proposed to be appointed by the General Assembly, in 1863, to secure terms of peace with the Southern Confederacy. He was also a leading spirit in the peace meeting held at Peoria, in August, 1863. In 1869 Mr. Omelveny removed to Los Angeles, Cal., which has since been his home, and where he has carried on a lucrative law practice.

OXARGA, a town in Iroquois County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 85 miles south by west from Chicago, and 43 miles north by east from Champaign. It is a manufacturing town, flour, wagons, wire-fencing, stoves and tile being among the products. It has a bank, eight churches, a graded school, a commercial college, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1890), 1,061; (1890), 994; (1900), 1,270.

ONEIDA, a city in Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles northeast of Galesburg; has wagon, pump and furniture factories, two banks, electric lights, several churches, a graded school, and a weekly paper. The surrounding country is rich prairie, where coal is mined about twenty feet below the surface. Pop. (1890), 699; (1900), 785.

OQUAWKA, the county-seat of Henderson County, situated on the Mississippi River, about 15 miles above Burlington, Iowa, and 32 miles west of Galesburg. It is in a farming region, but has some manufactures. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank and three newspapers. Population (1900), 1,010.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. This is the name given to the first organic act, passed by Congress, for the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio River, comprising the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. The first step in this direction was taken in the appointment, by Congress, on March 1, 1784, of a committee, of which Thomas Jefferson was Chairman, to prepare a plan for the temporary government of the region which had been acquired, by the capture of Kaskaskia, by Col. George Rogers Clark, nearly six years previous. The necessity for some step of this sort had grown all the more urgent, in consequence of the recognition of the right of the United States to this region by the Treaty of Paris of 1783, and the surrender, by Virginia, of the title she had maintained thereto on account of Clark's conquest under her auspices—a right which she had exercised by furnishing whatever semblance of government so far existed northwest of the Ohio. The report submitted from Jefferson's committee proposed the division of the Territory into seven States, to which was added the proviso that, after the year 1800, "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said States, otherwise than in punishment of crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." This report failed of adoption, however, Congress contenting itself with the passage of a resolution providing for future organization of this territory into States by the people—the measures necessary for temporary government being left to future Congressional action. While the postponement, in the resolution as introduced by Jefferson, of the inhibition of slavery to the year 1800, has been criticised, its introduction was significant, as coming from a representative from a slave State.

and being the first proposition in Congress looking to restriction, of any character, on the subject of slavery. Congress having taken no further step under the resolution adopted in 1784, the condition of the country (thus left practically without a responsible government, while increasing in population) became constantly more deplorable. An appeal from the people about Kaskaskia for some better form of government, in 1786, aided by the influence of the newly organized "Ohio Company," who desired to encourage emigration to the lands which they were planning to secure from the General Government, at last brought about the desired result, in the passage of the famous "Ordinance," on the 13th day of July, 1787. While making provision for a mode of temporary self-government by the people, its most striking features are to be found in the six "articles"—a sort of "Bill of Rights"—with which the document closes. These assert: (1) the right of freedom of worship and religious opinion; (2) the right to the benefit of habeas corpus and trial by jury; to proportionate representation, and to protection in liberty and property; (3) that "religion, morality and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged"; (4) that the States, formed within the territory referred to, "shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made"; (5) prescribe the boundaries of the States to be formed therein and the conditions of their admission into the Union; and (6)—and most significant of all) repeat the prohibition regarding the introduction of slavery into the Northwest Territory, as proposed by Jefferson, but without any qualification as to time. There has been considerable controversy regarding the authorship of this portion of the Ordinance, into which it is not necessary to enter here. While it has been characterized as a second and advanced Declaration of Independence—and probably no single act of Congress was ever fraught with more important and far-reaching results—it seems remarkable that a majority of the States supporting it and securing its adoption, were then, and long continued to be, slave States.

OREGON, the county-seat of Ogle County, situated on Rock River and the Minneapolis Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 100 miles west from Chicago. The surrounding region is agricultural; the town has water power and manufactures flour, pianos, steel tanks, street sprinklers, and iron castings. It has two banks, water-works supplied by flowing artesian wells, cereal mill, and two weekly newspapers; has also obtained some reputation as a summer resort. Pop. (1880), 1,088; (1890), 1,566; (1900), 1,577.

ORION, a village of Henry County, at the intersection of the Rock Island Division of the Chicago Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 19 miles southeast of Rock Island. Pop. (1890), 624; (1900), 584.

OSBORN, William Henry, Railway President, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 21, 1820. After receiving a high school education in his native town, he entered the counting room of the East India house of Peele, Hubbell & Co.; was subsequently sent to represent the firm at Manila, finally engaging in business on his own account, during which he traveled extensively in Europe. Returning to the United States in 1853, he took up his residence in New York, and, having married the daughter of Jonathan Sturges, one of the original incorporators and promoters of the Illinois Central Railroad, he soon after became associated with that enterprise. In August, 1854, he was chosen a Director of the Company, and, on Dec. 1, 1855, became its third President, serving in the latter position nearly ten years (until July 11, 1865), and, as a Director, until 1877—in all, twenty-two years. After retiring from his connection with the Illinois Central Railroad, Mr. Osborn gave his attention largely to enterprises of an educational and benevolent character in aid of the unfortunate classes in the State of New York.

OSBORN, Thomas O., soldier and diplomatist, was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 11, 1832; graduated from the Ohio University at Athens, in 1854; studied law at Crawfordsville, Ind., with Gen. Lew Wallace, was admitted to the bar and began practice in Chicago. Early in the war for the Union he joined the "Yates Phalanx," which, after some delay on account of the quota being full, was mustered into the service, in August, 1861, as the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, the subject of this sketch being commissioned its Lieutenant-Colonel. His promotion to the colonelcy soon followed, the regiment being sent east to guard the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, where it met the celebrated Stonewall Jackson, and took part in many important engagements, including the battles of Winchester, Bermuda Hundreds, and Drury's Bluff, besides the sieges of Charleston and Petersburg. At Bermuda Hundreds Colonel Osborn was severely wounded, losing the use of his right arm. He bore a conspicuous part in the operations about Richmond which resulted in the capture of the rebel capital, his services being recognized by promotion to the brevet rank of Major-General. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law in Chicago, but, in 1874, was appointed Consul-General and Minister-Resident to the Argentine Republic, remaining in that position until June, 1885, when he resigned, resuming his residence in Chicago.

OSWEGO, a village in Kendall County, on the Aurora and Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 6 miles south of Aurora. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 618.

OTTAWA, the county-seat and principal city of La Salle County, being incorporated as a village in 1838, and, as a city, in 1853. It is located at the confluence of the Illinois and Fox Rivers and on the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is the intersecting point of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway and the Streator branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, 98 miles east of Rock Island and 83 miles west-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region abounds in coal. Sand of a superior quality for the manufacture of glass is found in the vicinity and the place has extensive glass works. Other manufactured products are brick, drain-tile, sewer-pipe, tile-roofing, pottery, pianos, organs, cigars, wagons and carriages, agricultural implements, hay carriers, hay presses, sash, doors, blinds, cabinet work, saddlery and harness and pumps. The city has some handsome public buildings including the Appellate (formerly Supreme) Court House for the Northern Division. It also has several public parks, one of which (South Park) contains a medicinal spring. There are a dozen churches and numerous public school buildings, including a high school. The city is lighted by gas and electricity, has electric street railways, good sewerage, and water-works supplied from over 150 artesian wells and numerous natural springs. It has one private and two national banks, five libraries, and eight weekly newspapers (three German), of which four issue daily editions. Pop. (1890), 9,985; (1900), 10,588.

OTTAWA, CHICAGO & FOX RIVER VALLEY RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

OUTAGAMIES, a name given, by the French, to the Indian tribe known as the Foxes. (See Sacs and Foxes.)

OWEN, Thomas J. V., early legislator and Indian Agent, was born in Kentucky, April 5, 1801; came to Illinois at an early day, and, in 1830, was elected to the Seventh General Assembly from Randolph County; the following year was appointed Indian Agent at Chicago, as successor to Dr. Alexander Wolcott, who had died in the latter part of 1830. Mr. Owen served as Indian Agent until 1833; was a member of the first Board of Town Trustees of the village of Chicago, Commissioner of School Lands, and one of the Government Commissioners who conducted the treaty with the Pottawatomie and other tribes of Indians at Chicago, in September, 1833. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 15, 1835.

PADDOCK, Gaius, pioneer, a native of Massachusetts, was born in 1758; at the age of 17 he entered the Colonial Army, serving until the close of the Revolutionary War, and being in Washington's command at the crossing of the Delaware. After the war he removed to Vermont; but, in 1815, went to Cincinnati, and, a year later, to St. Charles, Mo. Then, after having spent about a year at St. Louis, in 1818 he located in Madison County, Ill., at a point afterwards known as "Paddock's Grove," and which became one of the most prosperous agricultural sections of Southern Illinois. Died, in 1831.

PAINE, (Gen.) Eleazer A., soldier, was born in Parkman, Geauga County, Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815; graduated at West Point Military Academy, in 1839, and was assigned to the First Infantry, serving in the Florida War (1839-40), but resigned, Oct. 11, 1840. He then studied law and practiced at Painesville, Ohio, (1843-48), and at Monmouth, Ill., (1848-61), meanwhile serving in the lower branch of the Eighteenth General Assembly (1852-53). Before leaving Ohio, he had been Deputy United States Marshal and Lieutenant-Colonel of the State Militia, and, in Illinois, became Brigadier-General of Militia (1845-48). He was appointed Colonel of the Ninth Illinois in April, 1861, and served through the war, being promoted Brigadier-General in September, 1861. The first duty performed by his regiment, after this date, was the occupation of Paducah, Ky., where he was in command. Later, it took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, the battles of Shiloh, New Madrid and Corinth, and also in the various engagements in Northern Georgia and in the "march to the sea." From November, 1862, to May, 1864, General Paine was guarding railroad lines in Central Tennessee, and, during a part of 1864, in command of the Western District of Kentucky. He resigned, April 5, 1865, and died in Jersey City, Dec. 16, 1882. A sturdy Union man, he performed his duty as a soldier with great zeal and efficiency.

PALATINE, a village of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 26 miles northwest from Chicago. There are flour and planing mills here; dairying and farming are leading industries of the surrounding country. Population (1880), 731; (1890), 891; (1900), 1,020.

PALESTINE, a town in Crawford County, about 2 miles from the Wabash River, 7 miles east of Robinson, and 35 miles southwest of Terre Haute, on the Illinois Central Railway; has five churches, a graded school, a bank, weekly newspaper, flour mill, cold storage plant, canning factory, garment factory, and municipal light and power plant. Pop. (1890), 732; (1900), 979.

PALMER, Frank W., journalist, ex-Congressman and Public Printer, was born at Manchester, Dearborn County, Ind., Oct. 11, 1827; learned the printer's trade at Jamestown, N. Y., afterwards edited "The Jamestown Journal," and served two terms in the New York Legislature; in 1858 removed to Dubuque, Iowa, and edited "The Dubuque Times," was elected to Congress in 1860, and again in 1868 and 1872, meanwhile having purchased "The Des Moines Register," which he edited for several years. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and became editor of "The Inter Ocean," remaining two years; in 1877 was appointed Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving eight years. Shortly after the accession of President Harrison, in 1889, he was appointed Public Printer, continuing in office until the accession of President Cleveland in 1893, when he returned to newspaper work, but resumed his old place at the head of the Government Printing Bureau after the inauguration of President McKinley in 1897.

PALMER, John McAuley, lawyer, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Scott County, Ky., Sept. 13, 1817; removed with his father to Madison County, Ill., in 1831, and, four years later, entered Shurtleff College, at Upper Alton, as a student; later taught and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1839. In 1843 he was elected Probate Judge of Macoupin County, also served in the State Constitutional Convention of 1847; after discharging the duties of Probate and County Judge, was elected to the State Senate, to fill a vacancy, in 1852, and re-elected in 1854, as an Anti-Nebraska Democrat, casting his vote for Lyman Trumbull for United States Senator in 1855, but resigned his seat in 1856; was President of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in the latter year, and appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia; was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress in 1859, and chosen a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket in 1860; served as a member of the National Peace Conference of 1861; entered the army as Colonel of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; was promoted Brigadier General, in November, 1861, taking part in the campaign in Tennessee up to Chickamauga, assuming the command of the Fourteenth Army Corps with the rank of Major-General, but was relieved at his own request before Atlanta. In 1865 he was assigned, by President Lincoln, to command of the Military Department of Kentucky, but, in September, 1866, retired from the service, and, in 1867, became a citizen of Springfield. The following year he was elected Governor, as a Republican, but, in 1872, supported Horace Greeley for President, and has since co-operated with the Democratic party. He was three times the unsuccessful candidate of his party for United States Senator, and was their nominee for Governor in 1888, but defeated. In 1890 he was nominated for United States Senator by the Democratic State Convention and elected in joint session of the Legislature, March 11, 1891, receiving on the 154th ballot 101 Democratic and two Farmers' Mutual Alliance votes. He became an important factor in the campaign of 1896 as candidate of the "Sound Money" Democracy for President, although receiving no electoral votes, proving his devotion to principle. His last years were occupied in preparation of a volume of personal recollections, which was completed, under the title of "The Story of an Earnest Life," a few weeks before his death, which occurred at his home in Springfield, September 25, 1900.

PALMER, Potter, merchant and capitalist, was born in Albany County, N. Y., in 1825; received an English education and became a junior clerk in a country store at Durham, Greene County, in that State, three years later being placed in charge of the business, and finally engaging in business on his own account. Coming to Chicago in 1852, he embarked in the dry-goods business on Lake Street, establishing the house which afterwards became Field, Leiter & Co. (now Marshall Field & Co.), from which he retired, in 1865, with the basis of an ample fortune, which has since been immensely increased by fortunate operations in real estate. Mr. Palmer was Second Vice-President of the first Board of Local Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition in 1891.—Mrs. Bertha M. Honore (Palmer), wife of the preceding, is the daughter of H. H.

Honore, formerly a prominent real-estate owner and operator of Chicago. She is a native of Louisville, Ky., where her girlhood was chiefly spent, though she was educated at a convent near Baltimore, Md. Later she came with her family to Chicago, and, in 1870, was married to Potter Palmer. Mrs. Palmer has been a recognized leader in many social and benevolent movements, but won the highest praise by her ability and administrative skill, exhibited as President of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

PALMYRA, a village of Macoupin County, on the Springfield Division of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railway, 33 miles southwest from Springfield; has some local manufactories, a bank and a newspaper. Population (1900), 813.

PANA, an important railway center and principal city of Christian County, situated in the southeastern part of the County, and at the intersecting point of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Illinois Central and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads, 35 miles south by west from Decatur, and 42 miles southeast of Springfield. It is an important shipping-point for grain and has two elevators. Its mechanical establishments include two flouring mills, a foundry, two machine shops and two planing mills. The surrounding region is rich in coal, which is extensively mined. Pana has banks, several churches, graded schools, and three papers issuing daily and weekly editions. Population (1890), 5,077; (1900), 5,530.

PARKS, Gaylon D. A., lawyer, was born at Bristol, Ontario County, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1817; went to New York City in 1838, where he completed his legal studies and was admitted to the bar, removing to Lockport, Ill., in 1842. Here he successively edited a paper, served as Master in Chaucery and in an engineering corps on the Illinois & Michigan Canal; was elected County Judge in 1849, removed to Joliet, and, for a time, acted as an attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Michigan Central and the Chicago & Alton Railroads; was also a Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Jacksonville; was elected Representative in 1852, became a Republican and served on the first Republican State Central Committee (1856); the same year was elected to the State Senate, and was a Commissioner of the State Penitentiary in 1864. In 1873 Mr. Parks joined in the Liberal-Republican movement, was defeated for Congress, and afterwards acted with the Democratic party. Died, Dec. 28, 1895.

PARKS, Lawson A., journalist, was born at Mecklenburg, N. C., April 15, 1813; learned the printing trade at Charlotte, in that State; came to St. Louis in 1833, and, in 1836, assisted in establishing "The Alton Telegraph," but sold his interest a few years later. Then, having officiated as pastor of Presbyterian churches for some years, in 1854 he again became associated with "The Telegraph," acting as its editor. Died at Alton, March 31, 1875.

PARK RIDGE, a suburban village on the Wisconsin Division of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, 13 miles northwest of Chicago. Population (1880), 457; (1890), 987; (1900), 1,340.

PARTRIDGE, Charles Addison, journalist and Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic, was born in Westford, Chittenden County, Vt., Dec. 8, 1843; came with his parents to Lake County, Ill., in 1844, and spent his boyhood on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, with four terms in a high school at Burlington, Wis. At 16 he taught a winter district school near his boyhood home, and at 18 enlisted in what became Company C of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, being mustered into the service as Eighth Corporal at Rockford. His regiment becoming attached to the Army of the Cumberland, he participated with it in the battles of Chickamauga and the Atlanta campaign, as well as those of Franklin and Nashville, and has taken a just pride in the fact that he never fell out on the march, took medicine from a doctor or was absent from his regiment during its term of service, except for four months while recovering from a gun-shot wound received at Chickamauga. He was promoted successively to Sergeant, Sergeant-Major, and commissioned Second Lieutenant of his old company, of which his father was First Lieutenant for six months and until forced to resign on account of impaired health. Receiving his final discharge, June 28, 1865, he returned to the farm, where he remained until 1869, in the meantime being married to Miss Jennie E. Earle, in 1866, and teaching school one winter. In 1869 he was elected County Treasurer of Lake County on the Republican ticket, and re-elected in 1871; in January of the latter year, purchased an interest in "The Waukegan Gazette," with which he remained associated some fifteen years, at first as the partner of Rev. A. K. Fox, and later of his younger brother, H. E. Partridge. In 1877 he was appointed, by President Hayes, Postmaster at Waukegan, serving four years; in 1886 was elected to the Legislature, serving (by successive elections) as Representative in the Thirty-fifth, Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies, being frequently called upon to occupy the Speaker's chair, and, especially during the long Senatorial contest of 1891, being recognized as a leader of the Republican minority. In 1888 he was called to the service of the Republican State Central Committee (of which he had previously been a member), as assistant to the veteran Secretary, the late Daniel Shepard, remaining until the death of his chief, when he succeeded to the secretaryship. During the Presidential campaign of 1892 he was associated with the late William J. Campbell, then the Illinois member of the Republican National Committee, and was entrusted by him with many important and confidential missions. Without solicitation on his part, in 1894 he was again called to assume the secretaryship of the Republican State Central Committee, and bore a conspicuous and influential part in winning the brilliant success achieved by the party in the campaign of that year. From 1893 to 1895 he served as Mayor of Waukegan; in 1896 became Assistant Adjutant-General of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois—a position which he held in 1899 under Commander James S. Martin, and to which he has been re-appointed by successive Department Commanders up to the present time. Mr. Partridge's service in the various public positions held by him, has given him an acquaintance extending to every county in the State.

PATOKA, a village of Marion County, on the Western branch of the Illinois Central Railway, 15 miles south of Vandalia. There are flour and saw mills here; the surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890, 502; (1900, 640.

PATTERSON, Robert Wilson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born in Blount County, Tenn., Jan. 21, 1814; came to Bond County, Ill., with his parents in 1822, his father dying two years later; at 18 had had only nine months' schooling, but graduated at Illinois College in 1837; spent a year at Lane Theological Seminary, another as tutor in Illinois College, and then, after two years more at Lane Seminary and preaching in Chicago and at Monroe, Mich., in 1842 established the Second Presbyterian Church of Chicago, of which he remained the pastor over thirty years. In 1850 he received a call to the chair of Didactic Theology at Lane Seminary, as successor to Dr. Lyman Beecher, but it was declined, as was a similar call ten years later. Resigning his pastorate in 1873, he was, for several years, Professor of Christian Evidences and Ethics in the Theological Seminary of the Northwest; in 1876-78 served as President of Lake Forest University (of which he was one of the founders), and, in 1880-83, as lecturer in Lane Theological Seminary. He received the degree of D.D. from Hamilton College, N. Y., in 1854, that of LL.D. from Lake Forest University, and was Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly (N. S.) at Wilmington, Del., in 1859. Died, at Evanston, Ill., Feb. 24, 1894.

PAVEY, Charles W., soldier and ex-State Auditor, was born in Highland County, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1835; removed to Illinois in 1859, settling in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, and, for a time, followed the occupation of a farmer and stock-raiser. In August, 1862, he enlisted in the Eightieth Illinois Volunteers for the Civil War, and became First Lieutenant of Company E. He was severely wounded at the battle of Sand Mountain, and, having been captured, was confined in Libby Prison, at Salisbury, N. C., and at Danville, Va., for a period of nearly two years, enduring great hardship and suffering. Having been exchanged, he served to the close of the war as Assistant Inspector-General on the Staff of General Rousseau, in Tennessee. He was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880, which nominated General Garfield for the Presidency, and was one of the famous "306" who stood by General Grant in that struggle. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur Collector of Internal Revenue for the Southern District, and, in 1888, was nominated and elected State Auditor on the Republican ticket, but was defeated for re-election in the "land-slide" of 1892. General Pavey has been prominent in "G. A. R." councils, and held the position of Junior Vice-Commander for the Department of Illinois in 1878, and that of Senior Vice-Commander in 1879. He also served as Brigadier-General of the National Guard, for Southern Illinois, during the railroad strike of 1877. In 1897 he received from President McKinley the appointment of Special Agent of the Treasury Department. His home is at Mount Vernon, Jefferson County.

PAWNEE, a village of Sangamon County, at the eastern terminus of the Auburn & Pawnee Railroad, 19 miles south of Springfield. The town has a bank and a weekly paper. Population (1900), 595; (1903, est.), 1,000.

PAWNEE RAILROAD, a short line in Sangamon County, extending from Pawnee to Auburn (9 miles), where it forms a junction with the Chicago & Alton Railroad. The company was organized and procured a charter in December, 1888, and the road completed the following year. The cost was $101,774. Capital stock authorized, $100,000; funded debt (1895), $50,000.

PAW PAW, a village of Lee County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 8 miles northwest of Earlville. The town is in a farming region, but has a bank and one weekly paper. Population (1890), 635; (1900), 765.

PAXTON, the county-seat of Ford County, is situated at the intersection of the Chicago Division of the Illinois Central and the Lake Erie & Western Railroads, 103 miles south by west from Chicago, and 49 miles east of Bloomington. It contains a court house, two schools, water-works, electric light and water-heating system, two banks, nine churches, and one daily newspaper. It is an important shipping-point for the farm products of the surrounding territory, which is a rich agricultural region. Besides brick and tile works and flour mills, factories for the manufacture of carriages, buggies, hardware, cigars, brooms, and plows are located here. Pop. (1890), 2,187; (1900), 3,036.

PAYSON, a village in Adams County, 15 miles southeast of Quincy; the nearest railroad station being Fall Creek, on the Quincy and Louisiana Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has one newspaper. Population (1900), 465.

PAYSON, Lewis E., lawyer and ex-Congressman, was born at Providence, R. I., Sept. 17, 1840; came to Illinois at the age of 12, and, after passing through the common schools, attended Lombard University, at Galesburg, for two years. He was admitted to the bar at Ottawa in 1862, and, in 1865, took up his residence at Pontiac. From 1869 to 1873 he was Judge of the Livingston County Court, and, from 1881 to 1891, represented his District in Congress, being elected as a Republican, but, in 1890, was defeated by his Democratic opponent, Herman W. Snow. Since retiring from Congress he has practiced his profession in Washington, D. C.

PEABODY, Selim Hobart, educator, was born in Rockingham County, Vt., August 20, 1829; after reaching 13 years of age, spent a year in a Boston Latin School, then engaged in various occupations, including teaching, until 1848, when he entered the University of Vermont, graduating third in his class in 1852; was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Engineering in the Polytechnic College at Philadelphia, in 1854, remaining three years, when he spent five years in Wisconsin, the last three as Superintendent of Schools at Racine. From 1865 to 1871 he was teacher of physical science in Chicago High School, also conducting night schools for working men; in 1871 became Professor of Physics and Engineering in Massachusetts Agricultural College, but returned to the Chicago High School in 1874; in 1876 took charge of the Chicago Academy of Sciences, and, in 1878, entered the Illinois Industrial University (now University of Illinois), at Champaign, first as Professor of Mechanical Engineering, in 1880 becoming President, but resigning in 1891. During the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Professor Peabody was Chief of the Department of Liberal Arts, and, on the expiration of his service there, assumed the position of Curator of the newly organized Chicago Academy of Sciences, from which he retired some two years later.

PEARL, a village of Pike County, on the Kansas City branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 14 miles west of Roodhouse. Population (1890), 928; (1900), 722.

PEARSON, Isaac N., ex-Secretary of State, was born at Centreville, Pa., July 27, 1842; removed to Macomb, McDonough County, Ill., in 1858, and has ever since resided there. In 1872 he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1876. Later he engaged in real-estate and banking business. He was a member of the lower house in the Thirty-third, and of the Senate in the Thirty-fifth, General Assembly, but before the expiration of his term in the latter, was elected Secretary of State, on the Republican ticket, in 1888. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated, although, next to Governor Fifer, he received the largest vote cast for any candidate for a political office on the Republican State ticket.

PEARSON, John M., ex-Railway and Warehouse Commissioner, born at Newburyport, Mass., in 1832—the son of a ship-carpenter; was educated in his native State and came to Illinois in 1849, locating at the city of Alton, where he was afterwards engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements. In 1873 he was appointed a member of the first Railway and Warehouse Commission, serving four years; in 1878 was elected Representative in the Thirty-first General Assembly from Madison County, and was re-elected, successively, in 1880 and '82. He was appointed a member of the first Board of Live-Stock Commissioners in 1885, serving until 1893, for a considerable portion of the time as President of the Board. Mr. Pearson is a life-long Republican and prominent member of the Masonic fraternity. His present home is at Godfrey.

PEARSONS, Daniel K., M.D., real-estate operator and capitalist, was born at Bradfordton, Vt., April 14, 1830; began teaching at 16 years of age, and, at 21, entered Dartmouth College, taking a two years' course. He then studied medicine, and, after practicing a short time in his native State, removed to Chicopee, Mass., where he remained from 1843 to 1857. The latter year he came to Ogle County, Ill., and began operating in real estate, finally adding to this a loan business for Eastern parties, but discontinued this line in 1877. He owns extensive tracts of timber lands in Michigan, is a Director in the Chicago City Railway Company and American Exchange Bank, besides being interested in other financial institutions. He has been one of the most liberal supporters of the Chicago Historical Society, and a princely contributor to various benevolent and educational institutions, his gifts to colleges, in different parts of the country, aggregating over a million dollars.

PECATONICA, a town in Pecatonica Township, Winnebago County, on the Pecatonica River. It is on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, midway between Freeport and Rockford, being 14 miles from each. It contains a carriage factory, machine shop, condensed milk factory, a bank, six churches, a graded school, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,059; (1900), 1,045.

PECATONICA RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which rise in Iowa County, Wis. They unite a little north of the Illinois State line, whence the river runs southeast to Freeport, then east and northeast, until it enters Rock River at Rockton. From the headwaters of either branch to the mouth of the river is about 50 miles.

PECK, Ebenezer, early lawyer, was born in Portland, Maine, May 22, 1805; received an academical education, studied law and was admitted to the bar in Canada in 1827. He was twice elected to the Provincial Parliament and made King's Counsel in 1833; came to Illinois in 1835, settling in Chicago; served in the State Senate (1838-40), and in the House (1840-42 and 1858-60); was also Clerk of the Supreme Court (1841-45), Reporter of Supreme Court decisions (1849-63), and member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Mr. Peck was an intimate personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, by whom he was appointed a member of the Court of Claims, at Washington, serving until 1875. Died, May 25, 1881.

PECK, Ferdinand Wythe, lawyer and financier, was born in Chicago, July 15, 1848—the son of Philip F. W. Peck, a pioneer and early merchant of the metropolis of Illinois; was educated in the public schools, the Chicago University and Union College of Law, graduating from both of the last named institutions, and being admitted to the bar in 1869. For a time he engaged in practice, but his father having died in 1871, the responsibility of caring for a large estate devolved upon him and has since occupied his time, though he has given much attention to the amelioration of the condition of the poor of his native city, and works of practical benevolence and public interest. He is one of the founders of the Illinois Humane Society, has been President and a member of the Board of Control of the Chicago Athenaeum, member of the Board of Education, President of the Chicago Union League, and was an influential factor in securing the success of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, in 1893, serving as First Vice-President of the Chicago Board of Directors, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and member of the Board of Reference and Control. Of late years, Mr. Peck has been connected with several important building enterprises of a semi-public character, which have added to the reputation of Chicago, including the Auditorium, Stock Exchange Building and others in which he is a leading stockholder, and in the erection of which he has been a chief promoter. In 1898 he was appointed, by President McKinley, the United States Commissioner to the International Exposition at Paris of 1900, as successor to the late Maj. M. P. Handy, and the success which has followed his discharge of the duties of that position, has demonstrated the fitness of his selection.

PECK, George R., railway attorney, born in Steuben County, N. Y., in 1843; was early taken to Wisconsin, where he assisted in clearing his father's farm; at 16 became a country school-teacher to aid in freeing the same farm from debt; enlisted at 19 in the First Wisconsin Heavy Artillery, later becoming a Captain in the Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry, with which he joined in "Sherman's March to the Sea." Returning home at the close of the war, he began the study of law at Janesville, spending six years there as a student, Clerk of the Circuit Court and in practice. From there he went to Kansas and, between 1871 and '74, practiced his profession at Independence, when he was appointed by President Grant United States District Attorney for the Kansas District, but resigned this position, in 1879, to return to general practice. In 1881 he became General Solicitor of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, removing to Chicago in 1893. In 1895 he resigned his position with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad to accept a similar position with the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company, which (1898) he still holds. Mr. Peck is recognized as one of the most gifted orators in the West, and, in 1897, was chosen to deliver the principal address at the unveiling of the Logan equestrian statue in Lake Front Park, Chicago; has also officiated as orator on a number of other important public occasions, always acquitting himself with distinction.

PECK, John Mason, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 31, 1789; removed to Greene County, N. Y., in 1811, where he united with the Baptist Church, the same year entering on pastoral work, while prosecuting his studies and supporting himself by teaching. In 1814 he became pastor of a church at Amenia, N. Y., and, in 1817, was sent west as a missionary, arriving in St. Louis in the latter part of the same year. During the next nine years he traveled extensively through Missouri and Illinois, as an itinerant preacher and teacher, finally locating at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, where, in 1826, he established the Rock Spring Seminary for the education of teachers and ministers. Out of this grew Shurtleff College, founded at Upper Alton in 1835, in securing the endowment of which Dr. Peck traveled many thousands of miles and collected $30,000, and of which he served as Trustee for many years. Up to 1843 he devoted much time to aiding in the establishment of a theological institution at Covington, Ky., and, for two years following, was Corresponding Secretary and Financial Agent of the American Baptist Publication Society, with headquarters in Philadelphia. Returning to the West, he served as pastor of several important churches in Missouri, Illinois and Kentucky. A man of indomitable will, unflinching industry and thoroughly upright in conduct, for a period of a quarter of a century, in the early history of the State, probably no man exerted a larger influence for good and the advancement of the cause of education, among the pioneer citizens of all classes, than Dr. Peck. Though giving his attention so constantly to preaching and teaching, he found time to write much, not only for the various publications with which he was, from time to time, connected, but also for other periodicals, besides publishing "A Guide for Emigrants" (1831), of which a new edition appeared in 1836, and a "Gazetteer of Illinois" (Jacksonville, 1834, and Boston, 1837), which continue to be valued for the information they contain of the condition of the country at that time. He was an industrious collector of historical records in the form of newspapers and pamphlets, which were unfortunately destroyed by fire a few years before his death. In 1852 he received the degree of D.D. from Harvard University. Died, at Rock Spring, St. Clair County, March 15, 1858.

PECK, Philip F. W., pioneer merchant, was born in Providence, R. I., in 1809, the son of a wholesale merchant who had lost his fortune by indorsing for a friend. After some years spent in a mercantile house in New York, he came to Chicago on a prospecting tour, in 1830; the following year brought a stock of goods to the embryo emporium of the Northwest—then a small backwoods hamlet—and, by trade and fortunate investments in real estate, laid the foundation of what afterwards became a large fortune. He died, Oct. 23, 1871, as the result of an accident occurring about the time of the great fire of two weeks previous, from which he was a heavy sufferer pecuniarily. Three of his sons, Walter L., Clarence I. and Ferdinand W. Peck, are among Chicago's most substantial citizens.

PEKIN, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Tazewell County, and an important railway center, located on the Illinois River, 10 miles south of Peoria and 56 miles north of Springfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the chief occupations in the surrounding country, but the city itself is an important grain market with large general shipping interests. It has several distilleries, besides grain elevators, malt-houses, brick and tile works, lumber yards, planing mills, marble works, plow and wagon works, and a factory for corn products. Its banking facilities are adequate, and its religious and educational advantages are excellent. The city has a public library, park, steam-heating plant, three daily and four weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 6,347; (1900), 8,420.

PELL, Gilbert T., Representative in the Third Illinois General Assembly (1822) from Edwards County, and an opponent of the resolution for a State Convention adopted by the Legislature at that session, designed to open the door for the admission of slavery. Mr. Pell was a son-in-law of Morris Birkbeck, who was one of the leaders in opposition to the Convention scheme, and very naturally sympathized with his father-in-law. He was elected to the Legislature, for a second term, in 1828, but subsequently left the State, dying elsewhere, when his widow removed to Australia.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. As to operations of this corporation in Illinois, see Calumet River; Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago; South Chicago & Southern, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways. The whole number of miles owned, leased and operated by the Pennsylvania System, in 1898, was 1,987.21, of which only 61.34 miles were in Illinois. It owns, however, a controlling interest in the stock of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway (which see).

PEORIA, the second largest city of the State and the county-seat of Peoria County, is 160 miles southwest of Chicago, and at the foot of an expansion of the Illinois River known as Peoria Lake. The site of the town occupies an elevated plateau, having a water frontage of four miles and extending back to a bluff, which rises 200 feet above the river level and about 120 feet above the highest point of the main site. It was settled in 1778 or '79, although, as generally believed, the French missionaries had a station there in 1711. There was certainly a settlement there as early as 1725, when Renault received a grant of lands at Pimitou, facing the lake then bearing the same name as the village. From that date until 1812, the place was continuously occupied as a French village, and is said to have been the most important point for trading in the Mississippi Valley. The original village was situated about a mile and a half above the foot of the lake; but later, the present site was occupied, at first receiving the name of "La Ville de Maillet," from a French Canadian who resided in Peoria, from 1765 to 1801 (the time of his death), and who commanded a company of volunteers in the Revolutionary War. The population of the old town removed to the new site, and the present name was given to the place by American settlers, from the Peoria Indians, who were the occupants of the country when it was first discovered, but who had followed their cognate tribes of the Illinois family to Cahokia and Kaskaskia, about a century before American occupation of this region. In 1812 the town is estimated to have contained about seventy dwellings, with a population of between 200 and 300, made up largely of French traders, hunters and voyageurs, with a considerable admixture of half-breeds and Indians, and a few Americans. Among the latter were Thomas Forsyth, Indian Agent and confidential adviser of Governor Edwards; Michael La Croix, son-in-law of Julian Dubuque, founder of the city of Dubuque; Antoine Le Claire, founder of Davenport, and for whom Le Claire, Iowa, is named; William Arundel, afterwards Recorder of St. Clair County, and Isaac Darnielle, the second lawyer in Illinois.—In November, 1812, about half the town was burned, by order of Capt. Thomas E. Craig, who had been directed, by Governor Edwards, to proceed up the river in boats with materials to build a fort at Peoria. At the same time, the Governor himself was at the head of a force marching against Black Partridge's village, which he destroyed. Edwards had no communication with Craig, who appears to have acted solely on his own responsibility. That the latter's action was utterly unjustifiable, there can now be little doubt. He alleged, by way of excuse, that his boats had been fired upon from the shore, at night, by Indians or others, who were harbored by the citizens. The testimony of the French, however, is to the effect that it was an unprovoked and cowardly assault, instigated by wine which the soldiers had stolen from the cellars of the inhabitants. The bulk of those who remained after the fire were taken by Craig to a point below Alton and put ashore. This occurred in the beginning of winter, and the people, being left in a destitute condition, were subjected to great suffering. A Congressional investigation followed, and the French, having satisfactorily established the fact that they were not hostile, were restored to their possessions.—In 1813 a fort, designed for permanent occupancy, was erected and named Fort Clark, in honor of Col. George Rogers Clark. It had one (if not two) block-houses, with magazines and quarters for officers and men. It was finally evacuated in 1818, and was soon afterwards burned by the Indians. Although a trading-post had been maintained here, at intervals, after the affair of 1812, there was no attempt made to rebuild the town until 1819, when Americans began to arrive.—In 1824 a post of the American Fur Company was established here by John Hamlin, the company having already had, for five years, a station at Wesley City, three miles farther down the river. Hamlin also traded in pork and other products, and was the first to introduce keel-boats on the Illinois River. By transferring his cargo to lighter draft boats, when necessary, he made the trip from Peoria to Chicago entirely by water, going from the Des Plaines to Mud Lake, and thence to the South Branch of the Chicago River, without unloading. In 1834 the town had but seven frame houses and twenty-one log cabins. It was incorporated as a town in 1835 (Rudolphus Rouse being the first President), and, as the City of Peoria, ten years later (Wm. Hale being the first Mayor).—Peoria is an important railway and business center, eleven railroad lines concentrating here. It presents many attractive features, such as handsome residences, fine views of river, bluff and valley scenery, with an elaborate system of parks and drives. An excellent school system is liberally supported, and its public buildings (national, county and city) are fine and costly. Its churches are elegant and well attended, the leading denominations being Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Protestant and Reformed Episcopal, Lutheran, Evangelical and Roman Catholic. It is the seat of Bradley Polytechnic Institute, a young and flourishing scientific school affiliated with the University of Chicago, and richly endowed through the munificence of Mrs. Lydia Bradley, who devotes her whole estate, of at least a million dollars, to this object. Right Rev. John L. Spaulding, Bishop of the Roman Catholic diocese of Peoria, is erecting a handsome and costly building for the Spaulding Institute, a school for the higher education of young men.—At Bartonville, a suburb of Peoria, on an elevation commanding a magnificent view of the Illinois River valley for many miles, the State has located an asylum for the incurable insane. It is now in process of erection, and is intended to be one of the most complete of its kind in the world. Peoria lies in a corn and coal region, is noted for the number and extent of its distilleries, and, in 1890, ranked eighth among the grain markets of the country. It also has an extensive commerce with Chicago, St. Louis and other important cities; was credited, by the census of 1890, with 554 manufacturing establishments, representing 90 different branches of industry, with a capital of $15,072,567 and an estimated annual product of $55,504,523. Its leading industries are the manufacture of distilled and malt liquors, agricultural implements, glucose and machine-shop products. Its contributions to the internal revenue of the country are second only to those of the New York district. Population (1870), 22,849; (1880), 29,259; (1890), 41,024; (1900), 56,100.

PEORIA COUNTY, originally a part of Fulton County, but cut off in 1825. It took its name from the Peoria Indians, who occupied that region when it was first discovered. As first organized, it included the present counties of Jo Daviess and Cook, with many others in the northern part of the State. At that time there were less than 1,500 inhabitants in the entire region; and John Hamlin, a Justice of the Peace, on his return from Green Bay (whither he had accompanied William S. Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, with a drove of cattle for the fort there), solemnized, at Chicago, the marriage of Alexander Wolcott, then Indian Agent, with a daughter of John Kinzie. The original Peoria County has been subdivided into thirty counties, among them being some of the largest and richest in the State. The first county officer was Norman Hyde, who was elected Judge of the Probate Court by the Legislature in January, 1825. His commission from Governor Coles was dated on the eighteenth of that month, but he did not qualify until June 4, following, when he took the oath of office before John Dixon, Circuit Clerk, who founded the city that bears his name. Meanwhile, Mr. Hyde had been appointed the first Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, and served in that capacity until entering upon his duties as Probate Judge. The first election of county officers was held, March 7, 1825, at the house of William Eads. Nathan Dillon, Joseph Smith, and William Holland were chosen Commissioners; Samuel Fulton Sheriff, and William Phillips Coroner. The first County Treasurer was Aaron Hawley, and the first general election of officers took place in 1826. The first court house was a log cabin, and the first term of the Circuit Court began Nov. 14, 1825, John York Sawyer sitting on the bench, with John Dixon, Clerk; Samuel Fulton, Sheriff; and John Twiney, the Attorney-General, present. Peoria County is, at present, one of the wealthiest and most populous counties in the State. Its soil is fertile and its manufactures numerous, especially at Peoria, the county-seat and principal city (which see). The area of the county is 615 square miles, and its population (1880), 55,353; (1890), 70,378; (1900), 88,608.

PEORIA LAKE, an expansion of the Illinois River, forming the eastern boundary of Peoria County, which it separates from the counties of Woodford and Tazewell. It is about 20 miles long and 2½ miles broad at the widest part.

PEORIA, ATLANTA & DECATUR RAILROAD. (See Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad.)

PEORIA, DECATUR & EVANSVILLE RAILWAY. The total length of this line, extending from Peoria, Ill., to Evansville, Ind., is 330.87 miles, all owned by the company, of which 273 miles are in Illinois. It extends from Pekin, southeast to Grayville, on the Wabash River—is single track, unballasted, and of standard gauge. Between Pekin and Peoria the company uses the tracks of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway, of which it is one-fourth owner. Between Hervey City and Midland Junction it has trackage privileges over the line owned jointly by the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville and the Terre Haute & Peoria Companies (7.5 miles). Between Midland Junction and Decatur (2.4 miles) the tracks of the Illinois Central are used, the two lines having terminal facilities at Decatur in common. The rails are of fifty-two and sixty-pound steel.—(HISTORY.) The main line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway is the result of the consolidation of several lines built under separate charters. (1) The Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1867, built in 1869-71, and operated the latter year, was leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railway, but sold to representatives of the bond-holders, on account of default on interest, in 1876, and reorganized as the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway. (2) The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, (projected from Decatur to Mattoon), was incorporated in 1871, completed from Mattoon to Hervey City, in 1872, and, the same year, consolidated with the Chicago & Great Southern; in January, 1874, the Decatur line passed into the hands of a receiver, and, in 1877, having been sold under foreclosure, was reorganized as the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern Railroad. In 1879 it was placed in the hands of trustees, but the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railway having acquired a controlling interest during the same year, the two lines were consolidated under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company. (3) The Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, chartered in 1857, was consolidated in 1872 with the Mount Vernon & Grayville Railroad (projected), the new corporation taking the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern (already mentioned). In 1872 the latter corporation was consolidated with the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Railroad, under the name of the Chicago & Illinois Southern Railway. Both consolidations, however, were set aside by decree of the United States District Court, in 1876, and the partially graded road and franchises of the Grayville & Mattoon lines sold, under foreclosure, to the contractors for the construction; 20 miles of the line from Olney to Newton, were completed during the month of September of that year, and the entire line, from Grayville to Mattoon, in 1878. In 1880 this line was sold, under decree of foreclosure, to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway Company, which had already acquired the Decatur & Mattoon Division—thus placing the entire line, from Peoria to Grayville, in the hands of one corporation. A line under the name of the Evansville & Peoria Railroad, chartered in Indiana in 1880, was consolidated, the same year, with the Illinois corporation under the name of the latter, and completed from Grayville to Evansville in 1882. (4) The Chicago & Ohio River Railroad—chartered, in 1869, as the Danville, Olney & Ohio River Railroad—was constructed, as a narrow-gauge line, from Kansas to West Liberty, in 1878-81; in the latter year was changed to standard gauge and completed, in 1883, from Sidell to Olney (86 miles). The same year it went into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, in February, 1886, and reorganized, in May following, as the Chicago & Ohio River Railroad; was consolidated with the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railway, in 1893, and used as the Chicago Division of that line. The property and franchises of the entire line passed into the hands of receivers in 1894, and are still (1898) under their management.

PEORIA, PEKIN & JACKSONVILLE RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEORIA & BUREAU VALLEY RAILROAD, a short line, 46.7 miles in length, operated by the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company, extending from Peoria to Bureau Junction, Ill. It was incorporated, Feb. 12, 1853, completed the following year, and leased to the Rock Island in perpetuity. April 14, 1854, the annual rental being $125,000. The par value of the capital stock is $1,500,000. Annual dividends of 8 per cent are guaranteed, payable semi-annually. (See Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway.)

PEORIA & EASTERN RAILROAD. Of this line the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company is the lessee. Its total length is 350½ miles, 132 of which lie in Illinois—123 being owned by the Company. That portion within this State extends east from Pekin to the Indiana State line, in addition to which the Company has trackage facilities over the line of the Peoria & Pekin Union Railway (9 miles) to Peoria. The gauge is standard. The track is single, laid with sixty and sixty-seven-pound steel rails and ballasted almost wholly with gravel. The capital stock is $10,000,000. In 1895 it had a bonded debt of $13,603,000 and a floating debt of $1,261,130, making a total capitalization of $24,864,130.—(HISTORY.) The original of this corporation was the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington & Pekin Railroad, which was consolidated, in July, 1869, with the Indianapolis, Crawfordsville & Danville Railroad—the new corporation taking the name of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western—and was opened to Pekin the same year. In 1874 it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1879, and reorganized as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railway Company. The next change occurred in 1881, when it was consolidated with an Ohio corporation (the Ohio, Indiana & Pacific Railroad), again undergoing a slight change of name in its reorganization as the Indiana, Bloomington & Western Railroad Company. In 1886 it again got into financial straits, was placed in charge of a receiver and sold to a reorganization committee, and, in January, 1887, took the name of the Ohio, Indiana & Western Railway Company. The final reorganization, under its present name, took place in February, 1890, when it was leased to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which it is operated. (See Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway.)

PEORIA & HANXBAL RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & OQUAWKA RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

PEORIA & PEKIN UNION RAILWAY. A line connecting the cities of Peoria and Pekin, which are only 8 miles apart. It was chartered in 1880, and acquired, by purchase, the tracks of the Peoria, Pekin & Jacksonville and the Peoria & Springfield Railroads, between the two cities named in its title, giving it control of two lines, which are used by nearly all the railroads entering both cities from the east side of the Illinois River. The mileage, including both divisions, is 18.14 miles, second tracks and sidings increasing the total to nearly 60 miles. The track is of standard gauge, about two-thirds being laid with steel rails. The total cost of construction was $4,350,987. Its total capitalization (1898) was $4,177,763, including $1,000,000 in stock, and a funded debt of $2,904,000. The capital stock is held in equal amounts (each 2,500 shares) by the Wabash, the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Peoria & Eastern companies, with 1,000 shares by the Lake Erie & Western. Terminal charges and annual rentals are also paid by the Terre Haute & Peoria and the Iowa Central Railways.

PEORIA & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad of Illinois.)

PEOTONE, a village of Will County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 41 miles south southwest from Chicago; has some manufactures, a bank and a newspaper. The surrounding country is agricultural. Population (1890), 717; (1900), 1,003.

PERCY, a village of Randolph County, at the intersection of the Wabash, Chesapeake & Western and the Mobile & Ohio Railways. Population (1890), 360; (1900), 660.

PERROT, Nicholas, a French explorer, who visited the valley of the Fox River (of Wisconsin) and the country around the great lakes, at various times between 1670 and 1690. He was present, as a guide and interpreter, at the celebrated conference held at Sault Ste. Marie, in 1671, which was attended by fifteen Frenchmen and representatives from seventeen Indian tribes, and at which the Sieur de Lussan took formal possession of Lakes Huron and Superior, with the surrounding region and "all the country southward to the sea," in the name of Louis XIV. of France. Perrot was the first to discover lead in the West, and, for several years, was Commandant in the Green Bay district. As a chronicler he was intelligent, interesting and accurate. His writings were not published until 1864, but have always been highly prized as authority.

PERRY, a town of Pike County; has a bank and a newspaper. Population (1880), 770; (1890), 705; (1900), 642.

PERRY COUNTY, lies in the southwest quarter of the State, with an area of 440 square miles and a population (1900) of 19,830. It was organized as a county in 1827, and named for Com. Oliver H. Perry. The general surface is rolling, although flat prairies occupy a considerable portion, interspersed with "post-oak flats." Limestone is found in the southern, and sandstone in the northern, sections, but the chief mineral wealth of the county is coal, which is abundant, and, at several points, easily mined, some of it being of a superior quality. Salt is manufactured, to some extent, and the chief agricultural output is wheat. Pinckneyville, the county-seat, has a central position and a population of about 1,300. Duquoin is the largest city. Beaucoup Creek is the principal stream, and the county is crossed by several lines of railroad.

PERU, a city in La Salle County, at the head of navigation on the Illinois River, which is here spanned by a handsome bridge. It is distant 100 miles southwest from Chicago, and the same distance north-northeast from Springfield. It is connected by street cars with La Salle, one mile distant, which is the terminus of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. It is situated in a rich coal-mining region, is an important trade center, and has several manufacturing establishments, including zinc smelting works, rolling mills, nickelloid factory, metal novelty works, gas engine factory, tile works, plow, scale and patent-pump factories, foundries and machine shops, flour and saw mills, clock factory, etc. Two national banks, with a combined capital of $200,000, are located at Peru, and one daily and one weekly paper. Population (1870), 3,650; (1880), 4,682; (1890), 5,550; (1900), 6,863.

PESOTUM, a village in Champaign County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 5 miles south of Tolono. Population (1890), 575.

PETERSBURG, a city of Menard County, and the county-seat, on the Sangamon River, at the intersection Chicago & Alton with the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railway; 23 miles northwest of Springfield and 28 miles northeast of Jacksonville. The town was surveyed and platted by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, and is the seat of the "Old Salem" Chautauqua. It has machine shops, two banks, two weekly papers and nine churches. The manufactures include woolen goods, brick and drain-tile, bed-springs, mattresses, and canned goods. Pop. (1890), 2,342, (1900), 2,807.

PETERS, Onslow, lawyer and jurist, was born in Massachusetts, graduated at Brown University, and was admitted to the bar and practiced law in his native State until 1837, when he settled at Peoria, Ill. He served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, was elected to the bench of the Sixteenth Judicial Circuit in 1853, and re-elected in 1855. Died, Feb. 28, 1856.

PHILLIPS, David L., journalist and politician, was born where the town of Marion, Williamson County, Ill., now stands, Oct. 28, 1823; came to St. Clair County in childhood, his father settling near Belleville; began teaching at an early age, and, when about 18, joined the Baptist Church, and, after a brief course with the distinguished Dr. Peck, at his Rock Spring Seminary, two years later entered the ministry, serving churches in Washington and other Southern Illinois counties, finally taking charge of a church at Jonesboro. Though originally a Democrat, his advanced views on slavery led to a disagreement with his church, and he withdrew; then accepted a position as paymaster in the construction department of the Illinois Central Railroad, finally being transferred to that of Land Agent for the Southern section, in this capacity visiting different parts of the State from one end of the main line to the other. About 1854 he became associated with the management of "The Jonesboro Gazette," a Democratic paper, which, during his connection with it (some two years), he made an earnest opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. At the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention (which see), held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, he was appointed a member of their State Central Committee, and, as such, joined in the call for the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington in May following, where he served as Vice-President for his District, and was nominated for Presidential Elector on the Fremont ticket. Two years later (1858) he was the unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in the Southern District, being defeated by John A. Logan; was again in the State Convention of 1860, and a delegate to the National Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for President the first time; was appointed by Mr. Lincoln United States Marshal for the Southern District in 1861, and re-appointed in 1865, but resigned after Andrew Johnson's defection in 1866. During 1862 Mr. Phillips became part proprietor of "The State Journal" at Springfield, retaining this relation until 1878, at intervals performing editorial service; also took a prominent part in organizing and equipping the One Hundred and Ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (sometimes called the "Phillips Regiment"), and, in 1865, was one of the committee of citizens sent to escort the remains of President Lincoln to Springfield. He joined in the Liberal Republican movement at Cincinnati in 1872, but, in 1876, was in line with his former party associates, and served in that year as an unsuccessful candidate for Congress, in the Springfield District, in opposition to William M. Springer, early the following year receiving the appointment of Postmaster for the city of Springfield from President Hayes. Died, at Springfield, June 19, 1880.

PHILLIPS, George S., author, was born at Peterborough, England, in January, 1816; graduated at Cambridge, and came to the United States, engaging in journalism. In 1845 he returned to England, and, for a time, was editor of "The Leeds Times," still later being Principal of the People's College at Huddersfield. Returning to the United States, he came to Cook County, and, about 1866-68, was a writer of sketches over the nom de plume of "January Searle" for "The Chicago Republican"—later was literary editor of "The New York Sun" for several years. His mind becoming impaired, he was placed in an asylum at Trenton, N. J., finally dying at Morristown, N. J., Jan. 14, 1889. Mr. Phillips was the author of several volumes, chiefly sketches of travel and biography.

PHILLIPS, Jesse J., lawyer, soldier and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., May 22, 1837. Shortly after graduating from the Hillsboro Academy, he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1860. In 1861 he organized a company of volunteers, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was attached to the Ninth Illinois Infantry. Captain Phillips was successively advanced to the rank of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; resigned on account of disability, in August, 1864, but was brevetted Brigadier-General at the close of the war. His military record was exceptionally brilliant. He was wounded three times at Shiloh, and was personally thanked and complimented by Generals Grant and Oglesby for gallantry and efficient service. At the termination of the struggle he returned to Hillsboro and engaged in practice. In 1866, and again in 1868, he was the Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but was both times defeated. In 1879 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1885. In 1890 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Fourth District, and, in 1893, was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Justice John M. Scholfield, his term expiring in 1897, when he was re-elected to succeed himself. Judge Phillips' present term will expire in 1906.

PHILLIPS, Joseph, early jurist, was born in Tennessee, received a classical and legal education, and served as a Captain in the War of 1812; in 1816 was appointed Secretary of Illinois Territory, serving until the admission of Illinois as a State, when he became the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, serving until July, 1822, when he resigned, being succeeded on the bench by John Reynolds, afterwards Governor. In 1822 he was a candidate for Governor in the interest of the advocates of a pro-slavery amendment of the State Constitution, but was defeated by Edward Coles, the leader of the anti-slavery party. (See Coles, Edward, and Slavery and Slave Laws.) He appears from the "Edwards Papers" to have been in Illinois as late as 1832, but is said eventually to have returned to Tennessee. The date of his death is unknown.

PIANKESHAW, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. Their name, like those of their brethren, underwent many mutations of orthography, the tribe being referred to, variously, as the "Pou-an-ke-kiahs," the "Pi-an-gie-shaws," the "Pi-an-qui-shaws," and the "Py-an-ke-shaws." They were less numerous than the Weas, their numerical strength ranking lowest among the bands of the Miamis. At the time La Salle planted his colony around Starved Rock, their warriors numbered 150. Subsequent to the dispersion of this colony they (alone of the Miamis) occupied portions of the present territory of Illinois, having villages on the Vermilion and Wabash Rivers. Their earliest inclinations toward the whites were friendly, the French traders having intermarried with women of the tribe soon after the advent of the first explorers. Col. George Rogers Clark experienced little difficulty in securing their allegiance to the new government which he proclaimed. In the sanguinary raids (usually followed by reprisals), which marked Western history during the years immediately succeeding the Revolution, the Piankeshaws took no part; yet the outrages, perpetrated upon peaceable colonists, had so stirred the settlers' blood, that all Indians were included in the general thirst for vengeance, and each was unceremoniously dispatched as soon as seen. The Piankeshaws appealed to Washington for protection, and the President issued a special proclamation in their behalf. After the cession of the last remnant of the Miami territory to the United States, the tribe was removed to a Kansas reservation, and its last remnant finally found a home in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Weas.)

"PIASA BIRD," LEGEND OF THE. When the French explorers first descended the Upper Mississippi River, they found some remarkable figures depicted upon the face of the bluff, just above the site of the present city of Alton, which excited their wonder and continued to attract interest long after the country was occupied by the whites. The account given of the discovery by Marquette, who descended the river from the mouth of the Wisconsin, in June, 1673, is as follows: "As we coasted along" (after passing the mouth of the Illinois) "rocks frightful for their height and length, we saw two monsters painted on one of the rocks, which startled us at first, and upon which the boldest Indian dare not gaze long. They are as large as a calf, with horns on the head like a deer, a frightful look, red eyes, bearded like a tiger, the face somewhat like a man's, the body covered with scales, and the tail so long that it twice makes the turn of the body, passing over the head and down between the legs, ending at last in a fish's tail. Green, red and black are the colors employed. On the whole, these two monsters are so well painted that we could not believe any Indian to have been the designer, as good painters in France would find it hard to do as well. Besides this, they are painted so high upon the rock that it is hard to get conveniently at them to paint them." As the Indians could give no account of the origin of these figures, but had their terror even more excited at the sight of them than Marquette himself, they are supposed to have been the work of some prehistoric race occupying the country long before the arrival of the aborigines whom Marquette and his companions found in Illinois. There was a tradition that the figures were intended to represent a creature, part beast and part bird, which destroyed immense numbers of the inhabitants by swooping down upon them from its abode upon the rocks. At last a chief is said to have offered himself a victim for his people, and when the monster made its appearance, twenty of his warriors, concealed near by, discharged their arrows at it, killing it just before it reached its prey. In this manner the life of the chief was saved and his people were preserved from further depredations; and it was to commemorate this event that the figure of the bird was painted on the face of the cliff on whose summit the chief stood. This story, told in a paper by Mr. John Russell, a pioneer author of Illinois, obtained wide circulation in this country and in Europe, about the close of the first quarter of the present century, as the genuine "Legend of the Piasa Bird." It is said, however, that Mr. Russell, who was a popular writer of fiction, acknowledged that it was drawn largely from his imagination. Many prehistoric relics and human remains are said, by the late William McAdams, the antiquarian of Alton, to have been found in caves in the vicinity, and it seems a well authenticated fact that the Indians, when passing the spot, were accustomed to discharge their arrows—and, later, their firearms—at the figure on the face of the cliff. Traces of this celebrated pictograph were visible as late as 1840 to 1845, but have since been entirely quarried away.

PIATT COUNTY, organized in 1841, consisting of parts of Macon and Dewitt Counties. Its area is 440 square miles; population (1900), 17,706. The first Commissioners were John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck. John Piatt, after whose family the county was named, was the first Sheriff. The North Fork of the Sangamon River flows centrally through the county from northeast to southwest, and several lines of railroad afford transportation for its products. Its resources and the occupation of the people are almost wholly agricultural, the surface being level prairie and the soil fertile. Monticello, the county-seat, has a population of about 1,700. Other leading towns are Cerro Gordo (939) and Bement (1,129).

PICKETT, Thomas Johnson, journalist, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 17, 1821; spent six years (1830-36) in St. Louis, when his family removed to Peoria; learned the printer's trade in the latter city, and, in 1840, began the publication of "The Peoria News," then sold out and established "The Republican" (afterwards "The Transcript"); was a member of the Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, serving on the Committee on Resolutions, and being appointed on the State Central Committee, which called the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington, in May following, and was there appointed a delegate to the National Convention at Philadelphia, which nominated General Fremont for President. Later, he published papers at Pekin and Rock Island, at the latter place being one of the first to name Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency; was elected State Senator in 1860, and, in 1862, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sixty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, being transferred, as Colonel, to the One Hundred and Thirty-second Illinois (100-days' men), and serving at Camp Douglas during the "Conspiracy" excitement. After the war, Colonel Pickett removed to Paducah, Ky., published a paper there called "The Federal Union," was appointed Postmaster, and, later, Clerk of the United States District Court, and was the Republican nominee for Congress, in that District, in 1874. Removing to Nebraska in 1879, he at different times conducted several papers in that State, residing for the most part at Lincoln. Died, at Ashland, Neb., Dec. 24, 1891.

PIERSON, David, pioneer banker, was born at Cazenovia, N. Y., July 9, 1806; at the age of 13 removed west with his parents, arriving at St. Louis, June 3, 1820. The family soon after settled near Collinsville, Madison County, Ill., where the father having died, they removed to the vicinity of Carrollton, Greene County, in 1821. Here they opened a farm, but, in 1827, Mr. Pierson went to the lead mines at Galena, where he remained a year, then returning to Carrollton. In 1834, having sold his farm, he began merchandising, still later being engaged in the pork and grain trade at Alton. In 1854 he added the banking business to his dry-goods trade at Carrollton, also engaged in milling, and, in 1862-63, erected a woolen factory, which was destroyed by an incendiary fire in 1872. Originally an anti-slavery Clay Whig, Mr. Pierson became a Republican on the organization of that party in 1856, served for a time as Collector of Internal Revenue, was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Philadelphia in 1872, and a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Lieutenant-Governor in 1876. Of high integrity and unswerving patriotism, Mr. Pierson was generous in his benefactions, being one of the most liberal contributors to the establishment of the Langston School for the Education of Freedmen at Holly Springs, Miss., soon after the war. He died at Carrollton, May 8, 1891.—Ornan (Pierson), a son of the subject of this sketch, was a member of the Thirty-second General Assembly (1881) from Greene County, and is present cashier of the Greene County National Bank at Carrollton.

PIGGOTT, Isaac N., early politician, was born about 1792; served as an itinerant Methodist preacher in Missouri and Illinois, between 1819 and 1824, but finally located southwest of Jerseyville and obtained a license to run a ferry between Grafton and Alton; in 1828 ran as a candidate for the State Senate against Thomas Carlin (afterwards Governor); removed to St. Louis in 1858, and died there in 1874.

PIKE COUNTY, situated in the western portion of the State, lying between the Illinois and Mississippi Rivers, having an area of 795 square miles—named in honor of the explorer, Capt. Zebulon Pike. The first American settlers came about 1820, and, in 1821, the county was organized, at first embracing all the country north and west of the Illinois River, including the present county of Cook. Out of this territory were finally organized about one fourth of the counties of the State. Coles' Grove (now Gilead, in Calhoun County) was the first county-seat, but the seat of justice was removed, in 1824, to Atlas, and to Pittsfield in 1833. The surface is undulating, in some portions is hilly, and diversified with prairies and hardwood timber. Live-stock, cereals and hay are the staple products, while coal and Niagara limestone are found in abundance. Population (1890), 31,000; (1900), 31,595.

PILLSBURY, Nathaniel Joy, lawyer and judge, was born in York County, Maine, Oct. 21, 1834; in 1855 removed to Illinois, and, in 1858, began farming in Livingston County. He began the study of law in 1863, and, after admission to the bar, commenced practice at Pontiac. He represented La Salle and Livingston Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1873, was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. He was re-elected in 1879 and again in 1885. He was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court in 1877, and again in 1879 and '85. He was severely wounded by a shot received from strikers on the line of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, near Chicago, in 1886, resulting in his being permanently disabled physically, in consequence of which he declined a re-election to the bench in 1891.

PINCKNEYVILLE, a city and the county-seat of Perry County, situated at the intersection of the Paducah Division Illinois Central and the Wabash, Chester & Western Railways, 10 miles west-northwest of Duquoin. Coal-mining is carried on in the immediate vicinity, and flour, carriages, plows and dressed lumber are among the manufactured products. Pinckneyville has two banks—one of which is national—two weekly newspapers, seven churches, a graded and a high school. Population (1880), 964; (1890), 1,298; (1900), 2,357.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD, one of the Pennsylvania Company's lines, operating 1,403 miles of road, of which 1,090 miles are owned and the remainder leased—length of line in Illinois, 28 miles. The Company is the outgrowth of a consolidation, in 1890, of the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway with the Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg, the Cincinnati & Richmond and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroads. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company controls the entire line through ownership of stock. Capital stock outstanding, in 1898, $47,791,601; funded debt, $48,433,000; floating debt, $2,214,703—total capital $98,500,584.—(HISTORY.) The Chicago, St. Louis & Pittsburg Railroad, embracing the Illinois division of this line, was made up of various corporations organized under the laws of Illinois and Indiana. One of its component parts was the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway, organized, in 1865, by consolidation of the Galena & Illinois River Railroad (chartered in 1857), the Chicago & Great Eastern Railway of Indiana, the Cincinnati & Chicago Air-Line (organized 1860), and the Cincinnati, Logansport & Chicago Railway. In 1869, the consolidated line was leased to the Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railway Company, and operated under the name of the Columbus, Chicago & Indiana Central between Bradford, Ohio, and Chicago, from 1869 until its consolidation, under the present name, in 1890. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSBURG, FORT WAYNE & CHICAGO RAILWAY. The total length of this line is nearly 470 miles, but only a little over 16 miles are within Illinois. It was operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company as lessee. The entire capitalization in 1898 was $52,549,990; and the earnings in Illinois, $472,228.—(HISTORY.) The Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway is the result of the consolidation, August 1, 1856, of the Ohio & Pennsylvania, the Ohio & Indiana and the Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Companies, under the name of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1859; was sold under foreclosure in 1861; reorganized under its present title, in 1862, and leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, for 999 years, from July 1, 1869. (See Pennsylvania Railroad.)

PITTSFIELD, the county-seat of Pike County, situated on the Hannibal & Naples branch of the Wabash Railway, about 40 miles southeast of Quincy, and about the same distance south of west from Jacksonville. Its public buildings include a handsome court house and graded and high school buildings. The city has an electric light plant, city water-works, a flour mill, a National and a State bank, nine churches, and four weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 2,295; (1900), 2,293.

PLAINFIELD, a village of Will County, on the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and an interurban electric line, 8 miles northwest of Joliet; is in a dairying section; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 852; (1900), 920.

PLANO, a city in Kendall County, situated near the Fox River, and on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 14 miles west-southwest of Aurora. There are manufactories of agricultural implements and bedsteads. The city has banks, several churches, graded and high schools, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,825; (1900), 1,634; (1903, est.), 2,250.

PLEASANT PLAINS, a village of Sangamon County, on Springfield Division Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Railroad, 16 miles northwest of Springfield; in rich farming region; has coal-shaft, bank, five churches, college and two newspapers. Population (1890), 518; (1900), 575.

PLEASANTS, George Washington, jurist, was born in Harrodsburg, Ky., Nov. 24, 1823; received a classical education at Williams College, Mass., graduating in 1842; studied law in New York City, and was admitted to the bar at Rochester, N. Y., in 1845, establishing himself in practice at Williamstown, Mass., where he remained until 1849. In 1851 he removed to Washington, D. C., and, after residing there two years, came to Illinois, locating at Rock Island, which has since been his home. In 1861 he was elected, as a Republican, to the State Constitutional Convention which met at Springfield in January following, and, in 1867, was chosen Judge for the Sixth (now Tenth) Judicial Circuit, having served by successive re-elections until June, 1897, retiring at the close of his fifth term—a record for length of service seldom paralleled in the judicial history of the State. The last twenty years of this period were spent on the Appellate bench. For several years past Judge Pleasants has been a sufferer from failing eyesight, but has been faithful in attendance on his judicial duties. As a judicial officer and a man, his reputation stands among the highest.

PLUMB, Ralph, soldier and ex-Congressman, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., March 29, 1816. After leaving school he became a merchant's clerk, and was himself a merchant for eighteen years. From New York he removed to Ohio, where he was elected a member of the Legislature in 1855, later coming to Illinois. During the Civil War he served four years in the Union army as Captain and Quartermaster, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at its close. He made his home at Streator, where he was elected Mayor (1881-1883). There he engaged in coal-mining and has been connected with several important enterprises. From 1885 to 1889 he represented the Eighth Illinois District in Congress, after which he retired to private life.

PLYMOUTH, a village of Hancock County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 41 miles northeast of Quincy; is trade center of rich farming district; has two banks, electric lights, water-works, and one paper. Pop. (1900), 854.

POINTE DE SAIBLE, Jean Baptiste, a negro and Indian-trader, reputed to have been the first settler on the present site of the city of Chicago. He is said to have been a native of San Domingo, but is described by his contemporaries as "well educated and handsome," though dissipated. He appears to have been at the present site of Chicago as early as 1794, his house being located on the north side near the junction of the North and South branches of the Chicago River, where he carried on a considerable trade with the Indians. About 1796 he is said to have sold out to a French trader named Le Mai, and joined a countryman of his, named Glamorgan, at Peoria, where he died soon after. Glamorgan, who was the reputed owner of a large Spanish land-grant in the vicinity of St. Louis, is said to have been associated with Point de Saible in trade among the Peorias, before the latter came to Chicago.

POLO, a city in Ogle County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railways, 23 miles south of Freeport and 12 miles north of Dixon. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture and stock-raising, and Polo is a shipping point for large quantities of cattle and hogs. Agricultural implements (including harvesters) and buggies are manufactured here. The city has banks, one weekly and one semi-weekly paper, seven churches, a graded public and high school, and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,728; (1900), 1,869.

PONTIAC, an Ottawa chief, born on the Ottawa River, in Canada, about 1730. While yet a young man he became the principal Chief of the allied Ottawas, Ojibways and Pottawatomies. He was always a firm ally of the French, to whose interests he was devotedly attached, defending them at Detroit against an attack of the Northern tribes, and (it is generally believed) leading the Ottawas in the defeat of Braddock. He reluctantly acquiesced in the issue of the French and Indian War, although at first strongly disposed to dispute the progress of Major Rogers, the British officer sent to take possession of the western forts. In 1762 he dispatched emissaries to a large number of tribes, whom he desired to unite in a league for the extermination of the English. His proposals were favorably received, and thus was organized what is commonly spoken of as the "Conspiracy of Pontiac." He himself undertook to lead an assault upon Detroit. The garrison, however, was apprised of his intention, and made preparations accordingly. Pontiac thereupon laid siege to the fort, but was unable to prevent the ingress of provisions, the Canadian settlers furnishing supplies to both besieged and besiegers with absolute impartiality. Finally a boat-load of ammunition and supplies was landed at Detroit from Lake Erie, and the English made an unsuccessful sortie on July 31, 1763. After a desultory warfare, lasting for nearly three months, the Indians withdrew into Indiana, where Pontiac tried in vain to organize another movement. Although Detroit had not been taken, the Indians captured Forts Sandusky, St. Joseph, Miami, Ouiatanon, LeBoeuf and Venango, besides the posts of Mackinaw and Presque Isle. The garrisons at all these points were massacred and innumerable outrages perpetrated elsewhere. Additional British troops were sent west, and the Indians finally brought under control. Pontiac was present at Oswego when a treaty was signed with Sir William Johnson, but remained implacable. His end was tragic. Broken in heart, but still proud in spirit and relentless in purpose, he applied to the former (and last) French Governor of Illinois, the younger St. Ange, who was then at St. Louis, for co-operation and support in another raid against the British. Being refused aid or countenance, according to a story long popularly received, he returned to the vicinity of Cahokia, where, in 1769, he was murdered by a Kaskaskia Indian in consideration of a barrel of liquor. N. Matson, author of several volumes bearing on early history in Illinois, citing Col. Joseph N. Bourassa, an educated half-breed of Kansas, as authority for his statement, asserts that the Indian killed at Cahokia was an impostor, and that the true Pontiac was assassinated by Kinehoq, the Head Chief of the Illinois, in a council held on the Des Plaines River, near the present site of Joliet. So well convinced, it is said, was Pierre Chouteau, the St. Louis Indian trader, of the truth of this last story, that he caused a monument, which he had erected over the grave of the false Pontiac, to be removed. Out of the murder of Pontiac, whether occurring at Cahokia or Joliet, it is generally agreed, resulted the extermination of the Illinois and the tragedy of "Starved Rock." (See Starved Rock.)

PONTIAC, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Livingston County. It stands on the bank of the Vermillion River, and is also a point of intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads. It is 33 miles north-northeast from Bloomington and 93 miles south-southwest of Chicago. The surrounding region is devoted to agriculture, stock-raising and coal-mining. Pontiac has four banks and four weekly newspapers (two issuing daily editions), numerous churches and good schools. Various kinds of manufacturing are conducted, among the principal establishments being flouring mills, three shoe factories, straw paper and candy factories and a foundry. The State Reformatory for Juvenile Offenders is located here. Pop. (1890), 2,784; (1900), 4,266.

POOL, Orval, merchant and banker, was born in Union County, Ky., near Shawneetown, Ill., Feb. 17, 1809, but lived in Shawneetown from seven years of age; in boyhood learned the saddler's trade, but, in 1843, engaged in the dry-goods business, J. McKee Peeples and Thomas S. Ridgway becoming his partners in 1846. In 1850 he retired from the dry-goods trade and became an extensive dealer in produce, pork and tobacco. In 1871 he established the Gallatin County National Bank, of which he was the first President. Died, June 30, 1871.

POOLE, William Frederick, bibliographer, librarian and historical writer, was born at Salem, Mass., Dec. 24, 1821, graduated from Yale College in 1849, and, at the close of his sophomore year, was appointed assistant librarian of his college society, which owned a library of 10,000 volumes. Here he prepared and published the first edition of his now famous "Index to Periodical Literature." A second and enlarged addition was published in 1853, and secured for its author wide fame, in both America and Europe. In 1852 he was made Librarian of the Boston Mercantile Library, and, from 1856 to 1869, had charge of the Boston Athenaeum, then one of the largest libraries in the United States, which he relinquished to engage in expert library work. He organized libraries in several New England cities and towns, at the United States Naval Academy, and the Cincinnati Public Library, finally becoming Librarian of the latter institution. In October, 1873, he assumed charge of the Chicago Public Library, then being organized, and, in 1887, became Librarian of the Newberry Library, organizing this institution and remaining at its head until his death, which occurred, March 1, 1894. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the Northwestern University in 1882. Dr. Poole took a prominent part in the organization of library associations, and was one of the Vice-Presidents of the International Conference of Librarians, held in London in 1871. His advice was much sought in relation to library architecture and management. He wrote much on topics connected with his profession and on historical subjects, frequently contributing to "The North American Review." In 1874-75 he edited a literary paper at Chicago, called "The Owl," and was later a constant contributor to "The Dial." He was President of the American Historical Society and member of State Historical Societies and of other kindred associations.

POPE, Nathaniel, first Territorial Secretary of Illinois, Delegate in Congress and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., in 1774; graduated with high honor from Transylvania University, at Lexington, Ky., read law with his brother, Senator John Pope, and, in 1804, emigrated to New Orleans, later living, for a time, at Ste. Genevieve, Mo. In 1808 he became a resident of Kaskaskia and, the next year, was appointed the first Territorial Secretary of Illinois. His native judgment was strong and profound and his intellect quick and far-reaching, while both were thoroughly trained and disciplined by study. In 1816 he was elected a Territorial Delegate to Congress, and proved himself, not only devoted to the interests of his constituents, but also a shrewd tactician. He was largely instrumental in securing the passage of the act authorizing the formation of a State government, and it was mainly through his efforts that the northern boundary of Illinois was fixed at lat. 42° 30' north, instead of the southern bend of Lake Michigan. Upon the admission of Illinois into the Union, he was made United States Judge of the District, which then embraced the entire State. This office he filled with dignity, impartiality and acceptability until his death, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lucretia Yeatman, in St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1850. Pope County was named in his honor.—Gen. John (Pope), son of the preceding, was born in Louisville, Ky., March 16, 1822; graduated at the United States Military Academy, 1842, and appointed brevet Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers; served in Florida (1842-44), on the northeast boundary survey, and in the Mexican War (1846-47), being promoted First Lieutenant for bravery at Monterey and Captain at Buena Vista. In 1849 he conducted an exploring expedition in Minnesota, was in charge of topographical engineering service in New Mexico (1851-53), and of the survey of a route for the Union Pacific Railway (1853-59), meanwhile experimenting on the feasibility of artesian wells on the "Staked Plains" in Northwestern Texas. He was a zealous friend of Abraham Lincoln in the political campaign of 1860, and was court-martialed for criticising the policy of President Buchanan, in a paper read before a literary society in Cincinnati, the proceedings being finally dropped on the recommendation of the (then) Secretary of War, Joseph Holt. In 1861 he was one of the officers detailed by the War Department to conduct Mr. Lincoln to the capital, and, in May following, was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers and assigned to command in Missouri, where he performed valuable service in protecting railroad communications and driving out guerrillas, gaining an important victory over Sterling Price at Blackwater, in December of that year; in 1862 had command of the land forces co-operating with Admiral Foote, in the expedition against New Madrid and Island No. 10, resulting in the capture of that stronghold with 6,500 prisoners, 125 cannon and 7,000 small arms, thereby winning a Major-General's commission. Later, having participated in the operations against Corinth, he was transferred to command of the Army of Virginia, and soon after commissioned Brigadier-General in the regular army. Here, being forced to meet a greatly superior force under General Lee, he was subjected to reverses which led to his falling back on Washington and a request to be relieved of his command. For failure to give him proper support, Gen. Fitzjohn Porter was tried by court-martial, and, having been convicted, was cashiered and declared forever disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the United States Government—although this verdict was finally set aside and Porter restored to the army as Colonel, by act of Congress, in August, 1886. General Pope's subsequent service was performed chiefly against the Indians in the Northwest, until 1865, when he took command of the military division of Missouri, and, in June following, of the Department of the Missouri, including all the Northwestern States and Territories, from which he was relieved early in 1866. Later, he held command, under the Reconstruction Acts, in Georgia, Alabama and Florida (1867-68); the Department of the Lakes (1868-70); Department of the Missouri (1870-84); and Department of the Pacific, from 1884 to his retirement, March 16, 1886. General Pope published "Explorations from the Red River to the Rio Grande" and "Campaigns in Virginia" (1863). Died, at Sandusky, Ohio, Sept. 23, 1892.

square miles—named in honor of Judge Nathaniel Pope. It was erected in 1816 (two years before the admission of Illinois as a State) from parts of Gallatin and Johnson Counties. The county-seat was first located at Sandsville, but later changed to Golconda. Robert Lacy, Benoni Lee and Thomas Ferguson were the first Commissioners; Hamlet Ferguson was chosen Sheriff; John Scott, Recorder; Thomas C. Browne, Prosecuting-Attorney, and Samuel Omelveney, Treasurer. The highest land in Southern Illinois is in the north-eastern part of this county, reaching an elevation of 1,046 feet. The bluffs along the Ohio River are bold in outline, and the ridges are surmounted by a thick growth of timber, notably oak and hickory. Portions of the bottom lands are submerged, at times, during a part of the year and are covered with cypress timber. The remains of Indian mounds and fortifications are found, and some interesting relics have been exhumed. Sandstone is quarried in abundance, and coal is found here and there. Mineral springs (with copperas as the chief ingredient) are numerous. Iron is found in limited quantities, among the rocks toward the south, while spar and kaolin clay are found in the north. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, corn and tobacco. Population (1890), 14,016; (1900), 13,585.

PORT BYRON, a village of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 16 miles above Rock Island; has lime kilns, grain elevator, two banks, academy, public schools, and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 732. The (Illinois) Western Hospital for the Insane is located at Watertown, twelve miles below Port Byron.

PORTER, (Rev.) Jeremiah, pioneer clergyman, was born at Hadley, Mass., in 1804; graduated from Williams College in 1825, and studied theology at both Andover and Princeton seminaries, graduating from the latter in 1831. The same year he made the (then) long and perilous journey to Fort Brady, a military post at the Sault Ste. Marie, where he began his work as a missionary. In 1833 he came to Chicago, where he remained for two years, organizing the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago, with a membership of twenty-six persons. Afterwards he had pastoral charge of churches at Peoria and Farmington. While in Chicago he was married to Miss Eliza Chappell, one of the earliest teachers in Chicago. From 1840 to '58 he was located at Green Bay, Wis., accepting a call from a Chicago Church in the year last named. In 1861 he was commissioned Chaplain in the volunteer service by Governor Yates, and mustered out in 1865. The next five years were divided between labors at Brownsville, Tex., in the service of the Sanitary Commission, and a pastorate at Prairie du Chien. In 1870 he was commissioned Chaplain in the regular army, remaining in the service (with occasional leaves of absence) until 1882, when he was retired from active service on account of advanced age. His closing years were spent at the homes of his children in Detroit and Beloit; died at the latter city, July 25, 1893, at the age of 89 years.

POSEY, (Gen.) Thomas, Continental and Revolutionary soldier, was born in Virginia, July 9, 1750; in 1774 took part in Lord Dunmore's expedition against the Indians, and, later, in various engagements of the Revolutionary War, being part of the time under the immediate command of Washington; was with General Wayne in the assault on Stony Point and present at Cornwallis' surrender at Yorktown; also served, after the war, with Wayne as a Brigadier-General in the Northwest Territory. Removing to Kentucky, he served in the State Senate, for a time being presiding officer and acting Lieutenant-Governor; later (1812), was elected United States Senator from Louisiana, and, from 1813 to '16, served as Territorial Governor of Indiana. Died, at the home of his son-in-law, Joseph M. Street, at Shawneetown, Ill., March 18, 1818, where he lies buried. At the time of his death General Posey was serving as Indian Agent.

POST, Joel S., lawyer and soldier of the Mexican War; was born in Ontario (now Wayne) County, N. Y., April 27, 1816; in 1838 removed with his father to Washtenaw County, Mich., remaining there until 1839, when he came to Macon County, Ill. The following year, he commenced the study of law with Judge Charles Emmerson, of Decatur, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican War, and served as Quartermaster of the Fourth Regiment (Col. E. D. Baker's); in 1856 was elected to the State Senate, and, at the following session, was a leading supporter of the measures which resulted in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington. Capt. Post's later years were spent at Decatur, where he died, June 7, 1886.

POST, Philip Sidney, soldier and Congressman, was born at Florida, Orange County, N. Y., March 19, 1833; at the age of 22 graduated from Union College, studied law at Poughkeepsie Law School, and, removing to Illinois, was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Fifty-ninth Illinois Volunteers. He was a gallant, fearless soldier, and was repeatedly promoted for bravery and meritorious service, until he attained the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. He participated in many important battles and was severely wounded at Pea Ridge and Nashville. In 1865 he was in command in Western Texas. After the close of the war he entered the diplomatic service, being appointed Consul-General to Austria-Hungary in 1874, but resigned in 1879, and returned to his home in Galesburg. From 1882 to 1886 he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, and, during 1886, was Commander of the Department of Illinois, G. A. R. He was elected to Congress from the Tenth District on the Republican ticket in 1886, serving continuously by re-election until his death, which occurred in Washington, Jan. 6, 1895.

POST, Truman Marcellus, D.D., clergyman, was born at Middlebury, Vt., June 3, 1810; graduated at Middlebury College in 1829, was Principal of Castleton Academy for a year, and a tutor at Middlebury two years, meanwhile studying law. After a winter spent in Washington, listening to the orators of the time in Congress and before the Supreme Court, including Clay, Webster, Wirt and their contemporaries, he went west in 1833, first visiting St. Louis, but finally settling at Jacksonville, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar, but soon after accepted the Professorship of Classical Languages in Illinois College, and later that of History; then began the study of theology, was ordained in 1840, and assumed the pastorate of the Congregational Church in Jacksonville. In 1847 he was called to the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church of St. Louis, and, in 1851, to the First Congregational Church, of which the former furnished the nucleus. For a year or two after removing to St. Louis, he continued his lectures on history at Illinois College for a short period each year; also held the professorship of Ancient and Modern History in Washington University, in St. Louis; in 1873-75 was Southworth lecturer on Congregationalism in Andover Theological Seminary and, for several years, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in Chicago Theological Seminary. His splendid diction and his noble style of oratory caused him to be much sought after as a public lecturer or platform speaker at college commencements, while his purity of life and refinement of character attracted to him all with whom he came in personal contact. He received the degree of D.D. from Middlebury College in 1855; was a frequent contributor to "The Biblical Repository" and other religious publications, and, besides numerous addresses, sermons and pamphlets, he was the author of a volume entitled "The Skeptical Era in Modern History" (New York, 1856). He resigned his pastorate in January, 1882, but continued to be a frequent speaker, either in the pulpit or on the lecture platform, nearly to the period of his death, which occurred in St. Louis, Dec. 31, 1886. For a quarter of a century he was one of the Trustees of Monticello Female Seminary, at Godfrey, Ill., being, for a considerable portion of the time, President of the Board.

POTTAWATOMIES, THE, an Indian tribe, one of the three subdivisions of the Ojibwas (or Ojibbeways), who, in turn, constituted a numerous family of the Algonquins. The other branches were the Ottawa and the Chippewas. The latter, however, retained the family name, and hence some writers have regarded the "Ojibbeways" and the "Chippewas" as essentially identical. This interchanging of names has been a prolific source of error. Inherently, the distinction was analogous to that existing between genus and species, although a confusion of nomenclature has naturally resulted in errors more or less serious. These three tribes early separated, the Pottawatomies going south from Green Bay along the western shore of Lake Michigan. The meaning of the name is, "we are making a fire," and the word is a translation into the Pottawatomie language of the name first given to the tribe by the Miamis. These Indians were tall, fierce and haughty, and the tribe was divided into four branches, or clans, called by names which signify, respectively, the golden carp, the tortoise, the crab and the frog. According to the "Jesuit Relations," the Pottawatomies were first met by the French, on the north of Lake Huron, in 1639-40. More than a quarter of a century later (1666) Father Allouez speaks of them as dwellers on the shores of Lake Michigan. The same Father described them as idolatrous and polygamous, yet as possessing a rude civility and as being kindly disposed toward the French. This friendship continued unbroken until the expulsion of the latter from the Northwest. About 1678 they spread southward from Green Bay to the head of Lake Michigan, a portion of the tribe settling in Illinois as far south as the Kankakee and Illinois Rivers, crowding the Winnebagoes and the Sacs and Foxes on the west, and advancing, on the east, into the country of the Miamis as far as the Wabash and the Maumee. They fought on the side of the French in the French and Indian War, and later took part in the conspiracy of Pontiac to capture and reduce the British posts, and were so influenced by Tecumseh and the Prophet that a considerable number of their warriors fought against General Harrison at Tippecanoe. During the War of 1812 they actively supported the British. They were also prominent at the Chicago massacre. Schoolcraft says of them, "They were foremost at all treaties where lands were to be ceded, clamoring for the lion's share of all presents and annuities, particularly where these last were the price paid for the sale of other lands than their own." The Pottawatomies were parties to the treaties at Chicago in 1832 and 1833, and were among the last of the tribes to remove beyond the Mississippi, their final emigration not taking place until 1838. In 1846 the scattered fragments of this tribe coalesced with those of the Chippewas and Ottawas, and formed the Pottawatomie nation. They ceded all their lands, wherever located, to the United States, for $850,000, agreeing to accept 576,000 acres in Kansas in lieu of $87,000 of this amount. Through the rapacity and trespasses of white settlers, this reservation was soon dismembered, and the lands passed into other hands. In 1867, under an enabling act of Congress, 1,400 of the nation (then estimated at 2,500) became citizens. Their present location is in the southeastern part of Oklahoma.

POWELL, John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., geologist and anthropologist, was born at Mount Morris, N. Y., March 24, 1834, the son of a Methodist itinerant preacher, passing his early life at various places in Ohio, Wisconsin and Illinois; studied for a time in Illinois College (Jacksonville), and subsequently in Wheaton College, but, in 1854, began a special course at Oberlin, Ohio, teaching at intervals in public schools. Having a predilection for the natural sciences, he spent much time in making collections, which he placed in various Illinois institutions. Entering the army in 1861 as a private of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, he later became a Captain of the Second Illinois Artillery, being finally promoted Major. He lost his right arm at the battle of Shiloh, but returned to his regiment as soon as sufficiently recovered, and continued in active service to the close of the war. In 1865 he became Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in Illinois Wesleyan University at Bloomington, but resigned to accept a similar position in the State Normal University. In 1867 he began his greatest work in connection with science by leading a class of pupils to the mountains of Colorado for the study of geology, which he followed, a year later, by a more thorough survey of the cañon of the Colorado River than had ever before been attempted. This led to provision by Congress, in 1870, for a topographical and geological survey of the Colorado and its tributaries, which was appropriately placed under his direction. Later, he was placed in charge of the Bureau of Ethnology in connection with the Smithsonian Institute, and, again in 1881, was assigned to the directorship of the United States Geological Survey, later becoming Director of the Bureau of Ethnology, in connection with the Smithsonian Institute in Washington City, where (1899) he still remains. In 1886 Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard the same year. He is also a member of the leading scientific associations of the country, while his reports and addresses fill numerous volumes issued by the Government.

POWELL, William Henry, soldier and manufacturer, was born in South Wales, May 10, 1825; came to America in 1830, was educated in the common schools of Tennessee, and (1856-61) was manager of a manufacturing company at Iron-ton, Ohio; in 1861, became Captain of a West Virginia cavalry company, and was advanced through the grades of Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded while leading a charge at Wytheville, Va., left on the field, captured and confined in Libby Prison six months. After exchange he led a cavalry division in the Army of the Shenandoah; was made Brigadier-General in October, 1864; after the war settled in West Virginia, and was a Republican Presidential Elector in 1868. He is now at the head of a nail mill and foundry in Belleville, and was Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the Department of Illinois during 1895-96.

PRAIRIE CITY, a village in McDonough County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 23 miles southwest from Galesburg and 17 miles northeast of Maconb; has a carriage factory, flour mill, elevators, lumber and stock yards, a nursery, a bank, four churches and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 812; (1900), 818.

PRAIRIE DU PONT, (in English, Bridge Prairie), an early French settlement, one mile south of Cahokia. It was commenced about 1760, located on the banks of a creek, on which was the first mill, operated by water-power, in that section, having been erected by missionaries from St. Sulpice, in 1754. In 1765 the village contained fourteen families. In 1844 it was inundated and nearly destroyed.

PRAIRIE du ROCHER, (in English, Prairie of the Rock), an early French village in what is now Monroe County, which began to spring up near Fort Chartres (see Fort Chartres), and by 1792 had grown to be a considerable settlement. It stood at the foot of the Mississippi bluffs, about four miles northeast of the fort. Like other French villages in Illinois, it had its church and priest, its common field and commons. Many of the houses were picturesque cottages built of limestone. The ancient village is now extinct; yet, near the outlet of a creek which runs through the bluff, may be seen the vestiges of a water mill, said to have been erected by the Jesuits during the days of French occupation.

PRENTICE, William S., Methodist Episcopal clergyman, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., in 1819; licensed as a Methodist preacher in 1849, and filled pastorates at Paris, Danville, Carlinville, Springfield, Jacksonville and other places—the latter part of his life, serving as Presiding Elder; was a delegate to the General Conference of 1860, and regularly re-elected from 1872 to the end of his life. During the latter part of his life his home was in Springfield. Died, June 28, 1887.

PRENTISS, Benjamin Mayberry, soldier, was born at Belleville, Wood County, Va., Nov. 23, 1819; in 1835 accompanied his parents to Missouri, and, in 1841, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he learned a trade, afterwards embarking in the commission business. In 1844-45 he was Lieutenant of a company sent against the Mormons at Nauvoo, later serving as Captain of Volunteers in the Mexican War. In 1860 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress; at the outbreak of the Civil War tendered his services to Governor Yates, and was commissioned Colonel of the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, was almost immediately promoted to Brigadier-General and placed in command at Cairo, so continuing until relieved by General Grant, in September, 1861. At the battle of Shiloh, in April following, he was captured with most of his command, after a most vigorous fight with a superior rebel force, but, in 1862, was exchanged and brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. He was a member of the court-martial that tried Gen. Fitzjohn Porter, and, as commander at Helena, Ark., defeated the Confederate Generals Holmes and Price on July 3, 1863. He resigned his commission, Oct. 28, 1863. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant Pension Agent at Quincy, serving four years. At present (1898) General Preutiss' residence is at Bethany, Mo., where he served as Postmaster, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison, and was reappointed by President McKinley. Died Feb. 8, 1901.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. (See Elections.)

PRESBYTERIAN HOSPITAL, located at Chicago, was organized in 1883 by a number of wealthy and liberal Presbyterians, "for the purpose of affording medical and surgical aid to sick and disabled persons, and to provide them, while inmates of the hospital, with the ministrations of the gospel, agreeably to the doctrines and forms of the Presbyterian Church." Rush Medical College offered a portion of its ground as a site (see Rush Medical College), and through generous subscriptions, a well-planned building was erected, capable of accommodating about 250 patients. A corridor connects the college and hospital buildings. The medical staff comprises eighteen of Chicago's best known physicians and surgeons.

PRESBYTERIANS, THE. The first Presbyterian society in Illinois was organized by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky, in 1816, at Sharon, White County. Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith, also Presbyterians, had visited the State in 1814, as representatives of the Massachusetts Missionary Society, but had formed no society. The members of the Sharon church were almost all immigrants from the South, and were largely of Scotch-Irish extraction. Two other churches were established in 1819—one at Shoal Creek, Bond County, and the other at Edwardsville. In 1825 there were but three Presbyterian ministers in Illinois—Revs. Stephen Bliss, John Brich and B. F. Spilman. Ten years later there were 80 churches, with a membership of 2,500 and 60 ministers. In 1880 the number of churches had increased to 487; but, in 1890, (as shown by the United States census) there were less. In the latter year there were 405 ministers and 52,945 members. The Synod of Illinois is the highest ecclesiastical court of the denomination in the State, and, under its jurisdiction, the church maintains two seminaries: one (the McCormick) at Chicago, and the other (the Blackburn University) at Carlinville. The organ of the denomination is "The Interior," founded by Cyrus H. McCormick, and published weekly at Chicago, with William C. Gray as editor. The Illinois Synod embraced within its jurisdiction (1895) eleven Presbyteries, to which were attached 483 churches, 464 ministers and a membership of 63,247. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PRICKETT, Abraham, pioneer merchant, was born near Lexington, Ky., came to Madison County, Ill., in 1808; was employed for a time in the drug business in St. Louis, then opened a store at Edwardsville, where, in 1813, he received from the first County Court of Madison County, a license to retail merchandise. In 1818, he served as one of the three Delegates from Madison County to the Convention which framed the first State Constitution, and, the same year, was elected a Representative in the First General Assembly; was also Postmaster of the town of Edwardsville for a number of years. In 1825 he removed to Adams County and laid out an addition to the city of Quincy; was also engaged there in trade with the Indians. In 1836, while engaged on a Government contract for the removal of snags and other obstructions to the navigation of Red River, he died at Natchitoches, La.—George W. (Prickett) a son of the preceding, and afterwards a citizen of Chicago, is said to have been the first white child born in Edwardsville.—Isaac (Prickett), a brother of Abraham, came to St. Louis in 1815, and to Edwardsville in 1818, where he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother and, later, on his own account. He held the offices of Postmaster, Public Administrator, Quartermaster-General of State Militia, Inspector of the State Penitentiary, and, from 1838 to '42, was Receiver of Public Moneys at Edwardsville, dying in 1844.

PRICKETT, David, pioneer lawyer, was born in Franklin County, Ga., Sept. 21, 1800; in early childhood was taken by his parents to Kentucky and from there to Edwardsville, Ill. He graduated from Transylvania University, and, in 1821, began the practice of law; was the first Supreme Court Reporter of Illinois, Judge of the Madison County Probate Court, Representative in the General Assembly (1826-28), Aid-de-Camp to General Whiteside in the Black Hawk War, State's Attorney for Springfield Judicial Circuit (1837), Treasurer of the Board of Canal Commissioners (1840), Director of the State Bank of Illinois (1842), Clerk of the House of Representatives for ten sessions and Assistant Clerk of the same at the time of his death, March 1, 1847.

PRINCE, David, physician and surgeon, was born in Brooklyn, Windham County, Conn., June 21, 1816; removed with his parents to Canandaigua, N. Y., and was educated in the academy there; began the study of medicine in the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York, finishing at the Ohio Medical College, Cincinnati, where he was associated, for a year and a half, with the celebrated surgeon, Dr. Muzzy. In 1843 he came to Jacksonville, Ill., and, for two years, was Professor of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Illinois College; later, spent five years practicing in St. Louis, and lecturing on surgery in the St. Louis Medical College, when, returning to Jacksonville in 1852, he established himself in practice there, devoting special attention to surgery, in which he had already won a wide reputation. During the latter part of the Civil War he served, for fourteen months, as Brigade Surgeon in the Army of the Potomac, and, on the capture of a portion of his brigade, voluntarily surrendered himself that he might attend the captives of his command in Libby Prison. After the close of the war he was employed for some months, by the Sanitary Commission, in writing a medical history of the war. He visited Europe twice, first in 1881 as a delegate to the International Medical Congress in London, and again as a member of the Copenhagen Congress of 1884—at each visit making careful inspection of the hospitals in London, Paris, and Berlin. About 1867 he established a Sanitarium in Jacksonville for the treatment of surgical cases and chronic diseases, to which he gave the closing years of his life. Thoroughly devoted to his profession, liberal, public-spirited and sagacious in the adoption of new methods, he stood in the front rank of his profession, and his death was mourned by large numbers who had received the benefit of his ministrations without money and without price. He was member of a number of leading professional associations, besides local literary and social organizations. Died, at Jacksonville, Dec. 19, 1889.

PRINCE, Edward, lawyer, was born at West Bloomfield, Ontario County, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1832; attended school at Payson, Ill., and Illinois College, Jacksonville, graduating from the latter in 1852; studied law at Quincy, and after admission to the bar in 1853, began dealing in real estate. In 1861 he offered his services to Governor Yates, was made Captain and Drill-master of cavalry and, a few months later, commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventh Illinois Cavalry, taking part, as second in command, in the celebrated "Grierson raid" through Mississippi, in 1863, serving until discharged with the rank of Colonel of his regiment, in 1864. After the war he gave considerable attention to engineering and the construction of a system of water-works for the city of Quincy, where he now resides.

educated in the public schools and at Knox College, graduating from the latter in 1878. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1880; was elected City Attorney of Galesburg the following year; served as chairman of the Knox County Republican Central Committee in 1884, and, in 1888, was elected Representative in the General Assembly and re-elected two years later. In 1892 he was the Republican nominee for Attorney-General of the State of Illinois, but was defeated with the rest of the State ticket; at a special election, held in April, 1895, he was chosen Representative in Congress from the Tenth District to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Col. Philip Sidney Post, which had occurred in January preceding. In common with a majority of his colleagues, Mr. Prince was re-elected in 1896, receiving a plurality of nearly 16,000 votes, and was elected for a third term in November, 1898.

PRINCETON, a city and the county-seat of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 22 miles west-southwest of Mendota, and 104 miles west-southwest of Chicago; has a court house, gas-works, electric lights, graded and high schools, numerous churches, three newspapers and several banks. Coal is mined five miles east, and the manufactures include flour, carriages and farm implements. Pop. (1890), 3,396; (1900), 4,023. Princeton is populated with one of the most intelligent and progressive communities in the State. It was the home of Owen Lovejoy during the greater part of his life in Illinois.

PRINCETON & WESTERN RAILWAY. (See Chicago & Northwestern Railway.)

PRINCEVILLE, a village of Peoria County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and the Rock Island & Peoria Railways, 22 miles northwest of Peoria; is a trade center for a prosperous agricultural region. Population (1890), 641; (1900), 735.

PROPIETSTOWN, a town in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Fulton Branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 45 miles northwest of Mendota; has some manufactures, three banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 694; (1900), 1,143.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION. (See Minority Representation.)

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH. The pioneer Episcopal clergyman in this State was the Rt. Rev. Philander Chase, who was made Bishop of Illinois in 1835, and was the founder of Jubilee College. (See Chase, Rev. Philander.) The State at present is organized under the provincial system, the province comprising the dioceses of Chicago, Quincy and Springfield. At its head (1898) is the Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Bishop of Chicago. Rev. George F. Seymour of Springfield is Bishop of the Springfield Diocese, with C. R. Hale, Coadjutor at Cairo, and Rev. Alexander Burgess, Bishop of the Quincy Diocese, with residence at Peoria. The numerical strength of the church in Illinois is not great, although between 1880 and 1890 its membership was almost doubled. In 1840 there were but eighteen parishes, with thirteen clergymen and a membership of 267. By 1880 the number of parishes had increased to 89, there being 127 ministers and 9,842 communicants. The United States Census of 1890 showed the following figures: Parishes, 197; clergymen, 150, membership, 18,609. Total contributions (1890) for general church and mission work, $373,798. The chief educational institution of the denomination in the West is the Western Theological Seminary at Chicago. (See also Religious Denominations.)

PYOR, Joseph Everett, pioneer and early steamboat captain, was born in Virginia, August 10, 1787—the son of a non-commissioned officer of the Revolution, who emigrated to Kentucky about 1790 and settled near Louisville, which was then a fort with some twenty log cabins. In 1813 the son located where Golconda, Pope County, now stands, and early in life adopted the calling of a boatman, which he pursued some forty years. At this time he held a commission as a "Falls Pilot," and piloted the first steamer that ascended the Ohio River from New Orleans. During his long service no accident happened to any steamer for which he was responsible, although the Mississippi then bristled with snags. He owned and commanded the steamer Telegraph, which was sunk, in 1835, by collision with the Duke of Orleans on the Mississippi, but, owing to his presence of mind and the good discipline of his crew, no lives were lost. The salient features of his character were a boundless benevolence manifested to others, and his dauntless courage, displayed not only in the face of dangers met in his career as a boatman, but in his encounters with robbers who then infested portions of Southern Illinois. He had a reputation as a skillful pilot and popular commander not excelled by any of his contemporaries. He died, at his home in Pope County, Oct. 5, 1851, leaving one daughter, now Mrs. Cornelia P. Bozman, of Cairo, Ill.

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, SUPERINTENDENTS OF. (See Superintendents of Public Instruction.)

PUGH, Isaac C., soldier, was born in Christian County, Ky., Nov. 23, 1805; came to Illinois, in 1821, with his father, who first settled in Shelby County, but, in 1829, removed to Macon County, where the subject of this sketch resided until his death, at Decatur, Nov. 14, 1874. General Pugh served in three wars—first in the Black Hawk War of 1832; then, with the rank of Captain and Field Officer in the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) in the war with Mexico, and, during the Civil War, entering upon the latter as Colonel of the Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, in September, 1861, and being mustered out with the rank of full Brigadier-General in August, 1864, when his regiment was consolidated with the Fifty-third. He took part with his regiment in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the operations around Vicksburg, being wounded at the latter. In the year of his retirement from the army (1864) he was elected a Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly, and, the following year, was chosen County-Clerk of Macon County, serving four years.

PUGH, Jonathan H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Bath County, Ky., came to Bond County, Ill., finally locating at Springfield in 1823, and being the second lawyer to establish himself in practice in that city. He served in the Third, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh General Assemblies, and was defeated for Congress by Joseph Duncan (afterwards Governor), in 1831. Died, in 1833. Mr. Pugh is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, an able lawyer and a great wit.

PULASKI COUNTY, an extreme southern county and one of the smallest in the State, bordering on the Ohio River and having an area of 190 square miles and a population (1900), of 14,554. It was cut off from Alexander County in 1843, and named in honor of a Polish patriot who had aided the Americans during the Revolution. The soil is generally rich, and the surface varied with much low land along the Cache and the Ohio Rivers. Wheat, corn and fruit are the principal crops, while considerable timber is cut upon the bottom lands. Mound City is the county-seat and was conceded a population, by the census of 1890, of 2,550. Only the lowest, barren portion of the carboniferous formation extends under the soil, the coal measures being absent. Traces of iron have been found and sulphur and copperas springs abound.

PULLMAN, a former suburb (now a part of the South Division) of the city of Chicago, 13.8 miles south of the initial station of the Illinois Central Railroad. The Pullman Palace Car Company began the erection of buildings here in 1880, and, on the 1st of January, 1881, the first family settled in the future manufacturing city. Within the next few years, it became the center of the largest manufacturing establishments in the country, including the Pullman Car Works, the Allen Paper Car Wheel Works and extensive steel forging works, employing thousands of mechanics. Large numbers of sleeping and dining cars, besides ordinary passenger coaches and freight cars, were manufactured here every year, not only for use on the railroads of the United States, but for foreign countries as well. The town was named for the late George M. Pullman, the founder of the car-works, and was regarded as a model city, made up of comfortable homes erected by the Palace Car Company for the use of its employés. It was well supplied with school-houses, and churches, and a public library was established there and opened to the public in 1883. The town was annexed to the city of Chicago in 1890.

PULLMAN, George Mortimer, founder of the Pullman Palace Car Company, was born at Brocton, N. Y., March 3, 1831, enjoyed ordinary educational advantages in his boyhood and, at fourteen years of age, obtained employment as a clerk, but a year later joined his brother in the cabinet-making business at Albion. His father, who was a house-builder and house-mover, having died in 1853, young Pullman assumed the responsibility of caring for the family and, having secured a contract for raising a number of buildings along the Erie Canal, made necessary by the enlargement of that thoroughfare, in this way acquired some capital and experience which was most valuable to him in after years. Coming to Chicago in 1859, when the work of raising the grade of the streets in the business portion of the city had been in progress for a year or two, he found a new field for the exercise of his inventive skill, achieving some marvelous transformations in a number of the principal business blocks in that part of the city. As early as 1858, Mr. Pullman had had his attention turned to devising some means for increasing the comforts of night-travel upon railways, and, in 1859, he remodeled two old day-coaches into a species of sleeping-cars, which were used upon the Alton Road. From 1860 to 1863 he spent in Colorado devoting his engineering skill to mining; but returning to Chicago the latter year, entered upon his great work of developing the idea of the sleeping-car into practical reality. The first car was completed and received the name of the "Pioneer." This car constituted a part of the funeral train which took the remains of Abraham Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., after his assassination in April, 1865. The development of the "Pullman palace sleeping-car," the invention of the dining-car, and of vestibule trains, and the building up of the great industrial town which bears his name, and is now a part of the city of Chicago, constituted a work of gradual development which resulted in some of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the nineteenth century, both in a business sense and in promoting the comfort and safety of the traveling public, as well as in bettering the conditions of workingmen. He lived to see the results of his inventive genius and manufacturing skill in use upon the principal railroads of the United States and introduced upon a number of important lines in Europe also. Mr. Pullman was identified with a number of other enterprises more or less closely related to the transportation business, but the Pullman Palace Car Company was the one with which he was most closely connected, and by which he will be longest remembered. He was also associated with some of the leading educational and benevolent enterprises about the city of Chicago, to which he contributed in a liberal manner during his life and in his will. His death occurred suddenly, from heart disease, at his home in Chicago, Oct. 19, 1897.

PURPLE, Norman H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Litchfield County, Conn., read law and was admitted to the bar in Tioga County, Pa., settled at Peoria, Ill., in 1836, and the following year was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Ninth Judicial District, which then embraced the greater portion of the State east of Peoria. In 1844 he was a Presidential Elector, and, in 1845, Governor Ford appointed him a Justice of the Supreme Court, vice Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., who had resigned. As required by law, he at the same time served as Circuit Judge, his district embracing all the counties west of Peoria, and his home being at Quincy. After the adoption of the Constitution of 1848 he returned to Peoria and resumed practice. He compiled the Illinois Statutes relating to real property, and, in 1857, made a compilation of the general laws, generally known to the legal profession as the "Purple Statutes." He subsequently undertook to compile and arrange the laws passed from 1857 to '63, and was engaged on this work when overtaken by death, at Chicago, Aug. 9, 1863. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862,

PUTERBAUGH, Sabia D., judge and author, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1834; at 8 years of age removed with his parents to Tazewell County, Ill.; settled in Pekin in 1853, where he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1856. At the outbreak of the rebellion he was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Major of the Eleventh Illinois Cavalry, and took part in numerous engagements in Western Tennessee and Mississippi, including the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. Resigning his commission in 1862, he took up his residence at Peoria, where he resumed practice and began the preparation of his first legal work—"Common Law Pleading and Practice." In 1864 he formed a partnership with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, which continued until 1867, when Mr. Puterbaugh was elected Circuit Court Judge. He retired from the bench in 1873 to resume private practice and pursue his work as an author. His first work, having already run through three editions, was followed by "Puterbaugh's Chancery Pleading and Practice," the first edition of which appeared in 1874, and "Michigan Chancery Practice," which appeared in 1881. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Died, Sept. 25, 1892. Leslie D. (Puterbaugh), a son of Judge Puterbaugh, is Judge of the Circuit Court of the Peoria Circuit.

PUTNAM COUNTY, the smallest county in the State, both as to area and population, containing only 170 square miles; population (1900), 4,746. It lies near the center of the north half of the State, and was named in honor of Gen. Israel Putnam. The first American to erect a cabin within its limits was Gurdon S. Hubbard, who was in business there, as a fur-trader, as early as 1825, but afterwards became a prominent citizen of Chicago. The county was created by act of the Legislature in 1825, although a local government was not organized until some years later. Since that date, Bureau, Marshall and Stark Counties have been erected therefrom. It is crossed and drained by the Illinois River. The surface is moderately undulating and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief staple, although wheat and oats are extensively cultivated. Coal is mined and exported. Hennepin is the county-seat.

QUINCY, the principal city of Western Illinois, and the county seat of Adams County. It was founded in 1822—the late Gov. John Wood erecting the first log-cabin there—and was incorporated in 1839. The site is naturally one of the most beautiful in the State, the principal part of the city being built on a limestone bluff having an elevation of 125 to 150 feet, and overlooking the Mississippi for a long distance. Its location is 112 miles west of Springfield and 264 miles southwest of Chicago. Besides being a principal shipping point for the river trade north of St. Louis, it is the converging point of several important railway lines, including the Wabash, four branches of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Quincy, Omaha & Kansas City, giving east and west, as well as north and south, connections. At the present time (1904) several important lines, or extensions of railroads already constructed, are in contemplation, which, when completed, will add largely to the commercial importance of the city. The city is regularly laid out, the streets intersecting each other at right angles, and being lighted with gas and electricity. Water is obtained from the Mississippi. There are several electric railway lines, four public parks, a fine railway bridge across the Mississippi, to which a wagon bridge has been added within the past two years; two fine railway depots, and several elegant public buildings, including a handsome county court-house, a Government building for the use of the Post-office and the United States District Court. The Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home is located here, embracing a large group of cottages occupied by veterans of the Civil War, besides hospital and administration buildings for the use of the officers. The city has more than thirty churches, three libraries (one free-public and two college), with excellent schools and other educational advantages. Among the higher institutions of learning are the Chaddock College (Methodist Episcopal) and the St. Francis Solanus College (Roman Catholic). There are two or three national banks, a State bank with a capital of $300,000, beside two private banks, four or five daily papers, with several weekly and one or two monthly publications. Its advantages as a shipping point by river and railroad have made it one of the most important manufacturing centers west of Chicago. The census of 1890 showed a total of 374 manufacturing establishments, having an aggregate capital of $6,187,845, employing 5,058 persons, and turning out an annual product valued at $10,160,492. The cost of material used was $5,597,990, and the wages paid $2,383,571. The number of different industries reported aggregated seventy-six, the more important being foundries, carriage and wagon factories, agricultural implement works, cigar and tobacco factories, flour-mills, breweries, brick-yards, lime works, saddle and harness shops, paper mills, furniture factories, organ works, and artificial-ice factories. Population (1880), 27,268; (1890), 31,494; (1900), 36,252.

RAAB, Henry, ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born in Wetzlar, Rhinish Prussia, June 20, 1837; learned the trade of a currier with his father and came to the United States in 1853, finally locating at Belleville, Ill., where, in 1857, he became a teacher in the public schools; in 1873 was made Superintendent of schools for that city, and, in 1882, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction on the Democratic ticket, declined a renomination in 1886; was nominated a second time in 1890, and re-elected, but defeated by S. M. Inglis in 1894. In the administration of his office, Professor Raab showed a commendable freedom from partisanship. After retiring from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed a position in connection with the public schools of Belleville.

RADISSON, Pierre Esprit, an early French traveler and trader, who is said to have reached the Upper Mississippi on his third voyage to the West in 1658-59. The period of his explorations extended from 1652 to 1684, of which he prepared a narrative which was published by the Prince Society of Boston in 1885, under the title of "Radisson's Voyages." He and his brother-in-law, Medard Chouart, first conceived the idea of planting a settlement at Hudson's Bay. (See Chouart, Medard.)

RAILROAD AND WAREHOUSE COMMISSION, a Board of three Commissioners, appointed by the executive (by and with the advice and consent of the Senate), under authority of an act approved, April 13, 1871, for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution and laws in relation to railroads and warehouses. The Commission's powers are partly judicial, partly executive. The following is a summary of its powers and duties: To establish a schedule of maximum rates, equitable to shipper and carrier alike; to require yearly reports from railroads and warehouses; to hear and pass upon complaints of extortion and unjust discrimination, and (if necessary) enforce prosecutions therefor; to secure the safe condition of railway road-beds, bridges and trestles; to hear and decide all manner of complaints relative to intersections and to protect grade-crossings; to insure the adoption of a safe interlocking system, to be approved by the Commission; to enforce proper rules for the inspection and registration of grain throughout the State. The principal offices of the Commission are at the State capital, where monthly sessions are held. For the purpose of properly conducting the grain inspection department, monthly meetings are also held at Chicago, where the offices of a Grain Inspector, appointed by the Board, are located. Here all business relating to this department is discussed and necessary special meetings are held. The inspection department has no revenue outside of fees, but the latter are ample for its maintenance. Fees for inspection on arrival ("inspection in") are twenty-five cents per car-load, ten cents per wagon-load, and forty cents per 1,000 bushels from canal-boat or vessels. For inspection from store ("inspected out") the fees are fifty cents per 1,000 bushels to vessels; thirty-five cents per car-load, and ten cents per wagon-load to teams. While there are never wanting some cases of friction between the transportation companies and warehousemen on the one hand, and the Commission on the other, there can be no question that the formation of the latter has been of great value to the receivers, shippers, forwarders and tax-payers of the State generally. Similar regulations in regard to the inspection of grain in warehouses, at East St. Louis and Peoria, are also in force. The first Board, created under the act of 1871, consisted of Gustavus Koerner, Richard P. Morgan and David S. Hammond, holding office until 1873. Other Boards have been as follows: 1873-77—Henry D. Cook (deceased 1873, and succeeded by James Steele), David A. Brown and John M. Pearson; 1877-83—William M. Smith, George M. Bogue and John H. Oberly (retired 1881 and succeeded by William H. Robinson); 1883-85—Wm. N. Brainard, E. C. Lewis and Charles T. Stratton; 1885-89—John I. Rinaker, Benjamin F. Marsh and Wm. T. Johnson (retired in 1887 and succeeded by Jason Rogers); 1889-93—John R. Wheeler, Isaac N. Phillips and W. S. Crim (succeeded, 1891, by John R. Tanner); 1893-97—W. S. Cantrell, Thomas F. Gahan and Charles F. Lape (succeeded, 1895, by George W. Fithian); 1897-99—Cicero J. Lindley, Charles S. Rannells and James E. Bidwell. (See also Grain Inspection.)

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME, WILMINGTON,

RAILROADS (IN GENERAL). The existing railroad system of Illinois had its inception in the mania for internal improvement which swept over the country in 1836-37, the basis of the plan adopted in Illinois (as in the Eastern States) being that the State should construct, maintain, own and operate an elaborate system. Lines were to be constructed from Cairo to Galena, from Alton to Mount Carmel, from Peoria to Warsaw, from Alton to the Central Railroad, from Belleville to Mount Carmel, from Bloomington to Mackinaw Town, and from Meredosia to Springfield. The experiment proved extremely unfortunate to the financial interests of the State, and laid the foundation of an immense debt under which it staggered for many years. The Northern Cross Railroad, extending from Meredosia to Springfield, was the only one so far completed as to be in operation. It was sold, in 1847, to Nicholas H. Ridgely, of Springfield for $21,100, he being the highest bidder. This line formed a nucleus of the existing Wabash system. The first road to be operated by private parties (outside of a primitive tramway in St. Clair County, designed for the transportation of coal to St. Louis) was the Galena & Chicago Union, chartered in 1836. This was the second line completed in the State, and the first to run from Chicago. The subsequent development of the railway system of Illinois was at first gradual, then steady and finally rapid. A succinct description of the various lines now in operation in the State may be found under appropriate headings. At present Illinois leads all the States of the Union in the extent of railways in operation, the total mileage (1897) of main track being 10,785.43—or 19 miles for each 100 square miles of territory and 25 miles for each 100,000 inhabitants—estimating the population (1898) at four and a quarter millions. Every one of the 102 counties of the State is traversed by at least one railroad except three—Calhoun, Hardin and Pope. The entire capitalization of the 111 companies doing business in the State in 1896, (including capital stock, funded debt and current liabilities), was $2,669,164,142—equal to $67,556 per mile. In 1894, fifteen owned and ten leased lines paid dividends of from four to eight per cent on common, and from four to ten per cent on preferred, stock—the total amount thus paid aggregating $25,321,752. The total earnings and income, in Illinois, of all lines operated in the State, aggregated $77,508,537, while the total expenditure within the State was $71,463,367. Of the 58,263,860 tons of freight carried, 11,611,798 were of agricultural products and 17,179,366 mineral products. The number of passengers (earning revenue) carried during the year, was 83,281,655. The total number of railroad employés (of all classes) was 61,200. The entire amount of taxes paid by railroad companies for the year was $3,846,379. From 1836, when the first special charter was granted for the construction of a railroad in Illinois, until 1869—after which all corporations of this character came under the general incorporation laws of the State in accordance with the Constitution of 1870—293 special charters for the construction of railroads were granted by the Legislature, besides numerous amendments of charters already in existence. (For the history of important individual lines see each road under its corporate name.)

RALSTON, Virgil Young, editor and soldier, was born, July 16, 1828, at Vanceburg, Ky.; was a student in Illinois College one year (1846-47), after which he studied law in Quincy and practiced for a time; also resided some time in California; 1855-57 was one of the editors of "The Quincy Whig," and represented that paper in the Editorial Convention at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) In 1861, he was commissioned a Captain in the Sixteenth Illinois Volunteers, but soon resigned on account of ill-health; later, enlisted in an Iowa regiment, but died in hospital at St. Louis, from wounds and exposure, April 19, 1864.

RAMSAY, Rufus N., State Treasurer, was born on a farm in Clinton County, Ill., May 20, 1838; received a collegiate education at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, and at Indiana State University; studied law with ex-Gov. A. C. French, and was admitted to the bar in 1865, but soon abandoned the law for banking, in which he was engaged both at Lebanon and Carlyle, limiting his business to the latter place about 1890. He served one term (from 1865) as County Clerk, and two terms (1889 and '91) as Representative in the General Assembly, and, in 1892, was nominated as a Democrat and elected State Treasurer. Died in office, at Carlyle, Nov. 11, 1894.

RAMSEY, a village of Fayette County, at the intersection of the Illinois Central and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 13 miles north of Vandalia; the district is agricultural; has one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 598; (1900), 747.

RANDOLPH COUNTY, lies in the southwest section of the State, and borders on the Mississippi River; area 560 square miles; named for Beverly Randolph. It was set off from St. Clair County in 1795, being the second county organized in the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois. From the earliest period of Illinois history, Randolph County has been a pivotal point. In the autumn of 1700 a French and Indian settlement was established at Kaskaskia, which subsequently became the center of French influence in the Mississippi Valley. In 1722 Prairie du Rocher was founded by the French. It was in Randolph County that Fort Chartres was built, in 1730, and it was here that Col. George Rogers Clark's expedition for the seizure of the "Illinois Country" met with success in the capture of Kaskaskia. American immigration began with the close of the Revolutionary War. Among the early settlers were the Cranes (Ichabod and George), Gen. John Edgar, the Dodge family, the Morrisons, and John Rice Jones. Toward the close of the century came Shadrach Bond (afterwards the first Governor of the State) with his uncle of the same name, and the Menards (Pierre and Hippolyte), the first of whom subsequently became Lieutenant-Governor. (See Bond, Shadrach; Menard, Pierre.) In outline, Randolph County is triangular, while its surface is diversified. Timber and building stone are abundant, and coal underlies a considerable area. Chester, the county-seat, a city of 3,000 inhabitants, is a place of considerable trade and the seat of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary. The county is crossed by several railroad lines, and transportation facilities are excellent. Population (1890), 25,049; (1900), 28,001.

RANSOM, (Gen.) Thomas Edward Greenfield, soldier, was born at Norwich, Vt., Nov. 29, 1834; educated at Norwich University, an institution under charge of his father, who was later an officer of the Mexican War and killed at Chapultepec. Having learned civil engineering, he entered on his profession at Peru, Ill., in 1851; in 1855 became a member of the real-estate firm of A. J. Galloway & Co., Chicago, soon after removing to Fayette County, where he acted as agent of the Illinois Central Railroad. Under the first call for volunteers, in April, 1861, he organized a company, which having been incorporated in the Eleventh Illinois, he was elected Major, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, in this capacity having command of his regiment at Fort Donelson, where he was severely wounded and won deserved promotion to a colonelcy, as successor to Gen. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards killed at Shiloh. Here Colonel Ransom again distinguished himself by his bravery, and though again wounded while leading his regiment, remained in command through the day. His service was recognized by promotion as Brigadier-General. He bore a prominent part in the siege of Vicksburg and in the Red River campaign, and, later, commanded the Seventh Army Corps in the operations about Atlanta, but finally fell a victim to disease and his numerous wounds, dying in Chicago, Oct. 29, 1864, having previously received the brevet rank of Major-General. General Ransom was confessedly one of the most brilliant officers contributed by Illinois to the War for the Union, and was pronounced, by both Grant and Sherman, one of the ablest volunteer generals in their commands.

RANTOUL, a city in Champaign County, at the junction of the main line of the Illinois Central Railroad, with its West Lebanon and Leroy branch, 14 miles north-northeast of Champaign and 114 miles south by west of Chicago. It has a national bank, seven churches, opera house, graded school, two weekly papers, machine shops, flouring and flax mills, tile factories, and many handsome residences. Pop. (1900), 1,207.

RASLE, Sebastian, a Jesuit missionary, born in France, in 1658; at his own request was attached to the French missions in Canada in 1689, and, about 1691 or '92, was sent to the Illinois Country, where he labored for two years, traveling much and making a careful study of the Indian dialects. He left many manuscripts descriptive of his journeyings and of the mode of life and character of the aborigines. From Illinois he was transferred to Norridgewock, Maine, where he prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language in three volumes, which is now preserved in the library of Harvard College. His influence over his Indian parishioners was great, and his use of it, during the French and Indian War, so incensed the English colonists in Massachusetts that the Governor set a price upon his head. On August 12, 1724, he was slain, with seven Indian chiefs who were seeking to aid his escape, during a night attack upon Norridgewock by a force of English soldiers from Fort Richmond, his mutilated body being interred the next day by the Indians. In 1833, the citizens of Norridgewock erected a monument to his memory on the spot where he fell.

RASTER, Herman, journalist, was born in Germany in 1828; entered journalism and came to America in 1851, being employed on German papers in Buffalo and New York City; in 1867 accepted the position of editor-in-chief of "The Chicago Staats Zeitung," which he continued to fill until June, 1890, when he went to Europe for the benefit of his health, dying at Dresden, July 24, 1891. While employed on papers in this country during the Civil War, he acted as the American correspondent of papers at Berlin, Bremen, Vienna, and other cities of Central Europe. He served as delegate to both State and National Conventions of the Republican party, and, in 1869, received from President Grant the appointment of Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District, but, during the later years of his life, cooperated with the Democratic party.

RAUCH, John Henry, physician and sanitary expert, born in Lebanon, Pa., Sept. 4, 1828, and graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in 1849. The following year he removed to Iowa, settling at Burlington. He was an active member of the Iowa State Medical Society, and, in 1851, prepared and published a "Report on the Medical and Economic Botany of Iowa," and, later, made a collection of ichthyologic remains of the Upper Mississippi and Missouri for Professor Agassiz. From 1857 to 1860 he filled the chair of Materia Medica and Medical Botany at Rush Medical College, Chicago, occupying the same position in 1859 in the Chicago College of Pharmacy, of which he was one of the organizers. During the Civil War he served, until 1864, as Assistant Medical Director, first in the Army of the Potomac, and later in Louisiana, being brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel at the close of the struggle. Returning to Chicago, he aided in reorganizing the city's health service, and, in 1867, was appointed a member of the new Board of Health and Sanitary Inspector, serving until 1876. The latter year he was chosen President of the American Public Health Association, and, in 1877, a member of the newly created State Board of Health of Illinois, and elected its first President. Later, he became Secretary, and continued in that office during his connection with the Board. In 1878-79 he devoted much attention to the yellow-fever epidemic, and was instrumental in the formation of the Sanitary Council of the Mississippi, and in securing the adoption of a system of river inspection by the National Board of Health. He was a member of many scientific bodies, and the author of numerous monographs and printed addresses, chiefly in the domain of sanitary science and preventive medicine. Among them may be noticed "Intramural Internments and Their Influence on Health and Epidemics," "Sanitary Problems of Chicago," "Prevention of Asiatic Cholera in North America," and a series of reports as Secretary of the State Board of Health. Died, at Lebanon, Pa., March 24, 1894.

RAUM, (Geo.) Green Berry, soldier and author, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Dec. 3, 1829, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1853, but, three years later, removed with his family to Kansas. His Free-State proclivities rendering him obnoxious to the pro-slavery party there, he returned to Illinois in 1857, settling at Harrisburg, Saline County. Early in the Civil War he was commissioned a Major in the Fifty-sixth Illinois Volunteers, was subsequently promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and, later, advanced to a Brigadier-Generalship, resigning his commission at the close of the war (May 6, 1865). He was with Rosecrans in the Mississippi campaign of 1862, took a conspicuous part in the battle of Corinth, participated in the siege of Vicksburg and was wounded at Missionary Ridge. He also rendered valuable service during the Atlanta campaign, keeping lines of communication open, re-enforcing Resaca and repulsing an attack by General Hood. He was with Sherman in the "March to the Sea," and with Hancock, in the Shenandoah Valley, when the war closed. In 1866 General Raum became President of the projected Cairo & Vincennes Railroad, an enterprise of which he had been an active promoter. He was elected to Congress in 1866 from the Southern Illinois District (then the Thirteenth), serving one term, and the same year presided over the Republican State Convention, as he did again in 1876 and in 1880—was also a delegate to the National Conventions at Cincinnati and Chicago the last two years just mentioned. From August 2, 1876, to May 31, 1883, General Raum served as Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in that time having superintended the collection of $800,000,000 of revenue, and the disbursement of $30,000,000. After retiring from the Commissionership, he resumed the practice of law in Washington. In 1889 he was appointed Commissioner of Pensions, remaining to the close of President Harrison's administration, when he removed to Chicago and again engaged in practice. During the various political campaigns of the past thirty years, his services have been in frequent request as a campaign speaker, and he has canvassed a number of States in the interest of the Republican party. Besides his official reports, he is author of "The Existing Conflict Between Republican Government and Southern Oligarchy" (Washington, 1884), and a number of magazine articles.

RAUM, John, pioneer and early legislator, was born in Hummelstown, Pa., July 14, 1793, and died at Golconda, Ill., March 14, 1869. Having received a liberal education in his native State, the subject of this sketch settled at Shawneetown, Ill., in 1823, but removed to Golconda, Pope County, in 1826. He had previously served three years in the War of 1812, as First Lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, and, while a resident of Illinois, served in the Black Hawk War of 1832 as Brigade Major. He was also elected Senator from the District composed of Pope and Johnson Counties in the Eighth General Assembly (1833), as successor to Samuel Alexander, who had resigned. The following year he was appointed Clerk of the Circuit Court of Pope County, and was also elected Clerk of the County Court the same year, holding both offices for many years, and retaining the County Clerkship up to his death, a period of thirty-five years. He was married March 22, 1827, to Juliet C. Field, and was father of Brig.-Gen. Green B. Raum, and Maj. John M. Raum, both of whom served in the volunteer army from Illinois during the Civil War.

RAWLINS, John Aaron, soldier, Secretary of War, was born at East Galena, Feb. 13, 1831, the son of a small farmer, who was also a charcoal-burner. The son, after irregular attendance on the district schools and a year passed at Mount Morris Academy, began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar at Galena in 1854, and at once began practice. In 1857 he was elected City Attorney of Galena, and nominated on the Douglas electoral ticket in 1860. At the outbreak of the Civil War he favored, and publicly advocated, coercive measures, and it is said that it was partly through his influence that General Grant early tendered his services to the Government. He served on the staff of the latter from the time General Grant was given command of a brigade until the close of the war, most of the time being its chief, and rising in rank, step by step, until, in 1863, he became a Brigadier-General, and, in 1865, a Major-General. His long service on the staff of General Grant indicates the estimation in which he was held by his chief. Promptly on the assumption of the Presidency by General Grant, in March, 1869, he was appointed Secretary of War, but consumption had already obtained a hold upon his constitution, and he survived only six months, dying in office, Sept. 6, 1869.

came west in 1843, studied medicine and began practice at Muscatine, Iowa, afterwards locating in Tazewell County, Ill., also being associated, for a time, with the publication of a temperance paper at Springfield. In 1847 he removed to Galena, soon after becoming editor of "The Galena Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper, with which he remained until 1854. He took strong ground against the Kansas-Nebraska Bill, and, at the session of the Legislature of 1855, served as Secretary of the Senate, also acting as correspondent of "The New York Tribune"; a few months later became associated with Joseph Medill and John C. Vaughan in the purchase and management of "The Chicago Tribune," Dr. Ray assuming the position of editor-in-chief. Dr. Ray was one of the most trenchant and powerful writers ever connected with the Illinois press, and his articles exerted a wide influence during the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which he was an influential factor. He was a member of the Convention of Anti-Nebraska editors held at Decatur, Feb. 22, 1856, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) At the State Republican Convention held at Bloomington, in May following, he was appointed a member of the State Central Committee for that year; was also Canal Trustee by appointment of Governor Bissell, serving from 1857 to 1861. In November, 1863, he severed his connection with "The Tribune" and engaged in oil speculations in Canada which proved financially disastrous. In 1865 he returned to the paper as an editorial writer, remaining only for a short time. In 1868 he assumed the management of "The Chicago Evening Post," with which he remained identified until his death, Sept. 23, 1870.

RAY, Lyman Beecher, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, was born in Crittenden County, Vt., August 17, 1831; removed to Illinois in 1852, and has since been engaged in mercantile business in this State. After filling several local offices he was elected to represent Grundy County in the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872), and, ten years later, was chosen State Senator, serving from 1883 to 1887, and being one of the recognized party leaders on the floor. In 1888, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket, his term expiring in 1893. His home is at Morris, Grundy County.

RAY, William H., Congressman, was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1812; grew to manhood in his native State, receiving a limited education; in 1834 removed to Rushville, Ill., engaging in business as a merchant and, later, as a banker; was a member of the first State Board of Equalization (1867-69), and, in 1872, was elected to Congress as a Republican, representing his District from 1873 to 1875. Died, Jan. 25, 1881.

RAYMOND, a village of Montgomery County, on the St. Louis Division of the Wabash Railway, 50 miles southwest of Decatur; has electric lights, some manufactures and a weekly paper. Considerable coal is mined here and grain and fruit grown in the surrounding country. Population (1880), 543; (1890), 841; (1900), 906.

RAYMOND, (Rev.) Miner, D.D., clergyman and educator, was born in New York City, August 29, 1811, being descended from a family of Huguenots (known by the name of "Raimonde"), who were expelled from France on account of their religion. In his youth he learned the trade of a shoemaker with his father, at Rensselaerville, N. Y. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at the age of 17, later taking a course in the Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., where he afterwards became a teacher. In 1838 he joined the New England Conference and, three years later, began pastoral work at Worcester, subsequently occupying pulpits in Boston and Westfield. In 1848, on the resignation of Dr. Robert Allyn (afterwards President of McKendree College and of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale), Dr. Raymond succeeded to the principalship of the Academy at Wilbraham, remaining there until 1864, when he was elected to the chair of systematic theology in the Garrett Biblical Institute at Evanston, Ill., his connection with the latter institution continuing until 1895, when he resigned. For some three years of this period he served as pastor of the First Methodist Church at Evanston. His death occurred, Nov. 25, 1897.

REAVIS, Logan Uriah, journalist, was born in the Sangamon Bottom, Mason County, Ill., March 26, 1831; in 1855 entered the office of "The Beardstown Gazette," later purchased an interest in the paper and continued its publication under the name of "The Central Illinoian," until 1857, when he sold out and went to Nebraska. Returning, in 1860, he repurchased his old paper and conducted it until 1866, when he sold out for the last time. The remainder of his life was devoted chiefly to advocating the removal of the National Capital to St. Louis, which he did by lectures and the publication of pamphlets and books on the subject; also published a "Life of Horace Greeley," another of General Harney, and two or three other volumes. Died in St. Louis, April 25, 1889.

RECTOR, the name of a prominent and influential family who lived at Kaskaskia in Territorial days. According to Governor Reynolds, who has left the most detailed account of them in his "Pioneer History of Illinois," they consisted of nine brothers and four daughters, all of whom were born in Fauquier County, Va., some of them emigrating to Ohio, while others came to Illinois, arriving at Kaskaskia in 1806. Reynolds describes them as passionate and impulsive, but possessed of a high standard of integrity and a chivalrous and patriotic spirit.—William, the oldest brother, and regarded as the head of the family, became a Deputy Surveyor soon after coming to Illinois, and took part in the Indian campaigns between 1812 and 1814. In 1816 he was appointed Surveyor-General of Illinois, Missouri and Arkansas, and afterwards removed to St. Louis.—Stephen, another of the brothers, was a Lieutenant in Captain Moore's Company of Rangers in the War of 1812, while Charles commanded one of the two regiments organized by Governor Edwards, in 1812, for the expedition against the Indians at the head of Peoria Lake.—Nelson, still another brother, served in the same expedition on the staff of Governor Edwards. Stephen, already mentioned, was a member of the expedition sent to strengthen Prairie du Chien in 1814, and showed great courage in a fight with the Indians at Rock Island. During the same year Nelson Rector and Captain Samuel Whiteside joined Col. Zachary Taylor (afterwards President) in an expedition on the Upper Mississippi, in which they came in conflict with the British and Indians at Rock Island, in which Captain Rector again displayed the courage so characteristic of his family. On the 1st of March, 1814, while in charge of a surveying party on Saline Creek, in Gallatin County, according to Reynolds, Nelson was ambushed by the Indians and, though severely wounded, was carried away by his horse, and recovered.—Elias, another member of the family, was Governor Edwards' first Adjutant-General, serving a few months in 1809, when he gave place to Robert Morrison, but was reappointed in 1810, serving for more than three years.—Thomas, one of the younger members, had a duel with Joshua Barton on "Bloody Island," sometime between 1812 and 1814, in which he killed his antagonist. (See Duels.) A portion of this historic family drifted into Arkansas, where they became prominent, one of their descendants serving as Governor of that State during the Civil War period.

RED BUD, a city in Randolph County, on the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, some 37 miles south-southeast of St. Louis, and 21 miles south of Belleville; has a carriage factory and two flouring mills, electric lights, a hospital, two banks, five churches, a graded school and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,176; (1900), 1,169.

REEVES, Owen T., lawyer and jurist, was born in Ross County, Ohio, Dec. 18, 1829; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, in 1850, afterwards serving as a tutor in that institution and as Principal of a High School at Chillicothe. In 1854 he came to Bloomington, Ill., and, as a member of the School Board, assisted in reorganizing the school system of that city; also has served continuously, for over 40 years, as one of the Trustees of the Illinois Wesleyan University, being a part of the time President of the Board. In the meantime, he had begun the practice of law, served as City Attorney and member of the Board of Supervisors. July 1, 1862, he enlisted in the Seventieth Illinois Volunteers (a 100-days' emergency regiment), was elected Colonel and mustered out, with his command, in October, 1862. Colonel Reeves was subsequently connected with the construction of the Lafayette, Bloomington & Mississippi Railroad (now a part of the Illinois Central), and was also one of the founders of the Law Department of the Wesleyan University. In 1877 he was elected to the Circuit bench, serving continuously, by repeated re-elections, until 1891—during the latter part of his incumbency being upon the Appellate bench.

REEVES, Walter, Member of Congress and lawyer, was born near Brownsville, Pa., Sept. 25, 1848; removed to Illinois at 8 years of age and was reared on a farm; later became a teacher and lawyer, following his profession at Streator; in 1894 he was nominated by the Republicans of the Eleventh District for Congress, as successor to the Hon. Thomas J. Henderson, and was elected, receiving a majority over three competitors. Mr. Reeves was re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898.

REFORMATORY, ILLINOIS STATE, a prison for the incarceration of male offenders under 21 years of age, who are believed to be susceptible of reformation. It is the successor of the "State Reform School," which was created by act of the Legislature of 1867, but not opened for the admission of inmates until 1871. It is located at Pontiac. The number of inmates, in 1872, was 165, which was increased to 324 in 1890. The results, while moderately successful, were not altogether satisfactory. The appropriations made for construction, maintenance, etc., were not upon a scale adequate to accomplish what was desired, and, in 1891, a radical change was effected. Previous to that date the limit, as to age, was 16 years. The law establishing the present reformatory provides for a system of indeterminate sentences, and a release upon parole, of inmates who, in the opinion of the Board of Managers, may be safely granted conditional liberation. The inmates are divided into two classes. (1) those between the ages of 10 and 16, and (2) those between 16 and 21. The Board of Managers is composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be of the same party, their term of office to be for ten years. The course of treatment is educational (intellectually, morally and industrially), schools being conducted, trades taught, and the inmates constantly impressed with the conviction that, only through genuine and unmistakable evidence of improvement, can they regain their freedom. The reformatory influence of the institution may be best inferred from the results of one year's operation. Of 146 inmates paroled, 15 violated their parole and became fugitives, 6 were returned to the Reformatory, 1 died, and 124 remained in employment and regularly reporting. Among the industries carried on are painting and glazing, masonry and plastering, gardening, knitting, chair-caning, broom-making, carpentering, tailoring and blacksmithing. The grounds of the Reformatory contain a vein of excellent coal, which it is proposed to mine, utilizing the clay, thus obtained, in the manufacture of brick, which can be employed in the construction of additional needed buildings. The average number of inmates is about 800, and the crimes for which they are sentenced range, in gravity, from simple assault, or petit larceny, to the most serious offenses known to the criminal code, with the exception of homicide. The number of inmates, at the beginning of the year 1895, was 812. An institution of a similar character, for the confinement of juvenile female offenders, was established under an act of the Legislature passed at the session of 1893, and located at Geneva, Kane County. (See Home for Juvenile Female Offenders.)

population, as may be seen from figures given below. The earliest Christian services held were conducted by Catholic missionaries, who attested the sincerity of their convictions (in many instances) by the sacrifice of their lives, either through violence or exposure. The aborigines, however, were not easily Christianized; and, shortly after the cession of Illinois by France to Great Britain, the Catholic missions, being generally withdrawn, ceased to exert much influence upon the red men, although the French, who remained in the ceded territory, continued to adhere to their ancient faith. (See Early Missionaries.) One of the first Protestant sects to hold service in Illinois, was the Methodist Episcopal: Rev. Joseph Lillard coming to Illinois in 1793, and Rev. Hosea Riggs settling in the American Bottom in 1796. (For history of Methodism in Illinois, see Methodist Episcopal Church.) The pioneer Protestant preacher, however, was a Baptist—Elder James Smith—who came to New Design in 1787. Revs. David Badgley and Joseph Chance followed him in 1796, and the first denominational association was formed in 1807. (As to inception and growth of this denomination in Illinois, see also Baptists.) In 1814 the Massachusetts Missionary Society sent two missionaries to Illinois—Revs. Samuel J. Mills and Daniel Smith. Two years later (1816), the First Presbyterian Church was organized at Sharon, by Rev. James McGready, of Kentucky. (See also Presbyterians.) The Congregationalists began to arrive with the tide of immigration that set in from the Eastern States, early in the '30's. Four churches were organized in 1833, and the subsequent growth of the denomination in the State, if gradual, has been steady. (See Congregationalists.) About the same time came the Disciples of Christ (sometimes called, from their founder, "Campbellites"). They encouraged free discussion, were liberal and warm hearted, and did not require belief in any particular creed as a condition of membership. The sect grew rapidly in numerical strength. (See Disciples of Christ.) The Protestant Episcopalians obtained their first foothold in Illinois, in 1835, when Rev. Philander Chase (afterward consecrated Bishop) immigrated to the State from the East. (See Protestant Episcopal Church.) The Lutherans in Illinois are chiefly of German or Scandinavian birth or descent, as may be inferred from the fact that, out of sixty-four churches in Chicago under care of the Missouri Synod, only four use the English language. They are the only Protestant sect maintaining (whenever possible) a system of parochial schools. (See Lutherans.) There are twenty-six other religious bodies in the State, exclusive of the Jews, who have twelve synagogues and nine rabbis. According to the census statistics of 1890, these twenty-six sects, with their numerical strength, number of buildings, ministers, etc., are as follows: Anti-Mission Baptists, 2,800 members, 78 churches and 63 ministers; Church of God, 1,200 members, 39 churches, 34 ministers; Dunkards, 121,000 members, 155 churches, 83 ministers; Friends ("Quakers") 2,655 members, 25 churches; Free Methodists, 1,805 members, 38 churches, 84 ministers; Free-Will Baptists, 4,694 members, 107 churches, 72 ministers; Evangelical Association, 15,904 members, 143 churches, 152 ministers; Cumberland Presbyterians, 11,804 members, 198 churches, 149 ministers; Methodist Episcopal (South) 3,927 members, 34 churches, 33 ministers; Moravians, 720 members, 3 churches, 3 ministers; New Jerusalem Church (Swedenborgians), 662 members, 14 churches, 8 ministers; Primitive Methodist, 230 members, 2 churches, 2 ministers; Protestant Methodist, 5,000 members, 91 churches, 106 ministers; Reformed Church in United States, 4,100 members, 34 churches, 19 ministers; Reformed Church of America, 2,200 members, 24 churches, 23 ministers; Reformed Episcopalians, 2,150 members, 13 churches, 11 ministers; Reformed Presbyterians, 1,400 members, 7 churches, 6 ministers; Salvation Army, 1,980 members; Second Adventists, 4,500 members, 64 churches, 35 ministers; Seventh Day Baptists, 320 members, 7 churches, 11 ministers; Universalists, 3,160 members, 45 churches, 37 ministers; Unitarians, 1,225 members, 19 churches, 14 ministers; United Evangelical, 30,000 members, 129 churches, 108 ministers; United Brethren, 16,500 members, 275 churches, 260 ministers; United Presbyterians, 11,250 members, 203 churches, 199 ministers; Wesleyan Methodists, 1,100 members, 16 churches, 33 ministers. (See various Churches under their proper names; also Roman Catholic Church.)

REND, William Patrick, soldier, capitalist, and coal-operator, was born in County Leitrim, Ireland, Feb. 10, 1840, brought to Lowell, Mass., in boyhood, and graduated from the high school there at 17; taught for a time near New York City and later in Maryland, where he began a course of classical study. The Civil War coming on, he enlisted in the Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, serving most of the time as a non-commissioned officer, and participating in the battles of the second Bull Run, Malvern Hill, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville. After the war he came to Chicago and secured employment in a railway surveyor's office, later acting as foreman of the Northwestern freight depot, and finally embarking in the coal business, which was conducted with such success that he became the owner of some of the most valuable mining properties in the country. Meanwhile he has taken a deep interest in the welfare of miners and other classes of laborers, and has sought to promote arbitration and conciliation between employers and employed, as a means of averting disastrous strikes. He was especially active during the long strike of 1897, in efforts to bring about an understanding between the miners and the operators. For several years he held a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Illinois National Guard until compelled, by the demands of his private business, to tender his resignation.

REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

The following table presents the names, residence, Districts represented, politics (except as to earlier ones), and length of term or terms of service of Illinois Representatives in the lower House of Congress, from the organization of Illinois as a Territory down to the present time; (D, Democrat; W, Whig; R, Republican; G-B, Greenback; P, Populist).

REYNOLDS, John, Justice of Supreme Court and fourth Governor of Illinois, was born of Irish ancestry, in Montgomery County, Pa., Feb. 26, 1789, and brought by his parents to Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1800, spending the first nine years of his life in Illinois on a farm. After receiving a common school education, and a two years' course of study in a college at Knoxville, Tenn., he studied law and began practice. In 1812-13 he served as a scout in the campaigns against the Indians, winning for himself the title, in after life, of "The Old Ranger." Afterwards he removed to Cahokia, where he began the practice of law, and, in 1818, became Associate Justice of the first Supreme Court of the new State. Retiring from the bench in 1825, he served two terms in the Legislature, and was elected Governor in 1830, in 1832 personally commanding the State volunteers called for service in the Black Hawk War. Two weeks before the expiration of his term (1834), he resigned to accept a seat in Congress, to which he had been elected as the successor of Charles Slade, who had died in office, and was again elected in 1838, always as a Democrat. He also served as Representative in the Fifteenth General Assembly, and again in the Eighteenth (1852-54), being chosen Speaker of the latter. In 1858 he was the administration (or Buchanan) Democratic candidate for State Superintendent of Public Instruction, as opposed to the Republican and regular (or Douglas) Democratic candidates. For some years he edited a daily paper called "The Eagle," which was published at Belleville. While Governor Reynolds acquired some reputation as a "classical scholar," from the time spent in a Tennessee College at that early day, this was not sustained by either his colloquial or written style. He was an ardent champion of slavery, and, in the early days of the Rebellion, gained unfavorable notoriety in consequence of a letter written to Jefferson Davis expressing sympathy with the cause of "secession." Nevertheless, in spite of intense prejudice and bitter partisanship on some questions, he possessed many amiable qualities, as shown by his devotion to temperance, and his popularity among persons of opposite political opinions. Although at times crude in style, and not always reliable in his statement of historical facts and events, Governor Reynolds has rendered a valuable service to posterity by his writings relating to the early history of the State, especially those connected with his own times. His best known works are: "Pioneer History of Illinois" (Belleville, 1848); "A Glance at the Crystal Palace, and Sketches of Travel" (1854); and "My Life and Times" (1855). His death occurred at Belleville, May 8, 1865.

REYNOLDS, John Parker, Secretary and President of State Board of Agriculture, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, March 1, 1830, and graduated from the Miami University at the age of 18. In 1840 he graduated from the Cincinnati Law School, and soon afterward began practice. He removed to Illinois in 1854, settling first in Winnebago County, later, successively in Marion County, in Springfield and in Chicago. From 1860 to 1870 he was Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, and, upon the creation of the State Board of Agriculture in 1871, was elected its President, filling that position until 1888, when he resigned. He has also occupied numerous other posts of honor and of trust of a public or semi-public character, having been President of the Illinois State Sanitary Commission during the War of the Rebellion, a Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1867, Chief Grain Inspector from 1878 to 1882, and Secretary of the Inter-State Industrial Exposition Company of Chicago, from the date of its organization (1873) until its final dissolution. His most important public service, in recent years, was rendered as Director-in-Chief of the Illinois exhibit in the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

REYNOLDS, Joseph Smith, soldier and legislator, was born at New Lenox, Ill., Dec. 3, 1839; at 17 years of age went to Chicago, was educated in the high school there, within a month after graduation enlisting as a private in the Sixty-fourth Illinois Volunteers. From the ranks he rose to a colonelcy through the gradations of Second-Lieutenant and Captain, and, in July, 1865, was brevetted Brigadier-General. He was a gallant soldier, and was thrice wounded. On his return home after nearly four years' service, he entered the law department of the Chicago University, graduating therefrom and beginning practice in 1866. General Reynolds has been prominent in public life, having served as a member of both branches of the General Assembly, and having been a State Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition of 1873. He is a member of the G. A. R., and, in 1875, was elected Senior Vice-Commander of the order for the United States.

REYNOLDS, William Morton, clergyman, was born in Fayette County, Pa., March 4, 1812; after graduating at Jefferson College, Pa., in 1832, was connected with various institutions in that State, as well as President of Capital University at Columbus, Ohio; then, coming to Illinois, was President of the Illinois State University at Springfield, 1857-60, after which he became Principal of a female seminary in Chicago. Previously a Lutheran, he took orders in the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1864, and served several parishes until his death. In his early life he founded, and, for a time, conducted several religious publications at Gettysburg, Pa., besides issuing a number of printed addresses and other published works. Died at Oak Park, near Chicago, Sept. 5, 1876.

RHOADS, (Col.) Franklin Lawrence, soldier and steamboat captain, was born in Harrisburg, Pa., Oct. 11, 1824; brought to Pekin, Tazewell County, Ill., in 1836, where he learned the printer's trade, and, on the breaking out of the Mexican War, enlisted, serving to the close. Returning home he engaged in the river trade, and, for fifteen years, commanded steamboats on the Illinois, Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. In April, 1861, he was commissioned Captain of a company of three months' men attached to the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, on the reorganization of the regiment for the three-years' service, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel, soon after being promoted to the colonelcy, as successor to Col. Richard J. Oglesby, who had been promoted Brigadier-General. After serving through the spring campaign of 1862 in Western Kentucky and Tennessee, he was compelled by rapidly declining health to resign, when he located in Shawneetown, retiring in 1874 to his farm near that city. During the latter years of his life he was a confirmed invalid, dying at Shawneetown, Jan. 6, 1879.

RHOADS, Joshua, M.D., A.M., physician and educator, was born in Philadelphia, Sept. 14, 1806; studied medicine and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania with the degree of M.D., also receiving the degree of A.M., from Princeton; after several years spent in practice as a physician, and as Principal in some of the public schools of Philadelphia, in 1839 he was elected Principal of the Pennsylvania Institution for the Blind, and, in 1850, took charge of the State Institution for the Blind at Jacksonville, Ill., then in its infancy. Here he remained until 1874, when he retired. Died, February 1, 1876.

RICE, Edward Y., lawyer and jurist, born in Logan County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1820, was educated in the common schools and at Shurtleff College, after which he read law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to practice, in 1845, at Hillsboro; in 1847 was elected County Recorder of Montgomery County, and, in 1848, to the Sixteenth General Assembly, serving one term. Later he was elected County Judge of Montgomery County, was Master in Chancery from 1853 to 1857, and the latter year was elected Judge of the Eighteenth Circuit, being re-elected in 1861 and again in 1867. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, at the election of the latter year, was chosen Representative in the Forty-second Congress as a Democrat. Died, April 16, 1883.

RICE, John B., theatrical manager, Mayor of Chicago, and Congressman, was born at Easton, Md., in 1809. By profession he was an actor, and, coming to Chicago in 1847, built and opened there the first theater. In 1857 he retired from the stage, and, in 1865, was elected Mayor of Chicago, the city of his adoption, and re-elected in 1867. He was also prominent in the early stages of the Civil War in the measures taken to raise troops in Chicago. In 1872 he was elected to the Forty-third Congress as a Republican, but, before the expiration of his term, died, at Norfolk, Va., on Dec. 6, 1874. At a special election to fill the vacancy, Bernard G. Caulfield was chosen to succeed him.

RICHARDSON, William A., lawyer and politician, born in Fayette County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1811, was educated at Transylvania University, came to the bar at 19, and settled in Schuyler County, Ill., becoming State's Attorney in 1835; was elected to the lower branch of the Legislature in 1836, to the Senate in 1838, and to the House again in 1844, from Adams County—the latter year being also chosen Presidential Elector on the Polk and Dallas ticket, and, at the succeeding session of the General Assembly, serving as Speaker of the House. He entered the Mexican War as Captain, and won a Majority through gallantry at Buena Vista. From 1847 to 1856 (when he resigned to become a candidate for Governor), he was a Democratic Representative in Congress from the Quincy District; re-entered Congress in 1861, and, in 1863, was chosen United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Stephen A. Douglas. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention of 1868, but after that retired to private life, acting, for a short time, as editor of "The Quincy Herald." Died, at Quincy, Dec. 27, 1875.

RICHLAND COUNTY, situated in the southeast quarter of the State, and has an area of 361 square miles. It was organized from Edwards County in 1841. Among the early pioneers may be mentioned the Evans brothers. Thaddeus Morehouse, Hugh Calhoun and son, Thomas Gardner, James Parker, Cornelius De Long, James Gilmore and Elijah Nelson. In 1820 there were but thirty families in the district. The first frame houses—the Nelson and Morehouse homesteads—were built in 1821, and, some years later, James Laws erected the first brick house. The pioneers traded at Vincennes, but, in 1825, a store was opened at Stringtown by Jacob May; and the same year the first school was opened at Watertown, taught by Isaac Chauncey. The first church was erected by the Baptists in 1822, and services were conducted by William Martin, a Kentuckian. For a long time the mails were carried on horseback by Louis and James Beard, but, in 1824, Mills and Whetsell established a line of four-horse stages. The principal road, known as the "trace road," leading from Louisville to Cahokia, followed a buffalo and Indian trail about where the main street of Olney now is. Olney was selected as the county-seat upon the organization of the county, and a Mr. Lilly built the first house there. The chief branches of industry followed by the inhabitants are agriculture and fruit-growing. Population (1880), 15,545; (1890), 15,019; (1900), 16,391.

RIDGE FARM, a village of Vermillion County, at junction of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroads, 174 miles northeast of St. Louis; has electric light plant, planing mill, elevators, bank and two papers. Pop. (1900), 933; (1904), 1,300.

RIDGELY, a manufacturing and mining suburb of the city of Springfield. An extensive rolling mill is located there, and there are several coal-shafts in the vicinity. Population (1900), 1,169.

RIDGELY, Charles, manufacturer and capitalist, born in Springfield, Ill., Jan. 17, 1836; was educated in private schools and at Illinois College; after leaving college spent some time as a clerk in his father's bank at Springfield, finally becoming a member of the firm and successively Cashier and Vice-President. In 1870 he was Democratic candidate for State Treasurer, but later has affiliated with the Republican party. About 1872 he became identified with the Springfield Iron Company, of which he has been President for many years; has also been President of the Consolidated Coal Company of St. Louis and, for some time, was a Director of the Wabash Railroad. Mr. Ridgely is also one of the Trustees of Illinois College.

RIDGELY, Nicholas H., early banker, was born in Baltimore, Md., April 27, 1800; after leaving school was engaged, for a time, in the dry-goods trade, but, in 1829, came to St. Louis to assume a clerkship in the branch of the United States Bank just organized there. In 1835 a branch of the State Bank of Illinois was established at Springfield, and Mr. Ridgely became its cashier, and, when it went into liquidation, was appointed one of the trustees to wind up its affairs. He subsequently became President of the Clark's Exchange Bank in that city, but this having gone into liquidation a few years later, he went into the private banking business as head of the "Ridgely Bank," which, in 1866, became the "Ridgely National Bank," one of the strongest financial institutions in the State outside of Chicago. After the collapse of the internal improvement scheme, Mr. Ridgely became one of the purchasers of the "Northern Cross Railroad" (now that part of the Wabash system extending from the Illinois river to Springfield), when it was sold by the State in 1847, paying therefor $21,100. He was also one of the Springfield bankers to tender a loan to the State at the beginning of the war in 1861. He was one of the builders and principal owner of the Springfield gas-light system. His business career was an eminently successful one, leaving an estate at his death, Jan. 31, 1888, valued at over $2,000,000.

RIDGWAY, a village of Gallatin County, on the Shawneetown Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 12 miles northwest of Shawneetown; has a bank and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 523; (1900), 839; (1903, est.), 1,000.

RIDGWAY, Thomas S., merchant, banker and politician, was born at Carmi, Ill., August 30, 1826. His father having died when he was but 4 years old and his mother when he was 14, his education was largely acquired through contact with the world, apart from such as he received from his mother and during a year's attendance at a private school. When he was 6 years of age the family removed to Shawneetown, where he ever afterwards made his home. In 1845 he embarked in business as a merchant, and the firm of Peeples & Ridgway soon became one of the most prominent in Southern Illinois. In 1865 the partners closed out their business and organized the first National Bank of Shawneetown, of which, after the death of Mr. Peeples in 1875, Mr. Ridgway was President. He was one of the projectors of the Springfield & Illinois South-eastern Railway, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern system, and, from 1867 to 1874, served as its President. He was an ardent and active Republican, and served as a delegate to every State and National Convention of his party from 1868 to 1896. In 1874 he was elected State Treasurer, the candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction on the same ticket being defeated. In 1876 and 1880 he was an unsuccessful candidate for his party's nomination for Governor. Three times he consented to lead the forlorn hope of the Republicans as a candidate for Congress from an impregnable Democratic stronghold. For several years he was a Director of the McCormick Theological Seminary, at Chicago, and, for nineteen years, was a Trustee of the Southern Illinois Normal University at Carbondale, resigning in 1893. Died, at Shawneetown, Nov. 17, 1897.

RIGGS, James M., ex-Congressman, was born in Scott County, Ill., April 17, 1839, where he received a common school education, supplemented by a partial collegiate course. He is a practicing lawyer of Winchester. In 1864 he was elected Sheriff, serving two years. In 1871-72 he represented Scott County in the lower house of the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, and was State's Attorney from 1872 to 1876. In 1882, and again in 1884, he was the successful Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twelfth Illinois District.

RIGGS, Scott, pioneer, was born in North Carolina about 1790; removed to Crawford County, Ill. early in 1815, and represented that county in the First General Assembly (1818-20). In 1825 he removed to Scott County, where he continued to reside until his death, Feb. 24, 1872.

RINAKER, John I., lawyer and Congressman, born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 18, 1830. Left an orphan at an early age, he came to Illinois in 1836, and, for several years, lived on farms in Sangamon and Morgan Counties; was educated at Illinois and McKendree Colleges, graduating from the latter in 1851; in 1852 began reading law with John M. Palmer at Carlinville, and was admitted to the bar in 1854. In August, 1862, he recruited the One Hundred and Twenty-second Illinois Volunteers, of which he was commissioned Colonel. Four months later he was wounded in battle, but served with his regiment through the war, and was brevetted Brigadier-General at its close. Returning from the war he resumed the practice of his profession at Carlinville. Since 1858 he has been an active Republican; has twice (1872 and '76) served his party as a Presidential Elector—the latter year for the State-at-large—and, in 1874, accepted a nomination for Congress against William R. Morrison, largely reducing the normal Democratic majority. At the State Republican Convention of 1880 he was a prominent, but unsuccessful, candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor. In 1894 he made the race as the Republican candidate for Congress in the Sixteenth District and, although his opponent was awarded the certificate of election, on a bare majority of 60 votes on the face of the returns, a re-count, ordered by the Fifty-fourth Congress, showed a majority for General Rinaker, and he was seated near the close of the first session. He was a candidate for re-election in 1896, but defeated in a strongly Democratic District.

RIPLEY, Edward Payson, Railway President, was born in Dorchester (now a part of Boston), Mass., Oct. 30, 1845, being related, on his mother's side, to the distinguished author, Dr. Edward Payson. After receiving his education in the high school of his native place, at the age of 17 he entered upon a commercial life, as clerk in a wholesale dry-goods establishment in Boston. About the time he became of age, he entered into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad as a clerk in the freight department in the Boston office, but, a few years later, assumed a responsible position in connection with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line, finally becoming General Agent for the business of that road east of Buffalo, though retaining his headquarters at Boston. In 1878 he removed to Chicago to accept the position of General Freight Agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy System, with which he remained twelve years, serving successively as General Traffic Manager and General Manager, until June 1, 1890, when he resigned to become Third Vice-President of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul line. This relation was continued until Jan. 1, 1896, when Mr. Ripley accepted the Presidency of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, which (1899) he now holds. Mr. Ripley was a prominent factor in securing the location of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, and, in April, 1891, was chosen one of the Directors of the Exposition, serving on the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ways and Means and Transportation, being Chairman of the latter.

RIVERSIDE, a suburban town on the Des Plaines River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, 11 miles west of Chicago; has handsome parks, several churches, a bank, two local papers and numerous fine residences. Population (1890), 1,000; (1900), 1,551.

RIVERTON, a village in Clear Creek Township, Sangamon County, at the crossing of the Wabash Railroad over the Sangamon River, 6½ miles east-northeast of Springfield. It has four churches, a nursery, and two coal mines. Population (1880), 705; (1890), 1,127; (1900), 1,511; (1903, est.), about 2,000.

RIVES, John Cook, early banker and journalist, was born in Franklin County, Va., May 24, 1795; in 1806 removed to Kentucky, where he grew up under care of an uncle, Samuel Casey. He received a good education and was a man of high character and attractive manners. In his early manhood he came to Illinois, and was connected, for a time, with the Branch State Bank at Edwardsville, but, about 1824, removed to Shawneetown and held a position in the bank there; also studied law and was admitted to practice. Finally, having accepted a clerkship in the Fourth Auditor's Office in Washington, he removed to that city, and, in 1830, became associated with Francis P. Blair, Sr., in the establishment of "The Congressional Globe" (the predecessor of "The Congressional Record"), of which he finally became sole proprietor, so remaining until 1864. Like his partner, Blair, although a native of Virginia and a life-long Democrat, he was intensely loyal, and contributed liberally of his means for the equipment of soldiers from the District of Columbia, and for the support of their families, during the Civil War. His expenditures for these objects have been estimated at some $30,000. Died, in Prince George's County, Md., April 10, 1864.

ROANOKE, a village of Woodford County, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, 26 miles northeast of Peoria; is in a coal district; has two banks, a coal mine, and one newspaper. Population (1880), 355; (1890), 831; (1900), 966.

ROBB, Thomas Patten, Sanitary Agent, was born in Bath, Maine, in 1819; came to Cook County, Ill., in 1838, and, after arriving at manhood, established the first exclusive wholesale grocery house in Chicago, remaining in the business until 1850. He then went to California, establishing himself in mercantile business at Sacramento, where he remained seven years, meanwhile being elected Mayor of that city. Returning to Chicago on the breaking out of the war, he was appointed on the staff of Governor Yates with the rank of Major, and, while serving in this capacity, was instrumental in giving General Grant the first duty he performed in the office of the Adjutant-General after his arrival from Galena. Later, he was assigned to duty as Inspector-General of Illinois troops with the rank of Colonel, having general charge of sanitary affairs until the close of the war, when he was appointed Cotton Agent for the State of Georgia, and, still later, President of the Board of Tax Commissioners for that State. Other positions held by him were those of Postmaster and Collector of Customs at Savannah, Ga.; he was also one of the publishers of "The New Era," a Republican paper at Atlanta, and a prominent actor in reconstruction affairs. Resigning the Collectorship, he was appointed by the President United States Commissioner to investigate Mexican outrages on the Rio Grande border; was subsequently identified with Texas railroad interests as the President of the Corpus Christi & Rio Grande Railroad, and one of the projectors of the Chicago, Texas & Mexican Central Railway, being thus engaged until 1872. Later he returned to California, dying near Glenwood, in that State, April 10, 1895, aged 75 years and 10 months.

ROBERTS, William Charles, clergyman and educator, was born in a small village of Wales, England., Sept. 23, 1832; received his primary education in that country, but, removing to America during his minority, graduated from Princeton College in 1855, and from Princeton Theological Seminary in 1858. After filling various pastorates in Delaware, New Jersey and Ohio, in 1881 he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, the next year being offered the Presidency of Rutgers College, which he declined. In 1887 he accepted the presidency of Lake Forest University, which he still retains. From 1859 to 1863 he was a Trustee of Lafayette College, and, in 1866, was elected to a trusteeship of his Alma Mater. He has traveled extensively in the Orient, and was a member of the first and third councils of the Reformed Churches, held at Edinburgh and Belfast. Besides occasional sermons and frequent contributions to English, American, German and Welsh periodicals, Dr. Roberts has published a Welsh translation of the Westminster shorter catechism and a collection of letters on the great preachers of Wales, which appeared in Utica, 1868. He received the degree of D.D., from Union College in 1872, and that of LL.D., from Princeton, in 1887.

ROBINSON, an incorporated city and the county-seat of Crawford County, 25 miles northwest of Vincennes, Ind., and 44 miles south of Paris, Ill.; is on two lines of railroad and in the heart of a fruit and agricultural region. The city has water-works, electric lights, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Population (1890), 1,357; (1900), 1,683; (1904), about 2,000.

ROBINSON, James C., lawyer and former Congressman, was born in Edgar County, Ill., in 1822, read law and was admitted to the bar in 1850. He served as a private during the Mexican War, and, in 1858, was elected to Congress as a Democrat, as he was again in 1860, '62, '70 and '72. In 1864 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. He was a fluent speaker, and attained considerable distinction as an advocate in criminal practice. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 3, 1886.

ROBINSON, John M., United States Senator, born in Kentucky in 1793, was liberally educated and became a lawyer by profession. In early life he settled at Carmi, Ill., where he married. He was of fine physique, of engaging manners, and personally popular. Through his association with the State militia he earned the title of "General." In 1830 he was elected to the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of John McLean. His immediate predecessor was David Jewett Baker, appointed by Governor Edwards, who served one month but failed of election by the Legislature. In 1834 Mr. Robinson was re-elected for a full term, which expired in 1841. In 1843 he was elected to a seat upon the Illinois Supreme bench, but died at Ottawa, April 27, of the same year, within three months after his elevation.

ROCHELLE, a city of Ogle County and an intersecting point of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways. It is 75 miles west of Chicago, 27 miles south of Rockford, and 23 miles east by north of Dixon. It is in a rich agricultural and stock-raising region, rendering Rochelle an important shipping point. Among its industrial establishments are water-works, electric lights, a flouring mill and silk-underwear factory. The city has three banks, five churches and three newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,789; (1900), 2,073; (1903), 2,500.

ROCHESTER, a village and early settlement in Sangamon County, laid out in 1819; in rich agricultural district, on the Baltimore & Ohio Northwestern Railroad, 7½ miles southeast of Springfield; has a bank, two churches, one school, and a newspaper. Population (1900), 365.

ROCK FALLS, a city in Whiteside County, on Rock River and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad; has excellent water-power, a good public school system with a high school, banks and a weekly newspaper. Agricultural implements, barbed wire, furniture, flour and paper are its chief manufactures. Water for the navigable feeder of the Hennepin Canal is taken from Rock River at this point. Pop. (1900), 2,176.

ROCKFORD, a flourishing manufacturing city, the county-seat of Winnebago County; lies on both sides of the Rock River, 92 miles west of Chicago. Four trunk lines of railroad—the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul—intersect here. Excellent water-power is secured by a dam across the river, and communication between the two divisions of the city is facilitated by three railway and three highway bridges. Water is provided from five artesian wells, a reserve main leading to the river. The city is wealthy, prosperous and progressive. The assessed valuation of property, in 1893, was $6,531,235. Churches are numerous and schools, both public and private, are abundant and well conducted. The census of 1890 showed $7,715,069 capital invested in 246 manufacturing establishments, which employed 5,223 persons and turned out an annual product valued at $8,888,904. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements and furniture, though watches, silver-plated ware, paper, flour and grape sugar are among the other products. Pop. (1880), 13,129; (1890), 23,584; (1900), 31,051.

ROCKFORD COLLEGE, located at Rockford, Ill., incorporated in 1847; in 1898 had a faculty of 21 instructors with 161 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, music and fine arts. It has a library of 6,150 volumes, funds and endowment aggregating $50,880 and property valued at $240,880, of which $150,000 is real estate.

ROCK ISLAND, the principal city and county-seat of Rock Island County, on the Mississippi River, 182 miles west by south from Chicago; is the converging point of five lines of railroad, and the western terminus of the Hennepin Canal. The name is derived from an island in the Mississippi River, opposite the city, 3 miles long, which belongs to the United States Government and contains an arsenal and armory. The river channel north of the island is navigable, the southern channel having been dammed by the Government, thereby giving great water power to Rock Island and Moline. A combined railway and highway bridge spans the river from Rock Island to Davenport, Iowa, crossing the island, while a railway bridge connects the cities a mile below. The island was the site of Fort Armstrong during the Black Hawk War, and was also a place for the confinement of Confederate prisoners during the Civil War. Rock Island is in a region of much picturesque scenery and has extensive manufactures of lumber, agricultural implements, iron, carriages and wagons and oilcloth; also five banks and three newspapers, two issuing daily editions. Pop. (1890), 13,634; (1900), 19,493.

ROCK ISLAND COUNTY, in the northwestern section of the State bordering upon the Mississippi River (which constitutes its northwestern boundary for more than 60 miles), and having an area of 440 square miles. In 1816 the Government erected a fort on Rock Island (an island in the Mississippi, 3 miles long and one-half to three-quarters of a mile wide), naming it Fort Armstrong. It has always remained a military post, and is now the seat of an extensive arsenal and work-shops. In the spring of 1828, settlements were made near Port Byron by John and Thomas Kinney, Archibald Allen and George Harlan. Other early settlers, near Rock Island and Rapids City, were J. W. Spencer, J. W. Barriels, Benjamin F. Pike and Conrad Leak; and among the pioneers were Wells and Michael Bartlett, Joel Thompson, the Simms brothers and George Davenport. The country was full of Indians, this being the headquarters of Black Hawk and the initial point of the Black Hawk War. (See Black Hawk, and Black Hawk War.) By 1829 settlers were increased in number and county organization was effected in 1835, Rock Island (then called Stephenson) being made the county-seat. Joseph Conway was the first County Clerk, and Joel Wells, Sr., the first Treasurer. The first court was held at the residence of John W. Barriels, in Farnhamsburg. The county is irregular in shape, and the soil and scenery greatly varied. Coal is abundant, the water-power inexhaustible, and the county's mining and manufacturing interests are very extensive. Several lines of railway cross the county, affording admirable transportation facilities to both eastern and western markets. Rock Island and Moline (which see) are the two principal cities in the county, though there are several other important points. Coal Valley is the center of large mining interests, and Milan is also a manufacturing center. Port Byron is one of the oldest towns in the county, and has considerable lime and lumber interests, while Watertown is the seat of the Western Hospital for the Insane. Population of the county (1880), 38,302; (1890), 41,917; (1900), 55,249.

ROCK ISLAND & PEORIA RAILWAY, a standard-gauge road, laid with steel rails, extending from Rock Island to Peoria, 91 miles. It is lessee of the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, running from Milan to Cable, Ill., giving it a total length of 118 miles—with Peoria Terminal, 121.10 miles.—(HISTORY.) The company is a reorganization (Oct. 9, 1877) of the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Company, whose road was sold under foreclosure, April 4, 1877. The latter Road was the result of the consolidation, in 1869, of two corporations—the Rock Island & Peoria and the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad Companies—the new organization taking the latter name. The road was opened through its entire length, Jan. 1, 1872, its sale under foreclosure and reorganization under its present name taking place, as already stated, in 1877. The Cable Branch was organized in 1876, as the Rock Island & Mercer County Railroad, and opened in December of the same year, sold under foreclosure in 1877, and leased to the Rock Island & Peoria Railroad, July 1, 1885, for 999 years, the rental for the entire period being commuted at $450,000.—(FINANCIAL.) The cost of the entire road and equipment was $2,654,487. The capital stock (1898) is $1,500,000; funded debt, $600,000; other forms of indebtedness increasing the total capital invested to $2,181,066.

ROCK RIVER, a stream which rises in Washington County, Wis., and flows generally in a southerly direction, a part of its course being very sinuous. After crossing the northern boundary of Illinois, it runs southwestward, intersecting the counties of Winnebago, Ogle, Lee, Whiteside and Rock Island, and entering the Mississippi three miles below the city of Rock Island. It is about 375 miles long, but its navigation is partly obstructed by rapids, which, however, furnish abundant water-power. The principal towns on its banks are Rockford, Dixon and Sterling. Its valley is wide, and noted for its beauty and fertility.

ROCKTON, a village in Winnebago County, at the junction of two branches of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, on Rock River, 13 miles north of Rockford; has manufactures of paper and agricultural implements, a feed mill, and local paper. Pop. (1890), 892; (1900), 936.

ROE, Edward Reynolds, A.B., M.D., physician, soldier and author, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, June 22, 1813; removed with his father, in 1819, to Cincinnati, and graduated at Louisville Medical Institute in 1842; began practice at Anderson, Ind., but soon removed to Shawneetown, Ill., where he gave much attention to geological research and made some extensive natural history collections. From 1848 to '52 he resided at Jacksonville, lectured extensively on his favorite science, wrote for the press and, for two years (1850-52), edited "The Jacksonville Journal," still later editing the newly established "Constitutionalist" for a few months. During a part of this period he was lecturer on natural science at Shurtleff College; also delivered a lecture before the State Legislature on the geology of Illinois, which was immediately followed by the passage of the act establishing the State Geological Department. A majority of both houses joined in a request for his appointment as State Geologist, but it was rejected on partisan grounds—he, then, being a Whig. Removing to Bloomington in 1852, Dr. Roe became prominent in educational matters, being the first Professor of Natural Science in the State Normal University, and also a Trustee of the Illinois Wesleyan University. Having identified himself with the Democratic party at this time, he became its nominee for State Superintendent of Public Instruction in 1860, but, on the inception of the war in 1861, he promptly espoused the cause of the Union, raised three companies (mostly Normal students) which were attached to the Thirty-third Illinois (Normal) Regiment; was elected Captain and successively promoted to Major and Lieutenant-Colonel. Having been dangerously wounded in the assault at Vicksburg, on May 22, 1863, and compelled to return home, he was elected Circuit Clerk by the combined vote of both parties, was re-elected four years later, became editor of "The Bloomington Pantagraph" and, in 1870, was elected to the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, where he won distinction by a somewhat notable humorous speech in opposition to removing the State Capital to Peoria. In 1871 he was appointed Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving nine years. Dr. Roe was a somewhat prolific author, having produced more than a dozen works which have appeared in book form. One of these, "Virginia Rose; a Tale of Illinois in Early Days," first appeared as a prize serial in "The Alton Courier" in 1852. Others of his more noteworthy productions are: "The Gray and the Blue"; "Brought to Bay"; "From the Beaten Path"; "G. A. R.; or How She Married His Double"; "Dr. Caldwell; or the Trail of the Serpent"; and "Prairie-Land and Other Poems." He died in Chicago, Nov. 6, 1893.

ROGERS, George Clarke, soldier, was born in Grafton County, N. H., Nov. 22, 1838; but was educated in Vermont and Illinois, having removed to the latter State early in life. While teaching he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1860; was the first, in 1861, to raise a company in Lake County for the war, which was mustered into the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers; was chosen Second-Lieutenant and later Captain; was wounded four times at Shiloh, but refused to leave the field, and led his regiment in the final charge; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and soon after commissioned Colonel for gallantry at Hatchie. At Champion Hills he received three wounds, from one of which he never fully recovered; took a prominent part in the operations at Allatoona and commanded a brigade nearly two years, including the Atlanta campaign, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. Since the war has practiced law in Illinois and in Kansas.

ROGERS, Henry Wade, educator, lawyer and author, was born in Central New York in 1853; entered Hamilton College, but the following year became a student in Michigan University, graduating there in 1874, also receiving the degree of A.M., from the same institution, in 1877. In 1883 he was elected to a professorship in the Ann Arbor Law School, and, in 1885, was made Dean of the Faculty, succeeding Judge Cooley, at the age of 32. Five years later he was tendered, and accepted, the Presidency of the Northwestern University, at Evanston, being the first layman chosen to the position, and succeeding a long line of Bishops and divines. The same year (1890), Wesleyan University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is a member of the American Bar Association, has served for a number of years on its Committee on Legal Education and Admission to the Bar, and was the first Chairman of the Section on Legal Education. President Rogers was the General Chairman of the Conference on the Future Foreign Policy of the United States, held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., in August, 1898. At the Congress held in 1893, as auxiliary to the Columbian Exposition, he was chosen Chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Jurisprudence, and was for a time associate editor of "The American Law Register," of Philadelphia. He is also the author of a treatise on "Expert Testimony," which has passed through two editions, and has edited a work entitled "Illinois Citations," besides doing much other valuable literary work of a similar character.

ROGERS, John Gorin, jurist, was born at Glasgow, Ky., Dec. 28, 1818, of English and early Virginian ancestry; was educated at Center College, Danville, Ky., and at Transylvania University, graduating from the latter institution in 1841, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. For sixteen years he practiced in his native town, and, in 1857, removed to Chicago, where he soon attained professional prominence. In 1870 he was elected a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court, continuing on the bench, through repeated re-elections, until his death, which occurred suddenly, Jan. 10, 1887, four years before the expiration of the term for which he had been elected.

ROGERS PARK, a village and suburb 9 miles north of Chicago, on Lake Michigan and the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; has a bank and two weekly newspapers; is reached by electric street-car line from Chicago, and is a popular residence suburb. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1893.

ROLL, John E., pioneer, was born in Green Village, N. J., June 4, 1814; came to Illinois in 1830, and settled in Sangamon County. He assisted Abraham Lincoln in the construction of the flat-boat with which the latter descended the Mississippi River to New Orleans, in 1831. Mr. Roll, who was a mechanic and contractor, built a number of houses in Springfield, where he has since continued to reside.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The earliest Christians to establish places of worship in Illinois were priests of the Catholic faith. Early Catholic missionaries were explorers and historians as well as preachers. (See Allouez; Bergier; Early Missionaries; Gravier; Marquette.) The church went hand in hand with the representatives of the French Government, carrying in one hand the cross and in the other the flag of France, simultaneously disseminating the doctrines of Christianity and inculcating loyalty to the House of Bourbon. For nearly a hundred years, the self-sacrificing and devoted Catholic clergy of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries ministered to the spiritual wants of the early French settlers and the natives. They were not without factional jealousies, however, and a severe blow was dealt to a branch of them in the order for the banishment of the Jesuits and the confiscation of their property. (See Early Missionaries.) The subsequent occupation of the country by the English, with the contemporaneous emigration of a considerable portion of the French west of the Mississippi, dissipated many congregations. Up to 1830 Illinois was included in the diocese of Missouri; but at that time it was constituted a separate diocese, under the episcopal control of Rt. Rev. Joseph Rosatti. At that date there were few, if any, priests in Illinois. But Bishop Rosatti was a man of earnest purpose and rare administrative ability. New parishes were organized as rapidly as circumstances would permit, and the growth of the church has been steady. By 1840 there were thirty-one parishes and twenty priests. In 1896 there are reported 698 parishes, 764 clergymen and a Catholic population exceeding 850,000. (See also Religious Denominations.)

ROODHOUSE, a city in Greene County, 21 miles south of Jacksonville, and at junction of three divisions of the Chicago & Alton Railroad; is in fertile agricultural and coal-mining region; city contains a flouring mill, grain-elevator, stock-yards, railway shops, water-works, electric light plant, two private banks, fine opera house, good school buildings, one daily and two weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,360; (1900), 2,351.

ROODHOUSE, John, farmer and founder of the town of Roodhouse, in Greene County, Ill., was born in Yorkshire, England, brought to America in childhood, his father settling in Greene County, Ill., in 1831. In his early manhood he opened a farm in Tazewell County, but finally returned to the paternal home in Greene County, where, on the location of the Jacksonville Division of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, he laid out the town of Roodhouse, at the junction of the Louisiana and Kansas City branch with the main line.

ROOT, George Frederick, musical composer and author, was born at Sheffield, Mass., August 30, 1820. He was a natural musician, and, while employed on his father's farm, learned to play on various instruments. In 1838 he removed to Boston, where he began his life-work. Besides teaching music in the public schools, he was employed to direct the musical service in two churches. From Boston he removed to New York, and, in 1850, went to Paris for purposes of musical study. In 1853 he made his first public essay as a composer in the song, "Hazel Dell," which became popular at once. From this time forward his success as a song-writer was assured. His music, while not of a high artistic character, captivated the popular ear and appealed strongly to the heart. In 1860 he took up his residence in Chicago, where he conducted a musical journal and wrote those "war songs" which created and perpetuated his fame. Among the best known are "Rally Round the Flag"; "Just Before the Battle, Mother"; and "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp." Other popular songs by him are "Rosalie, the Prairie Flower"; "A Hundred Years Ago"; and "The Old Folks are Gone." Besides songs he composed several cantatas and much sacred music, also publishing many books of instruction and numerous collections of vocal and instrumental music. In 1872 the University of Chicago conferred on him the degree of Mus. Doc. Died, near Portland, Maine, August 6, 1895.

ROOTS, Benajah Guernsey, civil engineer, and educator, was born in Onondaga County N. Y., April 20, 1811, and educated in the schools and academies of Central New York; began teaching in 1827, and, after spending a year at sea for the benefit of his health, took a course in law and civil engineering. He was employed as a civil engineer on the Western Railroad of Massachusetts until 1838, when he came to Illinois and obtained employment on the railroad projected from Alton to Shawneetown, under the "internal improvement system" of 1837. When that was suspended in 1839, he settled on a farm near the present site of Tamaroa, Perry County, and soon after opened a boarding school, continuing its management until 1846, when he became Principal of a seminary at Sparta. In 1851 he went into the service of the Illinois Central Railroad, first as resident engineer in charge of surveys and construction, later as land agent and attorney. He was prominent in the introduction of the graded school system in Illinois and in the establishment of the State Normal School at Bloomington and the University of Illinois at Champaign; was a member of the State Board of Education from its organization, and served as delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1868. Died, at his home in Perry County, Ill., May 9, 1888.—Philander Keep (Roots), son of the preceding, born in Tolland County, Conn., June 4, 1838, brought to Illinois the same year and educated in his father's school, and in an academy at Carrollton and the Wesleyan University at Bloomington; at the age of 17 belonged to a corps of engineers employed on a Southern railroad, and, during the war, served as a civil engineer in the construction and repair of military roads. Later, he was Deputy Surveyor-General of Nebraska; in 1871 became Chief Engineer on the Cairo & Fulton (now a part of the Iron Mountain) Railway; then engaged in the banking business in Arkansas, first as cashier of a bank at Fort Smith and afterwards of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, of which his brother, Logan H., was President.—Logan H. (Roots), another son, born near Tamaroa, Perry County, Ill., March 22, 1841, was educated at home and at the State Normal at Bloomington, meanwhile serving as principal of a high school at Duquoin; in 1862 enlisted in the Eighty-first Illinois Volunteers, serving through the war and acting as Chief Commissary for General Sherman on the "March to the Sea," and participating in the great review in Washington, in May, 1865. After the conclusion of the war he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the First Arkansas District, was elected from that State to the Fortieth and Forty-first Congresses (1868 and 1870)—being, at the time, the youngest member in that body—and was appointed United States Marshal by President Grant. He finally became President of the Merchants' National Bank at Little Rock, with which he remained nearly twenty years. Died, suddenly, of congestion of the brain, May 30, 1893, leaving an estate valued at nearly one and a half millions, of which he gave a large share to charitable purposes and to the city of Little Rock, for the benefit of its hospitals and the improvement of its parks.

ROSE, James A., Secretary of State, was born at Golconda, Pope County, Ill., Oct. 13, 1850. The foundation of his education was secured in the public schools of his native place, and, after a term in the Normal University at Normal, Ill., at the age of 18 he took charge of a country school. Soon he was chosen Principal of the Golconda graded schools, was later made County Superintendent of Schools, and re-elected for a second term. During his second term he was admitted to the bar, and, resigning the office of Superintendent, was elected State's Attorney without opposition, being re-elected for another term. In 1889, by appointment of Governor Fifer, he became one of the Trustees of the Pontiac Reformatory, serving until the next year, when he was transferred to the Board of Commissioners of the Southern Illinois Penitentiary at Chester, which position he continued to occupy until 1893. In 1896 he was elected Secretary of State on the Republican ticket, his term extending to January, 1901.

ROSEVILLE, a village in Warren County, on the Rock Island Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 17 miles northwest of Bushnell; has water and electric-light plants, two banks, public library and one newspaper. Region agricultural and coal-mining. Pop. (1900), 1,014.

ROSS, Leonard Fulton, soldier, born in Fulton County, Ill., July 18, 1823; was educated in the common schools and at Illinois College, Jacksonville, studied law and admitted to the bar in 1845; the following year enlisted in the Fourth Illinois Volunteers for the Mexican War, became First Lieutenant and was commended for services at Vera Cruz and Cerro Gordo; also performed important service as bearer of dispatches for General Taylor. After the war he served six years as Probate Judge. In May, 1861, he enlisted in the war for the Union, and was chosen Colonel of the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers, serving with it in Missouri and Kentucky; was commissioned Brigadier-General a few weeks after the capture of Fort Donelson, and, after the evacuation of Corinth, was assigned to the command of a division with headquarters at Bolivar, Tenn. He resigned in July, 1863, and, in 1867, was appointed by President Johnson Collector of Internal Revenue for the Ninth District; has been three times a delegate to National Republican Conventions and twice defeated as a candidate for Congress in a Democratic District. Since the war he has devoted his attention largely to stock-raising, having a large stock-farm in Iowa. In his later years was President of a bank at Lewistown, Ill. Died Jan. 17, 1901.

ROSS, (Col.) William, pioneer, was born at Monson, Hampden County, Mass. April 24, 1792; removed with his father's family, in 1805, to Pittsfield, Mass., where he remained until his twentieth year, when he was commissioned an Ensign in the Twenty-first Regiment United States Infantry, serving through the War of 1812-14, and participating in the battle of Sackett's Harbor. During the latter part of his service he acted as drill-master at various points. Then, returning to Pittsfield, he carried on the business of blacksmithing as an employer, meanwhile filling some local offices. In 1820, a company consisting of himself and four brothers, with their families and a few others, started for the West, intending to settle in Illinois. Reaching the head-waters of the Allegheny overland, they transferred their wagons, teams and other property to flat-boats, descending that stream and the Ohio to Shawneetown, Ill. Here they disembarked and, crossing the State, reached Upper Alton, where they found only one house, that of Maj. Charles W. Hunter. Leaving their families at Upper Alton, the brothers proceeded north, crossing the Illinois River near its mouth, until they reached a point in the western part of the present county of Pike, where the town of Atlas was afterwards located. Here they erected four rough log-cabins, on a beautiful prairie not far from the Mississippi, removing their families thither a few weeks later. They suffered the usual privations incident to life in a new country, not excepting sickness and death of some of their number. At the next session of the Legislature (1820-21) Pike County was established, embracing all that part of the State west and north of the Illinois, and including the present cities of Galena and Chicago. The Ross settlement became the nucleus of the town of Atlas, laid out by Colonel Ross and his associates in 1823, at an early day the rival of Quincy, and becoming the second county-seat of Pike County, so remaining from 1824 to 1833, when the seat of justice was removed to Pittsfield. During this period Colonel Ross was one of the most prominent citizens of the county, holding, simultaneously or successively, the offices of Probate Judge, Circuit and County Clerk, Justice of the Peace, and others of a subordinate character. As Colonel of Militia, in 1832, he was ordered by Governor Reynolds to raise a company for the Black Hawk War, and, in four days, reported at Beardstown with twice the number of men called for. In 1834 he was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, also serving in the Senate during the three following sessions, a part of the time as President pro tem. of the last-named body. While in the General Assembly he was instrumental in securing legislation of great importance relating to Military Tract lands. The year following the establishment of the county-seat at Pittsfield (1834) he became a citizen of that place, which he had the privilege of naming for his early home. He was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, and a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1860, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for President the first time. Beginning life poor he acquired considerable property; was liberal, public-spirited and patriotic, making a handsome donation to the first company organized in Pike County, for the suppression of the Rebellion. Died, at Pittsfield, May 31, 1873.

ROSSVILLE, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad, 19 miles north of Danville; has electric-light plant, water-works, tile and brick-works, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 879; (1900), 1,435.

ROUNDS, Sterling Parker, public printer, was born in Berkshire, Vt., June 27, 1828; about 1840 began learning the printer's trade at Kenosha, Wis., and, in 1845, was foreman of the State printing office at Madison, afterward working in offices in Milwaukee, Racine and Buffalo, going to Chicago in 1851. Here he finally established a printer's warehouse, to which he later added an electrotpe foundry and the manufacture of presses, also commencing the issue of "Round's Printers' Cabinet," a trade-paper, which was continued during his life. In 1881 he was appointed by President Garfield Public Printer at Washington, serving until 1885, when he removed to Omaha, Neb., and was identified with "The Republican," of that city, until his death, Dec. 17, 1887.

ROUNTREE, Hiram, County Judge, born in Rutherford County, N. C., Dec. 22, 1794; was brought to Kentucky in infancy, where he grew to manhood and served as an Ensign in the War of 1812 under General Shelby. In 1817 he removed to Illinois Territory, first locating in Madison County, where he taught school for two years near Edwardsville, but removed to Fayette County about the time of the removal of the State capital to Vandalia. On the organization of Montgomery County, in 1821, he was appointed to office there and ever afterwards resided at Hillsboro. For a number of years in the early history of the county, he held (at the same time) the offices of Clerk of the County Commissioners' Court, Clerk of the Circuit Court, County Recorder, Justice of the Peace, Notary Public, Master in Chancery and Judge of Probate, besides that of Postmaster for the town of Hillsboro. In 1826 he was elected Enrolling and Engrossing Clerk of the Senate and re-elected in 1830; served as Delegate in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and the next year was elected to the State Senate, serving in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth General Assemblies. On retiring from the Senate (1852), he was elected County Judge without opposition, was re-elected to the same office in 1861, and again, in 1865, as the nominee of the Republicans. Judge Rountree was noted for his sound judgment and sterling integrity. Died, at Hillsboro, March 4, 1873.

ROUTT, John L., soldier and Governor, was born at Eddyville, Ky., April 25, 1826, brought to Illinois in infancy and educated in the common schools. Soon after coming of age he was elected and served one term as Sheriff of McLean County; in 1862 enlisted and became Captain of Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois Volunteers. After the war he engaged in business in Bloomington, and was appointed by President Grant, successively, United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, Second Assistant Postmaster-General and Territorial Governor of Colorado. On the admission of Colorado as a State, he was elected the first Governor under the State Government, and re-elected in 1890—serving, in all, three years. His home is in Denver. He has been extensively and successfully identified with mining enterprises in Colorado.

ROWELL, Jonathan II., ex-Congressman, was born at Haverhill, N. H., Feb. 10, 1833. He is a graduate of Eureka College and of the Law Department of the Chicago University. During the War of the Rebellion he served three years as company officer in the Seventeenth Illinois Infantry. In 1868 he was elected State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1880, was a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. In 1882 he was elected to Congress from the Fourteenth Illinois District and three times re-elected, serving until March, 1891. His home is at Bloomington.

ROWETT, Richard, soldier, was born in Cornwall, England, in 1830, came to the United States in 1851, finally settling on a farm near Carlinville, Ill., and becoming a breeder of thorough-bred horses. In 1861 he entered the service as a Captain in the Seventh Illinois Volunteers and was successively promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel; was wounded in the battles of Shiloh, Corinth and Allatoona, especially distinguishing himself at the latter and being brevetted Brigadier-General for gallantry. After the war he returned to his stock-farm, but later held the positions of Canal Commissioner, Penitentiary Commissioner, Representative in the Thirtieth General Assembly and Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth (Quincy) District, until its consolidation with the Eighth District by President Cleveland. Died, in Chicago, July 13, 1887.

RUSH MEDICAL COLLEGE, located in Chicago; incorporated by act of March 2, 1837, the charter having been prepared the previous year by Drs. Daniel Brainard and Josiah C. Goodhue. The extreme financial depression of the following year prevented the organization of a faculty until 1843. The institution was named in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, the eminent practitioner, medical author and teacher of Philadelphia in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The first faculty consisted of four professors, and the first term opened on Dec. 4, 1843, with a class of twenty-two students. Three years' study was required for graduation, but only two annual terms of sixteen weeks each need be attended at the college itself. Instruction was given in a few rooms temporarily opened for that purpose. The next year a small building, costing between $3,000 and $4,000, was erected. This was rearranged and enlarged in 1855 at a cost of $15,000. The constant and rapid growth of the college necessitated the erection of a new building in 1867, the cost of which was $70,000. This was destroyed in the fire of 1871, and another, costing $54,000, was erected in 1876 and a free dispensary added. In 1844 the Presbyterian Hospital was located on a portion of the college lot, and the two institutions connected, thus insuring abundant and stable facilities for clinical instruction. Shortly afterwards, Rush College became the medical department of Lake Forest University. The present faculty (1898) consists of 95 professors, adjunct professors, lecturers and instructors of all grades, and over 600 students in attendance. The length of the annual terms is six months, and four years of study are required for graduation, attendance upon at least three college terms being compulsory.

RUSHVILLE, the county-seat of Schuyler County, 50 miles northeast of Quincy and 11 miles northwest of Beardstown; is the southern terminus of the Buda and Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. The town was selected as the county-seat in 1826, the seat of justice being removed from a place called Beardstown, about five miles eastward (not the present Beardstown in Cass County), where it had been located at the time of the organization of Schuyler County, a year previous. At first the new seat of justice was called Rush-ton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but afterwards took its present name. It is a coal-mining, grain and fruit-growing region, and contains several manufactories, including flour-mills, brick and tile works; also has two banks (State and private) and a public library. Four periodicals (one daily) are published here. Population (1880), 1,662; (1890), 2,031; (1900), 2,292.

RUSSELL, John, pioneer teacher and author, was born at Cavendish, Vt., July 31, 1793, and educated in the common schools of his native State and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1818—having obtained means to support himself, during his college course, by teaching and by the publication, before he had reached his 20th year, of a volume entitled "The Authentic History of Vermont State Prison." After graduation he taught for a short time in Georgia; but, early in the following year, joined his father on the way to Missouri. The next five years he spent in teaching in the "Bonhomme Bottom" on the Missouri River. During this period he published, anonymously, in "The St. Charles Missourian," a temperance allegory entitled "The Venomous Worm" (or "The Worm of the Still"), which gained a wide popularity and was early recognized by the compilers of school-readers as a sort of classic. Leaving this locality he taught a year in St. Louis, when he removed to Vandalia (then the capital of Illinois), after which he spent two years teaching in the Seminary at Upper Alton, which afterwards became Shurtleff College. In 1828 he removed to Greene County, locating at a point near the Illinois River to which he gave the name of Bluffdale. Here he was licensed as a Baptist preacher, officiating in this capacity only occasionally, while pursuing his calling as a teacher or writer for the press, to which he was an almost constant contributor during the last twenty-five years of his life. About 1837 or 1838 he was editor of a paper called "The Backwoodsman" at Grafton—then a part of Greene County, but now in Jersey County—to which he afterwards continued to be a contributor some time longer, and, in 1841-42, was editor of "The Advertiser," at Louisville, Ky. He was also, for several years, Principal of the Spring Hill Academy in East Feliciana Parish, La., meanwhile serving for a portion of the time as Superintendent of Public Schools. He was the author of a number of stories and sketches, some of which went through several editions, and, at the time of his death, had in preparation a history of "The Black Hawk War," "Evidences of Christianity" and a "History of Illinois." He was an accomplished linguist, being able to read with fluency Greek, Latin, French, Spanish and Italian, besides having considerable familiarity with several other modern languages. In 1862 he received from the University of Chicago the degree of LL.D. Died, Jan. 2, 1863, and was buried on the old homestead at Bluffdale.

RUSSELL, Martin J., politician and journalist, born in Chicago, Dec. 20, 1845. He was a nephew of Col. James A. Mulligan (see Mulligan, James A.) and served with credit as Adjutant-General on the staff of the latter in the Civil War. In 1870 he became a reporter on "The Chicago Evening Post," and was advanced to the position of city editor. Subsequently he was connected with "The Times," and "The Telegram"; was also a member of the Board of Education of Hyde Park before the annexation of that village to Chicago, and has been one of the South Park Commissioners of the city last named. After the purchase of "The Chicago Times" by Carter H. Harrison he remained for a time on the editorial staff. In 1894 President Cleveland appointed him Collector of the Port of Chicago. At the expiration of his term of office he resumed editorial work as editor-in-chief of "The Chronicle," the organ of the Democratic party in Chicago. Died June 25, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, Friend S., lawyer and soldier, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1820; studied law in Troy and removed to Illinois, settling at Edwardsville, and finally at Alton; was a Republican candidate for Presidential Elector in 1856, and, in 1860, a member of the National Republican Convention at Chicago, which nominated Mr. Lincoln for the Presidency. In September, 1862, he was commissioned Colonel of the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteers, and participated in the capture of Port Gibson and in the operations about Vicksburg—also leading in the attack on Arkansas Post, and subsequently serving in Louisiana, but died as the result of fatigue and exposure in the service, June 20, 1864, one week before his promotion to the rank of Brigadier-General.—Reuben C. (Rutherford), brother of the preceding, was born at Troy, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1823, but grew up in Vermont and New Hampshire; received a degree in law when quite young, but afterwards fitted himself as a lecturer on physiology and hygiene, upon which he lectured extensively in Michigan, Illinois and other States after coming west in 1849. During 1854-55, in co-operation with Prof. J. B. Turner and others, he canvassed and lectured extensively throughout Illinois in support of the movement which resulted in the donation of public lands, by Congress, for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States. The establishment of the University of Illinois, at Champaign, was the outgrowth of this movement. In 1856 he located at Quincy, where he resided some thirty years; in 1861, served for several months as the first Commissary of Subsistence at Cairo; was later associated with the State Quartermaster's Department, finally entering the secret service of the War Department, in which he remained until 1867, retiring with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. In 1886, General Rutherford removed to New York City, where he died, June 24, 1895.—George V. (Rutherford), another brother, was born at Rutland, Vt., 1830; was first admitted to the bar, but afterwards took charge of the construction of telegraph lines in some of the Southern States; at the beginning of the Civil War became Assistant Quartermaster-General of the State of Illinois, at Springfield, under ex-Gov. John Wood, but subsequently entered the Quartermaster's service of the General Government in Washington, retiring after the war with the rank of Brigadier-General. He then returned to Quincy, Ill., where he resided until 1872, when he engaged in manufacturing business at Northampton, Mass., but finally removed to California for the benefit of his failing health. Died, at St. Helena, Cal., August 28, 1872.

RUTLAND, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railroad, 25 miles south of La Salle; has a bank, five churches, school, and a newspaper, with coal mines in the vicinity. Pop. (1890), 509; (1900), 893; (1903), 1,093.

RUTLEDGE, (Rev.) William J., clergyman, Army Chaplain, born in Augusta County, Va., June 24, 1820; was converted at the age of 12 years and, at 21, became a member of the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, serving various churches in the central and western parts of the State—also acting, for a time, as Agent of the Illinois Conference Female College at Jacksonville. From 1861 to 1863 he was Chaplain of the Fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Returning from the war, he served as pastor of churches at Jacksonville, Bloomington, Quincy, Rushville, Springfield, Griggsville and other points; from 1881 to '84 was Chaplain of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet. Mr. Rutledge was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, and served for many years as Chaplain of the order for the Department of Illinois. In connection with the ministry, he has occupied a supernumerary relation since 1885. Died in Jacksonville, April 14, 1900.

RUTZ, Edward, State Treasurer, was born in a village in the Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 5, 1829; came to America in 1848, locating on a farm in St. Clair County, Ill.; went to California in 1857, and, early in 1861, enlisted in the Third United States Artillery at San Francisco, serving with the Army of the Potomac until his discharge in 1864, and taking part in every battle in which his command was engaged. After his return in 1865, he located in St. Clair County, and was elected County Surveyor, served three consecutive terms as County Treasurer, and was elected State Treasurer three times—1872, '76 and '80. About 1892 he removed to California, where he now resides.

RYAN, Edward G., early editor and jurist, born at Newcastle House, County Meath, Ireland, Nov. 13, 1810; was educated for the priesthood, but turned his attention to law, and, in 1830, came to New York and engaged in teaching while prosecuting his legal studies; in 1836 removed to Chicago, where he was admitted to the bar and was, for a time, associated in practice with Hugh T. Dickey. In April, 1840, Mr. Ryan assumed the editorship of a weekly paper in Chicago called "The Illinois Tribune," which he conducted for over a year, and which is remembered chiefly on account of its bitter assaults on Judge John Pearson of Danville, who had aroused the hostility of some members of the Chicago bar by his rulings upon the bench. About 1842 Ryan removed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he was, for a time, a partner of Matthew H. Carpenter (afterwards United States Senator), and was connected with a number of celebrated trials before the courts of that State, including the Barstow-Bashford case, which ended with Bashford becoming the first Republican Governor of Wisconsin. In 1874 he was appointed Chief Justice of Wisconsin, serving until his death, which occurred at Madison, Oct. 19, 1880. He was a strong partisan, and, during the Civil War, was an intense opponent of the war policy of the Government. In spite of infirmities of temper, he appears to have been a man of much learning and recognized legal ability.

RYAN, James, Roman Catholic Bishop, born in Ireland in 1848 and emigrated to America in childhood; was educated for the priesthood in Kentucky, and, after ordination, was made a professor in St. Joseph's Seminary, at Bardstown, Ky. In 1878 he removed to Illinois, attaching himself to the diocese of Peoria, and having charge of parishes at Wataga and Danville. In 1881 he became rector of the Ottawa parish, within the episcopal jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Chicago. In 1888 he was made Bishop of the see of Alton, the prior incumbent (Bishop Baltes) having died in 1886.

SACS AND FOXES, two confederated Indian tribes, who were among the most warlike and powerful of the aborigines of the Illinois Country. The Foxes called themselves the Musk-wah-ha-kee, a name compounded of two words, signifying "those of red earth." The French called them On-ta-ga-mies, that being their spelling of the name given them by other tribes, the meaning of which was "Foxes," and which was bestowed upon them because their totem (or armorial device, as it may be called) was a fox. They seem to have been driven westward from the northern shore of Lake Ontario, by way of Niagara and Mackinac, to the region around Green Bay, Wis.—Concerning their allied brethren, the Sacs, less is known. The name is variously spelled in the Indian dialects—Ou-sa-kies, Sauks, etc.—and the term Sacs is unquestionably an abbreviated corruption. Black Hawk belonged to this tribe. The Foxes and Sacs formed a confederation according to aboriginal tradition, on what is now known as the Sac River, near Green Bay, but the date of the alliance cannot be determined. The origin of the Sacs is equally uncertain. Black Hawk claimed that his tribe originally dwelt around Quebec, but, as to the authenticity of this claim, historical authorities differ widely. Subsequent to 1670 the history of the allied tribes is tolerably well defined. Their characteristics, location and habits are described at some length by Father Allouez, who visited them in 1666-67. He says that they were numerous and warlike, but depicts them as "penurious, avaricious, thievish and quarrelsome." That they were cordially detested by their neighbors is certain, and Judge James Hall calls them "the Ishmaelites of the lakes." They were unfriendly to the French, who attached to themselves other tribes, and, through the aid of the latter, had well-nigh exterminated them, when the Sacs and Foxes sued for peace, which was granted on terms most humiliating to the vanquished. By 1718, however, they were virtually in possession of the region around Rock River in Illinois, and, four years later, through the aid of the Mascoutins and Kickapoos, they had expelled the Illinois, driving the last of that ill-fated tribe across the Illinois River. They abstained from taking part in the border wars that marked the close of the Revolutionary War, and therefore did not participate in the treaty of Greenville in 1795. At that date, according to Judge Hall, they claimed the country as far west as Council Bluffs, Iowa, and as far north as Prairie du Chien. They offered to co-operate with the United States Government in the War of 1812, but this offer was declined, and a portion of the tribe, under the leadership of Black Hawk, enlisted on the side of the British. The Black Hawk War proved their political ruin. By the treaty of Rock Island they ceded vast tracts of land, including a large part of the eastern half of Iowa and a large body of land east of the Mississippi. (See Black Hawk War; Indian Treaties.) In 1842 the Government divided the nation into two bands, removing both to reservations in the farther West. One was located on the Osage River and the other on the south side of the Nee-ma-ha River, near the northwest corner of Kansas. From these reservations, there is little doubt, many of them have silently emigrated toward the Rocky Mountains, where the hoe might be laid aside for the rifle, the net and the spear of the hunter. A few years ago a part of these confederated tribes were located in the eastern part of Oklahoma.

SAILOR SPRINGS, a village and health resort in Clay County, 5 miles north of Clay City, has an academy and a local paper. Population (1900), 419; (1903, est.), 550.

SALEM, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Marion County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Illinois Southern Railroads, 71 miles east of St. Louis, and 16 miles northeast of Centralia; in agricultural and coal district. A leading industry is the culture, evaporation and shipment of fruit. The city has flour-mills, two banks and three weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,493; (1900), 1,642.

SALINE COUNTY, a southeastern county, organized in 1847, having an area of 380 square miles. It derives its name from the salt springs which are found in every part of the county. The northern portion is rolling and yields an abundance of coal of a quality suitable for smithing. The bottoms are swampy, but heavily timbered, and saw-mills abound. Oak, hickory, sweet gum, mulberry, locust and sassafras are the prevailing varieties. Fruit and tobacco are extensively cultivated. The climate is mild and humid, and the vegetation varied. The soil of the low lands is rich, and, when drained, makes excellent farming lands. In some localities a good gray sandstone, soft enough to be worked, is quarried, and millstone grit is frequently found. In the southern half of the county are the Eagle Mountains, a line of hills having an altitude of some 450 to 500 feet above the level of the Mississippi at Cairo, and believed by geologists to have been a part of the upheaval that gave birth to the Ozark Mountains in Missouri and Arkansas. The highest land in the county is 864 feet above sea-level. Tradition says that these hills are rich in silver ore, but it has not been found in paying quantities. Springs strongly impregnated with sulphur are found on the slopes. The county-seat was originally located at Raleigh, which was platted in 1848, but it was subsequently removed to Harrisburg, which was laid out in 1859. Population of the county (1880), 15,940; (1890), 19,342; (1900), 21,685.

SALINE RIVER, a stream formed by the confluence of two branches, both of which flow through portions of Saline County, uniting in Gallatin County. The North Fork rises in Hamilton County and runs nearly south, while the South Fork drains part of Williamson County, and runs east through Saline. The river (which is little more than a creek), thus formed, runs southeast, entering the Ohio ten miles below Shawneetown.

SALT MANUFACTURE. There is evidence going to show that the saline springs, in Gallatin County, were utilized by the aboriginal inhabitants in the making of salt, long before the advent of white settlers. There have been discovered, at various points, what appear to be the remains of evaporating kettles, composed of hardened clay and pounded shells, varying in diameter from three to four feet. In 1812, with a view to encouraging the manufacture of salt from these springs, Congress granted to Illinois the use of 36 square miles, the fee still remaining in the United States. These lands were leased by the State to private parties, but the income derived from them was comparatively small and frequently difficult of collection. The workmen were mostly slaves from Kentucky and Tennessee, who are especially referred to in Article VI., Section 2, of the Constitution of 1818. The salt made brought $5 per 100 pounds, and was shipped in keel-boats to various points on the Ohio, Mississippi, Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, while many purchasers came hundreds of miles on horseback and carried it away on pack animals. In 1827, the State treasury being empty and the General Assembly having decided to erect a penitentiary at Alton, Congress was petitioned to donate these lands to the State in fee, and permission was granted "to sell 30,000 acres of the Ohio Salines in Gallatin County, and apply the proceeds to such purposes as the Legislature might by law direct." The sale was made, one-half of the proceeds set apart for the building of the penitentiary, and one-half to the improvement of roads and rivers in the eastern part of the State. The manufacture of salt was carried on, however—for a time by lessees and subsequently by owners—until 1873, about which time it was abandoned, chiefly because it had ceased to be profitable on account of competition with other districts possessing superior facilities. Some salt was manufactured in Vermilion County about 1824. The manufacture has been successfully carried on in recent years, from the product of artesian wells, at St. John, in Perry County.

SANDOVAL, a village of Marion County, at the crossing of the western branch of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, 6 miles north of Centralia. The town has coal mines and some manufactures, with banks and one newspaper. Population (1880), 564; (1890), 834; (1900), 1,258.

SANDSTONE. The quantity of sandstone quarried in Illinois is comparatively insignificant, its value being less than one-fifth of one per cent of the value of the output of the entire country. In 1890 the State ranked twenty-fifth in the list of States producing this mineral, the total value of the stone quarried being but $17,896, representing 141,605 cubic feet, taken from ten quarries, which employed forty-six hands, and had an aggregate capital invested of $49,400.

SANDWICH, a city in De Kalb County, incorporated in 1873, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 58 miles southwest of Chicago. The principal industries are the manufacture of agricultural implements, hay-presses, corn-shell-ers, pumps and wind-mills. Sandwich has two private banks, two weekly and one semi-weekly papers. Pop. (1890), 2,516; (1900), 2,520; (1903), 2,865.

SANGAMON COUNTY, a central county, organized under act of June 30, 1821, from parts of Bond and Madison Counties, and embracing the present counties of Sangamon, Cass, Menard, Mason, Tazewell, Logan, and parts of Morgan, McLean, Woodford, Marshall and Putnam. It was named for the river flowing through it. Though reduced in area somewhat, four years later, it extended to the Illinois River, but was reduced to its present limits by the setting apart of Menard, Logan and Dane (now Christian) Counties, in 1839. Henry Funderburk is believed to have been the first white settler, arriving there in 1817 and locating in what is now Cotton Hill Township, being followed, the next year, by William Drennan, Joseph Dodds, James McCoy, Robert Pulliam and others. John Kelly located on the present site of the city of Springfield in 1818, and was there at the time of the selection of that place as the temporary seat of justice in 1821. Other settlements were made at Auburn, Island Grove, and elsewhere, and population began to flow in rapidly. Remnants of the Pottawatomie and Kickapoo Indians were still there, but soon moved north or west. County organization was effected in 1821, the first Board of County Commissioners being composed of William Drennan, Zachariah Peter and Samuel Lee. John Reynolds (afterwards Governor) held the first term of Circuit Court, with John Taylor, Sheriff; Henry Starr, Prosecuting Attorney, and Charles R. Matheny, Circuit Clerk. A United States Land Office was established at Springfield in 1823, with Pascal P. Enos as Receiver, the first sale of lands taking place the same year. The soil of Sangamon County is exuberantly fertile, with rich underlying deposits of bituminous coal, which is mined in large quantities. The chief towns are Springfield, Auburn, Riverton, Illiopolis and Pleasant Plains. The area of the county is 860 square miles. Population (1880), 32,894; (1890), 61,195; (1900), 71,593.

SANGAMON RIVER, formed by the union of the North and South Forks, of which the former is the longer, or main branch. The North Fork rises in the northern part of Champaign County, whence it runs southwest to the city of Decatur, thence westward through Sangamon County, forming the north boundary of Christian County, and emptying into the Illinois River about 9 miles above Beardstown. The Sangamon is nearly 240 miles long, including the North Fork. The South Fork flows through Christian County, and joins the North Fork about 6 miles east of Springfield. In the early history of the State the Sangamon was regarded as a navigable stream, and its improvement was one of the measures advocated by Abraham Lincoln in 1832, when he was for the first time a candidate (though unsuccessfully) for the Legislature. In the spring of 1833 a small steamer from Cincinnati, called the "Talisman," ascended the river to a point near Springfield. The event was celebrated with great rejoicing by the people, but the vessel encountered so much difficulty in getting out of the river that the experiment was never repeated.

SANGAMON & MORGAN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

SANGER, Lorenzo P., railway and canal contractor, was born at Littleton, N. H., March 2, 1809, brought in childhood to Livingston County, N. Y., where his father became a contractor on the Erie Canal, the son also being employed upon the same work. The latter subsequently became a contractor on the Pennsylvania Canal on his own account, being known as "the boy contractor." Then, after a brief experience in mercantile business, and a year spent in the construction of a canal in Indiana, in 1836 he came to Illinois, and soon after became an extensive contractor on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, having charge of rock excavation at Lockport. He was also connected with the Rock River improvement scheme, and interested in a line of stages between Chicago and Galena, which, having been consolidated with the line managed by the firm of Fink & Walker, finally became the Northwestern Stage Company, extending its operations throughout Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Missouri—Mr. Sanger having charge of the Western Division, for a time, with headquarters at St. Louis. In 1851 he became the head of the firm of Sanger, Camp & Co., contractors for the construction of the Western (or Illinois) Division of the Ohio & Mississippi (now the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railway, upon which he was employed for several years. Other works with which he was connected were the North Missouri Railroad and the construction of the State Penitentiary at Joliet, as member of the firm of Sanger & Casey, for a time, also lessees of convict labor. In 1862 Mr. Sanger received from Governor Yates, by request of President Lincoln, a commission as Colonel, and was assigned to staff duty in Kentucky and Tennessee. After the war he became largely interested in stone quarries adjacent to Joliet; also had an extensive contract, from the City of Chicago, for deepening the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Died, at Oakland, Cal., March 23, 1875, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health.—James Young (Sanger), brother of the preceding, was born at Sutton, Vt., March 14, 1814; in boyhood spent some time in a large mercantile establishment at Pittsburg, Pa., later being associated with his father and elder brother in contracts on the Erie Canal and similar works in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. At the age of 23 he came with his father's family to St. Joseph, Mich., where they established a large supply store, and engaged in bridge-building and similar enterprises. At a later period, in connection with his father and his brother, L. P. Sanger, he was prominently connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal—the aqueduct at Ottawa and the locks at Peru being constructed by them. About 1850 the Construction Company, of which he and his brother, L. P. Sanger, were leading members, undertook the construction of the Ohio & Mississippi (now Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern) Railroad, from St. Louis to Vincennes, Ind., and were prominently identified with other railroad enterprises in Southern Illinois, Missouri and California. Died, July 3, 1867, when consummating arrangements for the performance of a large contract on the Union Pacific Railroad.

SANITARY COMMISSION. (See Illinois Sanitary Commission.)

SANITARY DISTRICT OF CHICAGO. (See Chicago Drainage Canal.)

SAUGANASH, the Indian name of a half-breed known as Capt. Billy Caldwell, the son of a British officer and a Pottawatomie woman, born in Canada about 1780; received an education from the Jesuits at Detroit, and was able to speak and write English and French, besides several Indian dialects; was a friend of Tecumseh's and, during the latter part of his life, a devoted friend of the whites. He took up his residence in Chicago about 1820, and, in 1826, was a Justice of the Peace, while nominally a subject of Great Britain and a Chief of the Ottawa and Pottawatomies. In 1828 the Government, in consideration of his services, built for him the first frame house ever erected in Chicago, which he occupied until his departure with his tribe for Council Bluffs in 1836. By a treaty, made Jan. 2, 1830, reservations were granted by the Government to Sauganash, Shabona and other friendly Indians (see Shabona), and 1,240 acres on the North Branch of Chicago River set apart for Caldwell, which he sold before leaving the country. Died, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 28, 1841.

Savage, George S. F., D.D., clergyman, was born at Cromwell, Conn., Jan. 29, 1817; graduated at Yale College in 1844; studied theology at Andover and New Haven, graduating in 1847; was ordained a home missionary the same year and spent twelve years as pastor at St. Charles, Ill., for four years being corresponding editor of "The Prairie Herald" and "The Congregational Herald." For ten years he was in the service of the American Tract Society, and, during the Civil War, was engaged in sanitary and religious work in the army. In 1870 he was appointed Western Secretary of the Congregational Publishing Society, remaining two years, after which he became Financial Secretary of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He has also been a Director of the institution since 1854, a Trustee of Beloit College since 1850, and, for several years, editor and publisher of "The Congregational Review."

SAVANNA, a city in Carroll County, situated on the Mississippi River and the Chicago, Burlington & Northern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; is 10 miles west of Mount Carroll and about 20 miles north of Clinton, Iowa. It is an important shipping-point and contains several manufactories of machinery, lumber, flour, etc. It has two State banks, a public library, churches, two graded schools, township high school, and two daily and weekly newspapers. Pop. (1890), 3,097; (1900), 3,325.

SAYBROOK, a village of McLean County, on the Lake Erie & Western Railroad, 26 miles east of Bloomington; district agricultural; county fairs held here; the town has two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 851; (1900), 879.

SCATES, Walter Bennett, jurist and soldier, was born at South Boston, Halifax County, Va., Jan. 18, 1808; was taken in infancy to Hopkinsville, Ky., where he resided until 1831, having meanwhile learned the printer's trade at Nashville and studied law at Louisville. In 1831 he removed to Frankfort, Franklin County, Ill., where, for a time, he was County Surveyor. In 1836, having been appointed Attorney-General, he removed to Vandalia, then the seat of government, but resigned at the close of the same year to accept the judgeship of the Third Judicial Circuit, and took up his residence at Shawneetown. In 1841 he was one of five new Judges added to the Supreme Court bench, the others being Sidney Breeze, Stephen A. Douglas, Thomas Ford and Samuel H. Treat. In that year he removed to Mount Vernon, Jefferson County, and, in January, 1847, resigned his seat upon the bench to resume practice. The same year he was a member of the Constitutional Convention and Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. In June, 1854, he again took a seat upon the Supreme Court bench, being chosen to succeed Lyman Trumbull, but resigned in May, 1857, and resumed practice in Chicago. In 1862 he volunteered in defense of the Union, received a Major's commission and was assigned to duty on the staff of General McClelland; was made, Assistant Adjutant-General and mustered out in January, 1866. In July, 1866, President Johnson appointed him Collector of Customs at Chicago, which position he filled until July 1, 1869, when he was removed by President Grant, during the same period, being ex-officio custodian of United States funds, the office of Assistant Treasurer not having been then created. Died, at Evanston, Oct. 26, 1886.

SCAMMON, Jonathan Young, lawyer and banker, was born at Whitefield, Maine, July 27, 1812; after graduating at Waterville (now Colby) University in 1831, he studied law and was admitted to the bar at Hallowell, in 1835 removing to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. After a year spent as deputy in the office of the Circuit Clerk of Cook County, during which he prepared a revision of the Illinois statutes, he was appointed attorney for the State Bank of Illinois in 1837, and, in 1839, became reporter of the Supreme Court, which office he held until 1845. In the meantime, he was associated with several prominent lawyers, his first legal firm being that of Scammon, McCagg & Fuller, which was continued up to the fire of 1871. A large operator in real estate and identified with many enterprises of a public or benevolent character, his most important financial venture was in connection with the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, which conducted an extensive banking business for many years, and of which he was the President and leading spirit. As a citizen he was progressive, public-spirited and liberal. He was one of the main promoters and organizers of the old Galena & Chicago Union Railway, the first railroad to run west from Lake Michigan; was also prominently identified with the founding of the Chicago public school system, a Trustee of the (old) Chicago University, and one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, of the Chicago Academy of Sciences and the Chicago Astronomical Society—being the first President of the latter body. He erected, at a cost of $30,000, the Fort Dearborn Observatory, in which he caused to be placed the most powerful telescope which had at that time been brought to the West. He also maintained the observatory at his own expense. He was the pioneer of Swedenborgianism in Chicago, and, in politics, a staunch Whig, and, later, an ardent Republican. In 1844 he was one of the founders of "The Chicago American," a paper designed to advance the candidacy of Henry Clay for the Presidency; and, in 1872, when "The Chicago Tribune" espoused the Liberal Republican cause, he started "The Inter-Ocean" as a Republican organ, being, for some time, its sole proprietor and editor-in-chief. He was one of the first to encourage the adoption of the homeopathic system of medicine in Chicago, and was prominently connected with the founding of the Hahnemann Medical College and the Hahnemann Hospital, being a Trustee in both for many years. As a member of the General Assembly he secured the passage of many important measures, among them being legislation looking toward the bettering of the currency and the banking system. He accumulated a large fortune, but lost most of it by the fire of 1871 and the panic of 1873. Died, in Chicago, March 17, 1890.

SCARRITT, Nathan, pioneer, was born in Connecticut, came to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1820, and, in 1821, located in Scarritt's Prairie, Madison County. His sons afterward became influential in business and Methodist church circles. Died, Dec. 12, 1847.

SCENERY, NATURAL. Notwithstanding the uniformity of surface which characterizes a country containing no mountain ranges, but which is made up largely of natural prairies, there are a number of localities in Illinois where scenery of a picturesque, and even bold and rugged character, may be found. One of the most striking of these features is produced by a spur or low range of hills from the Ozark Mountains of Missouri, projected across the southern part of the State from the vicinity of Grand

Tower in Jackson County, through the northern part of Union, and through portions of Williamson, Johnson, Saline, Pope and Hardin Counties. Grand Tower, the initial point in the western part of the State, is an isolated cliff of limestone, standing out in the channel of the Mississippi, and forming an island nearly 100 feet above low-water level. It has been a conspicuous landmark for navigators ever since the discovery of the Mississippi. "Fountain Bluff," a few miles above Grand Tower, is another conspicuous point immediately on the river bank, formed by some isolated hills about three miles long by a mile and a half wide, which have withstood the forces that excavated the valley now occupied by the Mississippi. About half a mile from the lower end of this hill, with a low valley between them, is a smaller eminence known as the "Devil's Bake Oven." The main chain of bluffs, known as the "Back Bone," is about five miles from the river, and rises to a height of nearly 700 feet above low-tide in the Gulf of Mexico, or more than 400 feet above the level of the river at Cairo. "Bald Knob" is a very prominent inland bluff promontory near Alta Pass on the line of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, in the northern part of Union County, with an elevation above tide-water of 985 feet. The highest point in this range of hills is reached in the northeastern part of Pope County—the elevation at that point (as ascertained by Prof. Rolfe of the State University at Champaign) being 1,046 feet.—There is some striking scenery in the neighborhood of Grafton between Alton and the mouth of the Illinois, as well as some distance up the latter stream—though the landscape along the middle section of the Illinois is generally monotonous or only gently undulating, except at Peoria and a few other points, where bluffs rise to a considerable height. On the Upper Illinois, beginning at Peru, the scenery again becomes picturesque, including the celebrated "Starved Rock," the site of La Salle's Fort St. Louis (which see). This rock rises to a perpendicular height of about 125 feet from the surface of the river at the ordinary stage. On the opposite side of the river, about four miles below Ottawa, is "Buffalo Rock," an isolated ridge of rock about two miles long by forty to sixty rods wide, evidently once an island at a period when the Illinois River occupied the whole valley. Additional interest is given to both these localities by their association with early history. Deer Park, on the Vermilion River—some two miles from where it empties into the Illinois, just below "Starved Rock"—is a peculiar grotto-like formation, caused by a ravine which enters the Vermilion at this point. Ascending this ravine from its mouth, for a quarter of a mile, between almost perpendicular walls, the road terminates abruptly at a dome-like overhanging rock which widens at this point to about 150 feet in diameter at the base, with a height of about 75 feet. A clear spring of water gushes from the base of the cliff, and, at certain seasons of the year, a beautiful water-fall pours from the cliffs into a little lake at the bottom of the chasm. There is much other striking scenery higher up, on both the Illinois and Fox Rivers.—A point which arrested the attention of the earliest explorers in this region was Mount Joliet, near the city of that name. It is first mentioned by St. Cosme in 1698, and has been variously known as Monjolly, Mont Jolie, Mount Juliet, and Mount Joliet. It had an elevation, in early times, of about 30 feet with a level top 1,300 by 225 feet. Prof. O. H. Marshall, in "The American Antiquarian," expresses the opinion that, originally, it was an island in the river, which, at a remote period, swept down the valley of the Des Plaines. Mount Joliet was a favorite rallying point of Illinois Indians, who were accustomed to hold their councils at its base.—The scenery along Rock River is not striking from its boldness, but it attracted the attention of early explorers by the picturesque beauty of its groves, undulating plains and sheets of water. The highest and most abrupt elevations are met with in Jo Daviess County, near the Wisconsin State line. Pilot Knob, a natural mound about three miles south of Galena and two miles from the Mississippi, has been a landmark well known to tourists and river men ever since the Upper Mississippi began to be navigated. Towering above the surrounding bluffs, it reaches an altitude of some 430 feet above the ordinary level of Fever River. A chain of some half dozen of these mounds extends some four or five miles in a northeasterly direction from Pilot Knob, Waddell's and Jackson's Mounds being conspicuous among them. There are also some castellated rocks around the city of Galena which are very striking. Charles Mound, belonging to the system already referred to, is believed to be the highest elevation in the State. It stands near the Wisconsin State line, and, according to Prof. Rolfe, has an altitude of 314 feet above the Illinois Central Railroad at Scales' Mound Station, and, 1,257 feet above the Gulf of Mexico.

SCHNEIDER, George, journalist and banker, was born at Pirmasens, Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1823. Being sentenced to death for his participation in the attempted rebellion of 1848, he escaped to America in 1849, going from New York to Cleveland, and afterwards to St. Louis. There, in connection with his brother, he established a German daily—"The New Era"—which was intensely anti-slavery and exerted a decided political influence, especially among persons of German birth. In 1851 he removed to Chicago, where he became editor of "The Staats Zeitung," in which he vigorously opposed the Kansas-Nebraska bill on its introduction by Senator Douglas. His attitude and articles gave such offense to the partisan friends of this measure, that "The Zeitung" was threatened with destruction by a mob in 1855. He early took advanced ground in opposition to slavery, and was a member of the convention of Anti-Nebraska editors, held at Decatur in 1856, and of the first Republican State Convention, held at Bloomington the same year, as well as of the National Republican Conventions of 1856 and 1860, participating in the nomination of both John C. Fremont and Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In 1861 he was a member of the Chicago Union Defense Committee, and was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Consul-General at Elsinore, Denmark. Returning to America in 1862, he disposed of his interest in "The Staats Zeitung" and was appointed the first Collector of Internal Revenue for the Chicago District. On retiring from this office he engaged in banking, subsequently becoming President of the National Bank of Illinois, with which he was associated for a quarter of a century. In 1877 President Hayes tendered him the ministry to Switzerland, which he declined. In 1880 he was chosen Presidential Elector for the State-at-large, also serving for a number of years as a member of the Republican State Central Committee.

SCHOFIELD, John McAllister, Major-General, was born in Chautauqua County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1831; brought to Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., in 1843, and, two years later, removed to Freeport; graduated from the United States Military Academy, in 1853, as classmate of Generals McPherson and Sheridan; was assigned to the artillery service and served two years in Florida, after which he spent five years (1855-60) as an instructor at West Point. At the beginning of the Civil War he was on leave of absence, acting as Professor of Physics in Washington University at St. Louis, but, waiving his leave, he at once returned to duty and was appointed mustering officer; then, by permission of the War Department, entered the First Missouri Volunteers as Major, serving as Chief of Staff to General Lyon in the early battles in Missouri, including Wilson's Creek. His subsequent career included the organization of the Missouri State Militia (1862), command of the Army of the Frontier in Southwest Missouri, command of the Department of the Missouri and Ohio, participation in the Atlanta campaign and co-operation with Sherman in the capture of the rebel Gen. Joseph E. Johnston in North Carolina—his army having been transferred for this purpose, from Tennessee by way of Washington. After the close of the war he went on a special mission to Mexico to investigate the French occupation of that country; was commander of the Department of the Potomac, and served as Secretary of War, by appointment of President Johnson, from June, 1868, to March, 1869. On retiring from the Cabinet he was commissioned a full Major-General and held various Division and Department commands until 1886, when, on the death of General Sherman, he succeeded to the command of the Army, with headquarters at Washington. He was retired under the age limit, Sept. 29, 1895. His present home is in Washington.

SCHOLFIELD, John, jurist, was born in Clark County, Ill., in 1834; acquired the rudiments of an education in the common schools during boyhood, meanwhile gaining some knowledge of the higher branches through toilsome application to text-books without a preceptor. At the age of 20 he entered the law school at Louisville, Ky., graduating two years later, and beginning practice at Marshall, Ill. He defrayed his expenses at the law school from the proceeds of the sale of a small piece of land to which he had fallen heir. In 1856 he was elected State's Attorney, and, in 1860, was chosen to represent his county in the Legislature. After serving one term he returned to his professional career and succeeded in building up a profitable practice. In 1869-70 he represented Clark and Cumberland Counties in the Constitutional Convention, and, in 1870, became Solicitor for the Vandalia Railroad. In 1873 he was elected to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State for the Middle Grand Division, caused by the resignation of Judge Anthony Thornton, and re-elected without opposition in 1879 and 1888. Died, in office, Feb. 13, 1893. It has been claimed that President Cleveland would have tendered him the Chief Justiceship of the United States Supreme Court, had he not insistently declined to accept the honor.

SCHOOL-HOUSES, EARLY. The primitive school-houses of Illinois were built of logs, and were extremely rude, as regards both structure and furnishing. Indeed, the earliest pioneers rarely erected a special building to be used as a school-house. An old smoke-house, an abandoned dwelling, an old block-house, or the loft or one end of a settler's cabin not unfrequently answered the purpose, and the church and the court-house were often made to accommodate the school. When a school-house, as such, was to be built, the men of the district gathered at the site selected, bringing their axes and a few other tools, with their ox-teams, and devoted four or five days to constructing a house into which, perhaps, not a nail was driven. Trees were cut from the public lands, and, without hewing, fashioned into a cabin. Sixteen feet square was usually considered the proper dimensions. In the walls were cut two holes, one for a door to admit light and air, and the other for the open fireplace, from which rose a chimney, usually built of sticks and mud, on the outside. Danger of fire was averted by thickly lining the inside of the chimney with clay mortar. Sometimes, but only with great labor, stone was substituted for mortar made from the clay soil. The chimneys were always wide, seldom less than six feet, and sometimes extending across one entire end of the building. The fuel used was wood cut directly from the forest, frequently in its green state, dragged to the spot in the form of logs or entire trees to be cut by the older pupils in lengths suited to the width of the chimney. Occasionally there was no chimney, the fire, in some of the most primitive structures, being built on the earth and the smoke escaping through a hole in the roof. In such houses a long board was set up on the windward side, and shifted from side to side as the wind varied. Stones or logs answered for andirons, clapboards served as shovels, and no one complained of the lack of tongs. Roofs were made of roughly split clapboards, held in place by "weight poles" laid on the boards, and by supports starting from "eaves poles." The space between the logs, which constituted the walls of the building, was filled in with blocks of wood or "chinking," and the crevices, both exterior and interior, daubed over with clay mortar, in which straw was sometimes mixed to increase its adhesiveness. On one side of the structure one or two logs were sometimes cut out to allow the admission of light; and, as glass could not always be procured, rain and snow were excluded and light admitted by the use of greased paper. Over this space a board, attached to the outer wall by leather hinges, was sometimes suspended to keep out the storms. The placing of a glass window in a country school-house at Edwardsville, in 1824, was considered an important event. Ordinarily the floor was of the natural earth, although this was sometimes covered with a layer of clay, firmly packed down. Only the more pretentious school-houses had "puncheon floors"; i. e., floors made of split logs roughly hewn. Few had "ceilings" (so-called), the latter being usually made of clapboards, sometimes of bark, on which was spread earth, to keep out the cold. The seats were also of puncheons (without backs) supported on four legs made of pieces of poles inserted through augur holes. No one had a desk, except the advanced pupils who were learning to write. For their convenience a broader and smoother puncheon was fastened into the wall by wooden pins, in such a way that it would slope downward toward the pupil, the front being supported by a brace extending from the wall. When a pupil was writing he faced the wall. When he had finished this task, he "reversed himself" and faced the teacher and his schoolmates. These adjuncts completed the furnishings, with the exception of a split-bottomed chair for the teacher (who seldom had a desk) and a pail, or "piggin," of water, with a gourd for a drinking cup. Rough and uncouth as these structures were, they were evidences of public spirit and of appreciation of the advantages of education. They were built and maintained by mutual aid and sacrifice, and, in them, some of the great men of the State and Nation obtained that primary training which formed the foundation of their subsequent careers. (See Education.)

SCHUYLER COUNTY, located in the western portion of the State, has an area of 430 square miles, and was named for Gen. Philip Schuyler. The first American settlers arrived in 1823, and, among the earliest pioneers, were Calvin Holart, William H. Taylor and Orris McCartney. The county was organized from a portion of Pike County, in 1825, the first Commissioners being Thomas Blair, Thomas McKee and Samuel Horney. The Commissioners appointed to locate the county-seat, selected a site in the eastern part of the county about one mile west of the present village of Pleasant View, to which the name of Beardstown was given, and where the earliest court was held, Judge John York Sawyer presiding, with Hart Fellows as Clerk, and Orris McCartney, Sheriff. This location, however, proving unsatisfactory, new Commissioners were appointed, who, in the early part of 1836, selected the present site of the city of Rushville, some five miles west of the point originally chosen. The new seat of justice was first called Rushton, in honor of Dr. Benjamin Rush, but the name was afterwards changed to Rushville. Ephraim Eggleston was the pioneer of Rushville. The surface of the county is rolling, and the region contains excellent farming land, which is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous creeks. Population (1890), 16,013; (1900), 16,129.

SCHWATKA, Frederick, Arctic explorer, was born at Galena, Ill., Sept. 29, 1849; graduated from the United States Military Academy in 1871, and was commissioned Second Lieutenant in the Third Cavalry, serving on the frontier until 1877, meantime studying law and medicine, being admitted to the bar in 1875, and graduating in medicine in 1876. Having his interest excited by reports of traces of Sir John Franklin's expedition, found by the Esquimaux, he obtained leave of absence in 1878, and, with Wm. H. Gilder as second in command, sailed from New York in the "Eothen," June 19, for King William's Land. The party returned, Sept. 23, 1880, having found and buried the skeletons of many of Franklin's party, besides discovering relics which tended to clear up the mystery of their fate. During this period he made a sledge journey of 3,251 miles. Again, in 1883, he headed an exploring expedition up the Yukon River. After a brief return to army duty he tendered his resignation in 1885, and the next year led a special expedition to Alaska, under the auspices of "The New York Times," later making a voyage of discovery among the Aleutian Islands. In 1889 he conducted an expedition to Northern Mexico, where he found many interesting relics of Aztec civilization and of the cliff and cave-dwellers. He received the Roquette Arctic Medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and a medal from the Imperial Geographical Society of Russia; also published several volumes relating to his researches, under the titles, "Along Alaska's Great River"; "The Franklin Search Under Lieutenant Schwatka"; "Nimrod of the North"; and "Children of the Cold." Died, at Portland, Ore., Nov. 2, 1892.

SCOTT, James W., journalist, was born in Walworth County, Wis., June 26, 1849, the son of a printer, editor and publisher. While a boy he accompanied his father to Galena, where the latter established a newspaper, and where he learned the printer's trade. After graduating from the Galena high school, he entered Beloit College, but left at the end of his sophomore year. Going to New York, he became interested in floriculture, at the same time contributing short articles to horticultural periodicals. Later he was a compositor in Washington. His first newspaper venture was the publication of a weekly newspaper in Maryland in 1872. Returning to Illinois, conjointly with his father he started "The Industrial Press" at Galena, but, in 1875, removed to Chicago. There he purchased "The Daily National Hotel Reporter," from which he withdrew a few years later. In May, 1881, in conjunction with others, he organized The Chicago Herald Company, in which he ultimately secured a controlling interest. His journalistic and executive capability soon brought additional responsibilities. He was chosen President of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, of the Chicago Press Club, and of the United Press—the latter being an organization for the collection and dissemination of telegraphic news to journals throughout the United States and Canada. He was also conspicuously connected with the preliminary organization of the World's Columbian Exposition, and Chairman of the Press Committee. In 1893 he started an evening paper at Chicago, which he named "The Post." Early in 1895 he purchased "The Chicago Times," intending to consolidate it with "The Herald," but before the final consummation of his plans, he died suddenly, while on a business visit in New York, April 14, 1895.

SCOTT, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., August 1, 1824; his father being of Scotch-Irish descent and his mother a Virginian. His attendance upon district schools was supplemented by private tuition, and his early education was the best that the comparatively new country afforded. He read law at Belleville, was admitted to the bar in 1848, removed to McLean County, which continued to be his home for nearly fifty years. He served as County School Commissioner from 1849 to 1852, and, in the latter year, was elected County Judge. In 1856 he was an unsuccessful Republican candidate for the State Senate, frequently speaking from the same platform with Abraham Lincoln. In 1862 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of the Eighth Judicial Circuit, to succeed David Davis on the elevation of the latter to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, and was re-elected in 1867. In 1870, a new judicial election being rendered necessary by the adoption of the new Constitution, Judge Scott was chosen Justice of the Supreme Court for a term of nine years; was re-elected in 1879, but declined a renomination in 1888. The latter years of his life were devoted to his private affairs. Died, at Bloomington, Jan. 21, 1898. Shortly before his death Judge Scott published a volume containing a History of the Illinois Supreme Court, including brief sketches of the early occupants of the Supreme Court bench and early lawyers of the State.

SCOTT, Matthew Thompson, agriculturist and real-estate operator, was born at Lexington, Ky., Feb. 24, 1828; graduated at Centre College in 1846, then spent several years looking after his father's landed interests in Ohio, when he came to Illinois and invested largely in lands for himself and others. He laid out the town of Chenoa in 1856; lived in Springfield in 1870-72, when he removed to Bloomington, where he organized the McLean County Coal Company, remaining as its head until his death; was also the founder of "The Bloomington Bulletin," in 1878. Died, at Bloomington, May 21, 1891.

SCOTT, Owen, journalist and ex-Congressman, was born in Jackson Township, Effingham County, Ill., July 6, 1848, reared on a farm, and, after receiving a thorough common-school education, became a teacher, and was, for eight years, Superintendent of Schools for his native county. In January, 1874, he was admitted to the bar, but abandoned practice, ten years later, to engage in newspaper work. His first publication was "The Effingham Democrat," which he left to become proprietor and manager of "The Bloomington Bulletin." He was also publisher of "The Illinois Freeman," a monthly periodical. Before removing to Bloomington he filled the offices of City Attorney and Mayor of Effingham, and also served as Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue. In 1890 he was elected as a Democrat from the Fourteenth Illinois District to the Fifty-second Congress. In 1892 he was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Benjamin F. Funk. During the past few years, Mr. Scott has been editor of "The Bloomington Leader."

SCOTT COUNTY, lies in the western part of the State adjoining the Illinois River, and has an area of 248 square miles. The region was originally owned by the Kickapoo Indians, who ceded it to the Government by the treaty of Edwardsville, July 30, 1819. Six months later (in January, 1820) a party of Kentuckians settled near Lynnvile (now in Morgan County), their names being Thomas Stevens, James Scott, Alfred Miller, Thomas Allen, John Scott and Adam Miller. Allen erected the first house in the county, John Scott the second and Adam Miller the third. About the same time came Stephen M. Umpstead, whose wife was the first white woman in the county. Other pioneers were Jedediah Webster, Stephen Pierce, Joseph Densmore, Jesse Roberts, and Samuel Bogard. The country was rough and the conveniences of civilization few and remote. Settlers took their corn to Edwardsville to be ground, and went to Alton for their mail. Turbulence early showed itself, and, in 1822, a band of "Regulators" was organized from the best citizens, who meted out a rough and ready sort of justice, until 1830, occasionally shooting a desperado at his cabin door. Scott County was cut off from Morgan and organized in 1839. It contains good farming land, much of it being originally timbered, and it is well watered by the Illinois River and numerous small streams. Winchester is the county-seat. Population of the county (1880, 10,741; (1890, 10,304; (1900), 10,455.

SCRIPPS, John L., journalist, was born near Cape Girardeau, Mo., Feb. 18, 1818; was taken to Rushville, Ill., in childhood, and educated at McKendree College; studied law and came to Chicago in 1847, with the intention of practicing, but, a year or so later, bought a third interest in "The Chicago Tribune," which had been established during the previous year. In 1852 he withdrew from "The Tribune," and, in conjunction with William Bross (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor), established "The Daily Democratic Press," which was consolidated with "The Tribune" in July, 1858, under the name of "The Press and Tribune," Mr. Scripps remaining one of the editors of the new concern. In 1861 he was appointed, by Mr. Lincoln, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving until 1865, when, having sold his interest in "The Tribune," he engaged in the banking business as a member of the firm of Scripps, Preston & Kean. His health, however, soon showed signs of failure, and he died, Sept. 21, 1866, at Minneapolis, Minn., whither he had gone in hopes of restoration. Mr. Scripps was a finished and able writer who did much to elevate the standard of Chicago journalism.

SCROGGS, George, journalist, was born at Wilmington, Clinton County, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1842—the son of Dr. John W. Scroggs, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1851, and, in 1858, took charge of "The Central Illinois Gazette." In 1866-67 Dr. Scroggs was active in securing the location of the State University at Champaign, afterwards serving as a member of the first Board of Trustees of that institution. The son, at the age of 15, became an apprentice in his father's printing office, continuing until 1862, when he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being promoted through the positions of Sergeant-Major and Second Lieutenant, and finally serving on the staffs of Gen. Jeff. C. Davis and Gen. James D. Morgan, but declining a commission as Adjutant of the Sixtieth Illinois. He participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge and the march with Sherman to the sea, in the latter being severely wounded at Bentonville, N. C. He remained in the service until July, 1865, when he resigned; then entered the University at Champaign, later studied law, meanwhile writing for "The Champaign Gazette and Union," of which he finally became sole proprietor. In 1877 he was appointed an Aid-de-Camp on the staff of Governor Cullom, and, the following year, was elected to the Thirty-first General Assembly, but, before the close of the session (1879), received the appointment of United States Consul to Hamburg, Germany. He was compelled to surrender this position, a year later, on account of ill-health, and, returning home, died, Oct. 15, 1880.

SECRETARIES OF STATE. The following is a list of the Secretaries of State of Illinois from its admission into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each incumbent: Elias Kent Kane, 1818-22; Samuel D. Lockwood, 1822-23; David Blackwell, 1823-24; Morris Birkbeck, October, 1824 to January, 1825 (failed of confirmation by the Senate); George Forquer, 1825-28; Alexander Pope Field, 1828-40; Stephen A. Douglas, 1840-41 (served three months—resigned to take a seat on the Supreme bench); Lyman Trumbull, 1841-43; Thompson Campbell, 1843-46; Horace S. Cooley, 1846-50; David L. Gregg, 1850-53; Alexander Starne, 1853-57; Ozias M. Hatch, 1857-65; Sharon Tyndale, 1865-69; Edward Rummel, 1869-73; George H. Harlow, 1873-81; Henry D. Dement, 1881-89; Isaac N. Pearson, 1889-93; William H. Hinrichsen, 1893-97; James A. Rose, 1897—. Nathaniel Pope and Joseph Phillips were the only Secretaries of Illinois during the Territorial period, the former serving from 1809 to 1816, and the latter from 1816 to 1818. Under the first Constitution (1818) the office of the Secretary of State was filled by appointment by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but without limitation as to term of office. By the Constitution of 1848, and again by that of 1870, that officer was made elective by the people at the same time as the Governor, for a term of four years.

SECRET TREASONABLE SOCIETIES. Early in the War of the Rebellion there sprang up, at various points in the Northwest, organizations of persons disaffected toward the National Government. They were most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and Missouri. At first they were known by such titles as "Circles of Honor," "Mutual Protective Associations," etc. But they had kindred aims and their members were soon united in one organization, styled "Knights of the Golden Circle." Its secrets having been partially disclosed, this body ceased to exist—or, it would be more correct to say, changed its name—being soon succeeded (1863) by an organization of similar character, called the "American Knights." These societies, as first formed, were rather political than military. The "American Knights" had more forcible aims, but this, in turn, was also exposed, and the order was re-organized under the name of "Sons of Liberty." The last named order started in Indiana, and, owing to its more perfect organization, rapidly spread over the Northwest, acquiring much more strength and influence than its predecessors had done. The ultimate authority of the organization was vested in a Supreme Council, whose officers were a "supreme commander," "secretary of state," and "treasurer." Each State represented formed a division, under a "deputy grand commander." States were divided into military districts, under "major-generals." County lodges were termed "temples." The order was virtually an officered army, and its aims were aggressive. It had its commander-in-chief, its brigades and its regiments. Three degrees were recognized, and the oaths of secrecy taken at each initiation surpassed, in binding force, either the oath of allegiance or an oath taken in a court of justice. The maintenance of slavery, and forcible opposition to a coercive policy by the Government in dealing with secession, were the pivotal doctrines of the order. Its methods and purposes were to discourage enlistments and resist a draft; to aid and protect deserters; to disseminate treasonable literature; to aid the Confederates in destroying Government property. Clement L. Vallandigham, the expatriated traitor, was at its head, and, in 1864, claimed that it had a numerical strength of 400,000, of whom 65,000 were in Illinois. Many overt acts were committed, but the organization, having been exposed and defeated in its objects, disbanded in 1865. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.)

SELBY, Paul, editor, was born in Pickaway County, Ohio, July 20, 1825; removed with his parents, in 1837, to Van Buren County, Iowa, but, at the age of 19, went to Southern Illinois, where he spent four years teaching, chiefly in Madison County. In 1848 he entered the preparatory department of Illinois College at Jacksonville, but left the institution during his junior year to assume the editorship of "The Morgan Journal," at Jacksonville, with which he remained until the fall of 1858, covering the period of the organization of the Republican party, in which "The Journal" took an active part. He was a member of the Anti-Nebraska (afterwards known as Republican) State Convention, which met at Springfield, in October, 1854 (the first ever held in the State), and, on Feb. 22, 1856, attended and presided over a conference of Anti-Nebraska editors of the State at Decatur, called to devise a line of policy for the newly organizing Republican party. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) This body appointed the first Republican State Central Committee and designated the date of the Bloomington Convention of May 29, following, which put in nomination the first Republican State ticket ever named in Illinois, which ticket was elected in the following November. (See Bloomington Convention.) In 1859 he prepared a pamphlet giving a history of the celebrated Canal scrip fraud, which was widely circulated. (See Canal Scrip Fraud.) Going South in the fall of 1859, he was engaged in teaching in the State of Louisiana until the last of June, 1861. Just two weeks before the fall of Fort Sumter he was denounced to his Southern neighbors as an "abolitionist" and falsely charged with having been connected with the "underground railroad," in letters from secession sympathizers in the North, whose personal and political enmity he had incurred while conducting a Republican paper in Illinois, some of whom referred to Jefferson Davis, Senator Slidell, of Louisiana, and other Southern leaders as vouchers for their characters. He at once invited an investigation by the Board of Trustees of the institution, of which he was the Principal, when that body—although composed, for the most part, of Southern men—on the basis of testimonials from prominent citizens of Jacksonville, and other evidence, adopted resolutions declaring the charges prompted by personal hostility, and delivered the letters of his accusers into his hands. Returning North with his family in July, 1861, he spent some nine months in the commissary and transportation branches of the service at Cairo and at Paducah, Ky. In July, 1862, he became associate editor of "The Illinois State Journal" at Springfield, remaining until November, 1865. The next six months were spent as Assistant Deputy Collector in the Custom House at New Orleans, but, returning North in June, 1866, he soon after became identified with the Chicago press, serving, first upon the staff of "The Evening Journal" and, later, on "The Republican." In May, 1868, he assumed the editorship of "The Quincy Whig," ultimately becoming part proprietor of that paper, but, in January, 1874, resumed his old place on "The State Journal," four years later becoming one of its proprietors. In 1880 he was appointed by President Hayes Postmaster of Springfield, was reappointed by Arthur in 1884, but resigned in 1886. Meanwhile he had sold his interest in "The Journal," but the following year organized a new company for its purchase, when he resumed his former position as editor. In 1889 he disposed of his holding in "The Journal," finally removing to Chicago, where he has been employed in literary work. In all he has been engaged in editorial work over thirty-five years, of which eighteen were spent upon "The State Journal." In 1860 Mr. Selby was complimented by his Alma Mater with the honorary degree of A. M. He has been twice married, first to Miss Erra Post, of Springfield, who died in November, 1865, leaving two daughters, and, in 1870, to Mrs. Mary J. Hitchcock, of Quincy, by whom he had two children, both of whom died in infancy.

SEMPLE, James, United States Senator, was born in Green County, Ky., Jan. 5, 1798, of Scotch descent; after learning the tanner's trade, studied law and emigrated to Illinois in 1818, removing to Missouri four years later, where he was admitted to the bar. Returning to Illinois in 1828, he began practice at Edwardsville, but later became a citizen of Alton. During the Black Hawk War he served as Brigadier-General. He was thrice elected to the lower house of the Legislature (1832, '34 and '36), and was Speaker during the last two terms. In 1833 he was elected Attorney-General by the Legislature, but served only until the following year, and, in 1837, was appointed Minister to Granada, South America. In 1843 he was appointed, and afterwards elected, United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Samuel McRoberts, at the expiration of his term (1847) retiring to private life. He laid out the town of Elsau, in Jersey County, just south of which he owned a large estate on the Mississippi bluffs, where he died, Dec. 20, 1866.

SENECA (formerly Crotty), a village of La Salle County, situated on the Illinois River, the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 13 miles east of Ottawa. It has a graded school, several churches, a bank, some manufactures, grain warehouses, coal mines, telephone system and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,190; (1900), 1,036.

SENN, (Dr.) Nicholas, physician and surgeon, was born in the Canton of St. Gaul, Switzerland, Oct. 31, 1844; was brought to America at 8 years of age, his parents settling at Washington, Wis. He received a grammar school education at Fond du Lac, and, in 1864, began the study of medicine, graduating at the Chicago Medical College in 1868. After some eighteen months spent as resident physician in the Cook County Hospital, he began practice at Ashford, Wis., but removed to Milwaukee in 1874, where he became attending physician of the Milwaukee Hospital. In 1877 he visited Europe, graduated the following year from the University of Munich, and, on his return, became Professor of the Principles of Surgery and Surgical Pathology in Rush Medical College in Chicago—also has held the chair of the Practice of Surgery in the same institution. Dr. Senn has achieved great success and won an international reputation in the treatment of difficult cases of abdominal surgery. He is the author of a number of volumes on different branches of surgery which are recognized as standard authorities. A few years ago he purchased the extensive library of the late Dr. William Baum, Professor of Surgery in the University of Gottingen, which he presented to the Newberry Library of Chicago. In 1893, Dr. Senn was appointed Surgeon-General of the Illinois National Guard, and has also been President of the Association of Military Surgeons of the National Guard of the United States, besides being identified with various other medical bodies. Soon after the beginning of the Spanish-American War, he was appointed, by President McKinley, a Surgeon of Volunteers with the rank of Colonel, and rendered most efficient aid in the military branch of the service at Camp Chickamauga and in the Santiago campaign.

SEXTON, (Col.) James A., Commander-in-Chief of Grand Army of the Republic, was born in the city of Chicago, Jan. 5, 1844; in April, 1861, being then only a little over 17, enlisted as a private soldier under the first call for troops issued by President Lincoln; at the close of his term was appointed a Sergeant, with authority to recruit a company which afterwards was attached to the Fifty-first Volunteer Infantry. Later, he was transferred to the Sixty-seventh with the rank of Lieutenant, and, a few months after, to the Seventy-second with a commission as Captain of Company D, which he had recruited. As commander of his regiment, then constituting a part of the Seventeenth Army Corps, he participated in the battles of Columbia, Duck Creek, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville, and in the Nashville campaign. Both at Nashville and Franklin he was wounded, and again, at Spanish Fort, by a piece of shell which broke his leg. His regiment took part in seven battles and eleven skirmishes, and, while it went out 967 strong in officers and men, it returned with only 332, all told, although it had been recruited by 234 men. He was known as "The boy Captain," being only 18 years old when he received his first commission, and 21 when, after participating in the Mobile campaign, he was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he engaged in planting in the South, purchasing a plantation in Lowndes County, Ala., but, in 1867, returned to Chicago, where he became a member of the firm of Cribben, Sexton & Co., stove manufacturers, from which he retired in 1898. In 1884 he served as Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket for the Fourth District, and, in 1889, was appointed, by President Harrison, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, serving over five years. In 1888 he was chosen Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, and, ten years later, to the position of Commander-in-Chief of the order, which he held at the time of his death. He had also been, for a number of years, one of the Trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, and, during most of the time, President of the Board. Towards the close of the year 1898, he was appointed by President McKinley a member of the Commission to investigate the conduct of the Spanish-American War, but, before the Commission had concluded its labors, was taken with "the grip," which developed into pneumonia, from which he died in Washington, Feb. 5, 1899.

SEYMOUR, George Franklin, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, Jan. 5, 1829; graduated from Columbia College in 1850, and from the General Theological Seminary (New York) in 1854. He received both minor and major orders at the hands of Bishop Potter, being made deacon in 1854 and ordained priest in 1855. For several years he was engaged in missionary work. During this period he was prominently identified with the founding of St. Stephen's College. After serving as rector in various parishes, in 1865 he was made Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the New York Seminary, and, ten years later, was chosen Dean of the institution, still retaining his professorship. Racine College conferred upon him the degree of S.T.D., in 1867, and Columbia that of LL.D. in 1878. In 1874 he was elected Bishop of Illinois, but failed of confirmation in the House of Deputies. Upon the erection of the new diocese of Springfield (1877) he accepted and was consecrated Bishop at Trinity Church, N. Y., June 11, 1878. He was a prominent member of the Third Pan-Anglican Council (London, 1885), and has done much to foster the growth and extend the influence of his church in his diocese.

SHABBONA, a village of De Kalb County, on the Iowa Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 25 miles west of Aurora. Population (1890), 502; (1900), 587.

SHABONA (or Shabbona), an Ottawa Chief, was born near the Maumee River, in Ohio, about 1775, and served under Tecumseh from 1807 to the battle of the Thames in 1813. In 1810 he accompanied Tecumseh and Capt. Billy Caldwell (see Sauganash) to the homes of the Pottawatomies and other tribes within the present limits of Illinois and Wisconsin, to secure their co-operation in driving the white settlers out of the country. At the battle of the Thames, he was by the side of Tecumseh when he fell, and both he and Caldwell, losing faith in their British allies, soon after submitted to the United States through General Cass at Detroit. Shabona was opposed to Black Hawk in 1832, and did much to thwart the plans of the latter and aid the whites. Having married a daughter of a Pottawatomie chief, who had a village on the Illinois River east of the present city of Ottawa, he lived there for some time, but finally removed 25 miles north to Shabona's Grove in De Kalb County. Here he remained till 1837, when he removed to Western Missouri. Black Hawk's followers having a reservation near by, hostilities began between them, in which a son and nephew of Shabona were killed. He finally returned to his old home in Illinois, but found it occupied by whites, who drove him from the grove that bore his name. Some friends then bought for him twenty acres of land on Mazon Creek, near Morris, where he died, July 27, 1859. He is described as a noble specimen of his race. A life of him has been published by N. Matson (Chicago, 1878).

SHANNON, a village of Carroll County, on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, 18 miles southwest of Freeport. It is an important trade center, has a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 591; (1900), 678.

SHAW, Aaron, former Congressman, born in Orange County, N. Y., in 1811; was educated at the Montgomery Academy, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Goshen in that State. In 1833 he removed to Lawrence County, Ill. He has held various important public offices. He was a member of the first Internal Improvement Convention of the State; was chosen State's Attorney by the Legislature, in which body he served two terms; served four years as Judge of the Twenty-fifth Judicial Circuit; was elected to the Thirty-fifth Congress in 1856, and to the Forty-eighth in 1882, as a Democrat.

SHAW, James, lawyer, jurist, was born in Ireland, May 3, 1832, brought to this country in infancy and grew up on a farm in Cass County, Ill.; graduated from Illinois College in 1857, and, after admission to the bar, began practice at Mount Carroll. In 1870 he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, being re-elected in 1872, '76 and '78. He was Speaker of the House during the session of 1877, and one of the Republican leaders on the floor during the succeeding session. In 1873 he was chosen a Presidential Elector, and, in 1891, to a seat on the Circuit bench from the Thirteenth Circuit, and, in 1897 was re-elected for the Fifteenth Circuit.

SHAWNEETOWN, a city and the county-seat of Gallatin County, on the Ohio River 120 miles from its mouth and at the terminus of the Shawneetown Divisions of the Baltimore & Ohio South-western and the Louisville & Nashville Railroads; is one of the oldest towns in the State, having been laid out in 1808, and noted for the number of prominent men who resided there at an early day. Coal is extensively mined in that section, and Shawneetown is one of the largest shipping points for lumber, coal and farm products between Cairo and Louisville, navigation being open the year round. Some manufacturing is done here; the city has several mills, a foundry and machine shop, two or three banks, several churches, good schools and two weekly papers. Since the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1898, Shawneetown has reconstructed its levee system on a substantial scale, which is now believed to furnish ample protection against the recurrence of similar disaster. Pop. (1900), 1,698; (1903, est.), 2,200.

SHEAHAN, James W., journalist, was born in Baltimore, Md., spent his early life, after reaching manhood, in Washington City as a Congressional Reporter, and, in 1847, reported the proceedings of the Illinois State Constitutional Convention at Springfield. Through the influence of Senator Douglas he was induced, in 1854, to accept the editorship of "The Young America" newspaper at Chicago, which was soon after changed to "The Chicago Times." Here he remained until the fall of 1860, when, "The Times" having been sold and consolidated with "The Herald," a Buchanan-Breckenridge organ, he established a new paper called "The Morning Post." This he made representative of the views of the "War Democrats" as against "The Times," which was opposed to the war. In May, 1865, he sold the plant of "The Post" and it became "The Chicago Republican" — now "Inter Ocean." A few months later, Mr. Sheahan accepted a position as chief writer on the editorial staff of "The Chicago Tribune," which he retained until his death, June 17, 1883.

SHEFFIELD, a prosperous village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 44 miles east of Rock Island; has valuable coal mines, a bank and one newspaper. Population (1890), 993; (1900), 1,265.

SHELBY COUNTY, lies south of the center of the State, and contains an area of 776 square miles. The tide of immigration to this county was at first from Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina, although later it began to set in from the Northern States. The first cabin in the county was built by Simeon Wakefield on what is now the site of Williamsburg, first called Cold Spring. Joseph Daniel was the earliest settler in what is now Shelbyville, pre-empting ten acres, which he soon afterward sold to Joseph Oliver, the pioneer merchant of the county, and father of the first white child born within its limits. Other pioneers were Shimei Wakefield, Levi Casey and Samuel Hall. In lieu of hats the early settlers wore caps made of squirrel or coon skin, with the tails dangling at the backs, and he was regarded as well dressed who boasted a fringed buckskin shirt and trousers, with moccasins. The county was formed in 1827, and Shelbyville made the county-seat. Both county and town are named in honor of Governor Shelby, of Kentucky. County Judge Joseph Oliver held the first court in the cabin of Barnett Bone, and Judge Theophilus W. Smith presided over the first Circuit Court in 1828. Coal is abundant, and limestone and sandstone are also found. The surface is somewhat rolling and well wooded. The Little Wabash and Kaskaskia Rivers flow through the central and southeastern portions. The county lies in the very heart of the great corn belt of the State, and has excellent transportation facilities, being penetrated by four lines of railway. Population (1880), 30,270; (1890), 31,191; (1900), 32,126.

SHELBYVILLE, the county-seat and an incorporated city of Shelby County, on the Kaskaskia River and two lines of railway, 32 miles southeast of Decatur. Agriculture is carried on extensively, and there is considerable coal mining in the immediate vicinity. The city has two flouring mills, a handle factory, a creamery, one National and one State bank, one daily and four weekly papers and one monthly periodical, an Orphans' Home, ten churches, two graded schools, and a public library. Population (1890), 3,162; (1900), 3,546.

SHELDON, a village of Iroquois County, at the intersection of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railways, 9 miles east of Watseka; has two banks and a newspaper. The region is agricultural. Pop. (1890), 910; (1900), 1,103.

SHELDON, Benjamin R., jurist, was born in Massachusetts in 1813, graduated from Williams College in 1831, studied law at the Yale Law School, and was admitted to practice in 1836. Emigrating to Illinois, he located temporarily at Hennepin, Putnam County, but soon removed to Galena, and finally to Rockford. In 1848 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Circuit, which afterwards being divided, he was assigned to the Fourteenth Circuit, remaining until 1870, when he was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, presiding as Chief Justice in 1877. He was re-elected in 1879, but retired in 1888, being succeeded by the late Justice Bailey. Died, April 13, 1897.

SHEPPARD, Nathan, author and lecturer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1834; graduated at Rochester Theological Seminary in 1859; during the Civil War was special correspondent of "The New York World" and "The Chicago Journal" and "Tribune," and during the Franco-German War, of "The Cincinnati Gazette;" also served as special American correspondent of "The London Times," and was a contributor to "Frazer's Magazine" and "Temple Bar." In 1873 he became a lecturer on Modern English Literature and Rhetoric in Chicago University and, four years later, accepted a similar position in Allegheny College; also spent four years in Europe, lecturing in the principal towns of Great Britain and Ireland. In 1884 he founded the "Athenaeum" at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., of which he was President until his death, early in 1888. "The Dickens Reader," "Character Readings from George Eliot" and "Essays of George Eliot" were among the volumes issued by him between 1881 and 1887. Died in New York City, Jan. 24, 1888.

SHERMAN, Alson Smith, early Chicago Mayor, was born at Barre, Vt., April 21, 1811, remaining there until 1836, when he came to Chicago and began business as a contractor and builder. Several years later he opened the first stone quarries at Lemont, Ill. Mr. Sherman spent many years in the service of Chicago as a public official. From 1840 to 1842 he was Captain of a company of militia; for two years served as Chief of the Fire Department, and was elected Alderman in 1842, serving again in 1846. In 1844, he was chosen Mayor, his administration being marked by the first extensive public improvements made in Chicago. After his term as Mayor he did much to secure a better water supply for the city. He was especially interested in promoting common school education, being for several years a member of the City School Board. He was Vice-President of the first Board of Trustees of Northwestern University. Retired from active pursuits, Mr. Sherman is now (1899) spending a serene old age at Waukegan, Ill.—Oren (Sherman) brother of the preceding and early Chicago merchant, was born at Barre, Vt., March 5, 1816. After spending several years in a mercantile house in Montpelier, Vt., at the age of twenty he came west, first to New Buffalo, Mich., and, in 1836, to Chicago, opening a dry-goods store there the next spring. With various partners Mr. Sherman continued in a general mercantile business until 1853, at the same time being extensively engaged in the provision trade, one-half the entire transactions in pork in the city passing through his hands. Next he engaged in developing stone quarries at Lemont, Ill.; also became extensively interested in the marble business, continuing in this until a few years after the panic of 1873, when he retired in consequence of a shock of paralysis. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 15, 1898.

SHERMAN, Elijah B., lawyer, was born at Fairfield, Vt., June 18, 1832—his family being distantly related to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and the late Gen. W. T. Sherman; gained his education in the common schools and at Middlebury College, where he graduated in 1860; began teaching, but soon after enlisted as a private in the war for the Union; received a Lieutenant's commission, and served until captured on the eve of the battle at Antietam, when he was paroled and sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, awaiting exchange. During this period he commenced reading law and, having resigned his commission, graduated from the law department of Chicago University in 1864. In 1876 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Cook County, and re-elected in 1878, and the following year appointed Master in Chancery of the United States District Court, a position which he still occupies. He has repeatedly been called upon to deliver addresses on political, literary and patriotic occasions, one of these being before the alumni of his alma mater, in 1884, when he was complimented with the degree of LL.D.

SHIELDS, James, soldier and United States Senator, was born in Ireland in 1810, emigrated to the United States at the age of sixteen, and began the practice of law at Kaskaskia in 1832. He was elected to the Legislature in 1836, and State Auditor in 1839. In 1843 he became a Judge of the Supreme Court of the State, and, in 1845, was made Commissioner of the General Land Office. In July, 1846, he was commissioned Brigadier-General in the Mexican War gaining the brevet of Major-General at Cerro-Gordo, where he was severely wounded. He was again wounded at Chapultepec, and mustered out in 1848. The same year he was appointed Governor of Oregon Territory. In 1849 the Democrats in the Illinois Legislature elected him Senator, and he resigned his office in Oregon. In 1856 he removed to Minnesota, and, in 1858, was chosen United States Senator from that State, his term expiring in 1859, when he established a residence in California. At the outbreak of the Civil War (1861) he was superintending a mine in Mexico, but at once hastened to Washington to tender his services to the Government. He was commissioned Brigadier-General, and served with distinction until March, 1863, when the effect of numerous wounds caused him to resign. He subsequently removed to Missouri, practicing law at Carrollton and serving in the Legislature of that State in 1874 and 1879. In the latter year he was elected United States Senator to fill out the unexpired term of Senator Boggy, who had died in office—serving only six weeks, but being the only man in the history of the country who filled the office of United States Senator from three different States. Died. at Ottumwa, Iowa, June 1, 1879.

SHIPMAN, a town of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton Railway, 19 miles north-northeast of Alton and 14 miles southwest of Carlinville. Population (1890), 410; (1900), 396.

SHIPMAN, George E., M.D., physician and philanthropist, born in New York City, March 4, 1820; graduated at the University of New York in 1839, and took a course in the College of Physicians and Surgeons; practiced for a time at Peoria, Ill., but, in 1846, located in Chicago, where he assisted in organizing the first Homeopathic Hospital in that city, and, in 1855, was one of the first Trustees of Hahnemann College. In 1871 he established, in Chicago, the Foundlings' Home at his own expense, giving to it the latter years of his life. Died, Jan. 20, 1893.

SHOREY, Daniel Lewis, lawyer and philanthropist, was born at Jonesborough, Washington County, Maine, Jan. 31, 1824; educated at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., and at Dartmouth College, graduating from the latter in 1851; taught two years in Washington City, meanwhile reading law, afterwards taking a course at Dane Law School, Cambridge; was admitted to the bar in Boston in 1854, the next year locating at Davenport, Iowa, where he remained ten years. In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he prosecuted his profession until 1890, when he retired. Mr. Shorey was prominent in the establishment of the Chicago Public Library, and a member of the first Library Board; was also a prominent member of the Chicago Literary Club, and was a Director in the new University of Chicago and deeply interested in its prosperity. Died, in Chicago, March 4, 1899.

SHORT, (Rev.) William F., clergyman and educator, was born in Ohio in 1829, brought to Morgan County, Ill., in childhood, and lived upon a farm until 20 years of age, when he entered McKendree College, spending his senior year, however, at Wesleyan University, Bloomington, where he graduated in 1854. He had meanwhile accepted a call to the Missouri Conference Seminary at Jackson, Mo.; where he remained three years, when he returned to Illinois, serving churches at Jacksonville and elsewhere, for a part of the time being Presiding Elder of the Jacksonville District. In 1875 he was elected President of Illinois Female College at Jacksonville, continuing in that position until 1893, when he was appointed Superintendent of the Illinois State Institution for the Blind at the same place, but resigned early in 1897. Dr. Short received the degree of D.D., conferred upon him by Ohio Wesleyan University.

SHOUP, George L., United States Senator, was born at Kittanning, Pa., June 15, 1836; came to Illinois in 1852, his father locating on a stock-farm near Galesburg; in 1859 removed to Colorado, where he engaged in mining and mercantile business until 1861, when he enlisted in a company of scouts, being advanced from the rank of First Lieutenant to the Colonelcy of the Third Colorado Cavalry, meanwhile serving as Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1864. Retiring to private life, he again engaged in mercantile and mining business, first in Nevada and then in Idaho; served two terms in the Territorial Legislature of the latter, was appointed Territorial Governor in 1889 and, in 1890, was chosen the first Governor of the State, in October of the same year being elected to the United States Senate, and re-elected in 1895 for a second term, which ends in 1901. Senator Shoup is one of the few Western Senators who remained faithful to the regular Republican organization, during the political campaign of 1896.

SHOWALTER, John W., jurist, was born in Mason County, Ky., Feb. 8, 1844; resided some years in Scott County in that State, and was educated in the local schools, at Maysville and Ohio University, finally graduating at Yale College in 1867; came to Chicago in 1869, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He returned to Kentucky after the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, again came to Chicago and entered the employment of the firm of Moore & Caulfield, with whom he had been before the fire. In 1879 he became a member of the firm of Abbott, Oliver & Showalter (later, Oliver & Showalter), where he remained until his appointment as United States Circuit Judge, in March, 1895. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 12, 1898.

SHUMAN, Andrew, journalist and Lieutenant-Governor, was born at Manor, Lancaster County, Pa., Nov. 8, 1830. His father dying in 1837, he was reared by an uncle. At the age of 15 he became an apprentice in the office of "The Lancaster Union and Sentinel." A year later he accompanied his employer to Auburn, N.Y., working for two years on "The Daily Advertiser" of that city, then known as Governor Seward's "home organ." At the age of 18 he edited, published and distributed—during his leisure hours—a small weekly paper called "The Auburnian." At the conclusion of his apprenticeship he was employed, for a year or two, in editing and publishing "The Cayuga Chief," a temperance journal

In 1851 he entered Hamilton College, but, before the completion of his junior year, consented, at the solicitation of friends of William H. Seward, to assume editorial control of "The Syracuse Daily Journal." In July, 1856, he came to Chicago, to accept an editorial position on "The Evening Journal" of that city, later becoming editor-in-chief and President of the Journal Company. From 1865 to 1870 (first by executive appointment and afterward by popular election) he was a Commissioner of the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, resigning the office four years before the expiration of his term. In 1876 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor on the Republican ticket. Owing to declining health, he abandoned active journalistic work in 1888, dying in Chicago, May 5, 1890. His home during the latter years of his life was at Evanston. Governor Shuman was author of a romance entitled "Loves of a Lawyer," besides numerous addresses before literary, commercial and scientific associations.

SHUMWAY, Dorice Dwight, merchant, was born at Williamsburg, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 28, 1813, descended from French Huguenot ancestry; came to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1837, and to Montgomery County, Ill., in 1841; married a daughter of Hiram Rountree, an early resident of Hillsboro, and, in 1843, located in Christian County; was engaged for a time in merchandising at Taylorville, but retired in 1858, thereafter giving his attention to a large landed estate. In 1846 he was chosen Representative in the General Assembly, served in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and four years as County Judge of Christian County. Died, May 9, 1870.—Hiram P. (Shumway), eldest son of the preceding, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., June, 1842; spent his boyhood on a farm in Christian County and in his father's store at Taylorville; took an academy course and, in 1864, engaged in mercantile business; was Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly and Senator in the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh, afterwards removing to Springfield, where he engaged in the stone business.

SHURTLIFF COLLEGE, an institution located at Upper Alton, and the third established in Illinois. It was originally incorporated as the "Alton College" in 1831, under a special charter which was not accepted, but re-incorporated in 1835, in an "omnibus bill" with Illinois and McKendree Colleges. (See Early Colleges.) Its primal origin was a school at Rock Spring in St. Clair County, founded about 1824, by Rev. John M. Peck. This became the "Rock Spring Seminary" in 1827, and, about 1831, was united with an academy at Upper Alton. This was the nucleus of "Alton" (afterward "Shurtleff") College. As far as its denominational control is concerned, it has always been dominated by Baptist influence. Dr. Peck's original idea was to found a school for teaching theology and Biblical literature, but this project was at first inhibited by the State. Hubbard Loomis and John Russell were among the first instructors. Later, Dr. Benjamin Shurtleff donated the college $10,000, and the institution was named in his honor. College classes were not organized until 1840, and several years elapsed before a class graduated. Its endowment in 1898 was over $126,000, in addition to $125,000 worth of real and personal property. About 255 students were in attendance. Besides preparatory and collegiate departments, the college also maintains a theological school. It has a faculty of twenty instructors and is co-educational.

SIBLEY, a village of Ford County, on the Chicago Division of the Wabash Railway, 105 miles south-southwest of Chicago; has banks and a weekly newspaper. The district is agricultural. Population (1890), 404; (1900), 444.

SIBLEY, Joseph, lawyer and jurist, was born at Westfield, Mass., in 1818; learned the trade of a whip-maker and afterwards engaged in merchandising. In 1843 he began the study of law at Syracuse, N. Y., and, upon admission to the bar, came west, finally settling at Nauvoo, Hancock County. He maintained a neutral attitude during the Mormon troubles, thus giving offense to a section of the community. In 1847 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Legislature, but was elected in 1850, and re-elected in 1852. In 1853 he removed to Warsaw, and, in 1855, was elected Judge of the Circuit Court, and re-elected in 1861, '67 and '73, being assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court of the Second District, in 1877. His residence, after 1865, was at Quincy, where he died, June 18, 1897.

SIDELL, a village of Vermillion County, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Railroads; has a bank, electric light plant and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 776.

SIDNEY, a village of Champaign County, on the main line of the Wabash Railway, at the junction of a branch to Champaign, 48 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is in a farming district; has a bank and a newspaper. Population, (1900), 564.

SIM, (Dr.) William, pioneer physician, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1795, came to America in early manhood, and was the first physician to settle at Golconda, in Pope County, which he represented in the Fourth and Fifth General Assemblies (1824 and '28). He married a Miss Elizabeth Jack of Philadelphia, making the journey from Golconda to Philadelphia for that purpose on horseback. He had a family of five children, one son, Dr. Francis L. Sim, rising to distinction as a physician, and, for a time, being President of a Medical College at Memphis, Tenn. The elder Dr. Sim died at Golconda, in 1868.

SIMS, James, early legislator and Methodist preacher, was a native of South Carolina, but removed to Kentucky in early manhood, thence to St. Clair County, Ill., and, in 1820, to Sangamon County, where he was elected, in 1823, as the first Representative from that county in the Third General Assembly. At the succeeding session of the Legislature, he was one of those who voted against the Convention resolution designed to prepare the way for making Illinois a slave State. Mr. Sims resided for a time in Menard County, but finally removed to Morgan.

SINGER, Horace M., capitalist, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., Oct. 1, 1823; came to Chicago in 1836 and found employment on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as superintendent of repairs upon the Canal until 1853. While thus employed he became one of the proprietors of the stone-quarries at Lemont, managed by the firm of Singer & Talcott until about 1890, when they became the property of the Western Stone Company. Originally a Democrat, he became a Republican during the Civil War, and served as a member of the Twenty-fifth General Assembly (1867) for Cook County, was elected County Commissioner in 1870, and was Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee in 1880. He was also associated with several financial institutions, being a director of the First National Bank and of the Auditorium Company of Chicago, and a member of the Union League and Calumet Clubs. Died, at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 28, 1896.

SINGLETON, James W., Congressman, born at Paxton, Va., Nov. 23, 1811; was educated at the Winchester (Va.) Academy, and removed to Illinois in 1833, settling first at Mount Sterling, Brown County, and, some twenty years later, near Quincy. By profession he was a lawyer, and was prominent in political and commercial affairs. In his later years he devoted considerable attention to stock-raising. He was elected Brigadier-General of the Illinois militia in 1844, being identified to some extent with the "Mormon War"; was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, served six terms in the Legislature, and was elected, on the Democratic ticket, to Congress in 1878, and again in 1880. In 1882 he ran as an independent Democrat, but was defeated by the regular nominee of his party, James M. Riggs. During the War of the Rebellion he was one of the most conspicuous leaders of the "peace party." He constructed the Quincy & Toledo (now part of the Wabash) and the Quincy, Alton & St. Louis (now part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy) Railways, being President of both companies. His death occurred at Baltimore, Md., April 4, 1892.

SINNET, John S., pioneer, was born at Lexington, Ky., March 10, 1796; at three years of age, taken by his parents to Missouri; enlisted in the War of 1812, but, soon after the war, came to Illinois, and, about 1818, settled in what is now Christian County, locating on land constituting a part of the present city of Taylorville. In 1840 he removed to Tazewell County, dying there, Jan. 13, 1873.

SKINNER, Mark, jurist, was born at Manchester, Vt., Sept. 13, 1813; graduated from Middlebury College in 1833, studied law, and, in 1836, came to Chicago; was admitted to the bar in 1839, became City Attorney in 1840, later Master in Chancery for Cook County, and finally United States District Attorney under President Tyler. As member of the House Finance Committee in the Fifteenth General Assembly (1846-48), he aided influentially in securing the adoption of measures for refunding and paying the State debt. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas (now Superior Court) of Cook County, but declined a re-election in 1853. Originally a Democrat, Judge Skinner was an ardent opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill and a liberal supporter of the Government policy during the rebellion. He liberally aided the United States Sanitary Commission and was identified with all the leading charities of the city. Among the great business enterprises with which he was officially associated were the Galena & Chicago Union and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railways (in each of which he was a Director), the Chicago Marine & Fire Insurance Company, the Gas-Light and Coke Company and others. Died, Sept. 16, 1887. Judge Skinner's only surviving son was killed in the trenches before Petersburg, the last year of the Civil War.

SKINNER, Otis Ainsworth, clergyman and author, was born at Royalton, Vt., July 3, 1807; taught for some time, became a Universalist minister, serving churches in Baltimore, Boston and New York between 1831 and 1857; then came to Elgin, Ill., was elected President of Lombard University at Galesburg, but the following year took charge of a church at Joliet. Died, at Naperville, Sept. 18, 1861. He wrote several volumes on religious topics, and, at different times, edited religious periodicals at Baltimore, Haverhill, Mass., and Boston.

SKINNER, Ozias C., lawyer and jurist, was born at Floyd, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1817; in 1836, removed to Illinois, settling in Peoria County, where he engaged in farming. In 1838 he began the study of law at Greenville, Ohio, and was admitted to the bar of that State in 1840. Eighteen months later he returned to Illinois, and began practice at Carthage, Hancock County, removing to Quincy in 1844. During the "Mormon War" he served as Aid-de-camp to Governor Ford. In 1848 he was elected to the lower house of the Sixteenth General Assembly, and, for a short time, served as Prosecuting Attorney for the district including Adams and Brown Counties. In 1851 he was elected Judge of the (then) Fifteenth Judicial Circuit, and, in 1855, succeeded Judge S. H. Treat on the Supreme bench, resigning this position in April, 1858, two months before the expiration of his term. He was a large land owner and had extensive agricultural interests. He built, and was the first President of the Carthage & Quincy Railroad, now a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system. He was a prominent member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869, serving as Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. Died in 1877.

SLADE, Charles, early Congressman: his early history, including date and place of birth, are unknown. In 1820 he was elected Representative from Washington County in the Second General Assembly, and, in 1826, was re-elected to the same body for Clinton and Washington. In 1832 he was elected one of the three Congressmen from Illinois, representing the First District. After attending the first session of the Twenty-third Congress, while on his way home, he was attacked with cholera, dying near Vincennes, Ind., July 11, 1834.

SLADE, James P., ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, was born at Westerlo, Albany County, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1837, and spent his boyhood with his parents on a farm, except while absent at school; in 1856 removed to Belleville, Ill., where he soon became connected with the public schools, serving for a number of years as Principal of the Belleville High School. While connected with the Belleville schools, he was elected County Superintendent, remaining in office some ten years; later had charge of Almira College at Greenville, Bond County, served six years as Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis and, in 1878, was elected State Superintendent of Public Instruction as the nominee of the Republican party. On retirement from the office of State Superintendent, he resumed his place at the head of Almira College, but, for the past few years, has been Superintendent of Schools at East St. Louis.

SLAVERY AGITATION OF 1823-24. (See Slavery and Slave Laws.)

SLAVERY AND SLAVE LAWS. African slaves were first brought into the Illinois country by a Frenchman named Pierre F. Renault, about 1722. At that time the present State formed a part of Louisiana, and the traffic in slaves was regulated by French royal edicts. When Great Britain acquired the territory, at the close of the French and Indian War, the former subjects of France were guaranteed security for their persons "and effects," and no interference with slavery was attempted. Upon the conquest of Illinois by Virginia (see Clark, George Rogers), the French very generally professed allegiance to that commonwealth, and, in her deed of cession to the United States, Virginia expressly stipulated for the protection of the "rights and liberties" of the French citizens. This was construed as recognizing the right of property in negro slaves. Even the Ordinance of 1787, while prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory, preserved to the settlers (reference being especially made to the French and Canadians) "of the Kaskaskias, St. Vincents and neighboring villages, their laws and customs, now (then) in force, relative to the descent and conveyance of property." A conservative construction of this clause was, that while it prohibited the extension of slavery and the importation of slaves, the status of those who were at that time in involuntary servitude, and of their descendants, was left unchanged. There were those, however, who denied the constitutionality of the Ordinance in toto, on the ground that Congress had exceeded its powers in its passage. There was also a party which claimed that all children of slaves, born after 1787, were free from birth. In 1794 a convention was held at Vincennes, pursuant to a call from Governor Harrison, and a memorial to Congress was adopted, praying for the repeal—or, at least a modification—of the sixth clause of the Ordinance of 1787. The first Congressional Committee, to which this petition was referred, reported adversely upon it; but a second committee recommended the suspension of the operation of the clause in question for ten years. But no action was taken by the National Legislature, and, in 1807, a counter petition, extensively signed, was forwarded to that body, and Congress left the matter in statu quo. It is worthy of note that some of the most earnest opponents of the measure were Representatives from Southern Slave States, John Randolph, of Virginia, being one of them. The pro-slavery party in the State then prepared what is popularly known as the "Indenture Law," which was one of the first acts adopted by Governor Edwards and his Council, and was re-enacted by the first Territorial Legislature in 1812. It was entitled, "An Act relating to the Introduction of Negroes and Mulattoes into this Territory," and gave permission to bring slaves above 15 years of age into the State, when they might be registered and kept in servitude within certain limitations. Slaves under that age might also be brought in, registered, and held in bondage until they reached the age of 35, if males, and 30, if females. The issue of registered slaves were to serve their mother's master until the age of 30 or 28, according to sex. The effect of this legislation was rapidly to increase the number of slaves. The Constitution of 1818 prohibited the introduction of slavery thereafter—that is to say, after its adoption. In 1822 the slave-holding party, with their supporters, began to agitate the question of so amending the organic law as to make Illinois a slave State. To effect such a change the calling of a convention was necessary, and, for eighteen months, the struggle between "conventionists" and their opponents was bitter and fierce. The question was submitted to a popular vote on August 2, 1824, the result of the count showing 4,972 votes for such convention and 6,640 against. This decisive result settled the question of slave-holding in Illinois for all future time, though the existence of slavery in the State continued to be recognized by the National Census until 1840. The number, according to the census of 1810, was 168; in 1820 they had increased to 917. Then the number began to diminish, being reduced in 1830 to 747, and, in 1840 (the last census which shows any portion of the population held in bondage), it was 331.

Hooper Warren—who has been mentioned elsewhere as editor of "The Edwardsville Spectator," and a leading factor in securing the defeat of the scheme to make Illinois a slave State in 1822—in an article in the first number of "The Genius of Liberty" (January, 1841), speaking of that contest, says there were, at its beginning, only three papers in the State—"The Intelligencer" at Vandalia, "The Gazette" at Shawneetown, and "The Spectator" at Edwardsville. The first two of these, at the outset, favored the Convention scheme, while "The Spectator" opposed it. The management of the campaign on the part of the pro-slavery party was assigned to Emanuel J. West, Theophilus W. Smith and Oliver L. Kelly, and a paper was established by the name of "The Illinois Republican," with Smith as editor. Among the active opponents of the measure were George Churchill, Thomas Lippincott, Samuel D. Lockwood, Henry Starr (afterwards of Cincinnati), Rev. John M. Peck and Rev. James Lemen, of St. Clair County. Others who contributed to the cause were Daniel P. Cook, Morris Birkbeck, Dr. Hugh Steel and—Burton of Jackson County, Dr. Henry Perrine of Bond; William Leggett of Edwardsville (afterwards editor of "The New York Evening Post"), Benjamin Lundy (then of Missouri), David Blackwell and Rev. John Dew, of St. Clair County. Still others were Nathaniel Pope (Judge of the United States District Court), William B. Archer, William H. Brown and Benjamin Mills (of Vandalia), John Tillson, Dr. Horatio Newhall, George Forquer, Col. Thomas Mather, Thomas Ford, Judge David J. Baker, Charles W. Hunter and Henry H. Snow (of Alton). This testimony is of interest as coming from one who probably had more to do with defeating the scheme, with the exception of Gov. Edward Coles. Outside of the more elaborate Histories of Illinois, the most accurate and detailed accounts of this particular period are to be found in "Sketch of Edward Coles" by the late E. B. Washburne, and "Early Movement in Illinois for the Legalization of Slavery," an address before the Chicago Historical Society (1864), by Hon. William H. Brown, of Chicago. (See also, Coles, Edward; Warren, Hooper; Brown, William H.; Churchill, George; Lippincott, Thomas; and Newspapers, Early, elsewhere in this volume.)

SLOAN, Wesley, legislator and jurist, was born in Dorchester County, Md., Feb. 20., 1806. At the age of 17, having received a fair academic education, he accompanied his parents to Philadelphia, where, for a year, he was employed in a wholesale grocery. His father dying, he returned to Maryland and engaged in teaching, at the same time studying law, and being admitted to the bar in 1831. He came to Illinois in 1838, going first to Chicago, and afterward to Kaskaskia, finally settling at Golconda in 1839, which continued to be his home the remainder of his life. In 1848 he was elected to the Legislature, and re-elected in 1850, '52, and '56, serving three times as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. He was one of the members of the first State Board of Education, created by Act of Feb. 18, 1857, and took a prominent part in the founding and organization of the State educational institutions. In 1857 he was elected to the bench of the Nineteenth Judicial Circuit, and re-elected in 1861, but declined a re-election for a third term. Died, Jan. 15, 1887.

SMITH, Abner, jurist, was born at Orange, Franklin County, Mass., August 4, 1843, of an old New England family, whose ancestors came to Massachusetts Colony about 1630; was educated in the public schools and at Middlebury College, Vt., graduating from the latter in 1866. After graduation he spent a year as a teacher in Newton Academy, at Shoreham, Vt., coming to Chicago in 1867, and entering upon the study of law, being admitted to the bar in 1868. The next twenty-five years were spent in the practice of his profession in Chicago, within that time serving as the attorney of several important corporations. In 1893 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected in 1897, his term of service continuing until 1903.

SMITH, (Dr.) Charles Gilman, physician, was born at Exeter, N. H., Jan. 4, 1828, received his early education at Phillips Academy, in his native place, finally graduating from Harvard University in 1847. He soon after commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School, but completed his course at the University of Pennsylvania in 1851. After two years spent as attending physician of the Alms House in South Boston, Mass., in 1853 he came to Chicago, where he soon acquired an extensive practice. During the Civil War he was one of six physicians employed by the Government for the treatment of prisoners of war in hospital at Camp Douglas. In 1868 he visited Europe for the purpose of observing the management of hospitals in Germany, France and England, on his return being invited to lecture in the Woman's Medical College in Chicago, and also becoming consulting physician in the Women's and Children's Hospital, as well as in the Presbyterian Hospital—a position which he continued to occupy for the remainder of his life, gaining a wide reputation in the treatment of women's and children's diseases. Died, Jan. 10, 1894.

SMITH, David Allen, lawyer, was born near Richmond, Va., June 18, 1809; removed with his father, at an early day, to Pulaski, Tenn.; at 17 went to Courtland, Lawrence County, Ala., where he studied law with Judge Bramlette and began practice. His father, dying about 1831, left him the owner of a number of slaves whom, in 1837, he brought to Carlinville, Ill., and emancipated, giving bond that they should not become a charge to the State. In 1839 he removed to Jacksonville, where he practiced law until his death. Col. John J. Hardin was his partner at the time of his death on the battle-field of Buena Vista. Mr. Smith was a Trustee and generous patron of Illinois College, for a quarter of a century, but never held any political office. As a lawyer he was conscientious and faithful to the interests of his clients; as a citizen, liberal, public-spirited and patriotic. He contributed liberally to the support of the Government during the war for the Union. Died, at Anoka, Minn., July 13, 1865, where he had gone to accompany an invalid son. — Thomas William (Smith), eldest son of the preceding, born at Courtland, Ala., Sept. 27, 1832; died at Clearwater, Minn., Oct. 29, 1865. He graduated at Illinois College in 1852, studied law and served as Captain in the Tenth Illinois Volunteers, until, broken in health, he returned home to die.

SMITH, Dietrich C., ex-Congressman, was born at Ostfriesland, Hanover, April 4, 1840, in boyhood came to the United States, and, since 1849, has been a resident of Pekin, Tazewell County. In 1861 he enlisted in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, was promoted to a Lieutenantcy, and, while so serving, was severely wounded at Shiloh. Later, he was attached to the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Infantry, and was mustered out of service as Captain of Company C of that regiment. His business is that of banker and manufacturer, besides which he has had considerable experience in the construction and management of railroads. He was a member of the Thirtieth General Assembly, and, in 1880, was elected Representative in Congress from what was then the Thirteenth District, on the Republican ticket, defeating Adlai E. Stevenson, afterwards Vice-President. In 1882, his county (Tazewell) having been attached to the district for many years represented by Wm. M. Springer, he was defeated by the latter as a candidate for election.

SMITH, George, one of Chicago's pioneers and early bankers, was born in Aberdeenshire, Scotland, March 8, 1808. It was his early intention to study medicine, and he entered Aberdeen College with this end in view, but was forced to quit the institution at the end of two years, because of impaired vision. In 1833 he came to America, and, in 1834, settled in Chicago, where he resided until 1861, meanwhile spending one year in Scotland. He invested largely in real estate in Chicago and Wisconsin, at one time owning a considerable portion of the present site of Milwaukee. In 1837 he secured the charter for the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance Company, whose headquarters were at Milwaukee. He was really the owner of the company, although Alexander Mitchell, of Milwaukee, was its Secretary. Under this charter Mr. Smith was able to issue $1,500,000 in certificates, which circulated freely as currency. In 1839 he founded Chicago's first private banking house. About 1843 he was interested in a storage and commission business in Chicago, with a Mr. Webster as partner. He was a Director in the old Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and aided it, while in course of construction, by loans of money; was also a charter member of the Chicago Board of Trade, organized in 1848. In 1854, the State of Wisconsin having prohibited the circulation of the Wisconsin Marine and Fire Insurance certificates above mentioned, Mr. Smith sold out the company to his partner, Mitchell, and bought two Georgia bank charters, which, together, empowered him to issue $3,000,000 in currency. The notes were duly issued in Georgia, and put into circulation in Illinois, over the counter of George Smith & Co.'s Chicago bank. About 1856 Mr. Smith began winding up his affairs in Chicago, meanwhile spending most of his time in Scotland, but, returning in 1860, made extensive investments in railroad and other American securities, which netted him large profits. The amount of capital which he is reputed to have taken with him to his native land has been estimated at $10,000,000, though he retained considerable tracts of valuable lands in Wisconsin and about Chicago. Among those who were associated with him in business, either as employes or otherwise, and who have since been prominently identified with Chicago business affairs, were Hon. Charles B. Farwell, E. I. Tinkham (afterwards a prominent banker of Chicago), E. W. Willard, now of Newport, R. I., and others. Mr. Smith made several visits, during the last forty years, to the United States, but divided his time chiefly between Scotland (where he was the owner of a castle) and London. Died Oct. 7, 1899.

SMITH, George W., soldier, lawyer and State Treasurer, was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 8, 1837. It was his intention to acquire a collegiate education, but his father's business embarrassments having compelled the abandonment of his studies, at 17 of years age he went to Arkansas and taught school for two years. In 1856 he returned to Albany and began the study of law, graduating from the law school in 1858. In October of that year he removed to Chicago, where he remained continuously in practice, with the exception of the years 1862-65, when he was serving in the Union army, and 1867-68, when he filled the office of State Treasurer. He was mustered into service, August 27, 1862, as a Captain in the Eighty-eighth Illinois Infantry—the second Board of Trade regiment. At Stone River, he was seriously wounded and captured. After four days' confinement, he was aided by a negro to escape. He made his way to the Union lines, but was granted leave of absence, being incapacitated for service. On his return to duty he joined his regiment in the Chattanooga campaign, and was officially complimented for his bravery at Gordon's Mills. At Mission Ridge he was again severely wounded, and was once more personally complimented in the official report. At Kenesaw Mountain (June 27, 1864), Capt. Smith commanded the regiment after the killing of Lieutenant-Colonel Chandler, and was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy for bravery on the field. He led the charge at Franklin, and was brevetted Colonel, and thanked by the commander for his gallant service. In the spring of 1865 he was brevetted Brigadier-General, and, in June following, was mustered out. Returning to Chicago, he resumed the practice of his profession, and gained a prominent position at the bar. In 1866 he was elected State Treasurer, and, after the expiration of his term, in January, 1869, held no public office. General Smith was, for many years, a Trustee of the Chicago Historical Society, and Vice-President of the Board. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 16, 1898.

SMITH, George W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Putnam County, Ohio, August 18, 1846. When he was four years old, his father removed to Wayne County, Ill., settling on a farm. He attended the common schools and graduated from the literary department of McKendree College, at Lebanon, in 1868. In his youth he learned the trade of a blacksmith, but later determined to study law. After reading for a time at Fairfield, Ill., he entered the Law Department of the Bloomington (Ind.) University, graduating there in 1870. The same year he was admitted to the bar in Illinois, and has since practiced at Murphysboro. In 1880 he was a Republican Presidential Elector, and, in 1888, was elected a Republican Representative to Congress from the Twentieth Illinois District, and has been continuously re-elected, now (1899) serving his sixth consecutive term as Representative from the Twenty-second District.

SMITH, Giles Alexander, soldier, and Assistant Postmaster-General, was born in Jefferson County, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1829; engaged in dry-goods business in Cincinnati and Bloomington, Ill., in 1861 being proprietor of a hotel in the latter place; became a Captain in the Eighth Missouri Volunteers, was engaged at Forts Henry and Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth, and promoted Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel in 1862; led his regiment on the first attack on Vicksburg, and was severely wounded at Arkansas Post; was promoted Brigadier-General in August, 1863, for gallant and meritorious conduct; led a brigade of the Fifteenth Army Corps at Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, as also in the Atlanta campaign, and a division of the Seventeenth Corps in the "March to the Sea." After the surrender of Lee he was transferred to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps, became Major-General in 1865, and resigned in 1866, having declined a commission as Colonel in the regular army; about 1869 was appointed, by President Grant, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, but resigned on account of failing health in 1872. Died, at Bloomington, Nov. 8, 1876. General Smith was one of the founders of the Society of the Army of the Tennessee.

SMITH, Gustavus Adolphus, soldier, was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1820; at 16 joined two brothers who had located at Springfield, Ohio, where he learned the trade of a carriage-maker. In December, 1837, he arrived at Decatur, Ill., but soon after located at Springfield, where he resided some six years. Then, returning to Decatur, he devoted his attention to carriage manufacture, doing a large business with the South, but losing heavily as the result of the war. An original Whig, he became a Democrat on the dissolution of the Whig party, but early took ground in favor of the Union after the firing on Fort Sumter; was offered and accepted the colonelcy of the Thirty-fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the same time assisting Governor

Yates in the selection of Camp Butler as a camp of recruiting and instruction. Having been assigned to duty in Missouri, in the summer of 1861, he proceeded to Jefferson City, joined Fremont at Carthage in that State, and made a forced march to Springfield, afterwards taking part in the campaign in Arkansas and in the battle of Pea Ridge, where he had a horse shot under him and was severely (and, it was supposed, fatally) wounded, not recovering until 1868. Being compelled to return home, he received authority to raise an independent brigade, but was unable to accompany it to the field. In September, 1862, he was commissioned a Brigadier-General by President Lincoln, "for meritorious conduct," but was unable to enter into active service on account of his wound. Later, he was assigned to the command of a convalescent camp at Murfreesboro, Tenn., under Gen. George H. Thomas. In 1864 he took part in securing the second election of President Lincoln, and, in the early part of 1865, was commissioned by Governor Oglesby Colonel of a new regiment (the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Illinois), but, on account of his wounds, was assigned to court-martial duty, remaining in the service until January, 1866, when he was mustered out with the brevet rank of Brigadier-General. During the second year of his service he was presented with a magnificent sword by the rank and file of his regiment (the Thirty-fifth), for brave and gallant conduct at Pea Ridge. After retiring from the army, he engaged in cotton planting in Alabama, but was not successful; in 1868, canvassed Alabama for General Grant for President, but declined a nomination in his own favor for Congress. In 1870 he was appointed, by General Grant, United States Collection and Disbursing Agent for the District of New Mexico, where he continued to reside.

SMITH, John Corson, soldier, ex-Lieutenant-Governor and ex-State Treasurer, was born in Philadelphia, Feb. 13, 1832. At the age of 16 he was apprenticed to a carpenter and builder. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and worked at his trade, for a time, but soon removed to Galena, where he finally engaged in business as a contractor. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the Seventy-fourth Illinois Volunteers, but, having received authority from Governor Yates, raised a company, of which he was chosen Captain, and which was incorporated in the Ninety-sixth Illinois Infantry. Of this regiment he was soon elected Major. After a short service about Cincinnati, Ohio, and Covington and Newport, Ky., the Ninety-sixth was sent to the front, and took part (among other battles) in the second engagement at Fort Donelson and in the bloody fight at Franklin, Tenn. Later, Major Smith was assigned to staff duty under Generals Baird and Steedman, serving through the Tullahoma campaign, and participating in the battles of Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. Being promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, he rejoined his regiment, and was given command of a brigade. In the Atlanta campaign he served gallantly, taking a conspicuous part in its long series of bloody engagements, and being severely wounded at Kenesaw Mountain. In February, 1865, he was brevetted Colonel, and, in June, 1865, Brigadier-General. Soon after his return to Galena he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue, but was legislated out of office in 1872. In 1873 he removed to Chicago and embarked in business. In 1874-76 he was a member (and Secretary) of the Illinois Board of Commissioners to the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia. In 1875 he was appointed Chief Grain-Inspector at Chicago, and held the office for several years. In 1872 and '76 he was a delegate to the National Republican Conventions of those years, and, in 1878, was elected State Treasurer, as he was again in 1882. In 1884 he was elected Lieutenant-Governor, serving until 1889. He is a prominent Mason, Knight Templar and Odd Fellow, as well as a distinguished member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and was prominently connected with the erection of the "Masonic Temple Building" in Chicago.

SMITH, John Eugene, soldier, was born in Switzerland, August 3, 1816, the son of an officer who had served under Napoleon, and after the downfall of the latter, emigrated to Philadelphia. The subject of this sketch received an academic education and became a jeweler; in 1861 entered the volunteer service as Colonel of the Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry; took part in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in the battle of Shiloh and siege of Corinth; was promoted a Brigadier-General in November, 1862, and placed in command of a division in the Sixteenth Army Corps; led the Third Division of the Seventeenth Army Corps in the Vicksburg campaign, later being transferred to the Fifteenth, and taking part in the battle of Missionary Ridge and the Atlanta and Carolina campaigns of 1864-65. He received the brevet rank of Major-General of Volunteers in January, 1863, and, on his muster-out from the volunteer service, became Colonel of the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, being transferred, in 1870, to the Fourteenth. In 1867 his services at Vicksburg and Savannah were further recognized by conferring upon him the brevets of Brigadier and Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1881, he was retired, afterwards residing in Chicago, where he died, Jan. 29, 1897.

SMITH, Joseph, the founder of the Mormon sect, was born at Sharon, Vt., Dec. 23, 1805. In 1815 his parents removed to Palmyra, N. Y., and still later to Manchester. He early showed a dreamy mental cast, and claimed to be able to locate stolen articles by means of a magic stone. In 1820 he claimed to have seen a vision, but his pretensions were ridiculed by his acquaintances. His story of the revelation of the golden plates by the angel Moroni, and of the latter's instructions to him, is well known. With the aid of Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery he prepared the "Book of Mormon," alleging that he had deciphered it from heaven-sent characters, through the aid of miraculous spectacles. This was published in 1830. In later years Smith claimed to have received supplementary revelations, which so taxed the credulity of his followers that some of them apostatized. He also claimed supernatural power, such as exorcism, etc. He soon gained followers in considerable numbers, whom, in 1832, he led west, a part settling at Kirtland, Ohio, and the remainder in Jackson County, Mo. Driven out of Ohio five years later, the bulk of the sect found the way to their friends in Missouri, whence they were finally expelled after many conflicts with the authorities. Smith, with the other refugees, fled to Hancock County, Ill., founding the city of Nauvoo, which was incorporated in 1840. Here was begun, in the following year, the erection of a great temple, but again he aroused the hostility of the authorities, although soon wielding considerable political power. After various unsuccessful attempts to arrest him in 1844, Smith and a number of his followers were induced to surrender themselves under the promise of protection from violence and a fair trial. Having been taken to Carthage, the county-seat, all were discharged under recognizance to appear at court except Smith and his brother Hyrum, who were held under the new charge of "treason," and were placed in jail. So intense had been the feeling against the Mormons, that Governor Ford called out the militia to preserve the peace; but it is evident that the feeling among the latter was in sympathy with that of the populace. Most of the militia were disbanded after Smith's arrest, one company being left on duty at Carthage.

from whom only eight men were detailed to guard the jail. In this condition of affairs a mob of 150 disguised men, alleged to be from Warsaw, appeared before the jail on the evening of June 27, and, forcing the guards—who made only a feeble resistance,—Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were both shot down, while a friend, who had remained with them, was wounded. The fate of Smith undoubtedly went far to win for him the reputation of martyr, and give a new impulse to the Mormon faith. (See Mormons; Nauvoo.)

SMITH, Justin Almerin, D.D., clergyman and editor, was born at Ticonderoga, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1819, educated at New Hampton Literary and Theological Institute and Union College, graduating from the latter in 1843; served a year as Principal of the Union Academy at Bennington, Vt., followed by four years of pastoral work, when he assumed the pastorate of the First Baptist church at Rochester, N. Y., where he remained five years. Then (1853) he removed to Chicago to assume the editorship of "The Christian Times" (now "The Standard"), with which he was associated for the remainder of his life. Meanwhile he assisted in organizing three Baptist churches in Chicago, serving two of them as pastor for a considerable period; made an extended tour of Europe in 1869, attending the Vatican Council at Rome; was a Trustee and one of the founders of the old Chicago University, and Trustee and Lecturer of the Baptist Theological Seminary; was also the author of several religious works. Died, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, Feb. 4, 1896.

SMITH, Perry H., lawyer and politician, was born in Augusta, Oneida County, N. Y., March 18, 1828; entered Hamilton College at the age of 14 and graduated, second in his class, at 18; began reading law and was admitted to the bar on coming of age in 1849. Then, removing to Appleton, Wis., when 23 years of age he was elected a Judge, served later in both branches of the Legislature, and, in 1857, became Vice-President of the Chicago, St. Paul & Fond du Lac Railway, retaining the same position in the reorganized corporation when it became the Chicago & Northwestern. In 1856 Mr. Smith came to Chicago and resided there till his death, on Palm Sunday of 1885. He was prominent in railway circles and in the councils of the Democratic party, being the recognized representative of Mr. Tilden's interests in the Northwest in the campaign of 1876.

SMITH, Robert, Congressman and lawyer, was born at Petersborough, N. H., June 12, 1802; was educated and admitted to the bar in his native town, settled at Alton, Ill., in 1832, and engaged in practice. In 1836 he was elected to the General Assembly from Madison County, and re-elected in 1838. In 1842 he was elected to the Twenty-eighth Congress, and twice re-elected, serving three successive terms. During the Civil War he was commissioned Paymaster, with the rank of Major, and was stationed at St. Louis. He was largely interested in the construction of water power at Minneapolis, Minn., and also in railroad enterprises in Illinois. He was a prominent Mason and a public-spirited citizen. Died, at Alton, Dec. 20, 1867.

SMITH, Samuel Lisle, lawyer, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1817, and, belonging to a wealthy family, enjoyed superior educational advantages, taking a course in the Yale Law School at an age too early to admit of his receiving a degree. In 1836 he came to Illinois, to look after some landed interests of his father's in the vicinity of Peru. Returning east within the next two years, he obtained his diploma, and, again coming west, located in Chicago in 1838, and, for a time, occupied an office with the well-known law firm of Butterfield & Collins. In 1839 he was elected City Attorney and, at the great Whig meeting at Springfield, in June, 1840, was one of the principal speakers, establishing a reputation as one of the most brilliant campaign orators in the West. As an admirer of Henry Clay, he was active in the Presidential campaign of 1844, and was also a prominent speaker at the River and Harbor Convention at Chicago, in 1847. With a keen sense of humor, brilliant, witty and a master of repartee and invective, he achieved popularity, both at the bar and on the lecture platform, and had the promise of future success, which was unfortunately marred by his convivial habits. Died of cholera, in Chicago, July 30, 1854. Mr. Smith married the daughter of Dr. Potts, of Philadelphia, an eminent clergyman of the Episcopal Church.

SMITH, Sidney, jurist, was born in Washington County, N. Y., May 12, 1829; studied law and was admitted to the bar at Albion, in that State, in 1851; came to Chicago in 1856 and entered into partnership with Grant Goodrich and William W. Farwell, both of whom were afterwards elected to places on the bench—the first in the Superior, and the latter in the Circuit Court. In 1879 Judge Smith was elected to the Superior Court of Cook County, serving until 1885, when he became the attorney of the Chicago Board of Trade. He was the Republican candidate for Mayor, in opposition to Carter H. Harrison, in 1885, and is believed by many to have been honestly elected, though defeated on the face of the returns. A recount was ordered by the court, but so much delay was incurred and so many obstacles placed in the way of carrying the order into effect, that Judge Smith abandoned the contest in disgust, although making material gains as far as it had gone. During his professional career he was connected, as counsel, with some of the most important trials before the Chicago courts; was also one of the Directors of the Chicago Public Library, on its organization in 1871. Died suddenly, in Chicago, Oct. 6, 1898.

SMITH, Theophilus Washington, Judge and politician, was born in New York City, Sept. 28, 1784, served for a time in the United States navy, was a law student in the office of Aaron Burr, was admitted to the bar in his native State in 1805, and, in 1816, came west, finally locating at Edwardsville, where he soon became a prominent figure in early State history. In 1820 he was an unsuccessful candidate before the Legislature for the office of Attorney-General, being defeated by Samuel D. Lockwood, but was elected to the State Senate in 1822, serving four years. In 1823 he was one of the leaders of the "Conventionist" party, whose aim was to adopt a new Constitution which would legalize slavery in Illinois, during this period being the editor of the leading organ of the pro-slavery party. In 1825 he was elected one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, but resigned, Dec. 26, 1842. He was impeached in 1833 on charges alleging oppressive conduct, corruption, and other high misdemeanors in office, but secured a negative acquittal, a two-thirds vote being necessary to conviction. The vote in the Senate stood twelve for conviction (on a part of the charges) to ten for acquittal, four being excused from voting. During the Black Hawk War he served as Quartermaster-General on the Governor's staff. As a jurist, he was charged by his political opponents with being unable to divest himself of his partisan bias, and even with privately advising counsel, in political causes, of defects in the record, which they (the counsel) had not discovered. He was also a member of the first Board of Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, appointed in 1823. Died, in Chicago, May 6, 1846.

SMITH, William Henry, journalist. Associated Press Manager, was born in Columbia County, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1833; at three years of age was taken by his parents to Ohio, where he enjoyed the best educational advantages that State at the time afforded. After completing his school course he began teaching, and, for a time, served as tutor in a Western college, but soon turned his attention to journalism, at first as assistant editor of a weekly publication at Cincinnati, still later becoming its editor, and, in 1855, city editor of "The Cincinnati Gazette," with which he was connected in a more responsible position at the beginning of the war, incidentally doing work upon "The Literary Review." His connection with a leading paper enabled him to exert a strong influence in support of the Government. This he used most faithfully in assisting to raise troops in the first years of the war, and, in 1863, in bringing forward and securing the election of John Brough as a Union candidate for Governor in opposition to Clement L. Vallandigham, the Democratic candidate. In 1864 he was nominated and elected Secretary of State, being re-elected two years later. After retiring from office he returned to journalism at Cincinnati, as editor of "The Evening Chronicle," from which he retired in 1870 to become Agent of the Western Associated Press, with headquarters, at first at Cleveland, but later at Chicago. His success in this line was demonstrated by the final union of the New York and Western Associated Press organizations under his management, continuing until 1893, when he retired. Mr. Smith was a strong personal friend of President Hayes, by whom he was appointed Collector of the Port of Chicago in 1877. While engaged in official duties he found time to do considerable literary work, having published, several years ago, "The St. Clair Papers," in two volumes, and a life of Charles Hammond, besides contributions to periodicals. After retiring from the management of the Associated Press, he was engaged upon a "History of American Politics" and a "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," which are said to have been well advanced at the time of his death, which took place at his home, at Lake Forest, Ill., July 27, 1896.

SMITH, William M., merchant, stock-breeder and politician, was born near Frankfort, Ky., May 23, 1827; in 1846 accompanied his father's family to Lexington, McLean County, Ill., where they settled. A few years later he bought forty acres of government land, finally increasing his holdings to 800 acres, and becoming a breeder of fine stock. Still later he added to his agricultural pursuits the business of a merchant. Having early identified himself with the Republican party, he remained a firm adherent of its principles during the Civil War, and, while declining a commission tendered him by Governor Yates, devoted his time and means liberally to the recruiting and organization of regiments for service in the field, and procuring supplies for the sick and wounded. In 1866 he was elected to the lower house of the Legislature, and was re-elected in 1868 and '70, serving, during his last term, as Speaker. In 1877 he was appointed by Governor Cullom a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, of which body he served as President until 1883. He was a man of remarkably genial temperament, liberal impulses, and wide popularity. Died, March 25, 1886.

SMITH, William Sooy, soldier and civil engineer, was born at Tarlton, Pickaway County, Ohio, July 22, 1830; graduated at Ohio University in 1849, and, at the United States Military Academy, in 1853, having among his classmates, at the latter, Generals McPherson, Schofield and Sheridan. Coming to Chicago the following year, he first found employment as an engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad, but later became assistant of Lieutenant-Colonel Graham in engineer service on the lakes; a year later took charge of a select school in Buffalo; in 1857 made the first surveys for the International Bridge at Niagara Falls, then went into the service of extensive locomotive and bridge-works at Trenton, N. J., in their interest making a visit to Cuba, and also superintending the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River. The war intervening, he returned North and was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and assigned to duty as Assistant Adjutant-General at Camp Denison, Ohio, but, in June, 1862, was commissioned Colonel of the Thirtieth Ohio Volunteers, participating in the West Virginia campaigns, and later, at Shiloh and Perryville. In April, 1862, he was promoted Brigadier-General of volunteers, commanding divisions in the Army of the Ohio until the fall of 1862, when he joined Grant and took part in the Vicksburg campaign, as commander of the First Division of the Sixteenth Army Corps. Subsequently he was made Chief of the Cavalry Department, serving on the staffs of Grant and Sherman, until compelled to resign, in 1864, on account of impaired health. During the war General Smith rendered valuable service to the Union cause in great emergencies, by his knowledge of engineering. On retiring to private life he resumed his profession at Chicago, and since has been employed by the Government on some of its most stupendous works on the lakes, and has also planned several of the most important railroad bridges across the Missouri and other streams. He has been much consulted in reference to municipal engineering, and his name is connected with a number of the gigantic edifices in Chicago.

SMITHBORO, a village and railroad junction in Bond County, 3 miles east of Greenville. Population, 393; (1900), 314.

SNAPP, Henry, Congressman, born in Livingston County, N. Y., June 30, 1823, came to Illinois with his father when 11 years old, and, having read law at Joliet, was admitted to the bar in 1847. He practiced in Will County for twenty years before entering public life. In 1868 he was elected to the State Senate and occupied a seat in that body until his election, in 1871, to the Forty-second Congress, by the Republicans of the (then) Sixth Illinois District, as successor to B. C. Cook, who had resigned. Died, at Joliet, Nov. 23, 1895.

SNOW, Herman W., ex-Congressman, was born in La Porte County, Ind., July 3, 1836, but was reared in Kentucky, working upon a farm for five years, while yet in his minority becoming a resident of Illinois. For several years he was a school teacher, meanwhile studying law and being admitted to the bar. Early in the war he enlisted as a private in the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, rising to the rank of Captain. His term of service having expired, he re-enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Illinois, and was mustered out with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. After the close of the war he resumed teaching at the Chicago High School, and later served in the General Assembly (1873-74) as Representative from Woodford County. In 1890 he was elected, as a Democrat, to represent the Ninth Illinois District in Congress, but was defeated by his Republican opponent in 1892.

SNOWHOOK, William B., first Collector of Customs at Chicago, was born in Ireland in 1804; at the age of eight years was brought to New York, where he learned the printer's trade, and worked for some time in the same office with Horace Greeley. At 16 he went back to Ireland, remaining two years, but, returning to the United States, began the study of law; was also employed on the Passaic Canal; in 1836, came to Chicago, and was soon after associated with William B. Ogden in a contract on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, which lasted until 1841. As early as 1840 he became prominent as a leader in the Democratic party, and, in 1846, received from President Polk an appointment as first Collector of Customs for Chicago (having previously served as Special Surveyor of the Port, while attached to the District of Detroit); in 1853, was re-appointed to the Collectorship by President Pierce, serving two years. During the "Mormon War" (1844) he organized and equipped, at his own expense, the Montgomery Guards, and was commissioned Colonel, but the disturbances were brought to an end before the order to march. From 1856 he devoted his attention chiefly to his practice, but, in 1862, was one of the Democrats of Chicago who took part in a movement to sustain the Government by stimulating enlistments; was also a member of the Convention which nominated Mr. Greeley for President in 1872. Died, in Chicago, May 5, 1882.

SNYDER, Adam Wilson, pioneer lawyer, and early Congressman, was born at Connellsville, Pa., Oct. 6, 1799. In early life he followed the occupation of wool-curling for a livelihood, attending school in the winter. In 1815, he emigrated to Columbus, Ohio, and afterwards settled in Ridge Prairie, St. Clair County, Ill. Being offered a situation in a wool-curling and fulling mill at Cahokia, he removed thither in 1817. He formed the friendship of Judge Jesse B. Thomas, and, through the latter's encouragement and aid, studied law and gained a solid professional, political, social and financial position. In 1830 he was elected State Senator from St. Clair County, and re-elected for two successive terms. He served through the Black Hawk War as private, Adjutant and Captain. In 1833 he removed to Belleville, and, in 1834, was defeated for Congress by Governor Reynolds, whom he, in turn, defeated in 1836. Two years later Reynolds again defeated him for the same position, and, in 1840, he was elected State Senator. In 1841 he was the Democratic nominee for Governor. The election was held in August, 1842, but, in May preceding, he died at his home in Belleville. His place on the ticket was filled by Thomas Ford, who was elected.—William H. (Snyder), son of the preceding, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., July 12, 1825; educated at McKendree College, studied law with Lieutenant-Governor Koerner, and was admitted to practice in 1845; also served for a time as Postmaster of the city of Belleville, and, during the Mexican War, as First-Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Fifth Illinois Volunteers. From 1850 to '54 he represented his county in the Legislature; in 1855 was appointed, by Governor Matteson, State's Attorney, which position he filled for two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of Secretary of State in 1856, and, in 1857, was elected a Judge of the Twenty-fourth Circuit, was re-elected for the Third Circuit in '73, '79 and '85. He was also a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 24, 1892.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, a State charitable institution, founded by act of the Legislature in 1885, and located at Quincy, Adams County. The object of its establishment was to provide a comfortable home for such disabled or dependent veterans of the United States land or naval forces as had honorably served during the Civil War. It was opened for the reception of veterans on March 3, 1887, the first cost of site and buildings having been about $350,000. The total number of inmates admitted up to June 30, 1894, was 2,813; the number in attendance during the two previous years 988, and the whole number present on Nov. 10, 1894, 1,088. The value of property at that time was $393,636.08. Considerable appropriations have been made for additions to the buildings at subsequent sessions of the Legislature. The General Government pays to the State $100 per year for each veteran supported at the Home.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' HOME, ILLINOIS, an institution, created by act of 1865, for the maintenance and education of children of deceased soldiers of the Civil War. An eighty-acre tract, one mile north of Normal, was selected as the site, and the first principal building was completed and opened for the admission of beneficiaries on June 1, 1869. Its first cost was $135,000, the site having been donated. Repairs and the construction of new buildings, from time to time, have considerably increased this sum. In 1875 the benefits of the institution were extended, by legislative enactment, to the children of soldiers who had died after the close of the war. The aggregate number of inmates, in 1894, was 572, of whom 323 were males and 249 females.

SOLDIERS' WIDOWS' HOME. Provision was made for the establishment of this institution by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly, in an act, approved, June 13, 1895, appropriating $20,000 for the purchase of a site, the erection of buildings and furnishing the same. It is designed for the reception and care of the mothers, wives, widows and daughters of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors, in the United States service, as may have died, or may be physically or mentally unable to provide for the families naturally dependent on them, provided that such persons have been residents of the State for at least one year previous to admission, and are without means or ability for self-support.

The affairs of the Home are managed by a board of five trustees, of whom two are men and three women, the former to be members of the Grand Army of the Republic and of different political parties, and the latter members of the Women's Relief Corps of this State. The institution was located at Wilmington, occupying a site of seventeen acres, where it was formally opened in a house of eighteen rooms, March 11, 1896, with twenty-six applications for admittance. The plan contemplates an early enlargement by the erection of additional cottages.

SORENTO, a village of Bond County, at the intersection of the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railways, 14 miles southeast of Litchfield; has a bank and a newspaper. Its interests are agricultural and mining. Pop. (1890), 538; (1900), 1,000.

SOULARD, James Gaston, pioneer, born of French ancestry in St. Louis, Mo., July 15, 1798; resided there until 1821, when, having married the daughter of a soldier of the Revolution, he received an appointment at Fort Snelling, near the present city of St. Paul, then under command of Col. Snelling, who was his wife's brother-in-law. The Fort was reached after a tedious journey by flat-boat and overland, late in the fall of 1821, his wife accompanying him. Three years later they returned to St. Louis, where, being an engineer, he was engaged for several years in surveying. In 1827 he removed with his family to Galena, for the next six years had charge of a store of the Gratiot Brothers, early business men of that locality. Towards the close of this period he received the appointment of County Recorder, also holding the position of County Surveyor and Postmaster of Galena at the same time. His later years were devoted to farming and horticulture, his death taking place, Sept. 17, 1878. Mr. Soulard was probably the first man to engage in freighting between Galena and Chicago. "The Galena Advertiser" of Sept. 14, 1829, makes mention of a wagon-load of lead sent by him to Chicago, his team taking back a load of salt, the paper remarking: "This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi River to Chicago." Great results were predicted from the exchange of commodities between the lake and the lead mine district. — Mrs. Eliza M. Hunt (Soulard), wife of the preceding, was born at Detroit, Dec. 18, 1804, her father being Col. Thomas A. Hunt, who had taken part in the Battle of Bunker Hill and remained in the army until his death, at St. Louis, in 1807. His descendants have maintained their connection with the army ever since, a son being a prominent artillery officer at the Battle of Gettysburg. Mrs. Soular was married at St. Louis, in 1820, and survive her husband some sixteen years, dying at Galena August 11, 1894. She had resided in Galena nearly seventy years, and at the date of her death, in the 90th year of her age, she was that city's oldest resident.

SOUTH ELGIN, a village of Kane County, near the city of Elgin. Population (1900), 515.

SOUTHERN COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, located at Albion, Edwards County, incorporated in 1891; had a faculty of ten teachers with 219 pupils (1897-98)—about equally male and female. Besides classical, scientific, normal, music and fine arts departments, instruction is given in preparatory studies and business education. Its property is valued at $16,500.

SOUTHERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, located at Anna, Union County, founded by act of the Legislature in 1869. The original site comprised 290 acres and cost a little more than $22,000, of which one-fourth was donated by citizens of the county. The construction of buildings was begun in 1869, but it was not until March, 1875, that the north wing (the first completed) was ready for occupancy. Other portions were completed a year later. The Trustees purchased 160 additional acres in 1883. The first cost (up to September, 1876) was nearly $635,000. In 1881 one wing of the main building was destroyed by fire, and was subsequently rebuilt; the patients being, meanwhile, cared for in temporary wooden barracks. The total value of lands and buildings belonging to the State, June 30, 1894, was estimated at $738,580, and, of property of all sorts, at $833,700. The wooden barracks were later converted into a permanent ward, additions made to the main buildings, a detached building for the accommodation of 300 patients erected, numerous outbuildings put up and general improvements made. A second fire on the night of Jan. 3, 1895, destroyed a large part of the main building, inflicting a loss upon the State of $175,000. Provision was made for rebuilding by the Legislature of that year. The institution has capacity for about 750 patients.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY, established in 1869, and located, after competitive bidding, at Carbondale, which offered lands and bonds at first estimated to be of the value of $229,000, but which later depreciated, through shrinkage, to $75,000. Construction was commenced in May, 1870, and the first or main building was completed and appropriately dedicated in July, 1874. Its cost was $265,000, but it was destroyed by fire, Nov. 26, 1883. In February, 1887, a new structure was completed at a cost of $150,000. Two normal courses of instruction are given—classical and scientific—each extending over a period of four years. The conditions of admission require that the pupil shall be 16 years of age, and shall possess the qualifications enabling him to pass examination for a second-grade teacher's certificate. Those unable to do so may enter a preparatory department for six months. Pupils who pledge themselves to teach in the public schools, not less than half the time of their attendance at the University, receive free tuition with a small charge for incidentals, while others pay a tuition fee. The number of students in attendance for the year 1897-98 was 720, coming from forty-seven counties, chiefly in the southern half of the State, with representatives from eight other States. The teaching faculty for the same year consisted, besides the President, of sixteen instructors in the various departments, of whom five were ladies and eleven gentlemen.

SOUTHERN PENITENTIARY, THE, located near Chester, on the Mississippi River. Its erection was rendered necessary by the overcrowding of the Northern Penitentiary. (See Northern Penitentiary.) The law providing for its establishment required the Commissioners to select a site convenient of access, adjacent to stone and timber, and having a high elevation, with a never failing supply of water. In 1877, 122 acres were purchased at Chester, and the erection of buildings commenced. The first appropriation was of $200,000, and $300,000 was added in 1879. By March, 1878, 200 convicts were received, and their labor was utilized in the completion of the buildings, which are constructed upon approved modern principles. The prison receives convicts sent from the southern portion of the State, and has accommodation for some 1,200 prisoners. In connection with this penitentiary is an asylum for insane convicts, the erection of which was provided for by the Legislature in 1889.

SOUTH GROVE, a village of De Kalb County. Population (1890), 730.

SPALDING, Jesse, manufacturer. Collector of Customs and Street Railway President, was born at Athens, Bradford County, Pa., April 15, 1833; early commenced lumbering on the Susquehanna, and, at 23, began dealing on his own account. In 1857 he removed to Chicago, and soon after bought the property of the New York Lumber Company at the mouth of the Menominee River in Wisconsin, where, with different partners, and finally practically alone, he has carried on the business of lumber manufacture on a large scale ever since. In 1881 he was appointed, by President Arthur, Collector of the Port of Chicago, and, in 1889, received from President Harrison an appointment as one of the Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railway. Mr. Spalding was a zealous supporter of the Government during the War of the Rebellion and rendered valuable aid in the construction and equipment of Camp Douglas and the barracks at Chicago for the returning soldiers, receiving Auditor's warrants in payment, when no funds in the State treasury were available for the purpose. He was associated with William B. Ogden and others in the project for connecting Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay by a ship canal, which was completed in 1882, and, on the death of Mr. Ogden, succeeded to the Presidency of the Canal Company, serving until 1893, when the canal was turned over to the General Government. He has also been identified with many other public enterprises intimately connected with the development and prosperity of Chicago, and, in July, 1899, became President of the Chicago Union Traction Company, having control of the North and West Chicago Street Railway Systems.

SPALDING, John Lancaster, Catholic Bishop, was born in Lebanon, Ky., June 2, 1840; educated in the United States and in Europe, ordained a priest in the Catholic Church in 1863, and thereupon attached to the cathedral at Louisville, as assistant. In 1869 he organized a congregation of colored people, and built for their use the Church of St. Augustine, having been assigned to that parish as pastor. Soon afterwards he was appointed Secretary to the Bishop and made Chancellor of the Diocese. In 1873 he was transferred from Louisville to New York, where he was attached to the missionary parish of St. Michael's. He had, by this time, achieved no little fame as a pulpit orator and lecturer. When the diocese of Peoria, Ill., was created, in 1877, the choice of the Pope fell upon him for the new see, and he was consecrated Bishop, on May 1 of that year, by Cardinal McCloskey at New York. His administration has been characterized by both energy and success. He has devoted much attention to the subject of emigration, and has brought about the founding of many new settlements in the far West. He was also largely instrumental in bringing about the founding of the Catholic University at Washington. He is a frequent contributor to the reviews, and the author of a number of religious works.

SPANISH INVASION OF ILLINOIS. In the month of June, 1779, soon after the declaration of war between Spain and Great Britain, an expedition was organized in Canada, to attack the Spanish posts along the Mississippi. Simultaneously, a force was to be dispatched from Pensacola against New Orleans, then commanded by a young Spanish Colonel, Don Bernardo de Galvez. Secret instructions had been sent to British Commandants, all through the Western country, to co-operate with both expeditions. De Galvez, having learned of the scheme through intercepted letters, resolved to forestall the attack by becoming the assailant. At the head of a force of 670 men, he set out and captured Baton Rouge, Fort Manchac and Natchez, almost without opposition. The British in Canada, being ignorant of what had been going on in the South, in February following dispatched a force from Mackinac to support the expedition from Pensacola, and, incidentally, to subdue the American rebels while en route. Cahokia and Kaskaskia were contemplated points of attack, as well as the Spanish forts at St. Louis and St. Genevieve. This movement was planned by Capt. Patrick Sinclair, commandant at Mackinac, but Captain Hesse was placed in charge of the expedition, which numbered some 750 men, including a force of Indians led by a chief named Wabasha. The British arrived before St. Louis, early on the morning of May 26, 1780, taking the Spaniards by surprise. Meanwhile Col. George Rogers Clark, having been apprised of the project, arrived at Cahokia from the falls of the Ohio, twenty-four hours in advance of the attack, his presence and readiness to co-operate with the Spanish, no doubt, contributing to the defeat of the expedition. The accounts of what followed are conflicting, the number of killed on the St. Louis shore being variously estimated from seven or eight to sixty-eight—the last being the estimate of Capt. Sinclair in his official report. All agree, however, that the invading party was forced to retreat in great haste. Colonel Montgomery, who had been in command at Cahokia, with a force of 350 and a party of Spanish allies, pursued the retreating invaders as far as the Rock River, destroying many Indian villages on the way. This movement on the part of the British served as a pretext for an attempted reprisal, undertaken by the Spaniards, with the aid of a number of Cahokians, early in 1781. Starting early in January, this latter expedition crossed Illinois, with the design of attacking Fort St. Joseph, at the head of Lake Michigan, which had been captured from the English by Thomas Brady and afterwards retaken. The Spaniards were commanded by Don Eugenio Pourre, and supported by a force of Cahokians and Indians. The fort was easily taken and the British flag replaced by the ensign of Spain. The affair was regarded as of but little moment, at the time, the post being evacuated in a few days, and the Spaniards returning to St. Louis. Yet it led to serious international complications, and the "conquest" was seriously urged by the Spanish ministry as giving that country a right to the territory traversed. This claim was supported by France before the signing of the Treaty of Paris, but was defeated, through the combined efforts of Messrs. Jay, Franklin and Adams, the American Commissioners in charge of the peace negotiations with England.

SPARKS, (Capt.) David R., manufacturer and legislator, was born near Lanesville, Ind., in 1823; in 1836, removed with his parents to Macoupin County, Ill.; in 1847, enlisted for the Mexican War, crossing the plains to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In 1850 he made the overland trip to California, returning the next year by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1855 he engaged in the milling business at Staunton, Macoupin County, but, in 1860, made a third trip across the plains in search of gold, taking a quartz-mill which was erected near where Central City, Colo., now is, and which was the second steam-engine in that region. He returned home in time to vote for Stephen A. Douglas for President, the same year, but became a stalwart Republican, two weeks later, when the advocates of secession began to develop their policy after the election of Lincoln. In 1861 he enlisted, under the call for 500,000 volunteers following the first battle of Bull Run, and was commissioned a Captain in the Third Illinois Cavalry (Col. Eugene A. Carr), serving two and a half years, during which time he took part in several hard-fought battles, and being present at the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of his service he became associated with his former partner in the erection of a large flouring mill at Litchfield, but, in 1869, the firm bought an extensive flouring mill at Alton, of which he became the principal owner in 1881, and which has since been greatly enlarged and improved, until it is now one of the most extensive establishments of its kind in the State. Capt. Sparks was elected to the House of Representatives in 1888, and to the State Senate in 1894, serving in the sessions of 1895 and '97; was also strongly supported as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Congress in 1896.

SPARKS, William A. J., ex-Congressman, was born near New Albany, Ind., Nov. 19, 1828, at 8 years of age was brought by his parents to Illinois, and shortly afterwards left an orphan. Thrown on his own resources, he found work upon a farm, his attendance at the district schools being limited to the winter months. Later, he passed through McKendree College, supporting himself, meanwhile, by teaching, graduating in 1850. He read law with Judge Sidney Breese, and was admitted to the bar in 1851. His first public office was that of Receiver of the Land Office at Edwardsville, to which he was appointed by President Pierce in 1853, remaining until 1856, when he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. The same year he was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1863-64, served in the State Senate for the unexpired term of James M. Rodgers, deceased. He was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention in 1868, and a Democratic Representative in Congress from 1875 to 1883. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Commissioner of the General Land Office in Washington, retiring, by resignation, in 1887. His home is at Carlyle.

SPARTA & ST. GENEVIEVE RAILROAD. (See Centralia & Chester Railroad.)

SPEED, Joshua Fry, merchant, and intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln; was educated in the local schools and at St. Joseph's College, Bardstown, Ky., after which he spent some time in a wholesale mercantile establishment in Louisville. About 1835 he came to Springfield, Ill., where he engaged in the mercantile business, later becoming the intimate friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, to whom he offered the privilege of sharing a room over his store, when Mr. Lincoln removed from New Salem to Springfield, in 1836. Mr. Speed returned to Kentucky in 1842, but the friendship with Mr. Lincoln, which was of the most devoted character, continued until the death of the latter. Having located in Jefferson County, Ky., Mr. Speed was elected to the Legislature in 1848, but was never again willing to accept office, though often solicited to do so. In 1851 he removed to Louisville, where he acquired a handsome fortune in the real-estate business. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1861, he heartily embraced the cause of the Union, and, during the war, was entrusted with many delicate and important duties in the interest of the Government, by Mr. Lincoln, whom he frequently visited in Washington. His death occurred at Louisville, May 29, 1882.—JAMES (Speed), an older brother of the preceding, was a prominent Unionist of Kentucky, and, after the war, a leading Republican of that State, serving as delegate to the National Republican Conventions of 1872 and 1876. In 1864 he was appointed Attorney-General by Mr. Lincoln and served until 1866, when he resigned on account of disagreement with President Johnson. He died in 1887, at the age of 75 years.

SPOON RIVER, rises in Bureau County, flows southward through Stark County into Peoria, thence southwest through Knox, and to the south and southeast, through Fulton County, entering the Illinois River opposite Havana. It is about 150 miles long.

SPRINGER, (Rev.) Francis, D.D., educator and Army Chaplain, born in Franklin County, Pa., March 19, 1810; was left an orphan at an early age, and educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg; entered the Lutheran ministry in 1836, and, in 1839, removed to Springfield, Ill., where he preached and taught school; in 1847 became President of Hillsboro College, which, in 1852, was removed to Springfield and became Illinois State University, now known as Concordia Seminary. Later, he served for a time as Superintendent of Schools for the city of Springfield, but, in September, 1861, resigned to accept the Chaplaincy of the Tenth Illinois Cavalry; by successive resignations and appointments, held the positions of Chaplain of the First Arkansas Infantry (1863-64) and Post Chaplain at Fort Smith, Ark., serving in the latter position until April, 1867, when he was commissioned Chaplain of the United States Army. This position he resigned while stationed at Fort Harker, Kan., August 23, 1867. During a considerable part of his incumbency as Chaplain at Fort Smith, he acted as Agent of the Bureau of Refugees and Freedmen, performing important service in caring for non-combatants rendered homeless by the vicissitudes of war. After the war he served, for a time, as Superintendent of Schools for Montgomery County, Ill.; was instrumental in the founding of Carthage (Ill.) College, and was a member of its Board of Control at the time of his death. He was elected Chaplain of the Illinois House of Representatives at the session of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly (1887), and Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois for two consecutive terms (1890-92). He was also member of the Stephenson Post, No. 30, G. A. R., at Springfield, and served as its Chaplain from January, 1884, to his death, which occurred at Springfield, Oct. 21, 1892.

SPRINGER, William McKendree, ex-Congressman, Justice of United States Court, was born in Sullivan County, Ind., May 30, 1836. In 1848 he removed with his parents to Jacksonville, Ill., was fitted for college in the public high school at Jacksonville, under the tuition of the late Dr. Bateman, entered Illinois College, remaining three years, when he removed to the Indiana State University, graduating there in 1858. The following year he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Logan County, but soon after removed to Springfield. He entered public life as Secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1862. In 1871-72 he represented Sangamon County in the Legislature, and, in 1874, was elected to Congress from the Thirteenth Illinois District as a Democrat. From that time until the close of the Fifty-third Congress (1895), he served in Congress continuously, and was recognized as one of the leaders of his party on the floor, being at the head of many important committees when that party was in the ascendancy, and a candidate for the Democratic caucus nomination for Speaker, in 1893. In 1894 he was the candidate of his party for Congress for the eleventh time, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, James A. Connolly. In 1895 President Cleveland appointed him United States District Judge for Indian Territory.

SPRINGFIELD, the State capital, and the county-seat of Sangamon County, situated five miles south of the Sangamon River and 185 miles southwest of Chicago; is an important railway center. The first settlement on the site of the present city was made by John Kelly in 1819. On April 10, 1831, it was selected, by the first Board of County Commissioners, as the temporary county-seat of Sangamon County, the organization of which had been authorized by act of the Legislature in January previous, and the name Springfield was given to it. In 1833 the selection was made permanent. The latter year the first sale of lands took place, the original site being entered by Pascal P. Enos, Elijah Hles and Thomas Cox. The town was platted about the same time, and the name "Calhoun" was given to a section in the northwest quarter of the present city—this being the "hey-day" of the South Carolina statesman's greatest popularity—but the change was not popularly accepted, and the new name was soon dropped. It was incorporated as a town, April 2, 1832, and as a city, April 6, 1840; and re-incorporated, under the general, law in 1882. It was made the State capital by act of the Legislature, passed at the session of 1837, which went into effect, July 4, 1839, and the Legislature first convened there in December of the latter year. The general surface is flat, though there is rolling ground to the west. The city has excellent water-works, a paid fire-department, six banks, electric street railways, gas and electric lighting, commodious hotels, fine churches, numerous handsome residences, beautiful parks, thorough sewerage, and is one of the best paved and handsomest cities in the State. The city proper, in 1890, contained an area of four square miles, but has since been enlarged by the annexation of the following suburbs: North Springfield, April 7, 1891; West Springfield, Jan. 4, 1898; and South Springfield and the village of Laurel, April 5, 1898. These additions give to the present city an area of 5.84 square miles. The population of the original city, according to the census of 1880, was 19,743, and, in 1890, 24,963, while that of the annexed suburbs, at the last census, was 2,109—making a total of 29,072. The latest school census (1898) showed a total population of 33,375—population by census (1900), 34,159. Besides the State House, the city has a handsome United States Government Building for United States Court and post-office purposes, a county courthouse (the former State capital), a city hall and (State) Executive Mansion. Springfield was the home of Abraham Lincoln. His former residence has been donated to the State, and his tomb and monument are in the beautiful Oak Ridge cemetery, adjoining the city. Springfield is an important coal-mining center, and has many important industries, notably a watch factory, rolling mills, and extensive manufactories of agricultural implements and furniture. It is also the permanent location of the State Fairs, for which extensive buildings have been erected on the Fair Grounds north of the city. There are three daily papers—two morning and one evening—published here, besides various other publications. Pop. (1900), 34,159.

SPRING VALLEY, an incorporated city in Bureau County, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and the Toluca, Marquette & Northern Railways, 100 miles southwest of Chicago. It lies in a coal-mining region and has important manufacturing interests as well. It has two banks, electric street and interurban railways, and two newspapers. Population (1890), 3,837; (1900), 6,214.

ST. AGATHA'S SCHOOL, an institution for young ladies, at Springfield, under the patronage of the Bishop of the Episcopal Church, incorporated in 1889. It has a faculty of eight teachers giving instruction in the preparatory and higher branches, including music and fine arts. It reported fifty-five pupils in 1894, and real estate valued at $15,000.

ST. ALBAN'S ACADEMY, a boys' and young men's school at Knoxville, Ill., incorporated in 1896 under the auspices of the Episcopal Church; in 1898 had a faculty of seven teachers, with forty-five pupils, and property valued at $61,100, of which $54,000 was real estate. Instruction is given in the classical and scientific branches, besides music and preparatory studies.

ST. ANNE, a village of Kankakee County, at the crossing of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Cleveland, Cincinnati Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 60 miles south of Chicago. The town has two banks, tile and brick factory, and a weekly newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,000.

ST. CHARLES, a city in Kane County, on both sides of Fox River, at intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railways; 38 miles west of Chicago and 10 miles south of Elgin. The river furnishes excellent water-power, which is being utilized by a number of important manufacturing enterprises. The city is connected with Chicago and many towns in the Fox River valley by interurban electric trolley lines; is also the seat of the State Home for Boys. Pop. (1890), 1,690; (1900), 2,675.

ST. CLAIR, Arthur, first Governor of the Northwest Territory, was born of titled ancestry at Thurso, Scotland, in 1734; came to America in 1757 as an ensign, having purchased his commission, participated in the capture of Louisbourg, Canada, in 1758, and fought under Wolfe at Quebec. In 1764 he settled in Pennsylvania, where he amassed a moderate fortune, and became prominent in public affairs. He served with distinction during the Revolutionary War, rising to the rank of Major-General, and succeeding General Gates in command at Ticonderoga, but, later, was censured by Washington for his hasty evacuation of the post, though finally vindicated by a military court. His Revolutionary record, however, was generally good, and even distinguished. He represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, and presided over that body in 1787. He served as Governor of the Northwest Territory (including the present State of Illinois) from 1789 to 1802. As an executive he was not successful, being unpopular because of his arbitrariness. In November, 1791, he suffered a serious defeat by the Indians in the valley between the Miami and the Wabash. In this campaign he was badly crippled by the gout, and had to be carried on a litter; he was again vindicated by a Congressional investigation. His first visit to the Illinois Country was made in 1790, when he organized St. Clair County, which was named in his honor. In 1802 President Jefferson removed him from the governorship of Ohio Territory, of which he had continued to be the Governor after its separation from Indiana and Illinois. The remainder of his life was spent in comparative penury. Shortly before his decease, he was granted an annuity by the Pennsylvania Legislature and by Congress. Died, at Greensburg, Pa., August 31, 1818.

ST. CLAIR COUNTY, the first county organized within the territory comprised in the present State of Illinois—the whole region west of the Ohio River having been first placed under civil jurisdiction, under the name of "Illinois County," by an act of the Virginia House of Delegates, passed in October, 1778, a few months after the capture of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark. (See Illinois; also Clark, George Rogers.) St. Clair County was finally set off by an order of Gov. Arthur St. Clair, on occasion of his first visit to the "Illinois Country," in April, 1790—more than two years after his assumption of the duties of Governor of the Northwest Territory, which then comprehended the "Illinois Country" as well as the whole region within the present States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin. Governor St. Clair's order, which bears date, April 27, 1790, defines the boundaries of the new county—which took his own name—as follows: "Beginning at the mouth of the Little Michillimackinack River, running thence southerly in a direct line to the mouth of the little river above Fort Massac upon the Ohio River; thence with the said river to its junction with the Mississippi; thence up the Mississippi to the mouth of the Illinois, and so up the Illinois River to the place of beginning, with all the adjacent islands of said rivers, Illinois and Mississippi." The "Little Michillimackanack," the initial point mentioned in this description—also variously spelled "Makina" and "Mackinaw," the latter being the name by which the stream is now known—empties into the Illinois River on the south side a few miles below Pekin, in Tazewell County. The boundaries of St. Clair County, as given by Gov. St. Clair, indicate the imperfect knowledge of the topography of the "Illinois Country" existing in that day, as a line drawn south from the mouth of the Mackinaw River, instead of reaching the Ohio "above Fort Massac," would have followed the longitude of the present city of Springfield, striking the Mississippi about the northwestern corner of Jackson County, twenty-five miles west of the mouth of the Ohio. The object of Governor St. Clair's order was, of course, to include the settled portions of the Illinois Country in the new county; and, if it had had the effect intended, the eastern border of the county would have followed a line some fifty miles farther eastward, along the eastern border of Marion, Jefferson, Franklin, Williamson and Johnson Counties, reaching the Ohio River about the present site of Metropolis City in Massac County, and embracing about one-half of the area of the present State of Illinois. For all practical purposes it embraced all the Illinois Country, as it included that portion in which the white settlements were located. (See St. Clair, Arthur; also Illinois Country.) The early records of St. Clair County are in the French language; its first settlers and its early civilization were French, and the first church to inculcate the doctrine of Christianity was the Roman Catholic. The first proceedings in court under the common law were had in 1796. The first Justices of the Peace were appointed in 1807, and, as there was no penitentiary, the whipping-post and pillory played an important part in the code of penalties, these punishments being impartially meted out as late as the time of Judge (afterwards Governor) Reynolds, to "the lame, the halt and the blind," for such offenses as the larceny of a silk handkerchief. At first three places—Cahokia, Prairie du Rocher and Kaskaskia—were named as county-seats by Governor St. Clair; but Randolph County having been set off in 1895, Cahokia became the county-seat of the older county, so remaining until 1813, when Belleville was selected as the seat of justice. At that time it was a mere cornfield owned by George Blair, although settlements had previously been established in Ridge Prairie and at Badgley. Judge Jesse B. Thomas held his first court in a log-cabin, but a rude court house was erected in 1814, and, the same year, George E. Blair established a hostelry, Joseph Kerr opened a store, and, in 1817, additional improvements were inaugurated by Daniel Murray and others, from Baltimore. John H. Dennis and the Mitchells and Wests (from Virginia) settled soon afterward, becoming farmers and mechanics. Belleville was incorporated in 1819. In 1825 Governor Edwards bought the large landed interests of Etienne Personeau, a large French land-owner, ordered a new survey of the town and infused fresh life into its development. Settlers began to arrive in large numbers, mainly Virginians, who brought with them their slaves, the right to hold which was, for many years, a fruitful and perennial source of strife. Emigrants from Germany began to arrive at an early day, and now a large proportion of the population of Belleville and St. Clair County is made up of that nationality. The county, as at present organized, lies on the western border of the south half of the State, immediately opposite St. Louis, and comprises some 680 square miles. Three-fourths of it are underlaid by a vein of coal, six to eight feet thick, and about one hundred feet below the surface. Considerable wheat is raised. The principal towns are Belleville, East St. Louis, Lebanon and Mascoutah. Population of the county (1880), 61,806; (1890), 66,571; (1900), 86,685.

ST. JOHN, an incorporated village of Perry County, on the Illinois Central Railway, one mile north of Duquoin. Coal is mined and salt manufactured here. Population about 500.

ST. JOSEPH, a village of Champaign County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 10 miles east of Champaign; has interurban railroad connection. Pop. (1900), 637.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOSPITAL, (Chicago), founded in 1860, by the Sisters of Charity. Having been destroyed in the fire of 1871, it was rebuilt in the following year. In 1892 it was reconstructed, enlarged and made thoroughly modern in its appointments. It can accommodate about 250 patients. The Sisters attend to the nursing, and conduct the domestic and financial affairs. The medical staff comprises ten physicians and surgeons, among whom are some of the most eminent in Chicago.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & CHICAGO RAILROAD.
(See Chicago & Alton Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS, ALTON & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD, a corporation formerly operating an extensive system of railroads in Illinois. The Terre Haute & Alton Railroad Company (the original corporation) was chartered in January, 1851, work begun in 1852, and the main line from Terre Haute to Alton (172.5 miles) completed, March 1, 1856. The Belleville & Illinoistown branch (from Belleville to East St. Louis) was chartered in 1852, and completed between the points named in the title, in the fall of 1854. This corporation secured authority to construct an extension from Illinoistown (now East St. Louis) to Alton, which was completed in October, 1856, giving the first railroad connection between Alton & St. Louis. Simultaneously with this, these two roads (the Terre Haute & Alton and the Belleville & Illinoistown) were consolidated under a single charter by special act of the Legislature in February, 1854, the consolidated line taking the name of the Terre Haute, Alton & St. Louis Railroad. Subsequently the road became financially embarrassed, was sold under foreclosure and reorganized, in 1862, under the name of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad. June 1, 1867, the main line (from Terre Haute to St. Louis) was leased for ninety-nine years to the Indianapolis & St. Louis Railway Company (an Indiana corporation) guaranteed by certain other lines, but the lease was subsequently broken by the insolvency of the lessee and some of the guarantors. The Indianapolis & St. Louis went into the hands of a receiver in 1882, and was sold under foreclosure, in July of the same year, its interest being absorbed by the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, by which the main line is now operated. The properties officially reported as remaining in the hands of the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, June 30, 1895, beside the Belleville Branch (14.40 miles), included the following leased and subsidiary lines: Belleville & Southern Illinois—"Cairo Short Line" (56.40 miles); Belleville & Eldorado, (50.20 miles); Belleville & Carondelet (17.30 miles); St. Louis Southern and branches (47.27 miles), and Chicago, St. Louis & Paducah Railway (53.50 miles). All these have been leased, since the close of the fiscal year 1895, to the Illinois Central. (For sketches of these several roads see headings of each.)

ST. LOUIS, CHICAGO & ST. PAUL RAILROAD, (Bluff Line), a line running from Springfield to Granite City, Ill., (opposite St. Louis), 102.1 miles, with a branch from Lock Haven to Grafton, Ill., 8.4 miles—total length of line in Illinois, 110.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge, laid with 56 to 70-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The road was originally incorporated under the name of the St. Louis, Jerseyville & Springfield Railroad, built from Bates to Grafton in 1882, and absorbed by the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company; was surrendered by the receivers of the latter in 1886, and passed under the control of the bond-holders, by whom it was transferred to a corporation known as the St. Louis & Central Illinois Railroad Company. In June, 1887, the St. Louis, Alton & Springfield Railroad Company was organized, with power to build extensions from Newbern to Alton, and from Bates to Springfield, which was done. In October, 1890, a receiver was appointed, followed by a reorganization under the present name (St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul). Default was made on the interest and, in June following, it was again placed in the hands of receivers, by whom it was operated until 1898. The total earnings and income for the fiscal year 1897-98 were $318,845, operating expenses, $873,270; total capitalization, $4,853,526, of which, $1,500,000 was in the form of stock and $1,235,000 in income bonds.

ST. LOUIS, INDIANAPOLIS & EASTERN RAILROAD, a railroad line 90 miles in length, extending from Switz City, Ind., to Effingham, Ill.—56 miles being within the State of Illinois. It is of standard gauge and the track laid chiefly with iron rails.—(HISTORY.) The original corporation was chartered in 1860 as the Springfield, Effingham & Quincy Railway Company. It was built as a narrow-gauge line by the Cincinnati, Effingham & Quincy Construction Company which went into the hands of a receiver in 1878. The road was completed by the receiver in 1880, and, in 1885, restored to the Construction Company by the discharge of the receiver. For a short time it was operated in connection with the Bloomfield Railroad of Indiana, but was reorganized in 1886 as the Indiana & Illinois Southern Railroad, and the gauge changed to standard in 1887. Having made default in the payment of interest, it was sold under foreclosure in 1890 and purchased in the interest of the bond-holders, by whom it was conveyed to the St. Louis, Indianapolis & Eastern Railroad Company, in whose name the line is operated. Its business is limited, and chiefly local. The total earnings in 1898 were $65,583 and the expenditures $69,112. Its capital stock was $740,900; bonded debt, $978,000, other indebtedness increasing the total capital investment to $1,816,736.

ST. LOUIS, PEORIA & NORTHERN RAILWAY, known as "Peoria Short Line," a corporation organized, Feb. 29, 1896, to take over and unite the properties of the St. Louis & Eastern, the St. Louis & Peoria and the North and South Railways, and to extend the same due north from Springfield to Peoria (60 miles), and thence to Fulton or East Clinton, Ill., on the Upper Mississippi. The line extends from Springfield to Glen Carbon (84.46 miles), with trackage facilities over the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroad and the Merchants' Terminal Bridge (18 miles) to St. Louis.—(HISTORY.) This road has been made up of three sections or divisions. (1) The initial section of the line was constructed under the name of the St. Louis & Chicago Railroad of Illinois, incorporated in 1885, and opened from Mount Olive to Alhambra in 1887. It passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure in 1889, and reorganized, in 1890, as the St. Louis & Peoria Railroad. The St. Louis & Eastern, chartered in 1889, built the line from Glen Carbon to Marine, which was opened in 1893; the following year, bought the St. Louis & Peoria line, and, in 1895, constructed the link (8 miles) between Alhambra and Marine. (3) The North & South Railroad Company of Illinois, organized in 1890, as successor to the St. Louis & Chicago Railway Company, proceeded in the construction of the line (50.46 miles) from Mt. Olive to Springfield, which was subsequently leased to the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, then under the management of the Jacksonville, Louisville & St. Louis Railway. The latter corporation having defaulted, the property passed into the hands of a receiver. By expiration of the lease in December, 1896, the property reverted to the proprietary Company, which took possession, Jan. 1, 1896. The St. Louis & Southeastern then bought the line outright, and it was incorporated as a part of the new organization under the name of the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern Railway, the North & South Railroad going out of existence. In May, 1899, the St. Louis, Peoria & Northern was sold to the reorganized Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, to be operated as a short line between Peoria & St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, ROCK ISLAND & CHICAGO RAILROAD. (See Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.)

ST. LOUIS SOUTHERN RAILROAD, a line running from Pinckneyville, Ill., via Murphysboro, to Carbondale. The company is also the lessee of the Carbondale & Shawneetown Railroad, extending from Carbondale to Marion, 17.5 miles—total, 50.5 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid with 56 and 60-pound steel rails. The company was organized in August, 1886, to succeed to the property of the St. Louis Coal Railroad (organized in 1879) and the St. Louis Central Railway; and was leased for 980 years from Dec. 1, 1886, to the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, at an annual rental equal to thirty per cent of the gross earnings, with a minimum guarantee of $32,000, which is sufficient to pay the interest on the first mortgage bonds. During the year 1896 this line passed under lease from the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad Company, into the hands of the Illinois Central Railroad Company.

ST. LOUIS, SPRINGFIELD & VINCENNES RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation organized in July, 1899, to take over the property of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway in the State of Illinois, known as the Ohio & Mississippi and the Springfield & Illinois Southeastern Railways—the former extending from Vincennes, Ind., to East St. Louis, and the latter from Beardstown to Shawneetown. The property was sold under foreclosure, at Cincinnati, July 10, 1899, and transferred, for purposes of reorganization, into the hands of the new corporation, July 28, 1899. (For history of the several lines see Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway.)

ST. LOUIS, VANDALIA & TERRE HAUTE RAILROAD. This line extends from East St. Louis eastward across the State, to the Indiana State line, a distance of 158.3 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company is the lessee. The track is single, of standard gauge, and laid with steel rails. The outstanding capital stock, in 1898, was $3,924,058, the bonded debt, $4,496,000, and the floating debt, $218,480.—(HISTORY.) The St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute Railroad was chartered in 1865, opened in 1870 and leased to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, for itself and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad.

ST. LOUIS & CAIRO RAILROAD, extends from East St. Louis to Cairo, Ill., 151.6 miles, with a branch from Millstadt Junction to High Prairie, 9 miles. The track is of standard gauge and laid mainly with steel rails.—(HISTORY.) The original charter was granted to the Cairo & St. Louis Railroad Company, Feb. 16, 1865, and the road opened, March 1, 1875. Subsequently it passed into the hands of a receiver, was sold under foreclosure, July 14, 1881, and was taken charge of by a new company under its present name, Feb. 1, 1882. On Feb. 1, 1886, it was leased to the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company for forty-five years, and now constitutes the Illinois Division of that line, giving it a connection with St. Louis. ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL, located in Chicago. It was chartered in 1865, its incorporators, in their initial statement, substantially declaring their object to be the establishment of a free hospital under the control of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which should be open to the afflicted poor, without distinction of race or creed. The hospital was opened on a small scale, but steadily increased until 1879, when re-incorporation was effected under the general law. In 1885 a new building was erected on land donated for that purpose, at a cost exceeding $150,000, exclusive of $20,000 for furnishing. While its primary object has been to afford accommodation, with medical and surgical care, gratuitously, to the needy poor, the institution also provides a considerable number of comfortable, well-furnished private rooms for patients who are able and willing to pay for the same. It contains an amphitheater for surgical operations and clinics, and has a free dispensary for out-patients. During the past few years important additions have been made, the number of beds increased, and provision made for a training school for nurses. The medical staff (1896) consists of thirteen physicians and surgeons and two pathologists.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL, a young ladies' seminary, under the patronage of the Episcopal Church, at Knoxville, Knox County, Ill.; was incorporated in 1858, in 1898 had a faculty of fourteen teachers, giving instruction to 113 pupils. The branches taught include the classics, the sciences, fine arts, music and preparatory studies. The institution has a library of 2,200 volumes, and owns property valued at $130,500, of which $100,000 is real estate.

STAGER, Anson, soldier and Telegraph Superintendent, was born in Ontario County, N. Y., April 20, 1825; at 16 years of age entered the service of Henry O'Reilly, a printer who afterwards became a pioneer in building telegraph lines, and with whom he became associated in various enterprises of this character. Having introduced several improvements in the construction of batteries and the arrangement of wires, he was, in 1852, made General Superintendent of the principal lines in the West, and, on the organization of the Western Union Company, was retained in this position. Early in the Civil War he was entrusted with the management of telegraph lines in Southern Ohio and along the Virginia border, and, in October following, was appointed General Superintendent of Government telegraphs, remaining in this position until September, 1868, his services being recognized in his promotion to a brevet Brigadier-Generalship of Volunteers. In 1869 General Stager returned to Chicago and, in addition to his duties as General Superintendent, engaged in the promotion of a number of enterprises connected with the manufacture of electrical appliances and other branches of the business. One of these was the consolidation of the telephone companies, of which he became President, as also of the Western Edison Electric Light Company, besides being a Director in several other corporations. Died, in Chicago, March 26, 1885.

STANDISH, John Van Ness, a lineal descendant of Capt. Miles Standish, the Pilgrim leader, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 26, 1825. His early years were spent on a farm, but a love of knowledge and books became his ruling passion, and he devoted several years to study, in the "Liberal Institute" at Lebanon, N. H., finally graduating, with the degree of A. B., at Norwich University in the class of 1847. Later, he received the degree of A.M., in due course, from his Alma Mater in 1855; that of Ph.D. from Knox College, in 1883, of LL.D. from St. Lawrence University in 1893, and from Norwich, in 1898. Dr. Standish chose the profession of a teacher, and has spent over fifty years in its pursuit in connection with private and public schools and the College, of which more than forty years were as Professor and President of Lombard University at Galesburg. He has also lectured and conducted Teachers' Institutes all over the State, and, in 1859, was elected President of the State Teachers' Association. He made three visits to the Old World—in 1879, '82-83, and '91-92—and, during his second trip, traveled over 40,000 miles, visiting nearly every country of Europe, including the "Land of the Midnight Sun," besides Northern Africa from the Mediterranean to the Desert of Sahara, Egypt, Palestine, Syria and Asia Minor. A lover of art, he has visited nearly all the principal museums and picture galleries of the world. In politics he is a Republican, and, in opposition to many college men, a firm believer in the doctrine of protection. In religion, he is a Universalist.

STAPP, James T. B., State Auditor, was born in Woodford County, Ky., April 13, 1804; at the age of 12 accompanied his widowed mother to Kaskaskia, Ill., where she settled; before he was 20 years old, was employed as a clerk in the office of the State Auditor, and, upon the resignation of that officer, was appointed his successor, being twice thereafter elected by the Legislature, serving nearly five years. He resigned the auditorship to accept the Presidency of the State Bank at Vandalia, which post he filled for thirteen years; acted as Aid-de-camp on Governor Reynolds' staff in the Black Hawk War, and served as Adjutant of the Third Illinois Volunteers during the war with Mexico. President Taylor appointed Mr. Stapp Receiver of the United States Land Office at Vandalia, which office he held during the Fillmore administration, resigning in 1855. Two years later he removed to Decatur, where he continued to reside until his death in 1876. A handsome Methodist chapel, erected by him in that city, bears his name.

STARK COUNTY, an interior county in the northern half of the State, lying west of the Illinois River; has an area of 290 square miles. It has a rich, alluvial soil, well watered by numerous small streams. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, and the chief towns are Toulon and Wyoming. The county was erected from Putnam and Knox in 1839, and named in honor of General Stark, of Revolutionary fame. The earliest settler was Isaac B. Essex, who built a cabin on Spoon River, in 1828, and gave his name to a township. Of other pioneer families, the Buswells, Smiths, Spencers and Eastmans came from New England; the Thomases, Moores, Holgates, Fullers and Whittakers from Pennsylvania; the Coxes from Ohio; the Perrys and Parkers from Virginia; the McClanahans from Kentucky; the Hendersons from Tennessee; the Lees and Hazens from New Jersey; the Halls from England, and the Turnbells and Olivers from Scotland. The pioneer church was the Congregational at Toulon. Population (1880), 11,207; (1890), 9,982; (1900), 10,186.

STARVED ROCK, a celebrated rock or cliff on the south side of Illinois River, in La Salle County, upon which the French explorer, La Salle, and his lieutenant, Tonty, erected a fort in 1682, which they named Fort St. Louis. It was one mile north of the supposed location of the Indian village of La Vantum, the metropolis, so to speak, of the Illinois Indians about the time of the arrival of the first French explorers. The population of this village, in 1680, according to Father Membre, was some seven or eight thousand. Both La Vantum and Fort St. Louis were repeatedly attacked by the Iroquois. The Illinois were temporarily driven from La Vantum, but the French, for the time being, successfully defended their fortification. In 1702 the fort was abandoned as a military post, but continued to be used as a French trading-post until 1718, when it was burned by Indians. The Illinois were not again molested until 1722, when the Foxes made an unsuccessful attack upon them. The larger portion of the tribe, however, resolved to cast in their fortunes with other tribes on the Mississippi River. Those who remained fell an easy prey to the foes by whom they were surrounded. In 1769 they were attacked from the north by tribes who desired to avenge the murder of Pontiac. Finding themselves hard pressed, they betook themselves to the bluff where Fort St. Louis had formerly stood. Here they were besieged for twelve days, when, destitute of food or water, they made a gallant but hopeless sortie. According to a tradition handed down among the Indians, all were massacred by the besiegers in an attempt to escape by night, except one half-breed, who succeeded in evading his pursuers. This sanguinary catastrophe has given the rock its popular name. Elmer Baldwin, in his History of La Salle County (1877), says: "The bones of the victims lay scattered about the cliff in profusion after the settlement by the whites, and are still found mingled plentifully with the soil." (See La Salle, Robert Cavalier; Tonty; Fort St. Louis.)

STARNE, Alexander, Secretary of State and State Treasurer. was born in Philadelphia, Pa., Nov. 21, 1813; in the spring of 1836 removed to Illinois, settling at Griggsville, Pike County, where he opened a general store. From 1839 to '42 he served as Commissioner of Pike County, and, in the latter year, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly, and re-elected in 1844. Having, in the meanwhile, disposed of his store at Griggsville and removed to Pittsfield, he was appointed, by Judge Purple, Clerk of the Circuit Court, and elected to the same office for four years, when it was made elective. In 1852 he was elected Secretary of State, when he removed to Springfield, returning to Griggsville at the expiration of his term in 1857, to assume the Presidency of the old Hannibal and Naples Railroad (now a part of the Wabash system). He represented Pike and Brown Counties in the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and the same year was elected State Treasurer. He thereupon again removed to Springfield, where he resided until his death, being, with his sons, extensively engaged in coal mining. In 1870, and again in 1872, he was elected State Senator from Sangamon County. He died at Springfield, March 31, 1886.

STATE BANK OF ILLINOIS. The first legislation, having for its object the establishment of a bank within the territory which now constitutes the State of Illinois, was the passage, by the Territorial Legislature of 1816, of an act incorporating the "Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, with branches at Edwardsville and Kaskaskia." In the Second General Assembly of the State (1820) an act was passed, over the Governor's veto and in defiance of the adverse judgment of the Council of Revision, establishing a State Bank at Vandalia with branches at Shawneetown, Edwardsville, and Brownsville in Jackson County. This was, in effect, a rechartering of the banks at Shawneetown and Edwardsville. So far as the former is concerned, it seems to have been well managed; but the official conduct of the officers of the latter, on the basis of charges made by Governor Edwards in 1826, was made the subject of a legislative investigation, which (although it resulted in nothing) seems to have had some basis of fact, in view of the losses finally sustained in winding up its affairs—that of the General Government amounting to $54,000. Grave charges were made in this connection against men who were then, or afterwards became, prominent in State affairs, including one Justice of the Supreme Court and one (still later) a United States Senator. The experiment was disastrous, as, ten years later (1831), it was found necessary for the State to incur a debt of $100,000 to redeem the outstanding circulation. Influenced, however, by the popular demand for an increase in the "circulating medium," the State continued its experiment of becoming a stockholder in banks managed by its citizens, and accordingly we find it, in 1835, legislating in the same direction for the establishing of a central "Bank of Illinois" at Springfield, with branches at other points as might be required, not to exceed six in number. One of these branches was established at Vandalia and another at Chicago, furnishing the first banking institution of the latter city. Two years later, when the State was entering upon its scheme of internal improvement, laws were enacted increasing the capital stock of these banks to $4,000,000 in the aggregate. Following the example of similar institutions elsewhere, they suspended specie payments a few months later, but were protected by "stay laws" and other devices until 1842, when the internal improvement scheme having been finally abandoned, they fell in general collapse. The State ceased to be a stock-holder in 1843, and the banks were put in course of liquidation, though it required several years to complete the work.

STATE CAPITALS. The first State capital of Illinois was Kaskaskia, where the first Territorial Legislature convened, Nov. 25, 1812. At that time there were but five counties in the State—St. Clair and Randolph being the most important, and Kaskaskia being the county-seat of the latter. Illinois was admitted into the Union as a State in 1818, and the first Constitution provided that the seat of government should remain at Kaskaskia until removed by legislative enactment. That instrument, however, made it obligatory upon the Legislature, at its first session, to petition Congress for a grant of not more than four sections of land, on which should be erected a town, which should remain the seat of government for twenty years. The petition was duly presented and granted; and, in accordance with the power granted by the Constitution, a Board of five Commissioners selected the site of the present city of Vandalia, then a point in the wilderness twenty miles north of any settlement. But so great was the faith of speculators in the future of the proposed city, that town lots were soon selling at $100 to $780 each. The Commissioners, in obedience to law, erected a plain two-story frame building—scarcely more than a commodious shanty—to which the State offices were removed in December, 1820. This building was burned, Dec. 9, 1823, and a brick structure erected in its place. Later, when the question of a second removal of the capital began to be agitated, the citizens of Vandalia assumed the risk of erecting a new, brick State House, costing $16,000. Of this amount $6,000 was reimbursed by the Governor from the contingent fund, and the balance ($10,000) was appropriated in 1837, when the seat of government was removed to Springfield, by vote of the Tenth General Assembly on the fourth ballot. The other places receiving the principal vote at the time of the removal to Springfield, were Jacksonville, Vandalia, Peoria, Alton and Illiopolis—Springfield receiving the largest vote at each ballot. The law removing the capital appropriated $50,000 from the State Treasury, provided that a like amount should be raised by private subscription and guaranteed by bond, and that at least two acres of land should be donated as a site. Two State Houses have been erected at Springfield, the first cost of the present one (including furnishing) having been a little in excess of $4,000,000. Abraham Lincoln, who was a member of the Legislature from Sangamon County at the time, was an influential factor in securing the removal of the capital to Springfield.

STATE DEBT. The State debt, which proved so formidable a burden upon the State of Illinois for a generation, and, for a part of that period, seriously checked its prosperity, was the direct outgrowth of the internal improvement scheme entered upon in 1837. (See Internal Improvement Policy.) At the time this enterprise was undertaken the aggregate debt of the State was less than $400,000—accumulated within the preceding six years. Two years later (1838) it had increased to over $6,500,000, while the total valuation of real and personal property, for the purposes of taxation, was less than $60,000,000, and the aggregate receipts of the State treasury, for the same year, amounted to less than $150,000. At the same time, the disbursements, for the support of the State Government alone, had grown to more than twice the receipts. This disparity continued until the declining credit of the State forced upon the managers of public affairs an involuntary economy, when the means could no longer be secured for more lavish expenditures. The first bonds issued at the inception of the internal improvement scheme sold at a premium of 5 per cent, but rapidly declined until they were hawked in the markets of New York and London at a discount, in some cases falling into the hands of brokers who failed before completing their contracts, thus causing a direct loss to the State. If the internal improvement scheme was ill-advised, the time chosen to carry it into effect was most unfortunate, as it came simultaneously with the panic of 1837, rendering the disaster all the more complete. Of the various works undertaken by the State, only the Illinois & Michigan Canal brought a return, all the others resulting in more or less complete loss. The internal improvement scheme was abandoned in 1839-40, but not until State bonds exceeding $13,000,000 had been issued. For two years longer the State struggled with its embarrassments, increased by the failure of the State Bank in February, 1842, and, by that of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown, a few months later, with the proceeds of more than two and a half millions of the State's bonds in their possession. Thus left without credit, or means even of paying the accruing interest, there were those who regarded the State as hopelessly bankrupt, and advocated repudiation as the only means of escape. Better counsels prevailed, however; the Constitution of 1848 put the State on a basis of strict economy in the matter of salaries and general expenditures, with restrictions upon the Legislature in reference to incurring indebtedness, while the beneficent "two-mill tax" gave assurance to its creditors that its debts would be paid. While the growth of the State, in wealth and population, had previously been checked by the fear of excessive taxation, it now entered upon a new career of prosperity, in spite of its burdens—its increase in population, between 1850 and 1860, amounting to over 100 per cent. The movement of the State debt after 1840—when the internal improvement scheme was abandoned—chiefly by accretions of unpaid interest, has been estimated as follows: 1842, $15,637,950; 1844, $14,633,969; 1846, $16,389,817; 1848, $16,661,795. It reached its maximum in 1853—the first year of Governor Matteson's administration—when it was officially reported at $16,734,177. At this time the work of extinguishment began, and was prosecuted under successive administrations, except during the war, when the vast expense incurred in sending troops to the field caused an increase. During Governor Bissell's administration, the reduction amounted to over $3,000,000; during Oglesby's, to over five and a quarter million, besides two and a quarter million paid on interest. In 1880 the debt had been reduced to $281,059.11, and, before the close of 1882, it had been entirely extinguished, except a balance of $18,500 in bonds, which, having been called in years previously and never presented for

STATE GUARDIANS FOR GIRLS, a bureau organized for the care of female juvenile delinquents, by act of June 2, 1893. The Board consists of seven members, nominated by the Executive and confirmed by the Senate, and who constitute a body politic and corporate. Not more than two of the members may reside in the same Congressional District and, of the seven members, four must be women. (See also Home for Female Juvenile Offenders.) The term of office is six years.

STATE HOUSE, located at Springfield. Its construction was begun under an act passed by the Legislature in February, 1867, and completed in 1887. It stands in a park of about eight acres, donated to the State by the citizens of Springfield. A provision of the State Constitution of 1870 prohibited the expenditure of any sum in excess of $3,500,000 in the erection and furnishing of the building, without previous approval of such additional expenditure by the people. This amount proving insufficient, the Legislature, at its session of 1885, passed an act making an additional appropriation of $531,712, which having been approved by popular vote at the general election of 1886, the expenditure was made and the capitol completed during the following year, thus raising the total cost of construction and furnishing to a little in excess of $4,000,000. The building is cruciform as to its ground plan, and classic in its style of architecture; its extreme dimensions (including porticoes), from north to south, being 379 feet, and, from east to west, 286 feet. The walls are of dressed Joliet limestone, while the porticoes, which are spacious and lofty, are of sandstone, supported by polished columns of gray granite. The three stories of the building are surmounted by a Mansard roof, with two turrets and a central dome of stately dimensions. Its extreme height, to the top of the iron flag-staff, which rises from a lantern springing from the dome, is 364 feet.

STATE NORMAL UNIVERSITY, an institution for the education of teachers, organized under an act of the General Assembly, passed Feb. 18, 1857. This act placed the work of organization in the hands of a board of fifteen persons, which was styled "The Board of Education of the State of Illinois," and was constituted as follows: C. B. Denio of Jo Daviess County; Simeon Wright of Lee; Daniel Wilkins of McLean; Charles E. Hovey of Peoria; George P. Rex of Pike; Samuel W. Moulton of Shelby; John Gillespie of Jasper; George Bunsen of St. Clair; Wesley Sloan of Pope; Ninian W. Edwards of Sangamon; John R. Eden of Moultrie; Flavel Moseley and William Wells of Cook; Albert R. Shannon of White; and the Superintendent of Public Instruction, ex-officio. The object of the University, as defined in the organizing law, is to qualify teachers for the public schools of the State, and the course of instruction to be given embraces "the art of teaching, and all branches which pertain to a common school education; in the elements of the natural sciences, including agricultural chemistry, animal and vegetable physiology; in the fundamental laws of the United States and of the State of Illinois in regard to the rights and duties of citizens, and such other studies as the Board of Education may, from time to time, prescribe." Various cities competed for the location of the institution, Bloomington being finally selected, its bid, including 160 acres of land, being estimated as equivalent to $141,725. The corner-stone was laid on September 29, 1857, and the first building was ready for permanent occupancy in September, 1860. Previously, however, it had been sufficiently advanced to permit of its being used, and the first commencement exercises were held on June 29 of the latter year. Three years earlier, the academic department had been organized under the charge of Charles E. Hovey. The first cost, including furniture, etc., was not far from $200,000. Gratuitous instruction is given to two pupils from each county, and to three from each Senatorial District. The departments are: Grammar school, high school, normal department and model school, all of which are overcrowded. The whole number of students in attendance on the institution during the school year, 1897-98, was 1,197, of whom 891 were in the normal department and 306 in the practice school department, including representatives from 86 counties of the State, with a few pupils from other States on the payment of tuition. The teaching faculty (including the President and Librarian) for the same year, was made up of twenty-six members—twelve ladies and fourteen gentlemen. The expenditures for the year 1897-98 aggregated $47,636.92, against $66,528.69 for 1896-97. Nearly $22,000 of the amount expended during the latter year was on account of the construction of a gymnasium building.

STATE PROPERTY. The United States Census of 1890 gave the value of real and personal property belonging to the State as follows: Public lands, $328,000; buildings, $22,164,000; miscellaneous property, $2,650,000—total, $25,142,000. The land may be subdivided thus: Camp-grounds of the Illinois National Guard near Springfield (donated), $40,000; Illinois and Michigan Canal, $168,000; Illinois University lands, in Illinois (donated by the General Government), $41,000, in Minnesota (similarly donated), $79,000. The buildings comprise those connected with the charitable, penal and educational institutions of the State, besides the State Arsenal, two buildings for the use of the Appellate Courts (at Ottawa and Mount Vernon), the State House, the Executive Mansion, and locks and dams erected at Henry and Copperas Creek. Of the miscellaneous property, $120,000 represents the equipment of the Illinois National Guard; $1,959,000 the value of the movable property of public buildings; $550,000 the endowment fund of the University of Illinois; and $21,000 the movable property of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The figures given relative to the value of the public buildings include only the first appropriations for their erection. Considerable sums have since been expended upon some of them in repairs, enlargements and improvements.

STATE TREASURERS. The only Treasurer of Illinois during the Territorial period was John Thomas, who served from 1812 to 1818, and became the first incumbent under the State Government. Under the Constitution of 1818 the Treasurer was elected, biennially, by joint vote of the two Houses of the General Assembly; by the Constitution of 1848, this officer was made elective by the people for the same period, without limitations as to number of terms; under the Constitution of 1870, the manner of election and duration of term are unchanged, but the incumbent is ineligible to re-election, for two years from expiration of the term for which he may have been chosen. The following is a list of the State Treasurers, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each: John Thomas, 1818-19; Robert K. McLaughlin, 1819-23; Abner Field, 1823-27; James Hall, 1827-31; John Dement, 1831-36; Charles Gregory, 1836-37; John D. Whiteside, 1837-41; Milton Carpenter, 1841-48; John Moore, 1848-57; James Miller, 1857-59; William Butler, 1859-63; Alexander Starne, 1863-65; James H. Beveridge, 1865-67; George W. Smith, 1867-69; Erastus N. Bates, 1869-73; Edward Rutz, 1873-75; Thomas S. Ridgway, 1875-77; Edward Rutz, 1877-79; John C. Smith, 1879-81; Edward Rutz, 1881-83; John C. Smith, 1883-85; Jacob Gross,

STAUNTON, a village in the southeast corner of Macoupin County, on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways; is 36 miles northeast of St. Louis, and 14 miles southwest of Litchfield. Agriculture and coal-mining are the industries of the surrounding region. Staunton has two banks, eight churches and a weekly newspaper. Population (1880), 1,358; (1890), 2,209; (1900), 2,786.

STEEL PRODUCTION. In the manufacture of steel, Illinois has long ranked as the second State in the Union in the amount of its output, and, during the period between 1880 and 1890, the increase in production was 241 per cent. In 1880 there were but six steel works in the State; in 1890 these had increased to fourteen; and the production of steel of all kinds (in tons of 2,000 pounds) had risen from 254,569 tons to 868,250. Of the 3,837,039 tons of Bessemer steel ingots, or direct castings, produced in the United States in 1890, 22 per cent were turned out in Illinois, nearly all the steel produced in the State being made by that process. From the tonnage of ingots, as given above, Illinois produced 622,260 pounds of steel rails,—more than 30 per cent of the aggregate for the entire country. This fact is noteworthy, inasmuch as the competition in the manufacture of Bessemer steel rails, since 1880, has been so great that many railmills have converted their steel into forms other than rails, experience having proved their production to any considerable extent, during the past few years, unprofitable except in works favorably located for obtaining cheap raw material, or operated under the latest and most approved methods of manufacture. Open-hearth steel is no longer made in Illinois, but the manufacture of crucible steel is slightly increasing, the output in 1890 being 445 tons, as against 130 in 1880. For purposes requiring special grades of steel the product of the crucible process will be always in demand, but the high cost of manufacture prevents it, in a majority of instances, from successfully competing in price with the other processes mentioned.

STEPHENSON, Benjamin, pioneer and early politician, came to Illinois from Kentucky in 1809, and was appointed the first Sheriff of Randolph County by Governor Edwards under the Territorial Government; afterwards served as a Colonel of Illinois militia during the War of 1812; represented Illinois Territory as Delegate in Congress, 1814-16, and, on his retirement from Congress, became Register of the Land Office at Edwardsville, finally dying at Edwardsville—Col. James W. (Stephenson), a son of the preceding, was a soldier during the Black Hawk War, afterwards became a prominent politician in the northwestern part of the State, served as Register of the Land Office at Galena and, in 1838, received the Democratic nomination for Governor, but withdrew before the election.

STEPHENSON, (Dr.) Benjamin Franklin, physician and soldier, was born in Wayne County, Ill., Oct. 30, 1822, and accompanied his parents, in 1825, to Sangamon County, where the family settled. His early educational advantages were meager, and he did not study his profession (medicine) until after reaching his majority, graduating from Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1850. He began practice at Petersburg, but, in April, 1862, was mustered into the volunteer army as Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry. After a little over two years service he was mustered out in June, 1864, when he took up his residence in Springfield, and, for a year, was engaged in the drug business there. In 1865 he resumed professional practice. He lacked tenacity of purpose, however, was indifferent to money, and always willing to give his own services and orders for medicine to the poor. Hence, his practice was not lucrative. He was one of the leaders in the organization of the Grand Army of the Republic (which see), in connection with which he is most widely known; but his services in its cause failed to receive, during his lifetime, the recognition which they deserved, nor did the organization promptly flourish, as he had hoped. He finally returned with his family to Petersburg. Died, at Rock Creek, Menard County, Ill., August 30, 1871.

STEPHENSON COUNTY, a northwestern county, with an area of 560 square miles. The soil is rich, productive and well timbered. Fruit-culture and stock-raising are among the chief industries. Not until 1827 did the aborigines quit the locality, and the county was organized, ten years later, and named for Gen. Benjamin Stephenson. A man named Kirker, who had been in the employment of Colonel Gratiot as a lead-miner, near Galena, is said to have built the first cabin within the present limits of what was called Burr Oak Grove, and set himself up as an Indian-trader in 1826, but only remained a short time. He was followed, the next year, by Oliver

W. Kellogg, who took Kirker's place, built a more pretentious dwelling and became the first permanent settler. Later came William Waddams, the Montagues, Baker, Kilpatrick, Preston, the Goddards, and others whose names are linked with the county's early history. The first house in Freeport was built by William Baker. Organization was effected in 1837, the total poll being eighty-four votes. The earliest teacher was Nelson Martin, who is said to have taught a school of some twelve pupils, in a house which stood on the site of the present city of Freeport. Population (1880), 31,963; (1890), 31,338; (1900), 34,933.

STERLING, a flourishing city on the north bank of Rock River, in Whiteside County, 109 miles west of Chicago, 29 miles east of Clinton, Iowa, and 52 miles east-northeast of Rock Island. It has ample railway facilities, furnished by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Sterling & Peoria, and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. It contains fourteen churches, an opera house, high and grade schools, Carnegie library, Government postoffice building, three banks, electric street and interurban car lines, electric and gas lighting, water-works, paved streets and sidewalks, fire department and four newspaper offices, two issuing daily editions. It has fine water-power, and is an important manufacturing center, its works turning out agricultural implements, carriages, paper, barbed-wire, school furniture, burial caskets, pumps, sash, doors, etc. It also has the Sterling Iron Works, besides foundries and machine shops. The river here flows through charming scenery. Pop. (1890), 5,824; (1900), 6,309.

STEVENS, Bradford A., ex-Congressman, was born at Boscawen (afterwards Webster), N. H., Jan. 3, 1813. After attending schools in New Hampshire and at Montreal, he entered Dartmouth College, graduating therefrom in 1835. During the six years following, he devoted himself to teaching, at Hopkinsville, Ky., and New York City. In 1843 he removed to Bureau County, Ill., where he became a merchant and farmer. In 1868 he was chairman of the Board of Supervisors, and, in 1870, was elected to Congress, as an Independent Democrat, for the Fifth District.

STEVENSON, Adlai E., ex-Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Ky., Oct. 23, 1835. In 1852 he removed with his parents to Bloomington, McLean County, Ill., where the family settled; was educated at the Illinois Wesleyan University and at Centre College, Ky., was admitted to the bar in 1858 and began practice at Metamora, Woodford County, where he was Master in Chancery, 1861-65, and State's Attorney, 1865-69. In 1864 he was candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket. In 1869 he returned to Bloomington, where he has since resided. In 1874, and again in 1876, he was an unsuccessful candidate of his party for Congress, but was elected as a Green-back Democrat in 1878, though defeated in 1880 and 1882. In 1877 he was appointed by President Hayes a member of the Board of Visitors to West Point. During the first administration of President Cleveland (1885-89) he was First Assistant Postmaster General; was a member of the National Democratic Conventions of 1884 and 1892, being Chairman of the Illinois delegation the latter year. In 1892 he received his party's nomination for the Vice-Presidency, and was elected to that office, serving until 1897. Since retiring from office he has resumed his residence at Bloomington.

STEWART, Lewis, manufacturer and former Congressman, was born in Wayne County, Pa., Nov. 20, 1824, and received a common school education. At the age of 14 he accompanied his parents to Kendall County, Ill., where he afterwards resided, being engaged in farming and the manufacture of agricultural implements at Plano. He studied law but never practiced. In 1876 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket, being defeated by Shelby M. Cullom. In 1890 the Democrats of the Eighth Illinois District elected him to Congress. In 1892 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Robert A. Childs, by the narrow margin of 27 votes, and, in 1894, was again defeated, this time being pitted against Albert J. Hopkins. Mr. Stewart died at his home at Plano, August 26, 1896.

STEWARTSON, a town of Shelby County, at the intersection of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railway with the Altamont branch of the Wabash, 12 miles southeast of Shelbyville; is in a grain and lumber region; has a bank and a weekly paper. Population, (1900), 677.

STICKNEY, William H., pioneer lawyer, was born in Baltimore, Md., Nov. 9, 1809, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Cincinnati in 1831, and, in Illinois in 1834, being at that time a resident of Shawneetown; was elected State's Attorney by the Legislature, in 1839, for the circuit embracing some fourteen counties in the southern and southeastern part of the State; for a time also, about 1835-36, officiated as editor of "The Gallatin Democrat," and "The Illinois Advertiser," published at Shawneetown. In 1846

Mr. Stickney was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly from Gallatin County, and, twenty-eight years later—having come to Chicago in 1848—to the same body from Cook County, serving in the somewhat famous Twenty-ninth Assembly. He also held the office of Police Justice for some thirteen years, from 1860 onward. He lived to an advanced age, dying in Chicago, Feb. 14, 1898, being at the time the oldest surviving member of the Chicago bar.

STILES, Isaac Newton, lawyer and soldier, born at Suffield, Conn., July 16, 1833; was admitted to the bar at Lafayette, Ind., in 1855, became Prosecuting Attorney, a member of the Legislature and an effective speaker in the Fremont campaign of 1856; enlisted as a private soldier at the beginning of the war, went to the field as Adjutant, was captured at Malvern Hill, and, after six weeks' confinement in Libby prison, exchanged and returned to duty; was promoted Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, and brevetted Brigadier-General for meritorious service. After the war he practiced his profession in Chicago, though almost totally blind. Died, Jan. 18, 1895.

STILLMAN, Stephen, first State Senator from Sangamon County, Ill., was a native of Massachusetts who came, with his widowed mother, to Sangamon County in 1820, and settled near Williamsville, where he became the first Postmaster in the first postoffice in the State north of the Sangamon River. In 1822, Mr. Stillman was elected as the first State Senator from Sangamon County, serving four years, and, at his first session, being one of the opponents of the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died, in Peoria, somewhere between 1835 and 1840.

STILLMAN VALLEY, village in Ogle County, on Chicago Great Western and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways; site of first battle Black Hawk War; has graded schools, four churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop., 475.

STITES, Samuel, pioneer, was born near Mount Bethel, Somerset County, N. J., Oct. 31, 1776; died, August 16, 1839, on his farm, which subsequently became the site of the city of Trenton, in Clinton County, Ill. He was descended from John Stites, M.D., who was born in England in 1595, emigrated to America, and died at Hempstead, L. I., in 1717, at the age of 122 years. The family removed to New Jersey in the latter part of the seventeenth century. Samuel was a cousin of Benjamin Stites, the first white man to settle within the present limits of Cincinnati, and various members of the family were prominent in the settlement of the upper Ohio Valley as early as 1788. Samuel Stites married, Sept. 14, 1794, Martha Martin, daughter of Ephraim Martin, and grand-daughter of Col. Ephraim Martin, both soldiers of the New Jersey line during the Revolutionary War—with the last named of whom he had (in connection with John Cleves Symmes) been intimately associated in the purchase and settlement of the Miami Valley. In 1800 he removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, in 1803 to Greene County, and, in 1818, in company with his son-in-law, Anthony Wayne Casad, to St. Clair County, Ill., settling near Union Grove. Later, he removed to O'Fallon, and, still later, to Clinton County. He left a large family, several members of which became prominent pioneers in the movements toward Minnesota and Kansas.

STOLBRAND, Carlos John Mueller, soldier, was born in Sweden, May 11, 1821; at the age of 18, enlisted in the Royal Artillery of his native land, serving through the campaign of Schleswig-Holstein (1848); came to the United States soon after, and, in 1861, enlisted in the first battalion of Illinois Light Artillery, finally becoming Chief of Artillery under Gen. John A. Logan. When the latter became commander of the Fifteenth Army Corps, Col. Stolbrand was placed at the head of the artillery brigade; in February, 1865, was made Brigadier-General, and mustered out in January, 1866. After the war he went South, and was Secretary of the South Carolina Constitutional Convention of 1868. The same year he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and a Presidential Elector. He was an inventor and patented various improvements in steam engines and boilers; was also Superintendent of Public Buildings at Charleston, S. C., under President Harrison. Died, at Charleston, Feb. 3, 1894.

STONE, Daniel, early lawyer and legislator, was a native of Vermont and graduate of Middlebury College; became a member of the Springfield (Ill.) bar in 1833, and, in 1836, was elected to the General Assembly—being one of the celebrated "Long Nine" from Sangamon County, and joining Abraham Lincoln in his protest against a series of pro-slavery resolutions which had been adopted by the House. In 1837 he was a Circuit Court Judge and, being assigned to the northwestern part of the State, removed to Galena, but was legislated out of office, when he left the State, dying a few years later, in Essex County, N. J.

STONE, Horatio O., pioneer, was born in Ontario (now Monroe) County, N. Y., Jan. 2, 1811; in boyhood learned the trade of shoemaker, and later acted as overseer of laborers on the Lackawanna Canal. In 1831, having located in Wayne County, Mich., he was drafted for the Black Hawk War, serving twenty-two days under Gen. Jacob Brown. In January, 1835, he came to Chicago and, having made a fortunate speculation in real estate in that early day, a few months later entered upon the grocery and provision trade, which he afterwards extended to grain; finally giving his chief attention to real estate, in which he was remarkably successful, leaving a large fortune at his death, which occurred in Chicago, June 20, 1877.

STONE, (Rev.) Luther, Baptist clergyman, was born in the town of Oxford, Worcester County, Mass., Sept. 26, 1815, and spent his boyhood on a farm. After acquiring a common school education, he prepared for college at Leicester Academy, and, in 1835, entered Brown University, graduating in the class of 1839. He then spent three years at the Theological Institute at Newton, Mass.; was ordained to the ministry at Oxford, in 1843, but, coming west the next year, entered upon evangelical work in Rock Island, Davenport, Burlington and neighboring towns. Later, he was pastor of the First Baptist Church at Rockford, Ill. In 1847 Mr. Stone came to Chicago and established "The Watchman of the Prairies," which survives to-day under the name of "The Standard," and has become the leading Baptist organ in the West. After six years of editorial work, he took up evangelistic work in Chicago, among the poor and criminal classes. During the Civil War he conducted religious services at Camp Douglas, Soldiers' Rest and the Marine Hospital. He was associated in the conduct and promotion of many educational and charitable institutions. He did much for the First Baptist Church of Chicago, and, during the latter years of his life, was attached to the Immanuel Baptist Church, which he labored to establish. Died, in July, 1890.

STONE, Melville E., journalist, banker, Manager of Associated Press, born at Hudson, Ill., August 18, 1848. Coming to Chicago in 1860, he graduated from the local high school in 1867, and, in 1870, acquired the sole proprietorship of a foundry and machine shop. Finding himself without resources after the great fire of 1871, he embarked in journalism, rising, through the successive grades of reporter, city editor, assistant editor and Washington correspondent, to the position of editor-in-chief of his own journal.

He was connected with various Chicago dailies between 1871 and 1875, and, on Christmas Day of the latter year, issued the first number of "The Chicago Daily News." He gradually disposed of his interest in this journal, entirely severing his connection therewith in 1888. Since that date he has been engaged in banking in the city of Chicago, and is also General Manager of the Associated Press.

STONE, Samuel, philanthropist, was born at Chesterfield, Mass., Dec. 6, 1798; left an orphan at seven years of age, after a short term in Leicester Academy, and several years in a wholesale store in Boston, at the age of 19 removed to Rochester, N. Y., to take charge of interests in the "Holland Purchase," belonging to his father's estate; in 1843-49, was a resident of Detroit and interested in some of the early railroad enterprises centering there, but the latter year removed to Milwaukee, being there associated with Ezra Cornell in telegraph construction. In 1859 he became a citizen of Chicago, where he was one of the founders of the Chicago Historical Society, and a liberal patron of many enterprises of a public and benevolent character. Died, May 4, 1876.

STONE FORT, a village in the counties of Saline and Williamson. It is situated on the Cairo Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 57 miles northeast of Cairo. Population (1900), 479.

STOREY, Wilbur F., journalist and newspaper publisher, was born at Salisbury, Vt., Dec. 19, 1819. He began to learn the printer's trade at 12, and, before he was 19, was part owner of a Democratic paper called "The Herald," published at La Porte, Ind. Later, he either edited or controlled journals published at Mishawaka, Ind., and Jackson and Detroit, Mich. In January, 1861, he became the principal owner of "The Chicago Times," then the leading Democratic organ of Chicago. His paper soon came to be regarded as the organ of the anti-war party throughout the Northwest, and, in June, 1863, was suppressed by a military order issued by General Burnside, which was subsequently revoked by President Lincoln. The net result was an increase in "The Times'" notoriety and circulation. Other charges, of an equally grave nature, relating to its sources of income, its character as a family newspaper, etc., were repeatedly made, but to all these Mr. Storey turned a deaf ear. He lost heavily in the fire of 1871, but, in 1872, appeared as the editor of "The Times," then destitute of political ties. About 1876 his health began to decline. Medical aid failed to afford relief, and, in August, 1884, he was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and his estate was placed in the hands of a conservator. On the 27th of the following October (1884), he died at his home in Chicago.

STORRS, Emery Alexander, lawyer, was born at Hinsdale, Cattaraugus County, N. Y., August 12, 1835; began the study of law with his father, later pursued a legal course at Buffalo, and, in 1853, was admitted to the bar; spent two years (1857-59) in New York City, the latter year removing to Chicago, where he attained great prominence as an advocate at the bar, as well as an orator on other occasions. Politically a Republican, he took an active part in Presidential campaigns, being a delegate-at-large from Illinois to the National Republican Conventions of 1868, '72, and '80, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents in 1872. Erratic in habits and a master of epigram and repartee, many of his speeches are quoted with relish and appreciation by those who were his contemporaries at the Chicago bar. Died suddenly, while in attendance on the Supreme Court at Ottawa, Sept. 12, 1885.

STRAWN, Jacob, agriculturist and stock-dealer, born in Somerset County, Pa., May 30, 1800; removed to Licking County, Ohio, in 1817, and to Illinois, in 1831, settling four miles southwest of Jacksonville. He was one of the first to demonstrate the possibilities of Illinois as a livestock state. Unpretentious and despising mere show, he illustrated the virtues of industry, frugality and honesty. At his death—which occurred August 23, 1863—he left an estate estimated in value at about $1,000,000, acquired by industry and business enterprise. He was a zealous Unionist during the war, at one time contributing $10,000 to the Christian Commission.

STREATOR, a city (laid out in 1868 and incorporated in 1882) in the southern part of La Salle County, 93 miles southwest of Chicago; situated on the Vermilion River and a central point for five railroads. It is surrounded by a rich agricultural country, and is underlaid by coal seams (two of which are worked) and by shale and various clay products of value, adapted to the manufacture of fire and building-brick, drain-pipe, etc. The city is thoroughly modern, having gas, electric lighting, street railways, water-works, a good fire-department, and a large, improved public park. Churches and schools are numerous, as are also fine public and private buildings. One of the chief industries is the manufacture of glass, including rolled-plate, window-glass, flint and Bohemian ware and glass bottles. Other successful industries are foundries and machine shops, flour mills, and clay working establishments. There are several banks, and three daily and weekly papers are published here. The estimated property valuation, in 1884, was $12,000,000. Streator boasts some handsome public buildings, especially the Government post-office and the Carnegie public library building, both of which have been erected within the past few years. Pop. (1890), 11,414; (1900), 14,079.

STREET, Joseph M., pioneer and early politician, settled at Shawneetown about 1812, coming from Kentucky, though believed to have been a native of Eastern Virginia. In 1827 he was a Brigadier-General of militia, and appears to have been prominent in the affairs of that section of the State. His correspondence with Governor Edwards, about this time, shows him to have been a man of far more than ordinary education, with a good opinion of his merits and capabilities. He was a most persistent applicant for office, making urgent appeals to Governor Edwards, Henry Clay and other politicians in Kentucky, Virginia and Washington, on the ground of his poverty and large family. In 1827 he received the offer of the clerkship of the new county of Peoria, but, on visiting that region, was disgusted with the prospect; returning to Shawneetown, bought a farm in Sangamon County, but, before the close of the year, was appointed Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. This was during the difficulties with the Winnebago Indians, upon which he made voluminous reports to the Secretary of War. Mr. Street was a son-in-law of Gen. Thomas Posey, a Revolutionary soldier, who was prominent in the early history of Indiana and its last Territorial Governor. (See Posey. (Gen.) Thomas.)

STREETER, Alson J., farmer and politician, was born in Russell County, N. Y., in 1823; at the age of two years accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling at Dixon, Lee County. He attended Knox College for three years, and, in 1849, went to California, where he spent two years in gold mining. Returning to Illinois, he purchased a farm of 240 acres near New Windsor, Mercer County, to which he has since added several thousand acres. In 1872 he was elected to the lower house of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly as a Democrat, but, in 1873, allied himself with the Greenback party, whose candidate for Congress he was in 1878, and for Governor in 1880, when he received nearly 3,000 votes more than his party's Presidential nominee, in Illinois.

In 1884 he was elected State Senator by a coalition of Greenbackers and Democrats in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, but acted as an independent throughout his entire term.

STRONG, William Emerson, soldier, was born at Granville, N. Y., in 1840; from 13 years of age, spent his early life in Wisconsin, studied law and was admitted to the bar at Racine in 1861. The same year he enlisted under the first call for troops, took part as Captain of a Wisconsin Company, in the first battle of Bull Run; was afterwards promoted and assigned to duty as Inspector-General in the West, participated in the Vicksburg and Atlanta campaigns, being finally advanced to the rank of Brigadier-General. After some fifteen months spent in the position of Inspector-General of the Freedmen's Bureau (1865-66), he located in Chicago, and became connected with several important business enterprises, besides assisting, as an officer on the staff of Governor Cullom, in the organization of the Illinois National Guard. He was elected on the first Board of Directors of the World's Columbian Exposition, and, while making a tour of Europe in the interest of that enterprise, died, at Florence, Italy, April 10, 1891.

STUART, John Todd, lawyer and Congressman, born near Lexington, Ky., Nov. 10, 1807—the son of Robert Stuart, a Presbyterian minister and Professor of Languages in Transylvania University, and related, on the maternal side, to the Todd family, of whom Mrs. Abraham Lincoln was a member. He graduated at Centre College, Danville, in 1826, and, after studying law, removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1828, and began practice. In 1832 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly, re-elected in 1834, and, in 1836, defeated, as the Whig candidate for Congress, by Wm. L. May, though elected, two years later, over Stephen A. Douglas, and again in 1840. In 1837, Abraham Lincoln, who had been studying law under Mr. Stuart's advice and instruction, became his partner, the relationship continuing until 1841. He served in the State Senate, 1849-53, was the Bell-Everett candidate for Governor in 1860, and was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, for a third time, in 1862, but, in 1864, was defeated by Shelby M. Cullom, his former pupil. During the latter years of his life, Mr. Stuart was head of the law firm of Stuart, Edwards & Brown. Died, at Springfield, Nov. 28, 1885.

STURGES, Solomon, merchant and banker, was born at Fairfield, Conn., April 21, 1796, early manifested a passion for the sea and, in 1810, made a voyage, on a vessel of which his brother was captain, from New York to Georgetown, D. C., intending to continue it to Lisbon. At Georgetown he was induced to accept a position as clerk with a Mr. Williams, where he was associated with two other youths, as fellow-employees, who became eminent bankers and capitalists—W. W. Corcoran, afterwards the well-known banker of Washington, and George W. Peabody, who had a successful banking career in England, and won a name as one of the most liberal and public-spirited of philanthropists. During the War of 1812 young Sturges joined a volunteer infantry company, where he had, for comrades, George W. Peabody and Francis S. Key, the latter author of the popular national song, "The Star Spangled Banner." In 1814 Mr. Sturges accepted a clerkship in the store of his brother-in-law, Ebenezer Buckingham, at Putnam, Muskingum County, Ohio, two years later becoming a partner in the concern, where he developed that business capacity which laid the foundation for his future wealth. Before steamers navigated the waters of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he piloted flat-boats, loaded with produce and merchandise, to New Orleans, returning overland. During one of his visits to that city, he witnessed the arrival of the "Washington," the first steamer to descend the Mississippi, as, in 1817, he saw the arrival of the "Walk-in-the-Water" at Detroit, the first steamer to arrive from Buffalo—the occasion of his visit to Detroit being to carry funds to General Cass to pay off the United States troops. About 1849 he was associated with the construction of the Wabash & Erie Canal, from the Ohio River to Terre Haute, Ind., advancing money for the prosecution of the work, for which was reimbursed by the State. In 1854 he came to Chicago, and, in partnership with his brothers-in-law, C. P. and Alvah Buckingham, erected the first large grain-elevator in that city, on land leased from the Illinois Central Railroad Company, following it, two years later, by another of equal capacity. For a time, substantially all the grain coming into Chicago, by railroad, passed into these elevators. In 1857 he established the private banking house of Solomon Sturges & Sons, which, shortly after his death, under the management of his son, George Sturges, became the Northwestern National Bank of Chicago. He was intensely patriotic and, on the breaking out of the War of the Rebellion, used of his means freely in support of the Government, equipping the Sturges Rifles, an independent company, at a cost of $20,000. He was also a subscriber to the first loan made by the Government, during this period, taking $100,000 in Government bonds. While devoted to his business, he was a hater of shams and corruption, and contributed freely to Christian and benevolent enterprises. Died, at the home of a daughter, at Zanesville, Ohio, Oct. 14, 1864, leaving a large fortune acquired by legitimate trade.

STURTEVANT, Julian Munson, D.D., LL.D., clergyman and educator, was born at Warren, Litchfield County, Conn., July 26, 1805; spent his youth in Summit County, Ohio, meanwhile preparing for college; in 1822, entered Yale College as the classmate of the celebrated Elizur Wright, graduating in 1826. After two years as Principal of an academy at Canaan, Conn., he entered Yale Divinity School, graduating there in 1829; then came west, and; after spending a year in superintending the erection of buildings, in December, 1830, as sole tutor, began instruction to a class of nine pupils in what is now Illinois College, at Jacksonville. Having been joined, the following year, by Dr. Edward Beecher as President, Mr. Sturtevant assumed the chair of Mathematics, Natural Philosophy and Astronomy, which he retained until 1844, when, by the retirement of Dr. Beecher, he succeeded to the offices of President and Professor of Intellectual and Moral Philosophy. Here he labored, incessantly and unselfishly, as a teacher during term time, and, as financial agent during vacations, in the interest of the institution of which he had been one of the chief founders, serving until 1876, when he resigned the Presidency, giving his attention, for the next ten years, to the duties of Professor of Mental Science and Science of Government, which he had discharged from 1870. In 1886 he retired from the institution entirely, having given to its service fifty-six years of his life. In 1863, Dr. Sturtevant visited Europe in the interest of the Union cause, delivering effective addresses at a number of points in England. He was a frequent contributor to the weekly religious and periodical press, and was the author of "Economics, or the Science of Wealth" (1876)—a text-book on political economy, and "Keys of Sect, or the Church of the New Testament" (1879), besides frequently occupying the pulpits of local and distant churches—having been early ordained a Congregational minister. He received the degree of D.D. from the University of Missouri and that of LL.D. from Iowa University. Died, in Jacksonville, Feb. 11, 1886.—Julian M. (Sturtevant), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Jacksonville, Ill., Feb. 2, 1834; fitted for college in the preparatory department of Illinois College and graduated from the college (proper) in 1854. After leaving college he served as teacher in the Jacksonville public schools one year, then spent a year as tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of theology at Andover Theological Seminary, graduating there in 1859, meanwhile having discharged the duties of Chaplain of the Connecticut State's prison in 1858. He was ordained a minister of the Congregational Church at Hannibal, Mo., in 1860, remaining as pastor in that city nine years. He has since been engaged in pastoral work in New York City (1869-70), Ottawa, Ill., (1870-73); Denver, Colo., (1873-77); Grinnell, Iowa, (1877-84); Cleveland, Ohio, (1884-90); Galesburg, Ill., (1890-93), and Aurora, (1893-97). Since leaving the Congregational church at Aurora, Dr. Sturtevant has been engaged in pastoral work in Chicago. He was also editor of "The Congregationalist" of Iowa (1881-84), and, at different periods, has served as Trustee of Colorado, Marietta and Knox Colleges; being still an honored member of the Knox College Board. He received the degree of D.D. from Illinois College, in 1879.

SUBLETTE, a station and village on the Illinois Central Railroad, in Lee County, 8 miles northwest of Mendota. Population, (1900), 306.

SUFFRAGE, in general, the right or privilege of voting. The qualifications of electors (or voters), in the choice of public officers in Illinois, are fixed by the State Constitution (Art. VII.), except as to school officers, which are prescribed by law. Under the State Constitution the exercise of the right to vote is limited to persons who were electors at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, or who are native or naturalized male citizens of the United States, of the age of 21 years or over, who have been residents of the State one year, of the county ninety days, and of the district (or precinct) in which they offer to vote, 30 days. Under an act passed in 1891, women, of 21 years of age and upwards, are entitled to vote for school officers, and are also eligible to such offices under the same conditions, as to age and residence, as male citizens. (See Elections; Australian Ballot.)

SULLIVAN, a city and county-seat of Moultrie County, 25 miles southeast of Decatur and 14 miles northwest of Mattoon; is on three lines of railway. It is in an agricultural and stock-raising region; contains two State banks and four weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,305; (1890), 1,468; (1900), 2,399; (1900, est.), 3,100.

SULLIVAN, William K., journalist, was born at Waterford, Ireland, Nov. 10, 1843; educated at the Waterford Model School and in Dublin; came to the United States in 1863, and, after teaching for a time in Kane County, in 1864 enlisted in the One Hundred and Forty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers. Then, after a brief season spent in teaching and on a visit to his native land, he began work as a reporter on New York papers, later being employed on "The Chicago Tribune" and "The Evening Journal," on the latter, at different times, holding the position of city editor, managing editor and correspondent. He was also a Representative from Cook County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, for three years a member of the Chicago Board of Education, and appointed United States Consul to the Bermudas by President Harrison, resigning in 1892. Died, in Chicago, January 17, 1899.

SULLIVANT, Michael Lucas, agriculturist, was born at Franklinton (a suburb of Columbus, Ohio), August 6, 1807; was educated at Ohio University and Centre College, Ky., and—after being engaged in the improvement of an immense tract of land inherited from his father near his birth-place, devoting much attention, meanwhile, to the raising of improved stock—in 1854 sold his Ohio lands and bought 80,000 acres, chiefly in Champaign and Piatt Counties, Ill., where he began farming on a larger scale than before. The enterprise proved a financial failure, and he was finally compelled to sell a considerable portion of his estate in Champaign County, known as Broad Lands, to John T. Alexander (see Alexander, John T.), retiring to a farm of 40,000 acres at Burr Oaks, Ill. He died, at Henderson, Ky., Jan. 29, 1879.

SUMMERFIELD, a village of St. Clair County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 27 miles east of St. Louis; was the home of Gen. Fred. Hecker. Population (1900), 360.

SUMNER, a city of Lawrence County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 19 miles west of Vincennes, Ind.; has a fine school house, four churches, two banks, two flour mills, telephones, and one weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,037; (1900), 1,268.

SUPERINTENDENTS OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION. The office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction was created by act of the Legislature, at a special session held in 1851, its duties previous to that time, from 1845, having been discharged by the Secretary of State as Superintendent, ex-officio. The following is a list of the incumbents from the date of the formal creation of the office down to the present time (1899), with the date and duration of the term of each. Ninian W. Edwards (by appointment of the Governor), 1854-57; William H. Powell (by election), 1857-59; Newton Bateman, 1859-63; John P. Brooks, 1863-65; Newton Bateman, 1865-75; Samuel W. Etter, 1875-79; James P. Slade, 1879-83; Henry Raab, 1883-87; Richard Edwards, 1887-91; Henry Raab, 1891-95; Samuel M. Inglis, 1895-98; James H. Freeman, June, 1898, to January, 1899 (by appointment of the Governor, to fill the unexpired term of Prof. Inglis, who died in office, June 1, 1898); Alfred Baylis, 1899—.

Previous to 1870 the tenure of the office was two years, but, by the Constitution adopted that year, it was extended to four years, the elections occurring on the even years between those for Governor and other State officers except State Treasurer.

SUPREME COURT, JUDGES OF THE. The following is a list of Justices of the Supreme Court of Illinois who have held office since the organization of the State Government, with the period of their respective incumbencies: Joseph Phillips, 1818-22 (resigned); Thomas C. Browne, 1818-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); William P. Foster, Oct. 9, 1818, to July 7, 1819 (resigned); John Reynolds, 1818-25; Thomas Reynolds (vice Phillips), 1822-25; William Wilson (vice Foster) 1819-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Samuel D. Lockwood, 1825-48 (term expired on adoption of new Constitution); Theophilus W. Smith, 1825-42 (resigned); Thomas Ford, Feb. 15, 1841, to August 1, 1842 (resigned); Sidney Breese, Feb. 15, 1841, to Dec. 19, 1842 (resigned)—also (by re-elections), 1857-78 (died in office); Walter B. Scates, 1841-47 (resigned)—also (vice Trumbull), 1854-57 (resigned); Samuel H. Treat, 1841-55 (resigned); Stephen A. Douglas, 1841-42 (resigned); John D. Caton (vice Ford) August, 1842, to March, 1843—also (vice Robinson and by successive re-elections), May, 1843 to January, 1864 (resigned); James Semple (vice Breese), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 16, 1843 (resigned); Richard M. Young (vice Smith), 1843-47 (resigned); John M. Robinson (vice Ford), Jan. 14, 1843, to April 27, 1843 (died in office); Jesse B. Thomas, Jr., (vice Douglas), 1843-45 (resigned)—also (vice Young), 1847-48; James Shields (vice Semple), 1843-45 (resigned); Norman H. Purple (vice Thomas), 1843-48 (retired under Constitution of 1848); Gustavus Koerner (vice Shields), 1845-48 (retired by Constitution); William A. Denning (vice Scates), 1847-48 (retired by Constitution); Lyman Trumbull, 1848-53 (resigned); Ozias C. Skinner (vice Treat), 1853-58 (resigned); Pinkney H. Walker (vice Skinner), 1858-85 (deceased); Corydon Beckwith (by appointment, vice Caton), Jan. 7, 1864, to June 6, 1864; Charles B. Lawrence (one term), 1864-73; Anthony Thornton, 1870-73 (resigned); John M. Scott (two terms), 1870-88; Benjamin R. Sheldon (two terms), 1870-88; William K. McAllister, 1870-75 (resigned); John Scholfield (vice Thornton), 1873-93 (died); T. Lyle Dickey (vice McAllister), 1875-85 (died); David J. Baker (appointed, vice Breese), July 9, 1878, to June 2, 1879—also, 1888-97; John H. Mulkey, 1879-88; Damon G. Tunnicliffe (appointed, vice Walker), Feb. 15, 1885, to June 1, 1885; Simeon P. Shope, 1885-94; Joseph M. Bailey, 1888-95 (died in office). The Supreme Court, as at present constituted (1899), is as follows: Carroll C. Boggs, elected, 1897; Jesse J. Phillips (vice Scholfield, deceased) elected, 1893, and re-elected, 1897; Jacob W. Wilkin, elected, 1888, and re-elected, 1897; Joseph N. Carter, elected, 1894; Alfred M. Craig, elected, 1873, and re-elected, 1882 and '91; James H. Cartwright (vice Bailey), elected, 1895, and re-elected, 1897; Benjamin D. Magruder (vice Dickey), elected, 1885, '88 and '97. The terms of Justices Boggs, Phillips, Wilkin, Cartwright and Magruder expire in 1906; that of Justice Carter on 1903; and Justice Craig's, in 1900. Under the Constitution of 1818, the Justices of the Supreme Court were chosen by joint ballot of the Legislature, but, under the Constitutions of 1848 and 1870, by popular vote for terms of nine years each. (See Judicial System; also sketches of individual members of the Supreme Court under their proper names.)

SURVEYS, EARLY GOVERNMENT. The first United States law passed on the subject of Government surveys was dated, May 20, 1785. After reserving certain lands to be allotted by way of pensions and to be donated for school purposes, it provided for the division of the remaining public lands among the original thirteen States. This, however, was, in effect, repealed by the Ordinance of 1788. The latter provided for a rectangular system of surveys which, with but little modification, has remained in force ever since. Briefly outlined, the system is as follows: Townships, six miles square, are laid out from principal bases, each township containing thirty-six sections of one square mile, numbered consecutively, the numeration to commence at the upper right hand corner of the township. The first principal meridian (84° 51' west of Greenwich), coincided with the line dividing Indiana and Ohio. The second (1° 37' farther west) had direct relation to surveys in Eastern Illinois. The third (89° 10' 30" west of Greenwich) and the fourth (90° 29' 56" west) governed the remainder of Illinois surveys. The first Public Surveyor was Thomas Hutchins, who was called "the geographer." (See Hutchins, Thomas.)

SWEET, (Gen.) Benjamin J., soldier, was born at Kirkland, Oneida County, N. Y., April 24, 1832; came with his father, in 1848, to Sheboygan, Wis., studied law, was elected to the State Senate in 1859, and, in 1861, enlisted in the Sixth Wisconsin Volunteers, being commissioned Major in 1862. Later, he resigned and, returning home, assisted in the organization of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second regiments, being elected Colonel of the former; and with it taking part in the campaign in Western Kentucky and Tennessee. In 1865 he was assigned to command at Camp Douglas, and was there on the exposure, in November, 1864, of the conspiracy to release the rebel prisoners. (See Camp Douglas Conspiracy.) The service which he rendered in the defeat of this bold and dangerous conspiracy evinced his courage and sagacity, and was of inestimable value to the country. After the war, General Sweet located at Lombard, near Chicago, was appointed Pension Agent at Chicago, afterwards served as Supervisor of Internal Revenue, and, in 1872, became Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington. Died, in Washington, Jan. 1, 1874. — Miss Ada C. (Sweet), for eight years (1874-82) the efficient Pension Agent at Chicago, is General Sweet's daughter.

SWEETSER, A. C., soldier and Department Commander G. A. R., was born in Oxford County, Maine, in 1839; came to Bloomington, Ill., in 1857; enlisted at the beginning of the Civil War in the Eighth Illinois Volunteers and, later, in the Thirty-ninth; at the battle of Wierbottom Church, Va., in June, 1864, was shot through both legs, necessitating the amputation of one of them. After the war he held several offices of trust, including those of City Collector of Bloomington and Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Springfield District; in 1887 was elected Department Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic for Illinois. Died, at Bloomington, March 23, 1896.

SWETT, Leonard, lawyer, was born near Turner, Maine, August 11, 1825; was educated at Waterville College (now Colby University), but left before graduation; read law in Portland, and, while seeking a location in the West, enlisted in an Indiana regiment for the Mexican War, being attacked by climatic fever, was discharged before completing his term of enlistment. He soon after came to Bloomington, Ill., where he became the intimate friend of Abraham Lincoln and David Davis, traveling the circuit with them for a number of years. He early became active in State politics, was a member of the Republican State Convention of 1856, was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1858, and, in 1860, was a zealous supporter of Mr. Lincoln as a Presidential Elector for the State-at-large. In 1862 he received the Republican nomination for Congress in his District, but was defeated. Removing to Chicago in 1865, he gained increased distinction as a lawyer, especially in the management of criminal cases. In 1872 he was a supporter of Horace Greeley for President, but later returned to the Republican party, and, in the National Republican Convention of 1888, presented the name of Judge Gresham for nomination for the Presidency. Died, June 8, 1889.

SWIGERT, Charles Philip, ex-Auditor of Public Accounts, was born in the Province of Baden, Germany, Nov. 27, 1843, brought by his parents to Chicago, Ill., in childhood, and, in his boyhood, attended the Scanmon School in that city. In 1854 his family removed to a farm in Kankakee County, where, between the ages of 12 and 18, he assisted his father in "breaking" between 400 and 500 acres of prairie land. On the breaking out of the war, in 1861, although scarcely 18 years of age, he enlisted as a private in the Forty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and, in April, 1862, was one of twenty heroic volunteers who ran the blockade, on the gunboat Carondelet, at Island No. 10, assisting materially in the reduction of that rebel stronghold, which resulted in the capture of 7,000 prisoners. At the battle of Farmington, Miss., during the siege of Corinth, in May, 1862, he had his right arm torn from its socket by a six-pound cannon-ball, compelling his retirement from the army. Returning home, after many weeks spent in hospital at Jefferson Barracks and Quincy, Ill., he received his final discharge, Dec. 21, 1862, spent a year in school, also took a course in Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Chicago, and having learned to write with his left hand, taught for a time in Kankakee County; served as letter-carrier in Chicago, and for a year as Deputy County Clerk of Kankakee County, followed by two terms (1867-69) as a student in the Soldiers' College at Fulton, Ill. The latter year he entered upon the duties of Treasurer of Kankakee County, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1880, when he resigned to take the position of State Auditor, to which he was elected a second time in 1884. In all these positions Mr. Swigert has proved himself an upright, capable and high-minded public official. Of late years his residence has been in Chicago.

SWING, (Rev.) David, clergyman and pulpit orator, was born of German ancestry, at Cincinnati, Ohio, August 23, 1836. After 1837 (his father dying about this time), the family resided for a time at Reedsburgh, and, later, on a farm near Williamsburgh, in Clermont County, in the same State. In 1852, having graduated from the Miami (Ohio) University, he commenced the study of theology, but, in 1854, accepted the position of Professor of Languages in his Alma Mater, which he continued to fill for thirteen years. His first pastorate was in connection with the Westminster Presbyterian Church of Chicago, which he assumed in 1866. His church edifice was destroyed in the great Chicago fire, but was later rebuilt. As a preacher he was popular; but, in April, 1874, he was placed on trial, before an ecclesiastical court of his own denomination, on charges of heresy. He was acquitted by the trial court, but, before the appeal taken by the prosecution could be heard, he personally withdrew from affiliation with the denomination. Shortly afterward he became pastor of an independent religious organization known as the "Central Church," preaching, first at McVicker's Theatre and, afterward, at Central Music Hall, Chicago. He was a fluent and popular speaker on all themes, a frequent and valued contributor to numerous magazines, as well as the author of several volumes. Among his best known books are "Motives of Life," "Truths for To-day," and "Club Essays." Died, in Chicago, Oct. 3, 1894.

SYCAMORE, the county-seat of De Kalb County (founded in 1836), 56 miles west of Chicago, at the intersection of the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago Great Western Railroads; lies in a region devoted to agriculture, dairying and stock-raising. The city itself contains several factories, the principal products being agricultural implements, flour, insulated wire, brick, tile, varnish, furniture, soap and carriages and wagons. There are also works for canning vegetables and fruit, besides two creameries. The town is lighted by electricity, and has high-pressure water-works. There are eleven churches, three graded public schools and a young ladies' seminary. Population (1880), 3,028; (1890), 2,987; (1900), 3,653.

TAFT, Lorado, sculptor, was born at Elmwood, Peoria County, Ill., April 29, 1860; at an early age evinced a predilection for sculpture and began modeling; graduated at the University of Illinois in 1880, then went to Paris and studied sculpture in the famous Ecole des Beaux Arts until 1885. The following year he settled in Chicago, finally becoming associated with the Chicago Art Institute. He has been a lecturer on art in the Chicago University. Mr. Taft furnished the decorations of the Horticultural Building on the World's Fair Grounds, in 1893.

TALCOTT, Mancel, business man, was born in Rome, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1817; attended the common schools until 17 years of age, when he set out for the West, traveling on foot from Detroit to Chicago, and thence to Park Ridge, where he worked at farming until 1850. Then, having followed the occupation of a miner for some time, in California, with some success, he united with Horace M. Singer in establishing the firm of Singer & Talcott, stone-dealers, which lasted during most of his life. He served as a member of the Chicago City Council, on the Board of County Commissioners, as a member of the Police Board, and was one of the founders of the First National Bank, and President, for several years, of the Stock Yards National Bank. Liberal and public-spirited, he contributed freely to works of charity. Died, June 5, 1878.

TALCOTT, (Capt.) William, soldier of the War of 1812 and pioneer, was born in Gilead, Conn., March 6, 1774; emigrated to Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., in 1810, and engaged in farming; served as a Lieutenant in the Oneida County militia during the War of 1812-14, being stationed at Sackett's Harbor under the command of Gen. Winfield Scott. In 1835, in company with his eldest son, Thomas B. Talcott, he made an extended tour through the West, finally selecting a location in Illinois at the junction of Rock River and the Pecatonica, where the town of Rockton now stands—there being only two white families, at that time, within the present limits of Winnebago County. Two years later (1837), he brought his family to this point, with his sons took up a considerable body of Government land and erected two mills, to which customers came from a long distance. In 1838 Captain Talcott took part in the organization of the first Congregational Church in that section of the State. A zealous anti-slavery man, he supported JAMES G.

Birney (the Liberty candidate for President) in 1844, continuing to act with that party until the organization of the Republican party in 1856; was deeply interested in the War for the Union, but died before its conclusion, Sept. 2, 1864.—Maj. Thomas B. (Talcott), oldest son of the preceding, was born at Hebron, Conn., April 17, 1806; was taken to Rome, N. Y., by his father in infancy, and, after reaching maturity, engaged in mercantile business with his brother in Chemung County; in 1835 accompanied his father in a tour through the West, finally locating at Rockton, where he engaged in agriculture. On the organization of Winnebago County, in 1836, he was elected one of the first County Commissioners, and, in 1850, to the State Senate, serving four years. He also held various local offices. Died, Sept. 30, 1894.—Hon. Wait (Talcott), second son of Capt. William Talcott, was born at Hebron, Conn., Oct. 17, 1807, and taken to Rome, N. Y., where he remained until his 19th year, when he engaged in business at Booneville and, still later, in Utica; in 1838, removed to Illinois and joined his father at Rockton, finally becoming a citizen of Rockford, where, in his later years, he was extensively engaged in manufacturing, having become, in 1854, with his brother Sylvester, a partner of the firm of J. H. Manny & Co., in the manufacture of the Manny reaper and mower. He was an original anti-slavery man and, at one time, a Free-Soil candidate for Congress, but became a zealous Republican and ardent friend of Abraham Lincoln, whom he employed as an attorney in the famous suit of McCormick vs. the Manny Reaper Company for infringement of patent. In 1854 he was elected to the State Senate, succeeding his brother, Thomas B., and was the first Collector of Internal Revenue in the Second District, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1862, and continuing in office some five years. Though too old for active service in the field, during the Civil War, he voluntarily hired a substitute to take his place. Mr. Talcott was one of the original incorporators and Trustees of Beloit College, and a founder of Rockford Female Seminary, remaining a trustee of each for many years. Died, June 7, 1890.—Sylvester (Talcott), third son of William Talcott, born at Rome, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1810; when of age, engaged in mercantile business in Chemung County; in 1837 removed, with other members of the family, to Winnebago County, Ill., where he joined his father in the entry of Government lands and the erection of mills, as already detailed. He became one of the first Justices of the Peace in Winnebago County, also served as Supervisor for a number of years and, although a farmer, became interested, in 1854, with his brother Wait, in the Manny Reaper Company at Rockford. He also followed the example of his brother, just named, in furnishing a substitute for the War of the Rebellion, though too old for service himself. Died, June 19, 1883.—Henry Walter (Talcott), fourth son of William Talcott, was born at Rome, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1814; came with his father to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and was connected with his father and brothers in business. Died, Dec. 9, 1870.—Dwight Lewis (Talcott), oldest son of Henry Walter Talcott, born in Winnebago County; at the age of 17 years enlisted at Belvidere, in January, 1864, as a soldier in the Ninth Illinois Volunteer Infantry; served as provost guard some two months at Fort Pickering, near Memphis, and later took part in many of the important battles of that year in Mississippi and Tennessee. Having been captured at Campbellsville, Tenn., he was taken to Andersonville, Ga., where he suffered all the horrors of that famous prison-pen, until March, 1865, when he was released, arriving at home a helpless skeleton, the day after Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Mr. Talcott subsequently settled in Muscatine County, Iowa.

TALLULA, a prosperous village of Menard County, on the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway, 24 miles northeast of Jacksonville; is in the midst of a grain, coal-mining, and stock-growing region; has a local bank and newspaper. Pop. (1890), 445; (1900), 639.

TAMAROA, a village in Perry County, situated at the junction of the Illinois Central with the Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad, 8 miles north of Duquoin, and 57 miles east southeast of Belleville. It has a bank, a newspaper office, a large public school, five churches and two flouring mills. Coal is mined here and exported in large quantities. Pop. (1900), 853.

TAMAROA & MOUNT VERNON RAILROAD. (See Wabash, Chester & Western Railroad.)

TANNER, Edward Allen, clergyman and educator, was born of New England ancestry, at Waverly, Ill., Nov. 29, 1837—being the first child who could claim nativity there; was educated in the local schools and at Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1857; spent four years teaching in his native place and at Jacksonville; then accepted the Professorship of Latin in Pacific University at Portland, Oregon, remaining four years, when he returned to his Alma Mater (1865), assuming there the chair of Latin and Rhetoric. In 1881 he was appointed financial agent of the latter institution, and, in 1882, its President. While in Oregon he had been ordained a minister of the Congregational Church, and, for a considerable period during his connection with Illinois College, officiated as Chaplain of the Central Hospital for the Insane at Jacksonville, besides supplying local and other pulpits. He labored earnestly for the benefit of the institution under his charge, and, during his incumbency, added materially to its endowment and resources. Died, at Jacksonville, Feb. 8, 1892.

TANNER, John R., Governor, was born in Warrick County, Ind., April 4, 1844, and brought to Southern Illinois in boyhood, where he grew up on a farm in the vicinity of Carbondale, enjoying only such educational advantages as were afforded by the common school; in 1863, at the age of 19, enlisted in the Ninety-eighth Illinois Volunteers, serving until June, 1865, when he was transferred to the Sixty-first, and finally mustered out in September following. All the male members of Governor Tanner's family were soldiers of the late war, his father dying in a rebel prison at Columbus, Miss., one of his brothers suffering the same fate from wounds at Nashville, Tenn., and another brother dying in hospital at Pine Bluff, Ark. Only one of this patriotic family, besides Governor Tanner, still survives—Mr. J. M. Tanner of Clay County, who left the service with the rank of Lieutenant of the Thirtieth Illinois Cavalry. Returning from the war, Mr. Tanner established himself in business as a farmer in Clay County, later engaging successfully in the milling and lumber business as the partner of his brother. The public positions held by him, since the war, include those of Sheriff of Clay County (1870-73), Clerk of the Circuit Court (1872-76), and State Senator (1880-83). During the latter year he received the appointment of United States Marshal for the Southern District of Illinois, serving until after the accession of President Cleveland in 1885. In 1886, he was the Republican nominee for State Treasurer and was elected by an unusually large majority; in 1891 was appointed, by Governor Fifer, a member of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission, but, in 1892, received the appointment of Assistant United States Treasurer at Chicago, continuing in the latter office until December, 1893. For ten years (1874-84) he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, returning to that body in 1894, when he was chosen Chairman and conducted the campaign which resulted in the unprecedented Republican successes of that year. In 1896 he received the nomination of his party for Governor, and was elected over Gov. John P. Altgeld, his Democratic opponent, by a plurality of over 113,000, and a majority, over all, of nearly 90,000 votes.

TANNER, Tazewell B., jurist, was born in Henry County, Va., and came to Jefferson County, Ill., about 1846 or '47, at first taking a position as teacher and Superintendent of Public Schools. Later, he was connected with "The Jeffersonian," a Democratic paper at Mount Vernon, and, in 1849, went to the gold regions of California, meeting with reasonable success as a miner. Returning in a year or two, he was elected Clerk of the Circuit Court, and, while in the discharge of his duties, prosecuted the study of law, finally, on admission to the bar, entering into partnership with the late Col. Thomas S. Casey. In 1854 he was elected Representative in the Nineteenth General Assembly, and was instrumental in securing the appropriation for the erection of a Supreme Court building at Mount Vernon. In 1862 he served as a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of that year; was elected Circuit Judge in 1873, and, in 1877, was assigned to duty on the Appellate bench, but, at the expiration of his term, declined a re-election and resumed the practice of his profession at Mount Vernon. Died, March 25, 1880.

TAXATION, in its legal sense, the mode of raising revenue. In its general sense its purposes are the support of the State and local governments, the promotion of the public good by fostering education and works of public improvement, the protection of society by the preservation of order and the punishment of crime, and the support of the helpless and destitute. In practice, and as prescribed by the Constitution, the raising of revenue is required to be done "by levying a tax by valuation, so that every person and corporation shall pay a tax in proportion to the value of his, her or its property—such value to be ascertained by some person or persons, to be elected or appointed in such manner as the General Assembly shall direct, and not otherwise." (State Constitution, 1870—Art. Revenue, Sec. 1.) The person selected under the law to make this valuation is the Assessor of the county or the township (in counties under township organization), and he is required to make a return to the County Board at its July meeting each year—the latter having authority to hear complaints of taxpayers and adjust inequalities when found to exist. It is made the duty of the Assessor to include in his return, as real-estate, all lands and the buildings or other improvements erected thereon; and, under the head of personal property, all tangible effects, besides moneys, credits, bonds or stocks, shares of stock of companies or corporations, investments, annuities, franchises, royalties, etc. Property used for school, church or cemetery purposes, as well as public buildings and other property belonging to the State and General Government, municipalities, public charities, public libraries, agricultural and scientific societies, are declared exempt. Nominally, all property subject to taxation is required to be assessed at its cash valuation; but, in reality, the valuation, of late years, has been on a basis of twenty-five to thirty-three per cent of its estimated cash value. In the larger cities, however, the valuation is often much lower than this, while very large amounts escape assessment altogether. The Revenue Act, passed at the special session of the Fortieth General Assembly (1898), requires the Assessor to make a return of all property subject to taxation in his district, at its cash valuation, upon which a Board of Review fixes a tax on the basis of twenty per cent of such cash valuation. An abstract of the property assessment of each county goes before the State Board of Equalization, at its annual meeting in August, for the purpose of comparison and equalizing valuations between counties, but the Board has no power to modify the assessments of individual tax-payers. (See State Board of Equalization.) This Board has exclusive power to fix the valuation for purposes of taxation of the capital stock or franchises of companies (except certain specified manufacturing corporations), incorporated under the State laws, together with the "railroad track" and "rolling stock" of railroads, and the capital stock of railroads and telegraph lines, and to fix the distribution of the latter between counties in which they lie.—The Constitution of 1848 empowered the Legislature to impose a capitation tax, of not less than fifty cents nor more than one dollar, upon each free white male citizen entitled to the right of suffrage, between the ages of 21 and 60 years, but the Constitution of 1870 grants no such power, though it authorizes the extension of the "objects and subjects of taxation" in accordance with the principle contained in the first section of the Revenue Article.—Special assessments in cities, for the construction of sewers, pavements, etc., being local and in the form of benefits, cannot be said to come under the head of general taxation. The same is to be said of revenue derived from fines and penalties, which are forms of punishment for specific offenses, and go to the benefit of certain specified funds.

TAYLOR, Abner, ex-Congressman, is a native of Maine, and a resident of Chicago. He has been in active business all his life as contractor, builder and merchant, and, for some time, a member of the wholesale dry-goods firm of J. V. Farwell & Co., of Chicago. He was a member of the Thirty-fourth General Assembly, a delegate to the National Republican Convention of 1884, and represented the First Illinois District in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, 1889 to 1893. Mr. Taylor was one of the contractors for the erection of the new State Capitol of Texas.

TAYLOR, Benjamin Franklin, journalist, poet and lecturer, was born at Lowville, N. Y., July 19, 1819; graduated at Madison University in 1839, the next year becoming literary and dramatic critic of "The Chicago Evening Journal." Here, in a few years, he acquired a wide reputation as a journalist and poet, and was much in demand as a lecturer on literary topics. His letters from the field during the Rebellion, as war correspondent of "The Evening Journal," won for him even a greater popularity, and were complimented by translation into more than one European language. After the war, he gave his attention more unreservedly to literature, his principal works appearing after that date. His publications in book form, including both prose and poetry, comprise the following: "Attractions of Language" (1845); "January and June" (1853); "Pictures in Camp and Field" (1871); "The World on Wheels" (1873); "Old Time Pictures and Sheaves of Rhyme" (1874); "Songs of Yesterday" (1877); "Summer Savory Gleaned from Rural Nooks" (1879); "Between the Gates"—pictures of California life—(1881); "Dulce Domum, the Burden of Song" (1884), and "Theophilus Trent, or Old Times in the Oak Openings," a novel (1887). The last was in the hands of the publishers at his death, Feb. 27, 1887. Among his most popular poems are "The Isle of the Long Ago," "The Old Village Choir," and "Rhymes of the River." "The London Times" complimented Mr. Taylor with the title of "The Oliver Goldsmith of America."

TAYLOR, Edmund Dick, early Indian-trader and legislator, was born at Fairfield C. H., Va., Oct. 18, 1802—the son of a commissary in the army of the Revolution, under General Greene, and a cousin of General (later, President) Zachary Taylor; left his native State in his youth and, at an early day, came to Springfield, Ill., where he opened an Indian-trading post and general store; was elected from Sangamon County to the lower branch of the Seventh General Assembly (1830) and re-elected in 1832—the latter year being a competitor of Abraham Lincoln, whom he defeated. In 1834 he was elected to the State Senate and, at the next session of the Legislature, was one of the celebrated "Long Nine" who secured the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. He resigned before the close of his term to accept, from President Jackson, the appointment of Receiver of Public Moneys at Chicago. Here he became one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (1837), serving as one of the Commissioners to secure subscriptions of stock, and was also active in advocating the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. The title of "Colonel," by which he was known during most of his life, was acquired by service, with that rank, on the staff of Gov. John Reynolds, during the Black Hawk War of 1832. After coming to Chicago, Colonel Taylor became one of the Trustees of the Chicago branch of the State Bank, and was later identified with various banking enterprises, as also a somewhat extensive operator in real estate. An active Democrat in the early part of his career in Illinois, Colonel Taylor was one of the members of his party to take ground against the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and advocated the election of General Bissell to the governorship in 1856. In 1860 he was again in line with his party in support of Senator Douglas for the Presidency, and was an opponent of the war policy of the Government still later, as shown by his participation in the celebrated "Peace Convention" at Springfield, of June 17, 1863. In the latter years of his life he became extensively interested in coal lands in La Salle and adjoining counties, and, for a considerable time, served as President of the Northern Illinois Coal & Mining Company, his home, during a part of this period, being at Mendota. Died, in Chicago, Dec. 4, 1891.

TAYLORVILLE, a city and county-seat of Christian County, on the South Fork of the Sangamon River and on the Wabash Railway at its point of intersection with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern. It is about 27 miles southeast of Springfield, and 28 miles southwest of Decatur. It has several banks, flour mills, paper mill, electric light and gas plants, water-works, two coal mines, carriage and wagon shops, a manufactory of farming implements, two daily and weekly papers, nine churches and five graded and township high schools. Much coal is mined in this vicinity. Pop. (1890), 2,839; (1900), 4,248.

TAZEWELL COUNTY, a central county on the Illinois River; was first settled in 1823 and organized in 1827; has an area of 650 square miles—was named for Governor Tazewell of Virginia. It is drained by the Illinois and Mackinaw Rivers and traversed by several lines of railway. The surface is generally level, the soil alluvial and rich, but, requiring drainage, especially on the river bottoms. Gravel, coal and sandstone are found, but, generally speaking, Tazewell is an agricultural county. The cereals are extensively cultivated; wool is also clipped, and there are dairy interests of some importance. Distilling is extensively conducted at Pekin, the county-seat, which is also the seat of other mechanical industries. (See also Pekin.) Population of the county (1880), 29,666; (1890), 29,556; (1900), 33,221.

TEMPLE, John Taylor, M.D., early Chicago physician, born in Virginia in 1804, graduated in medicine at Middlebury College, Vt., in 1830, and, in 1833, arrived in Chicago. At this time he had a contract for carrying the United States mail from Chicago to Fort Howard, near Green Bay, and the following year undertook a similar contract between Chicago and Ottawa. Having sold these out three years later, he devoted his attention to the practice of his profession, though interested, for a time, in contracts for the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal. Dr. Temple was instrumental in erecting the first house (after Rev. Jesse Walker's missionary station at Wolf Point), for public religious worship in Chicago, and, although himself a Baptist, it was used in common by Protestant denominations. He was a member of the first Board of Trustees of Rush Medical College, though he later became a convert to homeopathy, and finally, removing to St. Louis, assisted in founding the St. Louis School of Homeopathy, dying there, Feb. 24, 1877.

TENURE OF OFFICE. (See Elections.)

TERRE HAUTE, ALTON & ST. LOUIS RAILROAD. (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & ALTON RAILROAD (See St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad.)

TERRE HAUTE & INDIANAPOLIS RAILROAD, a corporation operating no line of its own within the State, but the lessee and operator of the following lines (which see): St. Louis, Vandalia & Terre Haute, 158.3 miles; Terre Haute & Peoria, 145.12 miles; East St. Louis & Carondelet, 12.74 miles—total length of leased lines in Illinois, 316.16 miles. The Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad was incorporated in Indiana in 1847, as the Terre Haute & Richmond, completed a line between the points named in the title, in 1852, and took its present name in 1866. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company purchased a controlling interest in its stock in 1893.

TERRE HAUTE & PEORIA RAILROAD, (Vandalia Line), a line of road extending from Terre Haute, Ind., to Peoria, Ill., 145.12 miles, with 28.78 miles of trackage, making in all 173.9 miles in operation, all being in Illinois—operated by the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company. The gauge is standard, and the rails are steel. (HISTORY.) It was organized Feb. 7, 1887, successor to the Illinois Midland Railroad. The latter was made up by the consolidation (Nov. 4, 1874) of three lines: (1) The Peoria, Atlanta & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1869 and opened in 1874; (2) the Paris & Decatur Railroad, chartered in 1861 and opened in December, 1872; and (3) the Paris & Terre Haute Railroad, chartered in 1873 and opened in 1874—the consolidated lines assuming the name of the Illinois Midland Railroad. In 1886 the Illinois Midland was sold under foreclosure and, in February, 1887, reorganized as the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. In 1892 it was leased for ninety-nine years to the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and is operated as a part of the "Vandalia System." The capital stock (1898) was $3,764,200; funded debt, $2,230,000,—total capital invested, $6,227,481.

TEUTOPOLIS, a village of Effingham County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Railroad, 4 miles east of Effingham; was originally settled by a colony of Germans from Cincinnati. Population (1900), 498.

THOMAS, Horace H., lawyer and legislator, was born in Vermont, Dec. 18, 1831, graduated at Middlebury College, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Chicago, where he commenced practice. At the outbreak of the rebellion he enlisted and was commissioned Assistant Adjutant-General of the Army of the Ohio. At the close of the war he took up his residence in Tennessee, serving as Quartermaster upon the staff of Governor Brownlow. In 1867 he returned to Chicago and resumed practice. He was elected a Representative in the Legislature in 1878 and re-elected in 1880, being chosen Speaker of the House during his latter term. In 1888 he was elected State Senator from the Sixth District, serving during the sessions of the Thirty-sixth and Thirty-seventh General Assemblies. In 1897, General Thomas was appointed United States Appraiser in connection with the Custom House in Chicago.

THOMAS, Jesse Burgess, jurist and United States Senator, was born at Hagerstown, Md., claiming direct descent from Lord Baltimore. Taken west in childhood, he grew to manhood and settled at Lawrenceburg, Indiana Territory, in 1803; in 1805 was Speaker of the Territorial Legislature and, later, represented the Territory as Delegate in Congress. On the organization of Illinois Territory (which he had favored), he removed to Kaskaskia, was appointed one of the first Judges for the new Territory, and, in 1818, as Delegate from St. Clair County, presided over the first State Constitutional Convention, and, on the admission of the State, became one of the first United States Senators—Governor Edwards being his colleague. Though an avowed advocate of slavery, he gained no little prominence as the author of the celebrated "Missouri Compromise," adopted in 1820. He was re-elected to the Senate in 1823, serving until 1829. He subsequently removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where he died by suicide, May 4, 1853.—Jesse Burgess (Thomas), Jr., nephew of the United States Senator of the same name, was born at Lebanon, Ohio, July 31, 1806, was educated at Transylvania University, and, being admitted to the bar, located at Edwardsville, Ill. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as Secretary of the State Senate in 1830, being re-elected in 1832; in 1834 was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Madison County, but, in February following, was appointed Attorney-General, serving only one year. He afterwards held the position of Circuit Judge (1837-39), his home being then in Springfield; in 1843 he became Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointment of the Governor, as successor to Stephen A. Douglas, and was afterwards elected to the same office by the Legislature, remaining until 1848. During a part of his professional career he was the partner of David Prickett and William L. May, at Springfield, and afterwards a member of the Galena bar, finally removing to Chicago, where he died, Feb. 21, 1850.—Jesse B. (Thomas) third, clergyman and son of the last named; born at Edwardsville, Ill., July 29, 1832; educated at Kenyon College, Ohio, and Rochester (N. Y.) Theological Seminary; practiced law for a time in Chicago, but finally entered the Baptist ministry, serving churches at Waukegan, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and San Francisco (1863-69). He then became pastor of the Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, in Chicago, remaining until 1874, when he returned to Brooklyn. In 1887 he became Professor of Biblical History in the Theological Seminary at Newton, Mass., where he has since resided. He is the author of several volumes, and, in 1866, received the degree of D.D. from the old University of Chicago.

THOMAS, John, pioneer and soldier of the Black Hawk War, was born in Wythe County, Va., Jan. 11, 1800. At the age of 18 he accompanied his parents to St. Clair County, Ill., where the family located in what was then called the Alexander settlement, near the present site of Shiloh. When he was 23 he rented a farm (although he had not enough money to buy a horse) and married. Six years later he bought and stocked a farm, and, from that time forward, rapidly accumulated real property, until he became one of the most extensive owners of farming land in St. Clair County. In early life he was fond of military exercise, holding various offices in local organizations and serving as a Colonel in the Black Hawk War. In 1824 he was one of the leaders of the party opposed to the amendment of the State Constitution to sanction slavery, was a zealous opponent of the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854, and a firm supporter of the Republican party from the date of its formation. He was elected to the lower house of the General Assembly in 1838, '62, '64, '72 and '74; and to the State Senate in 1878, serving four years in the latter body. Died, at Belleville, Dec. 16, 1894, in the 95th year of his age.

THOMAS, John R., ex-Congressman, was born at Mount Vernon, Ill., Oct. 11, 1846. He served in the Union Army during the War of the Rebellion, rising from the ranks to a captaincy. After his return home he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. From 1873 to 1876 he was State's Attorney, and, from 1879 to 1889, represented his District in Congress. In 1897, Mr. Thomas was appointed by President McKinley an additional United States District Judge for Indian Territory. His home is now at Vanita, in that Territory.

THOMAS, William, pioneer lawyer and legislator, was born in what is now Allen County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1802; received a rudimentary education, and served as deputy of his father (who was Sheriff), and afterwards of the County Clerk; studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1823; in 1826 removed to Jacksonville, Ill., where he taught school, served as a private in the Winnebago War (1827), and at the session of 1828-29, reported the proceedings of the General Assembly for "The Vandalia Intelligencer"; was State's Attorney and School Commissioner of Morgan County; served as Quartermaster and Commissary in the Black Hawk War (1831-32), first under Gen. Joseph Duncan and, a year later, under General Whiteside; in 1839 was appointed Circuit Judge, but legislated out of office two years later. It was as a member of the Legislature, however, that he gained the greatest prominence, first as State Senator in 1834-40, and Representative in 1846-48 and 1850-52, when he was especially influential in the legislation which resulted in establishing the institutions for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind, and the Hospital for the Insane (the first in the State) at Jacksonville—serving, for a time, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the latter. He was also prominent in connection with many enterprises of a local character, including the establishment of the Illinois Female College, to which, although without children of his own, he was a liberal contributor. During the first year of the war he was a member of the Board of Army Auditors by appointment of Governor Yates. Died, at Jacksonville, August 22, 1889.

THORNTON, Anthony, jurist, was born in Bourbon County, Ky., Nov. 9, 1814—being descended from a Virginia family. After the usual primary instruction in the common schools, he spent two years in a high school at Gallatin, Tenn., when he entered Centre College at Danville, Ky., afterwards continuing his studies at Miami University, Ohio, where he graduated in 1834. Having studied law with an uncle at Paris, Ky., he was licensed to practice in 1836, when he left his native State with a view to settling in Missouri, but, visiting his uncle, Gen. William F. Thornton, at Shelbyville, Ill., was induced to establish himself in practice there. He served as a member of the State Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1862, and as Representative in the Seventeenth General Assembly (1850-52) for Shelby County. In 1864 he was elected to the Thirty-ninth Congress, and, in 1870, to the Illinois Supreme Court, but served only until 1873, when he resigned. In 1879 Judge Thornton removed to Decatur, Ill., but subsequently returned to Shelbyville, where (1898) he now resides.

THORNTON, William Fitzhugh, Commissioner of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, was born in Hanover County, Va., Oct. 4, 1789; in 1806, went to Alexandria, Va., where he conducted a drug business for a time, also acting as associate editor of "The Alexandria Gazette." Subsequently removing to Washington City, he conducted a paper there in the interest of John Quincy Adams for the Presidency. During the War of 1812-14 he served as a Captain of cavalry, and, for a time, as staff-officer of General Winder. On occasion of the visit of Marquis La Fayette to America (1824-25) he accompanied the distinguished Frenchman from Baltimore to Richmond. In 1829 he removed to Kentucky, and, in 1833, to Shelbyville, Ill., where he soon after engaged in mercantile business, to which he added a banking and brokerage business in 1859, with which he was actively associated until his death. In 1836, he was appointed, by Governor Duncan, one of the Commissioners of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, serving as President of the Board until 1842. In 1840, he made a visit to London, as financial agent of the State, in the interest of the Canal, and succeeded in making a sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000 on what were then considered favorable terms. General Thornton was an ardent Whig until the organization of the Republican party, when he became a Democrat. Died, at Shelbyville, Oct. 21, 1873.

TILLSON, John, pioneer, was born at Halifax, Mass., March 13, 1796; came to Illinois in 1819, locating at Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he became a prominent and enterprising operator in real estate, doing a large business for eastern parties; was one of the founders of Hillsboro Academy and an influential and liberal friend of Illinois College, being a Trustee of the latter from its establishment until his death; was supported in the Legislature of 1827 for State Treasurer, but defeated by James Hall. Died, at Peoria, May 11, 1853.—Christiana Holmes (Tillson), wife of the preceding, was born at Kingston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1798; married to John Tillson in 1822, and immediately came to Illinois to reside; was a woman of rare culture and refinement, and deeply interested in benevolent enterprises. Died, in New York City, May 29, 1872.—Charles Holmes (Tillson), son of John and Christiana Holmes Tillson, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Sept. 13, 1823; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, graduating from the latter in 1844; studied law in St. Louis and at Transylvania University, was admitted to the bar in St. Louis and practiced there some years—also served several terms in the City Council, and was a member of the National Guard of Missouri in the War of the Rebellion. Died, Nov. 25, 1865.—John (Tillson), Jr., another son, was born at Hillsboro, Ill., Oct. 12, 1825; educated at Hillsboro Academy and Illinois College, but did not graduate from the latter; graduated from Transylvania Law School, Ky., in 1847, and was admitted to the bar at Quincy, Ill., the same year; practiced two years at Galena, when he returned to Quincy. In 1861 he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, became its Lieutenant-Colonel, on the promotion of Col. J. D. Morgan to Brigadier-General, was advanced to the colonelcy, and, in July, 1865, was mustered out with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General; for two years later held a commission as Captain in the regular army. During a portion of 1869-70 he was editor of "The Quincy Whig"; in 1873 was elected Representative in the Twenty-eighth General Assembly to succeed Nehemiah Bushnell, who had died in office, and, during the same year, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Quincy District, serving until 1881. Died, August 6, 1892.

TILLSON, Robert, pioneer, was born in Halifax County, Mass., August 12, 1800; came to Illinois in 1822, and was employed, for several years, as a clerk in the land agency of his brother, John Tillson, at Hillsboro. In 1826 he engaged in the mercantile business with Charles Holmes, Jr., in St. Louis, but, in 1828, removed to Quincy, Ill., where he opened the first general store in that city; also served as Postmaster for some ten years. During this period he built the first two-story frame building erected in Quincy, up to that date. Retiring from the mercantile business in 1840 he engaged in real estate, ultimately becoming the proprietor of considerable property of this character; was also a contractor for furnishing cavalry accouterments to the Government during the war. Soon after the war he erected one of the handsomest business blocks existing in the city at that time. Died, in Quincy, Dec. 27, 1892.

TINCHER, John L., banker, was born in Kentucky in 1821; brought by his parents to Vermilion County, Ind., in 1829, and left an orphan at 17; attended school in Coles County, Ill., and was employed as clerk in a store at Danville, 1843-53. He then became a member of the firm of Tinchcr & English, merchants, later establishing a bank, which became the First National Bank of Danville. In 1864 Mr. Tinchcr was elected Representative in the Twenty-fourth General Assembly and, two years later, to the Senate, being re-elected in 1870. He was also a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. Died, in Springfield, Dec. 17, 1871, while in attendance on the adjourned session of that year.

TIPTON, Thomas F., lawyer and jurist, was born in Franklin County, Ohio, August 29, 1833; has been a resident of McLean County, Ill., from the age of 10 years, his present home being at Bloomington. He was admitted to the bar in 1857, and, from January, 1867, to December, 1868, was State's Attorney for the Eighth Judicial Circuit. In 1870 he was elected Judge of the same circuit, and under the new Constitution, was chosen Judge of the new Fourteenth Circuit. From 1877 to 1879 he represented the (then) Thirteenth Illinois District in Congress, but, in 1878, was defeated by Adlai E. Stevenson, the Democratic nominee. In 1891 he was re-elected to a seat on the Circuit bench for the Bloomington Circuit, but resumed practice at the expiration of his term in 1897.

TISKILWA, a village of Bureau County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 7 miles southwest of Princeton; has creameries and cheese factories, churches, school, library, water-works, bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 965.

TODD, (Col.) John, soldier, was born in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1750; took part in the battle of Point Pleasant, Va., in 1774, as Adjutant-General of General Lewis; settled as a lawyer at Fincastle, Va., and, in 1775, removed to Fayette County, Ky., the next year locating near Lexington. He was one of the first two Delegates from Kentucky County to the Virginia House of Burgesses, and, in 1778, accompanied Col. George Rogers Clark on his expedition against Kaskaskia and Vincennes. In December, 1778, he was appointed by Gov. Patrick Henry, Lieutenant-Commandant of Illinois County, embracing the region northwest of the Ohio River, serving two years; in 1780, was again a member of the Virginia Legislature, where he procured grants of land for public schools and introduced a bill for negro-emancipation. He was killed by Indians, at the battle of Blue Licks, Ky., August 19, 1782.

TODD, (Dr.) John, physician, born near Lexington, Ky., April 27, 1787, was one of the earliest graduates of Transylvania University, also graduating at the Medical University of Philadelphia; was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky troops in the War of 1812, and captured at the battle of River Raisin. Returning to Lexington after his release, he practiced there and at Bardstown, removed to Edwardsville, Ill., in 1817, and, in 1827, to Springfield, where he had been appointed Register of the Land Office by President John Quincy Adams, but was removed by Jackson in 1829. Dr. Todd continued to reside at Springfield until his death, which occurred, Jan. 9, 1865. He was a grandson of John Todd, who was appointed Commandant of Illinois County by Gov. Patrick Henry in 1778, and an uncle of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.—John Blair Smith (Todd), son of the preceding, was born at Lexington, Ky., April 4, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1817; graduated at the United States Military Academy in 1837, serving afterwards in the Florida and Mexican wars and on the frontier; resigned, and was an Indian-trader in Dakota, 1856-61; the latter year, took his seat as a Delegate in Congress from Dakota, then served as Brigadier-General of Volunteers, 1861-62; was again Delegate in Congress in 1863-65, Speaker of the Dakota Legislature in 1867, and Governor of the Territory, 1869-71. Died, at Yankton City, Jan. 5, 1872.

TOLEDO, a village and the county-seat of Cumberland County, on the Illinois Central Railroad; founded in 1854; has five churches, a graded school, two banks, creamery, flour mill, elevator, and two weekly newspapers. There are no manufacturing, the leading industry in the surrounding country being agriculture. Pop. (1890), 676; (1900), 818.

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway.)

TOLEDO, PEORIA & WESTERN RAILWAY, a line of railroad wholly within the State of Illinois, extending from Effner, at the Indiana State line, west to the Mississippi River at Warsaw. The length of the whole line is 230.7 miles, owned entirely by the company. It is made up of a division from Effner to Peoria (110.9 miles)—which is practically an air-line throughout nearly its entire length—and the Peoria and Warsaw Division (108.8 miles) with branches from La Harpe to Iowa Junction (10.4 miles) and 0.6 of a mile connecting with the Keokuk bridge at Hamilton.—(HISTORY.) The original charter for this line was granted, in 1863, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Railroad; the main line was completed in 1868, and the La Harpe & Iowa Junction branch in 1873. Default was made in 1873, the road sold under foreclosure, in 1880, and reorganized as the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad, and the line leased for 49¼ years to the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company. The latter defaulted in July, 1884, and, a year later, the Toledo, Peoria & Western was transferred to trustees for the first mortgage bond-holders, was sold under foreclosure in October, 1886, and, in March, 1887, the present company, under the name of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway Company, was organized for the purpose of taking over the property. In 1893 the Pennsylvania Railroad Company obtained a controlling interest in the stock, and, in 1894, an agreement, for joint ownership and management, was entered into between that corporation and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. The total capitalization, in 1898, was $9,712,433, of which $4,076,900 was in stock and $4,895,000 in bonds.

TOLEDO, ST. LOUIS & KANSAS CITY RAILROAD. This line crosses the State in a northeast direction from East St. Louis to Humrick, near the Indiana State line, with Toledo as its eastern terminus. The length of the entire line is 450.72 miles, of which 179½ miles are operated in Illinois.—(HISTORY.) The Illinois portion of the line grew out of the union of charters granted to the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes and the Charleston, Neoga & St. Louis Railroad Companies, which were consolidated in 1881 with certain Indiana lines under the name of the Toledo, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad. During 1882 a narrow-gauge road was constructed from Ridge Farm, in Vermilion County, to East St. Louis (172 miles). In 1885 this was sold under foreclosure and, in June, 1886, consolidated with the main line under the name of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad. The whole line was changed to standard gauge in 1887-89, and otherwise materially improved, but, in 1893, went into the hands of receivers. Plans of reorganization have been under consideration, but the receivers were still in control in 1898.

TOLEDO, WABASH & WESTERN RAILROAD. (See Wabash Railroad.)

TOLONO, a city in Champaign County, situated at the intersection of the Wabash and the Illinois Central Railroads, 9 miles south of Champaign and 37 miles east-northeast of Decatur. It is the business center of a prosperous agricultural region. The town has five churches, a graded school, a bank, a button factory, and a weekly newspaper. Population (1890), 905; (1890), 902; (1900), 845.

TONICA, a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 9 miles south of La Salle; the district is agricultural, but the place has some manufactures and a newspaper. Population (1890), 473; (1900), 497.

TONTY, Chevalier Henry de, explorer and soldier, born at Gaeta, Italy, about 1650. What is now known as the Tontine system of insurance undoubtedly originated with his father. The younger Tonty was adventurous, and, even as a youth, took part in numerous land and naval encounters. In the course of his experience he lost a hand, which was replaced by an iron or copper substitute. He embarked with La Salle in 1678, and aided in the construction of a fort at Niagara. He advanced into the country of the Illinois and established friendly relations with them, only to witness the defeat of his putative savage allies by the Iroquois. After various encounters (chiefly under the direction of La Salle) with the Indians in Illinois, he returned to Green Bay in 1681. The same year—under La Salle's orders—he began the erection of Fort St. Louis, on what is now called "Starved Rock" in La Salle County. In 1682 he descended the Mississippi to its mouth, with La Salle, but was ordered back to Mackinaw for assistance. In 1684 he returned to Illinois and successfully repulsed the Iroquois from Fort St. Louis. In 1686 he again descended the Mississippi in search of La Salle. Disheartened by the death of his commander and the loss of his early comrades, he took up his residence with the Illinois Indians. Among them he was found by Iberville in 1700, as a hunter and fur-trader. He died, in Mobile, in September, 1704. He was La Salle's most efficient coadjutor, and next to his ill-fated leader, did more than any other of the early French explorers to make Illinois known to the civilized world.

TOPOGRAPHY. Illinois is, generally speaking, an elevated table-land. If low water at Cairo be adopted as the maximum depression, and the summits of the two ridges hereinafter mentioned as the highest points of elevation, the altitude of this table land above the sea-level varies from 300 to 850 feet, the mean elevation being about 600 feet. The State has no mountain chains, and its few hills are probably the result of unequal denudation during the drift epoch. In some localities, particularly in the valley of the upper Mississippi, the streams have cut channels from 200 to 300 feet deep through the nearly horizontal strata, and here are found precipitous scarps, but, for the most part, the fundamental rocks are covered by a thick layer of detrital material. In the northwest there is a broken tract of uneven ground; the central portion of the State is almost wholly flat prairie, and, in the alluvial lands in the State, there are many deep valleys, eroded by the action of streams. The surface generally slopes toward the south and southwest, but the uniformity is broken by two ridges, which cross the State, one in either extremity. The northern ridge crosses the Rock River at Grand Detour and the Illinois at Split Rock, with an extreme altitude of 800 to 850 feet above sea-level, though the altitude of Mount Morris, in Ogle County, exceeds 900 feet. That in the south consists of a range of hills in the latitude of Jonesboro, and extending from Shawneetown to Grand Tower. These hills are also about 800 feet above the level of the ocean. The highest point in the State is in Jo Daviess County, just south of the Wisconsin State line (near Scale's Mound) reaching an elevation of 1,257 feet above sea-level, while the highest in the south is in the northeast corner of Pope County—1,046 feet—a spur of the Ozark mountains. The following statistics regarding elevations are taken from a report of Prof. C. W. Rolfe, of the University of Illinois, based on observations made under the auspices of the Illinois Board of World's Fair Commissioners: The lowest gauge of the Ohio river, at its mouth (above sea-level), is 268.58 feet, and the mean level of Lake Michigan at Chicago 581.28 feet. The altitudes of a few prominent points are as follows: Highest point in Jackson County, 695 feet; "Bald Knob" in Union County, 985; highest point in Cook County (Barrington), 818; in La Salle County (Mendota), 747; in Livingston (Strawn), 770; in Will (Monroe), 804; in Pike (Arden), 790; in Lake (Lake Zurich), 880; in Bureau, 910; in Boone, 1,010; in Lee (Carnahan), 1,017; in Stephenson (Waddam's Grove), 1,018; in Kane (Briar Hill), 974; in Winnebago, 985. The elevations of important towns are: Peoria, 465; Jacksonville, 602; Springfield, 596; Galesburg, 755; Joliet, 537; Rockford, 728; Bloomington, 821. Outside of the immediate valleys of the streams, and a few isolated groves or copses, little timber is found in the northern and central portions of the State, and such growth as there is, lacks the thriftiness characteristic of the forests in the Ohio valley. These forests cover a belt extending some sixty miles north of Cairo, and, while they generally include few coniferous trees, they abound in various species of oak, black and white walnut, white and yellow poplar, ash, elm, sugar-maple, linden, honey locust, cottonwood, mulberry, sycamore, pecan, persimmon, and (in the immediate valley of the Ohio)

the cypress. From a commercial point of view, Illinois loses nothing through the lack of timber over three-fourths of the State's area. Chicago is an accessible market for the product of the forests of the upper lakes, so that the supply of lumber is ample, while extensive coal-fields supply abundant fuel. The rich soil of the prairies, with its abundance of organic matter (see Geological Formations), more than compensates for the want of pine forests, whose soil is ill adapted to agriculture. About two-thirds of the entire boundary of the State consists of navigable waters. These, with their tributary streams, ensure sufficient drainage.

TORRENS LAND TITLE SYSTEM. A system for the registration of titles to, and incumbrances upon, land, as well as transfers thereof, intended to remove all unnecessary obstructions to the cheap, simple and safe sale, acquisition and transfer of realty. The system has been in successful operation in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and British Columbia for many years, and it is also in force in some States in the American Union. An act providing for its introduction into Illinois was first passed by the Twentieth General Assembly, and approved, June 13, 1895. The final legislation in reference thereto was enacted by the succeeding Legislature, and was approved, May 1, 1897. It is far more elaborate in its consideration of details, and is believed to be, in many respects, much better adapted to accomplish the ends in view, than was the original act of 1895. The law is applicable only to counties of the first and second class, and can be adopted in no county except by a vote of a majority of the qualified voters of the same—the vote "for" or "against" to be taken at either the November or April elections, or at an election for the choice of Judges. Thus far the only county to adopt the system has been Cook, and there it encountered strong opposition on the part of certain parties of influence and wealth. After its adoption, a test case was brought, raising the question of the constitutionality of the act. The issue was taken to the Supreme Court, which tribunal finally upheld the law.—The Torrens system substitutes a certificate of registration and of transfer for the more elaborate deeds and mortgages in use for centuries. Under it there can be no actual transfer of a title until the same is entered upon the public land register, kept in the office of the Registrar, in which case the deed or mortgage becomes a mere power of attorney to authorize the transfer to be made, upon the principle of an ordinary stock transfer, or of the registration of a United States bond, the actual transfer and public notice thereof being simultaneous. A brief synopsis of the provisions of the Illinois statute is given below: Records of deeds are made Registrars, and required to give bonds of either $50,000 or $200,000, according to the population of the county. Any person or corporation, having an interest in land, may make application to any court having chancery jurisdiction, to have his title thereto registered. Such application must be in writing, signed and verified by oath, and must conform, in matters of specification and detail, with the requirements of the act. The court may refer the application to one of the standing examiners appointed by the Registrar, who are required to be competent attorneys and to give bond to examine into the title, as well as the truth of the applicant's statements. Immediately upon the filing of the application, notice thereof is given by the clerk, through publication and the issuance of a summons to be served, as in other proceedings in chancery, against all persons mentioned in the petition as having or claiming any interest in the property described. Any person interested, whether named as a defendant or not, may enter an appearance within the time allowed. A failure to enter an appearance is regarded as a confession by default. The court, in passing upon the application, is in no case bound by the examiner's report, but may require other and further proof; and, in its final adjudication, passes upon all questions of title and incumbrance, directing the Registrar to register the title in the party in whom it is to be vested, and making provision as to the manner and order in which incumbrances thereon shall appear upon the certificate to be issued. An appeal may be allowed to the Supreme Court, if prayed at the time of entering the decree, upon like terms as in other cases in chancery; and a writ of error may be sued out from that tribunal within two years after the entry of the order or decree. The period last mentioned may be said to be the statutory period of limitation, after which the decree of the court must be regarded as final, although safeguards are provided for those who may have been defrauded, and for a few other classes of persons. Upon the filing of the order or decree of the court, it becomes the duty of the Registrar to issue a certificate of title, the form of which is prescribed by the act, making such notations at the end as shall show and preserve the priorities of all estates, mortgages, incumbrances and changes to which the owner's title is subject. For the purpose of preserving evidence of the owner's handwriting, a receipt for the certificate, duly witnessed or acknowledged, is required of him, which is preserved in the Registrar's office. In case any registered owner should desire to transfer the whole or any part of his estate, or any interest therein, he is required to execute a conveyance to the transferee, which, together with the certificate of title last issued, must be surrendered to the Registrar. That official thereupon issues a new certificate, stamping the word "cancelled" across the surrendered certificate, as well as upon the corresponding entry in his books of record. When land is first brought within the operation of the act, the receiver of the certificate of title is required to pay to the Registrar one-tenth of one per cent of the value of the land, the aggregate so received to be deposited with and invested by the County Treasurer, and reserved as an indemnity fund for the reimbursement of persons sustaining any loss through any omission, mistake or malfeasance of the Registrar or his subordinates. The advantage claimed for the Torrens system is, chiefly, that titles registered thereunder can be dealt with more safely, quickly and inexpensively than under the old system; it being possible to close the entire transaction within an hour or two, without the need of an abstract of title, while (as the law is administered in Cook County) the cost of transfer is only $3. It is asserted that a title, once registered, can be dealt with almost as quickly and cheaply, and quite as safely, as shares of stock or registered bonds.

TOULON, the county-seat of Stark County, on the Peoria & Rock Island Railroad, 37 miles north-northwest of Peoria, and 11 miles southeast of Galva. Besides the county court-house, the town has five churches and a high school, an academy, steam granite works, two banks, and two weekly papers. Population (1880), 967; (1890), 945; (1900), 1,057.

TOWER HILL, a village of Shelby County, on the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroads, 7 miles east of Pana; has bank, grain elevators, and coal mine. Pop. (1900), 615.

TOWNSHEND, Richard W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Prince George's County, Md., April 30, 1840. Between the ages of 10 and 18 he attended public and private schools at Washington, D. C. In 1858 he came to Illinois, where he began teaching, at the same time reading law with S. S. Marshall, at McLeansboro, where he was admitted to the bar in 1862, and where he began practice. From 1863 to 1868 he was Circuit Clerk of Hamilton County, and, from 1868 to 1872, Prosecuting Attorney for the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. In 1873 he removed to Shawneetown, where he became an officer of the Gallatin National Bank. From 1864 to 1875 he was a member of the Democratic State Central Committee, and a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Baltimore, in 1872. For twelve years (1877 to 1889) he represented his District in Congress; was re-elected in 1888, but died, March 9, 1889, a few days after the beginning of his seventh term.

TRACY, John M., artist, was born in Illinois about 1842; served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War; studied painting in Paris in 1866-76; established himself as a portrait painter in St. Louis and, later, won a high reputation as a painter of animals, being regarded as an authority on the anatomy of the horse and the dog. Died, at Ocean Springs, Miss., March 20, 1893.

TREASURERS. (See State Treasurers.)

TREAT, Samuel Hubbel, lawyer and jurist, was born at Plainfield, Otsego County, N. Y., June 21, 1811, worked on his father's farm and studied law at Richfield, where he was admitted to practice. In 1834 he came to Springfield, Ill., traveling most of the way on foot. Here he formed a partnership with George Forquer, who had held the offices of Secretary of State and Attorney-General. In 1839 he was appointed a Circuit Judge, and, on the reorganization of the Supreme Court in 1841, was elevated to the Supreme bench, being acting Chief Justice at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1848. Having been elected to the Supreme bench under the new Constitution, he remained in office until March, 1855, when he resigned to take the position of Judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Illinois, to which he had been appointed by President Pierce. This position he continued to occupy until his death, which occurred at Springfield, March 27, 1887. Judge Treat's judicial career was one of the longest in the history of the State, covering a period of forty-eight years, of which fourteen were spent upon the Supreme bench, and thirty-two in the position of Judge of the United States District Court.

TREATIES. (See Greenville, Treaty of; Indian Treaties.)

TREE, Lambert, jurist, diplomat and ex-Congressman, was born in Washington, D. C., Nov. 29, 1832, of an ancestry distinguished in the War of the Revolution. He received a superior classical and professional education, and was admitted to the bar, at Washington, in October, 1855. Removing to Chicago soon afterward, his professional career has been chiefly connected with that city. In 1864 he was chosen President of the Law Institute, and served as Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County, from 1870 to 1875, when he resigned. The three following years he spent in foreign travel, returning to Chicago in 1878. In that year, and again in 1880, he was the Democratic candidate for Congress from the Fourth Illinois District, but was defeated by his Republican opponent. In 1885 he was the candidate of his party for United States Senator, but was defeated by John A. Logan, by one vote. In 1884 he was a member of the National Democratic Convention which first nominated Grover Cleveland, and, in July, 1885, President Cleveland appointed him Minister to Belgium, conferring the Russian mission upon him in September, 1888. On March 3, 1889, he resigned this post and returned home. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison a Commissioner to the International Monetary Conference at Washington. The year before he had attended (although not as a delegate) the International Conference, at Brussels, looking to the suppression of the slave-trade, where he exerted all his influence on the side of humanity. In 1892 Belgium conferred upon him the distinction of "Councillor of Honor" upon its commission to the World's Columbian Exposition. In 1896 Judge Tree was one of the most earnest opponents of the free-silver policy, and, after the Spanish-American War, a zealous advocate of the policy of retaining the territory acquired from Spain.

TREMONT, a town of Tazewell County, on the Peoria Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway, 9 miles southeast of Pekin; has two banks, two telephone exchanges, and one newspaper. Pop. (1900), 768.

TRENTON, a town of Clinton County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway, 31 miles east of St. Louis; in agricultural district; has creamery, milk condensery, two coal mines, six churches, a public school and one newspaper. Pop. (1890), 1,384; (1900), 1,706; (1904), about 2,000.

TROY, a village of Madison County, on the Terre Haute & Indianapolis railroad, 21 miles northeast of St. Louis; has churches, a bank and a newspaper. Pop. (1900), 1,080.

TRUITT, James Madison, lawyer and soldier, a native of Trimble County, Ky., was born Feb. 12, 1842, but lived in Illinois since 1843, his father having settled near Carrollton that year; was educated at Hillsboro and at McKendree College; enlisted in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers in 1862, and was promoted from the ranks to Lieutenant. After the war he studied law with Jesse J. Phillips, now of the Supreme Court, and, in 1872, was elected to the Twenty-eighth General Assembly, and, in 1888, a Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket. Mr. Truitt has been twice a prominent but unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination for Attorney-General. His home is at Hillsboro, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession. Died July 26, 1900.

TRUMBULL, Lyman, statesman, was born at Colchester, Conn., Oct. 12, 1813, descended from a historical family, being a grand-nephew of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, from whom the name "Brother Jonathan" was derived as an appellation for Americans. Having received an academic education in his native town, at the age of 16 he began teaching a district school near his home, went South four years later, and engaged in teaching at Greenville, Ga. Here he studied law with Judge Hiram Warner, afterwards of the Supreme Court, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. Leaving Georgia the same year, he came to Illinois on horseback, visiting Vandalia, Belleville, Jacksonville, Springfield, Tremont and La Salle, and finally reaching Chicago, then a village of four or five thousand inhabitants. At Jacksonville he obtained a license to practice from Judge Lockwood, and, after visiting Michigan and his native State, he settled at Belleville, which continued to be his home for twenty years. His entrance into public life began with his election as Representative in the General Assembly in 1840. This was followed, in February, 1841, by his appointment by Governor Carlin, Secretary of State, as the successor of Stephen A. Douglas, who, after holding the position only two months, had resigned to accept a seat on the Supreme bench. Here he remained two years, when he was removed by Governor Ford, March 4, 1843, but, five years later (1848), was elected a Justice of the Supreme Court, was re-elected in 1852, but resigned in 1853 on account of impaired health. A year later (1854) he was elected to Congress from the Belleville District as an anti-Nebraska Democrat, but, before taking his seat, was promoted to the United States Senate, as the successor of General Shields in the memorable contest of 1855, which resulted in the defeat of Abraham Lincoln. Senator Trumbull's career of eighteen years in the United States Senate (being re-elected in 1861 and 1867) is one of the most memorable in the history of that body, covering, as it does, the whole history of the war for the Union, and the period of reconstruction which followed it. During this period, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, he had more to do in shaping legislation on war and reconstruction measures than any other single member of that body. While he disagreed with a large majority of his Republican associates on the question of Andrew Johnson's impeachment, he was always found in sympathy with them on the vital questions affecting the war and restoration of the Union. The Civil Rights Bill and Freedmen's Bureau Bills were shaped by his hand. In 1872 he joined in the "Liberal Republican" movement and afterwards co-operated with the Democratic party, being their candidate for Governor in 1880. From 1863 his home was in Chicago, where, after retiring from the Senate, he continued in the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred in that city, June 25, 1896.

TUG MILLS. These were a sort of primitive machine used in grinding corn in Territorial and early State days. The mechanism consisted of an upright shaft, into the upper end of which were fastened bars, resembling those in the capstan of a ship. Into the outer end of each of these bars was driven a pin. A belt, made of a broad strip of ox-hide, twisted into a sort of rope, was stretched around these pins and wrapped twice around a circular piece of wood called a trundle head, through which passed a perpendicular flat bar of iron, which turned the mill-stone, usually about eighteen inches in diameter. From the upright shaft projected a beam, to which were hitched one or two horses, which furnished the motive power. Oxen were sometimes employed as motive power in lieu of horses. These rudimentary contrivances were capable of grinding about twelve bushels of corn, each, per day.

TULEY, Murray Floyd, lawyer and jurist, was born at Louisville, Ky., March 4, 1827, of English extraction and descended from the early settlers of Virginia. His father died in 1832, and, eleven years later, his mother, having married Col. Richard J. Hamilton, for many years a prominent lawyer of Chicago, removed with her family to that city. Young Tuley began reading law with his step-father and completed his studies at the Louisville Law Institute in 1847, the same year being admitted to the bar in Chicago. About the same time he enlisted in the Fifth Illinois Volunteers for service in the Mexican War, and was commissioned First Lieutenant. The war having ended, he settled at Santa Fe, N. M., where he practiced law, also served as Attorney-General and in the Territorial Legislature. Returning to Chicago in 1854, he was associated in practice, successively, with Andrew Harvie, Judge Gary and J. N. Barker, and finally as head of the firm of Tuley, Stiles & Lewis. From 1869 to 1873 he was Corporation Counsel, and during this time framed the General Incorporation Act for Cities, under which the City of Chicago was reincorporated. In 1879 he was elevated to the bench of the Circuit Court of Cook County, and re-elected every six years thereafter, his last election being in 1897. He is now serving his fourth term, some ten years of his incumbency having been spent in the capacity of Chief Justice.

TUNNICLIFFE, Damon G., lawyer and jurist, was born in Herkimer County, N. Y., August 20, 1829; at the age of 20, emigrated to Illinois, settling in Vermont, Fulton County, where, for a time, he was engaged in mercantile pursuits. He subsequently studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1853. In 1854 he established himself at Macomb, McDonough County, where he built up a large and lucrative practice. In 1868 he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, from February to June, 1885, by appointment of Governor Oglesby, occupied a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, vice Pinkney H. Walker, deceased, who had been one of his first professional preceptors.

TURCHIN, John Basil (Ivan Vasilevitch Turchinoff), soldier, engineer and author, was born in Russia, Jan. 30, 1832. He graduated from the artillery school at St. Petersburg, in 1841, and was commissioned ensign; participated in the Hungarian campaign of 1849, and, in 1852, was assigned to the staff of the Imperial Guards; served through the Crimean War, rising to the rank of Colonel, and being made senior staff officer of the active corps. In 1856 he came to this country, settling in Chicago, and, for five years, was in the service of the Illinois Central Railway Company as topographical engineer. In 1861 he was commissioned Colonel of the Nineteenth Illinois Volunteers, and, after leading his regiment in Missouri, Kentucky and Alabama, was, on July 7, 1862, promoted to a Brigadier-Generalship, being attached to the Army of the Cumberland until 1864, when he resigned. After the war he was, for six years, solicitor of patents at Chicago, but, in 1873, returned to engineering. In 1879 he established a Polish colony at Radom, in Washington County, in this State, and settled as a farmer. He is an occasional contributor to the press, writing usually on military or scientific subjects, and is the author of the "Campaign and Battle of Chickamauga" (Chicago, 1888).

TURNER (now WEST CHICAGO), a town and manufacturing center in Winfield Township, Du Page County, 30 miles west of Chicago, at the junction of two divisions of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railroads. The town has a rolling-mill, manufactories of wagons and pumps, and railroad repair shops. It also has five churches, a graded school, and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 1,877; with suburb, 2,270.

TURNER, (Col.) Henry L., soldier and real-estate operator, was born at Oberlin, Ohio, August 26, 1845, and received a part of his education in the college there. During the Civil War he served as First Lieutenant in the One Hundred and Fiftieth Ohio Volunteers, and later, with the same rank in a colored regiment, taking part in the operations about Richmond, the capture of Fort Fisher, of Wilmington and of Gen. Joe Johnston's army. Coming to Chicago after the close of the war, he became connected with the business office of "The Advance," but later was employed in the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Philadelphia. On the failure of that concern, in 1872, he returned to Chicago and bought "The Advance," which he conducted some two years, when he sold out and engaged in the real estate business, with which he has since been identified—being President of the Chicago Real Estate Board in 1888. He has also been President of the Western Publishing Company and a Trustee of Oberlin College. Colonel Turner is an enthusiastic member of the Illinois National Guard and, on the declaration of war between the United States and Spain, in April, 1898, promptly resumed his connection with the First Regiment of the Guard, and finally led it to Santiago de Cuba during the fighting there—his regiment being the only one from Illinois to see actual service in the field during the progress of the war. Colonel Turner won the admiration of his command and the entire nation by the manner in which he discharged his duty. The regiment was mustered out at Chicago, Nov. 17, 1898, when he retired to private life.

TURNER, John Bice, Railway President, was born at Colchester, Delaware County, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1799; after a brief business career in his native State, he became identified with the construction and operation of railroads. Among the works with which he was thus connected, were the Delaware Division of the New York & Erie and the Troy & Schenectady Roads. In 1843 he came to Chicago, having previously purchased a large body of land at Blue Island. In 1847 he joined with W. B. Ogden and others, in resuscitating the Galena & Chicago Union Railway, which had been incorporated in 1836. He became President of the Company in 1850, and assisted in constructing various sections of road in Northern Illinois and Wisconsin, which have since become portions of the Chicago & Northwestern system. He was also one of the original Directors of the North Side Street Railway Company, organized in 1859. Died, Feb. 26, 1871.

TURNER, Jonathan Baldwin, educator and agriculturist, was born in Templeton, Mass., Dec. 7, 1805; grew up on a farm and, before reaching his majority, began teaching in a country school. After spending a short time in an academy at Salem, in 1827 he entered the preparatory department of Yale College, supporting himself, in part, by manual labor and teaching in a gymnasium. In 1829 he matriculated in the classical department at Yale, graduated in 1833, and the same year accepted a position as tutor in Illinois College at Jacksonville, Ill., which had been opened, three years previous, by the late Dr. J. M. Sturtevant. In the next fourteen years he gave instruction in nearly every branch embraced in the college curriculum, though holding, during most of this period, the chair of Rhetoric and English Literature. In 1847 he retired from college duties to give attention to scientific agriculture, in which he had always manifested a deep interest. The cultivation and sale of the Osage orange as a hedge-plant now occupied his attention for many years, and its successful introduction in Illinois and other Western States—where the absence of timber rendered some substitute a necessity for fencing purposes—was largely due to his efforts. At the same time he took a deep interest in the cause of practical scientific education for the industrial classes, and, about 1850, began formulating that system of industrial education which, after twelve years of labor and agitation, he had the satisfaction of seeing recognized in the act adopted by Congress, and approved by President Lincoln, in July, 1862, making liberal donations of public lands for the establishment of "Industrial Colleges" in the several States, out of which grew the University of Illinois at Champaign. While Professor Turner had zealous collaborators in this field, in Illinois and elsewhere, to him, more than to any other single man in the Nation, belongs the credit for this magnificent achievement. (See Education, and University of Illinois.) He was also one of the chief factors in founding and building up the Illinois State Teachers' Association, and the State Agricultural and Horticultural Societies. His address on "The Millennium of Labor," delivered at the first State Agricultural Fair at Springfield, in 1853, is still remembered as marking an era in industrial progress in Illinois. A zealous champion of free thought, in both political and religious affairs, he long bore the reproach which attached to the radical Abolitionist, only to enjoy, in later years, the respect universally accorded to those who had the courage and independence to avow their honest convictions. Prof. Turner was twice an unsuccessful candidate for Congress—once as a Republican and once as an "Independent"—and wrote much on political, religious and educational topics. The evening of an honored and useful life was spent among friends in Jacksonville, which was his home for more than sixty years, his death taking place in that city, Jan. 10, 1899, at the advanced age of 93 years.—Mrs. Mary Turner Carriel, at the present time (1899) one of the Trustees of the University of Illinois, is Prof. Turner's only daughter.

TURNER, Thomas J., lawyer and Congressman, born in Trumbull County, Ohio, April 5, 1815. Leaving home at the age of 18, he spent three years in Indiana and in the mining districts about Galena and in Southern Wisconsin, locating in Stephenson County, in 1836, where he was admitted to the bar in 1840, and elected Probate Judge in 1841. Soon afterwards Governor Ford appointed him Prosecuting Attorney, in which capacity he secured the conviction and punishment of the murderers of Colonel Davenport. In 1846 he was elected to Congress as a Democrat, and, the following year, founded "The Prairie Democrat" (afterward "The Freeport Bulletin"), the first newspaper published in the county. Elected to the Legislature in 1854, he was chosen Speaker of the House, the next year becoming the first Mayor of Freeport. He was a member of the Peace Conference of 1861, and, in May of that year, was commissioned, by Governor Yates, Colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Volunteers, but resigned in 1862. He served as a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1871, was again elected to the Legislature, where he received the Democratic caucus nomination for United States Senator against General Logan. In 1871 he removed to Chicago, and was twice an unsuccessful candidate for the office of State's Attorney. In February, 1874, he went to Hot Springs, Ark., for medical treatment, and died there, April 3 following.

TUSCOLA, a city and the county-seat of Douglas County, located at the intersection of the Illinois Central and two other trunk lines of railway, 22 miles south of Champaign, and 36 miles east of Decatur. Besides a brick court-house it has five churches, a graded school, a national bank, two weekly newspapers and two establishments for the manufacture of carriages and wagons. Population (1880), 1,457; (1890), 1,897; (1900), 2,569.

TUSCOLA, CHARLESTON & VINCENNES RAILROAD. (See Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad.)

TUTHILL, Richard Stanley, jurist, was born at Vergennes, Jackson County, Ill., Nov. 10, 1841. After passing through the common schools of his native county, he took a preparatory course in a high school at St. Louis and in Illinois College, Jacksonville, when he entered Middlebury College, Vt., graduating there in 1863. Immediately thereafter he joined the Federal army at Vicksburg, and, after serving for some time in a company of scouts attached to General Logan's command, was commissioned a Lieutenant in the First Michigan Light Artillery, with which he served until the close of the war, meanwhile being twice promoted. During this time he was with General Sherman in the march to Meridian, and in the Atlanta campaign, also took part with General Thomas in the operations against the rebel General Hood in Tennessee, and in the battle of Nashville. Having resigned his commission in May, 1865, he took up the study of law, which he had prosecuted as he had opportunity while in the army, and was admitted to the bar at Nashville in 1866, afterwards serving for a time as Prosecuting Attorney on the Nashville circuit. In 1873 he removed to Chicago, two years later was elected City Attorney and re-elected in 1877; was a delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1880 and, in 1884, was appointed United States District Attorney for the Northern District, serving until 1886. In 1887 he was elected Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Rogers, was re-elected for a full term in 1891, and again in 1897.

TYNDALE, Sharon, Secretary of State, born in Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 19, 1816; at the age of 17 came to Belleville, Ill., and was engaged for a time in mercantile business, later being employed in a surveyor's corps under the internal improvement system of 1837. Having married in 1839, he returned soon after to Philadelphia, where he engaged in mercantile business with his father;

then came to Illinois, a second time, in 1845, spending a year or two in business at Peoria. About 1847 he returned to Belleville and entered upon a course of mathematical study, with a view to fitting himself more thoroughly for the profession of a civil engineer. In 1851 he graduated in engineering at Cambridge, Mass., after which he was employed for a time on the Sunbury & Erie Railroad, and later on certain Illinois railroads. In 1857 he was elected County Surveyor of St. Clair County, and, in 1861, by appointment of President Lincoln, became Postmaster of the city of Belleville. He held this position until 1864, when he received the Republican nomination for Secretary of State and was elected, remaining in office four years. He was an earnest advocate, and virtually author, of the first act for the registration of voters in Illinois, passed at the session of 1865. After retiring from office in 1869, he continued to reside in Springfield, and was employed for a time in the survey of the Gilman, Clinton & Springfield Railway—now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central. At an early hour on the morning of April 29, 1871, while going from his home to the railroad station at Springfield, to take the train for St. Louis, he was assassinated upon the street by shooting, as supposed for the purpose of robbery—his dead body being found a few hours later at the scene of the tragedy. Mr. Tyndale was a brother of Gen. Hector Tyndale of Pennsylvania, who won a high reputation by his services during the war. His second wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Shadrach Penn, an editor of considerable reputation who was the contemporary and rival of George D. Prentice at Louisville, for some years.

"UNDERGROUND RAILROAD," THE. A history of Illinois would be incomplete without reference to the unique system which existed there, as in other Northern States, from forty to seventy years ago, known by the somewhat mysterious title of "The Underground Railroad." The origin of the term has been traced (probably in a spirit of facetiousness) to the expression of a Kentucky planter who, having pursued a fugitive slave across the Ohio River, was so surprised by his sudden disappearance, as soon as he had reached the opposite shore, that he was led to remark, "The nigger must have gone off on an underground road." From "underground road" to "underground railroad," the transition would appear to have been easy, especially in view of the increased facility with which the work was performed when railroads came into use. For readers of the present generation, it may be well to explain what "The Underground Railroad" really was. It may be defined as the figurative appellation for a spontaneous movement in the free States—extending, sometimes, into the slave States themselves—to assist slaves in their efforts to escape from bondage to freedom. The movement dates back to a period close to the Revolutionary War, long before it received a definite name. Assistance given to fugitives from one State by citizens of another, became a cause of complaint almost as soon as the Government was organized. In fact, the first President himself lost a slave who took refuge at Portsmouth, N. H., where the public sentiment was so strong against his return, that the patriotic and philosophic "Father of his Country" chose to let him remain unmolested, rather than "excite a mob or riot, or even uneasy sensations, in the minds of well-disposed citizens." That the matter was already one of concern in the minds of slaveholders, is shown by the fact that a provision was inserted in the Constitution for their conciliation, guaranteeing the return of fugitives from labor, as well as from justice, from one State to another.

In 1793 Congress passed the first Fugitive Slave Law, which was signed by President Washington. This law provided that the owner, his agent or attorney, might follow the slave into any State or Territory, and, upon oath or affidavit before a court or magistrate, be entitled to a warrant for his return. Any person who should hinder the arrest of the fugitive, or who should harbor, aid or assist him, knowing him to be such, was subject to a fine of $500 for each offense.—In 1850, fifty-seven years later, the first act having proved inefficacious, or conditions having changed, a second and more stringent law was enacted. This is the one usually referred to in discussions of the subject. It provided for an increased fine, not to exceed $1,000, and imprisonment not exceeding six months, with liability for civil damages to the party injured. No proof of ownership was required beyond the statement of a claimant, and the accused was not permitted to testify for himself. The fee of the United States Commissioner, before whom the case was tried, was ten dollars if he found for the claimant; if not, five dollars. This seemed to many an indirect form of bribery: clearly, it made it to the Judge's pecuniary advantage to decide in favor of the claimant. The law made it possible and easy for a white man to arrest, and carry into slavery, any free negro who could not immediately prove, by other witnesses, that he was born free, or had purchased his freedom.

Instead of discouraging the disposition, on the part of the opponents of slavery, to aid fugitives in their efforts to reach a region where they would be secure in their freedom, the effect of the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850 (as that of 1793 had been in a smaller degree) was the very opposite of that intended by its authors—unless, indeed, they meant to make matters worse. The provisions of the act seemed, to many people, so unfair, so one-sided, that they rebelled in spirit and refused to be made parties to its enforcement. The law aroused the anti-slavery sentiment of the North, and stimulated the active friends of the fugitives to take greater risks in their behalf. New efforts on the part of the slaveholders were met by a determination to evade, hinder and nullify the law.

And here a strange anomaly is presented. The slaveholder, in attempting to recover his slave, was acting within his constitutional and legal rights. The slave was his property in law. He had purchased or inherited his bondman on the same plane with his horse or his land, and, apart from the right to hold a human being in bondage, regarded his legal rights to the one as good as the other. From a legal standpoint his position was impregnable. The slave was his, representing so much of money value, and whoever was instrumental in the loss of that slave was, both theoretically and technically, a partner in robbery. Therefore he looked on "The Underground Railway" as the work of thieves, and entertained bitter hatred toward all concerned in its operation. On the other hand, men who were, in all other respects, good citizens—often religiously devout and pillars of the church—became bold and flagrant violators of the law in relation to this sort of property. They set at naught a plain provision of the Constitution and the act of Congress for its enforcement. Without hope of personal gain or reward, at the risk of fine and imprisonment, with the certainty of social ostracism and bitter opposition, they harbored the fugitive and helped him forward on every occasion. And why? Because they saw in him a man, with the same inherent right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" that they themselves possessed. To them this was a higher law than any Legislature, State or National, could enact. They denied that there could be truly such a thing as property in man. Believing that the law violated human rights, they justified themselves in rendering it null and void.

For the most part, the "Underground Railroad" operators and promoters were plain, obscure men, without hope of fame or desire for notoriety. Yet there were some whose names are conspicuous in history, such as Wendell Phillips, Thomas Wentworth Higginson and Theodore Parker of Massachusetts; Gerrit Smith and Thurlow Weed of New York; Joshua R. Giddings of Ohio, and Owen Lovejoy of Illinois. These had their followers and sympathizers in all the Northern States, and even in some portions of the South. It is a curious fact, that some of the most active spirits connected with the "Underground Railroad" were natives of the South, or had resided there long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with the "institution." Levi Coffin, who had the reputation of being the "President of the Underground Railroad"—at least so far as the region west of the Ohio was concerned—was an active operator on the line in North Carolina before his removal from that State to Indiana in 1826. Indeed, as a system, it is claimed to have had its origin at Guilford College, in the "Old North State" in 1819, though the evidence of this may not be conclusive.

Owing to the peculiar nature of their business, no official reports were made, no lists of officers, conductors, station agents or operators preserved, and few records kept which are now accessible. Consequently, we are dependent chiefly upon the personal recollection of individual operators for a history of their transactions. Each station on the road was the house of a "friend" and it is significant, in this connection, that in every settlement of Friends, or Quakers, there was sure to be a house of refuge for the slave. For this reason it was, perhaps, that one of the most frequently traveled lines extended from Virginia and Maryland through Eastern Pennsylvania, and then on towards New York or directly to Canada. From the proximity of Ohio to Virginia and Kentucky, and the fact that it offered the shortest route through free soil to Canada, it was traversed by more lines than any other State, although Indiana was pretty thoroughly "grid-ironed" by roads to freedom. In all, however, the routes were irregular, often zigzag, for purposes of security, and the "conductor" was any one who conveyed fugitives from one station to another. The "train" was sometimes a farm-wagon, loaded with produce for market at some town (or depot) on the line, frequently a closed carriage, and it is related that once, in Ohio, a number of carriages conveying a large party, were made to represent a funeral procession. Occasionally the train ran on foot, for convenience of side-tracking into the woods or a cornfield, in case of pursuit by a wild locomotive.

Then, again, there were not wanting lawyers who, in case the operator, conductor or station agent got into trouble, were ready, without fee or reward, to defend either him or his human freight in the courts. These included such names of national repute as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Rutherford B. Hayes, Richard H. Dana, and Isaac N. Arnold, while, taking the whole country over, their "name was legion." And there were a few men of wealth, like Thomas Garrett of Delaware, willing to contribute money by thousands to their assistance. Although technically acting in violation of law—or, as claimed by themselves, in obedience to a "higher law"—the time has already come when there is a disposition to look upon the actors as, in a certain sense, heroes, and their deeds as fitly belonging to the field of romance.

The most comprehensive collection of material relating to the history of this movement has been furnished in a recent volume entitled, "The Underground Railroad from Slavery to Freedom," by Prof. Wilbur H. Siebert, of Ohio State University; and, while it is not wholly free from errors, both as to individual names and facts, it will probably remain as the best compilation of history bearing on this subject—especially as the principal actors are fast passing away. One of the interesting features of Prof. Siebert's book is a map purporting to give the principal routes and stations in the States northwest of the Ohio, yet the accuracy of this, as well as the correctness of personal names given, has been questioned by some best informed on the subject. As might be expected from its geographical position between two slave States—Kentucky and Missouri—on the one hand, and the lakes offering a highway to Canada on the other, it is naturally to be assumed that Illinois would be an attractive field, both for the fugitive and his sympathizer.

The period of greatest activity of the system in this State was between 1840 and 1861—the latter being the year when the pro-slavery party in the South, by their attempt forcibly to dissolve the Union, took the business out of the hands of the secret agents of the "Underground Railroad," and—in a certain sense—placed it in the hands of the Union armies. It was in 1841 that Abraham Lincoln—then a conservative opponent of the extension of slavery—on an appeal from a judgment, rendered by the Circuit Court in Tazewell County, in favor of the holder of a note given for the service of the indentured slave-girl "Nance," obtained a decision from the Supreme Court of Illinois upholding the doctrine that the girl was free under the Ordinance of 1787 and the State Constitution, and that the note, given to the person who claimed to be her owner, was void. And it is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same Abraham Lincoln, as President of the United States, in the second year of the War of the Rebellion, issued the Proclamation of Emancipation which finally resulted in striking the shackles from the limbs of every slave in the Union.

In the practical operation of aiding fugitives in Illinois, it was natural that the towns along the border upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, should have served as a sort of entrepôts, or initial stations, for the reception of this class of freight—especially if adjacent to some anti-slavery community. This was the case at Chester, from which access was easy to Sparta, where a colony of Covenanters, or Seceders, was located, and whence a route extended, by way of Oakdale, Nashville and Centralia, in the direction of Chicago. Alton offered convenient access to Bond County, where there was a community of anti-slavery people at an early day, or the fugitives could be forwarded northward by way of Jerseyville, Waverly and Jacksonville, about each of which there was a strong anti-slavery sentiment. Quincy, in spite of an intense hostility among the mass of the community to anything savoring of abolitionism, became the theater of great activity on the part of the opponents of the institution, especially after the advent there of Dr. David Nelson and Dr. Richard Eells, both of whom had rendered themselves obnoxious to the people of Missouri by extending aid to fugitives. The former was a practical abolitionist who, having freed his slaves in his native State of Virginia, removed to Missouri and attempted to establish Marion College, a few miles from Palmyra, but was soon driven to Illinois. Locating near Quincy, he founded the "Mission Institute" there, at which he continued to disseminate his anti-slavery views, while educating young men for missionary work. The "Institute" was finally burned by emissaries from Missouri, while three young men who had been connected with it, having been caught in Missouri, were condemned to twelve years' confinement in the penitentiary of that State—partly on the testimony of a negro, although a negro was not then a legal witness in the courts against a white man. Dr. Eells was prosecuted before Stephen A. Douglas (then a Judge of the Circuit Court), and fined for aiding a fugitive to escape, and the judgment against him was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court after his death, in 1852, ten years after the original indictment.

A map in Professor Siebert's book, showing the routes and principal stations of the "Underground Railroad," makes mention of the following places in Illinois, in addition to those already referred to: Carlinville, in Macoupin County; Payson and Mendon, in Adams; Washington, in Tazewell; Metamora, in Woodford; Magnolia, in Putnam; Galesburg, in Knox; Princeton (the home of Owen Lovejoy and the Bryants), in Bureau; and many more. Ottawa appears to have been the meeting point of a number of lines, as well as the home of a strong colony of practical abolitionists. Cairo also became an important transfer station for fugitives arriving by river, after the completion of the Illinois Central Railroad, especially as it offered the speediest way of reaching Chicago, towards which nearly all the lines converged. It was here that the fugitives could be most safely disposed of by placing them upon vessels, which, without stopping at intermediate ports, could soon land them on Canadian soil.

As to methods, these differed according to circumstances, the emergencies of the occasion, or the taste, convenience or resources of the operator. Deacon Levi Morse, of Woodford County, near Metamora, had a route towards Magnolia, Putnam County; and his favorite "car" was a farm wagon in which there was a double bottom. The passengers were snugly placed below, and grain sacks, filled with bran or other light material, were laid over, so that the whole presented the appearance of an ordinary load of grain on its way to market. The same was true as to stations and routes. One, who was an operator, says: "Wherever an abolitionist happened on a fugitive, or the converse, there was a station, for the time, and the route was to the next anti-slavery man to the east or the north. As a general rule, the agent preferred not to know anything beyond the operation of his own immediate section of the road. If he knew nothing about the operations of another, and the other knew nothing of his, they could not be witnesses in court.

We have it on the authority of Judge Harvey B. Hurd, of Chicago, that runaways were usually forwarded from that city to Canada by way of the Lakes, there being several steamers available for that purpose. On one occasion thirteen were put aboard a vessel under the eyes of a United States Marshal and his deputies. The fugitives, secreted in a woodshed, one by one took the places of colored stevedores carrying wood aboard the ship. Possibly the term, "There's a nigger in the woodpile," may have originated in this incident. Thirteen was an "unlucky number" in this instance—for the masters.

Among the notable trials for assisting runaways in violation of the Fugitive Slave Law, in addition to the case of Dr. Eells, already mentioned, were those of Owen Lovejoy of Princeton, and Deacon Cushing of Will County, both of whom were defended by Judge James Collins of Chicago. John Hossack and Dr. Joseph Stout of Ottawa, with some half-dozen of their neighbors and friends, were tried at Ottawa, in 1859, for assisting a fugitive and acquitted on a technicality. A strong array of attorneys, afterwards widely known through the northern part of the State, appeared for the defense, including Isaac N. Arnold, Joseph Knox, B. C. Cook, J. V. Eustace, Edward S. Leland and E. C. Larned. Joseph T. Morse, of Woodford County, was also arrested, taken to Peoria and committed to jail, but acquitted on trial.

Another noteworthy case was that of Dr. Samuel Willard (now of Chicago) and his father, Julius A. Willard, charged with assisting in the escape of a fugitive at Jacksonville, in 1843, when the Doctor was a student in Illinois College. "The National Corporation Reporter," a few years ago, gave an account of this affair, together with a letter from Dr. Willard, in which he states that, after protracted litigation, during which the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was ended by his pleading guilty before Judge Samuel D. Lockwood, when he was fined one dollar and costs—the latter amounting to twenty dollars. The Doctor frankly adds: "My father, as well as myself, helped many fugitives afterwards." It did not always happen, however, that offenders escaped so easily.

Judge Harvey B. Hurd, already referred to, and an active anti-slavery man in the days of the Fugitive Slave Law, relates the following: Once, when the trial of a fugitive was going on before Justice Kercheval, in a room on the second floor of a two-story frame building on Clark Street in the city of Chicago, the crowd in attendance filled the room, the stairway and the adjoining sidewalk. In some way the prisoner got mixed in with the audience, and passed down over the heads of those on the stairs, where the officers were unable to follow.

In another case, tried before United States Commissioner Geo. W. Meeker, the result was made to hinge upon a point in the indictment to the effect that the fugitive was "copper-colored." The Commissioner, as the story goes, being inclined to favor public sentiment, called for a large copper cent, that he might make comparison. The decision was, that the prisoner was "off color," so to speak, and he was hustled out of the room before the officers could re-arrest him, as they had been instructed to do.

Dr. Samuel Willard, in a review of Professor Siebert's book, published in "The Dial" of Chicago, makes mention of Henry Irving and William Chauncey Carter as among his active allies at Jacksonville, with Rev. Bilius Pond and Deacon Lyman of Farmington (near the present village of Farmingdale in Sangamon County), Luther Ransom of Springfield, Andrew Borders of Randolph County, Joseph Gerrish of Jersey and William T. Allan of Henry, as their coadjutors in other parts of the State. Other active agents or promoters, in the same field, included such names as Dr. Charles V. Dyer, Philo Carpenter, Calvin De Wolf, L. C. P. Freer, Zebina Eastman, James H. Collins, Harvey B. Hurd, J. Young Scammon, Col. J. F. Farnsworth and others of Chicago, whose names have already been mentioned; Rev. Asa Turner, Deacon Ballard, J. K. Van Dorn and Erastus Benton, of Quincy and Adams County; President Rufus Blanchard of Knox College, Galesburg; John Leeper of Bond; the late Prof. J. B. Turner and Elihu Wolcott of Jacksonville; Capt. Parker Morse and his four sons—Joseph T., Levi P., Parker, Jr., and Mark—of Woodford County; Rev. William Sloane of Randolph; William Strawn of La Salle, besides a host who were willing to aid their fellow men in their aspirations to freedom, without advertising their own exploits.

Among the incidents of "Underground Railroad" in Illinois is one which had some importance politically, having for its climax a dramatic scene in Congress, but of which, so far as known, no full account has ever been written. About 1855, Ephraim Lombard, a Mississippi planter, but a New Englander by birth, purchased a large body of prairie land in the northeastern part of Stark County, and, taking up his residence temporarily in the village of Bradford, began its improvement. He had brought with him from Mississippi a negro, gray-haired and bent with age, a slave of probably no great value. "Old Mose," as he was called, soon came to be well known and a favorite in the neighborhood. Lombard boldly stated that he had brought him there as a slave; that, by virtue of the Dred Scott decision (then of recent date), he had a constitutional right to take his slaves wherever he pleased, and that "Old Mose" was just as much his property in Illinois as in Mississippi. It soon became evident to some, that his bringing of the negro to Illinois was an experiment to test the law and the feelings of the Northern people. This being the case, a shrewd play would have been to let him have his way till other slaves should have been brought to stock the new plantation. But this was too slow a process for the abolitionists, to whom the holding of a slave in the free State of Illinois appeared an unbearable outrage. It was feared that he might take the old negro back to Mississippi and fail to bring any others. It was reported, also, that "Old Mose" was ill-treated; that he was given only the coarsest food in a back shed, as if he were a horse or a dog, instead of being permitted to eat at table with the family. The prairie citizen of that time was very particular upon this point of etiquette. The hired man or woman, debarred from the table of his or her employer, would not have remained a day. A quiet consultation with "Old Mose" revealed the fact that he would hail the gift of freedom joyously. Accordingly, one Peter Risedorf, and another equally daring, met him by the light of the stars and, before morning, he was placed in the care of Owen Lovejoy, at Princeton, twenty miles away. From there he was speedily "franked" by the member of Congress to friends in Canada.

There was a great commotion in Bradford over the "stealing" of "Old Mose." Lombard and his friends denounced the act in terms bitter and profane, and threatened vengeance upon the perpetrators. The conductors were known only to a few, and they kept their secret well. Lovejoy's part in the affair, however, soon leaked out. Lombard returned to Mississippi, where he related his experiences to Mr. Singleton, the Representative in Congress from his district. During the next session of Congress, Singleton took occasion, in a speech, to sneer at Lovejoy as a "nigger-stealer," citing the case of "Old Mose." Mr. Lovejoy replied in his usual fervid and dramatic style, making a speech which ensured his election to Congress for life—"Is it desired to call attention to this fact of my assisting fugitive slaves?" he said. "Owen Lovejoy lives at Princeton, Ill., three-quarters of a mile east of the village, and he aids every slave that comes to his door and asks it. Thou invisible Demon of Slavery, dost thou think to cross my humble threshold and forbid me to give bread to the hungry and shelter to the homeless? I bid you defiance, in the name of my God!"

With another incident of an amusing character this article may be closed: Hon. J. Young Scammon, of Chicago, being accused of conniving at the escape of a slave from officers of the law, was asked by the court what he would do if summoned as one of a posse to pursue and capture a fugitive. "I would certainly obey the summons," he replied, "but—I should probably stub my toe and fall down before I reached him."

NOTE.—Those who wish to pursue the subject of the "Underground Railroad" in Illinois further, are referred to the work of Dr. Siebert, already mentioned, and to the various County Histories which have been issued and may be found in the public libraries; also for interesting incidents, to "Reminiscences of Levi Coffin," Johnson's "From Dixie to Canada," Petit's Sketches, "Still, Underground Railroad," and a pamphlet of the same title by James H. Fairchild, ex-President of Oberlin College.

UNDERWOOD, William H., lawyer, legislator and jurist, was born at Schoharie Court House, N. Y., Feb. 21, 1818, and, after admission to the bar, removed to Belleville, Ill., where he began practice in 1840. The following year he was elected State's Attorney, and re-elected in 1843. In 1846 he was chosen a member of the lower house of the General Assembly, and, in 1848-54, sat as Judge of the Second Circuit. During this period he declined a nomination to Congress, although equivalent to an election. In 1856 he was elected State Senator, and re-elected in 1860. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1869-70, and, in 1870, was again elected to the Senate, retiring to private life in 1872. Died, Sept. 23, 1875.

UNION COUNTY, one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the time of its admission as a State—having been organized, under the Territorial Government, in January, 1818. It is situated in the southern division of the State, bounded on the west by the Mississippi River, and has an area of 400 square miles. The eastern and interior portions are drained by the Cache River and Clear Creek. The western part of the county comprises the broad, rich bottom lands lying along the Mississippi, but is subject to frequent overflow, while the eastern portion is hilly, and most of its area originally heavily timbered. The county is especially rich in minerals. Iron-ore, lead, bituminous coal, chalk, alum and potter's clay are found in considerable abundance. Several lines of railway (the most important being the Illinois Central) either cross or tap the county. The chief occupation is agriculture, although manufacturing is carried on to a limited extent. Fruit is extensively cultivated. Jonesboro is the county-seat, and Cobden and Anna important shipping stations. The latter is the location of the Southern Hospital for the Insane. The population of the county, in 1890, was 21,529. Being next to St. Clair, Randolph and Gallatin, one of the earliest settled counties in the State, many prominent men found their first home, on coming into the State, at Jonesboro, and this region, for a time, exerted a strong influence in public affairs. Pop. (1900), 22,610.

UNION LEAGUE OF AMERICA, a secret political and patriotic order which had its origin early in the late Civil War, for the avowed purpose of sustaining the cause of the Union and counteracting the machinations of the secret organizations designed to promote the success of the Rebellion. The first regular Council of the order was organized at Pekin, Tazewell County, June 25, 1862, consisting of eleven members, as follows: John W. Glasgow, Dr. D. A. Cheever, Hart Montgomery, Maj. Richard N. Cullom (father of Senator Cullom), Alexander Small, Rev. J. W. M. Vernon, George H. Harlow (afterward Secretary of State), Charles Turner, Col. Jonathan Merriam, Henry Pratt and L. F. Garrett. One of the number was a Union refugee from Tennessee, who dictated the first oath from memory, as administered to members of a somewhat similar order which had been organized among the Unionists of his own State. It solemnly pledged the taker, (1) to preserve inviolate the secrets and business of the order; (2) to "support, maintain, protect and defend the civil liberties of the Union of these United States against all enemies, either domestic or foreign, at all times and under all circumstances," even "if necessary, to the sacrifice of life"; (3) to aid in electing only true Union men to offices of trust in the town, county, State and General Government; (4) to assist, protect and defend any member of the order who might be in peril from his connection with the order, and (5) to obey all laws, rules or regulations of any Council to which the taker of the oath might be attached. The oath was taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States, the taker pledging his sacred honor to its fulfillment. A special reason for the organization existed in the activity, about this time, of the "Knights of the Golden Circle," a disloyal organization which had been introduced from the South, and which afterwards took the name, in the North, of "American Knights" and "Sons of Liberty." (See Secret Treasonable Societies.) Three months later, the organization had extended to a number of other counties of the State and, on the 25th of September following, the first State Council met at Bloomington—twelve counties being represented—and a State organization was effected. At this meeting the following general officers were chosen: Grand President—Judge Mark Bangs, of Marshall County (now of Chicago); Grand Vice-President—Prof. Daniel Wilkin, of McLean; Grand Secretary—George H. Harlow, of Tazewell; Grand Treasurer—H. S. Austin, of Peoria, Grand Marshal—J. R. Gorin, of Macon; Grand Herald—A. Gould, of Henry; Grand Sentinel—John E. Rosette, of Sangamon. An Executive Committee was also appointed, consisting of Joseph Medill of "The Chicago Tribune"; Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Morgan County; J. K. Warren, of Macon; Rev. J. C. Rybolt, of La Salle; the President, Judge Bangs; Enoch Emery, of Peoria; and John E. Rosette. Under the direction of this Committee, with Mr. Medill as its Chairman, the constitution and by-laws were thoroughly revised and a new ritual adopted, which materially changed the phraseology and removed some of the crudities of the original obligation, as well as increased the beauty and impressiveness of the initiatory ceremonies. New signs, grips and pass-words were also adopted, which were finally accepted by the various organizations of the order throughout the Union, which, by this time, included many soldiers in the army, as well as civilians. The second Grand (or State) Council was held at Springfield, January 14, 1863, with only seven counties represented. The limited representation was discouraging, but the members took heart from the inspiring words of Governor Yates, addressed to a committee of the order who waited upon him. At a special session of the Executive Committee, held at Peoria, six days later, a vigorous campaign was mapped out, under which agents were sent into nearly every county in the State. In October, 1862, the strength of the order in Illinois was estimated at three to five thousand; a few months later, the number of enrolled members had increased to 50,000—so rapid had been the growth of the order. On March 25, 1863, a Grand Council met in Chicago—404 Councils in Illinois being represented, with a number from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa and Minnesota. At this meeting a Committee was appointed to prepare a plan of organization for a National Grand Council, which was carried out at Cleveland, Ohio, on the 20th of May following—the constitution, ritual and signs of the Illinois organization being adopted with slight modifications. The revised obligation—taken upon the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States—bound members of the League to “support, protect and defend the Government of the United States and the flag thereof, against all enemies, foreign and domestic;” and to “bear true faith and allegiance to the same”; to “defend the State against invasion or insurrection”; to support only “true and reliable men” for offices of trust and profit; to protect and defend worthy members, and to preserve inviolate the secrets of the order. The address to new members was a model of impressiveness and a powerful appeal to their patriotism. The organization extended rapidly, not only throughout the Northwest, but in the South also, especially in the army. In 1864 the number of Councils in Illinois was estimated at 1,300, with a membership of 175,000; and it is estimated that the total membership, throughout the Union, was 2,000,000. The influence of the silent, but zealous and effective, operations of the organization, was shown, not only in the stimulus given to enlistments and support of the war policy of the Government, but in the raising of supplies for the sick and wounded soldiers in the field. Within a few weeks before the fall of Vicksburg, over $25,000 in cash, besides large quantities of stores, were sent to Col. John Williams (then in charge of the Sanitary Bureau at Springfield), as the direct result of appeals made through circulars sent out by the officers of the “League.” Large contributions of money and supplies also reached the sick and wounded in hospital through the medium of the Sanitary Commission in Chicago. Zealous efforts were made by the opposition to get at the secrets of the order, and, in one case, a complete copy of the ritual was published by one of their organs; but the effect was so far the reverse of what was anticipated, that this line of attack was not continued. During the stormy session of the Legislature in 1863, the League is said to have rendered effective service in protecting Governor Yates from threatened assassination. It continued its silent but effective operations until the complete overthrow of the rebellion, when it ceased to exist as a political organization.

UNITED STATES SENATORS. The following is a list of United States senators from Illinois, from the date of the admission of the State into the Union until 1899, with the date and duration of the term of each: Ninian Edwards, 1818-24; Jesse B. Thomas, Sr., 1818-29; John McLean, 1824-25 and 1829-30; Elias Kent Kane, 1825-35; David Jewett Baker, Nov. 12 to Dec. 11, 1830; John M. Robinson, 1830-41; William L. D. Ewing, 1835-37; Richard M. Young, 1837-43; Samuel McRoberts, 1841-43; Sidney Breese, 1843-49; James Semple, 1843-47; Stephen A. Douglas, 1847-61; James Shields, 1849-55; Lyman Trumbull, 1855-73; Orville H. Browning, 1861-63; William A. Richardson, 1863-65; Richard Yates, 1865-71; John A. Logan, 1871-77 and 1879-86; Richard J. Oglesby, 1873-79; David Davis, 1877-83; Shelby M. Cullom, first elected in 1883, and re-elected in '89 and '95, his third term expiring in 1901; Charles B. Farwell, 1887-91; John McAuley Palmer, 1891-97; William E. Mason, elected in 1897, for the term expiring, March 4, 1903.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The New). One of the leading educational institutions of the country, located at Chicago. It is the outgrowth of an attempt, put forth by the American Educational Society (organized at Washington in 1888), to supply the place which the original institution of the same name had been designed to fill. (See University of Chicago—The Old.) The following year, Mr. John D. Rockefeller of New York tendered a contribution of $600,000 toward the endowment of the enterprise, conditioned upon securing additional pledges to the amount of $400,000 by June 1, 1890. The offer was accepted, and the sum promptly raised. In addition, a site, covering four blocks of land in the city of Chicago, was secured—two and one-half blocks being acquired by purchase for $282,500, and one and one-half (valued at $125,000) donated by Mr. Marshall Field. A charter was secured and an organization effected, Sept. 10, 1890. The Presidency of the institution was tendered to, and accepted by, Dr. William R. Harper. Since that time the University has been the recipient of other generous benefactions by Mr. Rockefeller and others, until the aggregate donations (1898) exceed $10,000,000. Of this amount over one-half has been contributed by Mr. Rockefeller, while he has pledged himself to make additional contributions of $2,000,000, conditioned upon the raising of a like sum, from other donors, by Jan. 1, 1900. The buildings erected on the campus, prior to 1896, include a chemical laboratory costing $182,000; a lecture hall, $150,000; a physical laboratory.

$150,000; a museum, $100,000; an academy dormitory, $30,000; three dormitories for women, $150,000; two dormitories for men, $100,000, to which several important additions were made during 1896 and '97. The faculty embraces over 150 instructors, selected with reference to their fitness for their respective departments from among the most eminent scholars in America and Europe. Women are admitted as students and graduated upon an equality with men. The work of practical instruction began in October, 1892, with 589 registered students, coming from nearly every Northern State, and including 250 graduates from other institutions, to which accessions were made, during the year, raising the aggregate to over 900. The second year the number exceeded 1,100; the third, it rose to 1,750, and the fourth (1895-96), to some 2,000, including representatives from every State of the Union, besides many from foreign countries. Special features of the institution include the admission of graduates from other institutions to a post-graduate course, and the University Extension Division, which is conducted largely by means of lecture courses, in other cities, or through lecture centers in the vicinity of the University, non-resident students having the privilege of written examinations. The various libraries embrace over 300,000 volumes, of which nearly 60,000 belong to what are called the "Departmental Libraries," besides a large and valuable collection of maps and pamphlets.

UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO (The Old), an educational institution at Chicago, under the care of the Baptist denomination, for some years known as the Douglas University. Senator Stephen A. Douglas offered, in 1854, to donate ten acres of land, in what was then near the southern border of the city of Chicago, as a site for an institution of learning, provided buildings costing $100,000, be erected thereon within a stipulated time. The corner-stone of the main building was laid, July 4, 1857, but the financial panic of that year prevented its completion, and Mr. Douglas extended the time, and finally deeded the land to the trustees without reserve. For eighteen years the institution led a precarious existence, struggling under a heavy debt. By 1885, mortgages to the amount of $320,000 having accumulated, the trustees abandoned further effort, and acquiesced in the sale of the property under foreclosure proceedings. The original plan of the institution contemplated preparatory and collegiate departments, together with a college of law and a theological school.

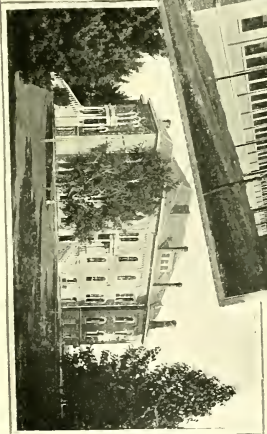

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, the leading educational institution under control of the State, located at Urbana and adjoining the city of Champaign. The Legislature at the session of 1863 accepted a grant of 480,000 acres of land under Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1862, making an appropriation of public lands to States—30,000 acres for each Senator and each Representative in Congress—establishing colleges for teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts, though not to the exclusion of classical and scientific studies. Land-scrip under this grant was issued and placed in the hands of Governor Yates, and a Board of Trustees appointed under the State law was organized in March, 1867, the institution being located the same year. Departments and courses of study were established, and Dr. John M. Gregory, of Michigan, was chosen Regent (President).—The landscrip issued to Illinois was sold at an early day for what it would bring in open market, except 25,000 acres, which was located in Nebraska and Minnesota. This has recently been sold, realizing a larger sum than was received for all the scrip otherwise disposed of. The entire sum thus secured for permanent endowment aggregates $613,026. The University revenues were further increased by donations from Congress to each institution organized under the Act of 1862, of $15,000 per annum for the maintenance of an Agricultural Experiment Station, and, in 1890, of a similar amount for instruction—the latter to be increased $1,000 annually until it should reach $25,000.—A mechanical building was erected in 1871, and this is claimed to have been the first of its kind in America intended for strictly educational purposes. What was called "the main building" was formally opened in December, 1873. Other buildings embrace a "Science Hall," opened in 1892; a new "Engineering Hall," 1894; a fine Library Building, 1897. Eleven other principal structures and a number of smaller ones have been erected as conditions required. The value of property aggregates nearly $2,500,000, and appropriations from the State, for all purposes, previous to 1904, foot up $5,123,517.90.—Since 1871 the institution has been open to women. The courses of study embrace agriculture, chemistry, polytechnics, military tactics, natural and general sciences, languages and literature, economics, household science, trade and commerce. The Graduate School dates from 1891. In 1896 the Chicago College of Pharmacy was connected with the University: a College of Law and a Library School were opened in 1897, and the same year the Chicago College of Physicians and Surgeons was affiliated as the College of Medicine—a School of Dentistry being added to the latter in 1901. In 1885 the State Laboratory of Natural History was transferred from Normal, Ill., and an Agricultural Experiment Station established in 1888, from which bulletins are sent to farmers throughout the State who may desire them.—The first name of the Institution was "Illinois Industrial University," but, in 1885, this was changed to "University of Illinois." In 1887 the Trustees (of whom there are nine) were made elective by popular vote—three being elected every two years, each holding office six years. Dr. Gregory, having resigned the office of Regent in 1880, was succeeded by Dr. Selim H. Peabody, who had been Professor of Mechanical and Civil Engineering. Dr. Peabody resigned in 1891. The duties of Regent were then discharged by Prof. Thomas J. Burrill until August, 1894, when Dr. Andrew Sloan Draper, former State Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State of New York, was installed as President, serving until 1904.—The corps of instruction (1904) includes over 100 Professors, 60 Associate and Assistant Professors and 200 Instructors and Assistants, besides special lecturers, demonstrators and clerks. The number of students has increased rapidly in recent years, as shown by the following totals for successive years from 1890-91 to 1903-04, inclusive: 519; 583; 714; 743; 810; 852; 1,076; 1,582; 1,824; 2,234; 2,505; 2,932; 3,289; 3,589. Of the last number, 2,271 were men and 718 women. During 1903-04 there were in all departments at Urbana, 2,547 students (256 being in the Preparatory Academy); and in the three Professional Departments in Chicago, 1,042, of whom 694 were in the College of Medicine, 185 in the School of Pharmacy, and 163 in the School of Dentistry. The University Library contains 63,700 volumes and 14,500 pamphlets, not including 5,350 volumes and 15,850 pamphlets in the State Laboratory of Natural History.—The University occupies a conspicuous and attractive site, embracing 220 acres adjacent to the line between Urbana and Champaign, and near the residence portion of the two cities. The athletic field of 11 acres, on which stand the gymnasium and armory, is enclosed with an ornamental iron fence. The campus, otherwise, is an open and beautiful park with fine landscape effects.

UNORGANIZED COUNTIES. In addition to the 102 counties into which Illinois is divided, acts were passed by the General Assembly, at different times, providing for the organization of a number of others, a few of which were subsequently organized under different names, but the majority of which were never organized at all—the proposition for such organization being rejected by vote of the people within the proposed boundaries, or allowed to lapse by non-action. These unorganized counties, with the date of the several acts authorizing them, and the territory which they were intended to include, were as follows: Allen County (1841)—comprising portions of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties; Audubon (Audubon) County (1843)—from portions of Montgomery, Fayette and Shelby; Benton County (1843)—from Morgan, Greene and Macoupin; Coffee County (1837)—with substantially the same territory now comprised within the boundaries of Stark County, authorized two years later; Dane County (1839)—name changed to Christian in 1840; Harrison County (1855)—from McLean, Champaign and Vermilion, comprising territory since partially incorporated in Ford County; Holmes County (1837)—from Champaign and Vermilion; Marquette County (1843), changed (1847) to Highland—comprising the northern portion of Adams, (this act was accepted, with Columbus as the county-seat, but organization finally vacated); Michigan County (1837)—from a part of Cook; Milton County (1843)—from the south part of Vermilion; Okaw County (1841)—comprising substantially the same territory as Moultrie, organized under act of 1843; Oregon County (1851)—from parts of Sangamon, Morgan and Macoupin Counties, and covering substantially the same territory as proposed to be incorporated in Allen County ten years earlier. The last act of this character was passed in 1867, when an attempt was made to organize Lincoln County out of parts of Champaign and Vermilion, but which failed for want of an affirmative vote.

UPPER ALTON, a city of Madison County, situated on the Chicago & Alton Railroad, about 1½ miles northeast of Alton—laid out in 1816. It has several churches, and is the seat of Shurtleff College and the Western Military Academy, the former founded about 1831, and controlled by the Baptist denomination. Beds of excellent clay are found in the vicinity and utilized in pottery manufacture. Pop. (1890), 1,803; (1900), 2,373.

UPTON, George Putnam, journalist, was born at Roxbury, Mass., Oct. 25, 1834; graduated from Brown University in 1854, removed to Chicago in 1855, and began newspaper work on "The Native American," the following year taking the place of city editor of "The Evening Journal." In 1862, Mr. Upton became musical critic on "The Chicago Tribune," serving for a time also as its war correspondent in the field, later (about 1881) taking a place on the general editorial staff, which he still retains. He is regarded as an authority on musical and dramatic topics. Mr. Upton is also a stockholder in, and, for several years, has been Vice-President of the "Tribune" Company. Besides numerous contributions to magazines, his works include: "Letters of Peregrine Pickle" (1869); "Memories, a Story of German Love," translated from the German of Max Muller (1879); "Woman in Music" (1880); "Lives of German Composers" (3 vols.—1883-84); besides four volumes of standard operas, oratorios, cantatas, and symphonies (1885-88).

URBANA, a flourishing city, the county-seat of Champaign County, on the "Big Four," the Illinois Central and the Wabash Railways: 130 miles south of Chicago and 31 miles west of Danville; in agricultural and coal-mining region. The mechanical industries include extensive railroad shops, manufacture of brick, suspenders and lawn-mowers. The Cunningham Deaconesses' Home and Orphanage is located here. The city has water-works, gas and electric light plants, electric car-lines (local and interurban), superior schools, nine churches, three banks and three newspapers. Urbana is the seat of the University of Illinois. Pop. (1890), 3,511; (1900), 5,728.

USREY, William J., editor and soldier, was born at Washington (near Natchez), Miss., May 16, 1827; was educated at Natchez, and, before reaching manhood, came to Macon County, Ill., where he engaged in teaching until 1846, when he enlisted as a private in Company C, Fourth Illinois Volunteers, for the Mexican War. In 1855, he joined with a Mr. Wingate in the establishment, at Decatur, of "The Illinois State Chronicle," of which he soon after took sole charge, conducting the paper until 1861, when he enlisted in the Thirty-fifth Illinois Volunteers and was appointed Adjutant. Although born and educated in a slave State, Mr. Usrey was an earnest opponent of slavery, as proved by the attitude of his paper in opposition to the Kansas-Nebraska Bill. He was one of the most zealous endorers of the proposition for a conference of the Anti-Nebraska editors of the State of Illinois, to agree upon a line of policy in opposition to the further extension of slavery, and, when that body met at Decatur, on Feb. 22, 1856, he served as its Secretary, thus taking a prominent part in the initial steps which resulted in the organization of the Republican party in Illinois. (See Anti-Nebraska Editorial Convention.) After returning from the war he resumed his place as editor of "The Chronicle," but finally retired from newspaper work in 1871. He was twice Postmaster of the city of Decatur, first previous to 1850, and again under the administration of President Grant; served also as a member of the City Council and was a member of the local Post of the G. A. R., and Secretary of the Macon County Association of Mexican War Veterans. Died, at Decatur, Jan. 20, 1894.

UTICA, (also called North Utica), a village of La Salle County, on the Illinois & Michigan Canal and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, 10 miles west of Ottawa, situated on the Illinois River opposite "Starved Rock," also believed to stand on the site of the Kaskaskia village found by the French Explorer, La Salle, when he first visited Illinois. "Utica cement" is produced here; it also has several factories or mills, besides banks and a weekly paper. Population (1880), 767; (1890), 1,094; (1900), 1,150.

VAN ARNAM, John, lawyer and soldier, was born at Plattsburg, N. Y., March 3, 1820. Having lost his father at five years of age, he went to live with a farmer, but ran away in his boyhood; later, began teaching, studied law, and was admitted to the bar in New York City, beginning practice at Marshall, Mich. In 1858 he removed to Chicago, and, as a member of the firm of Walker, Van Arnham & Dexter, became prominent as a criminal lawyer and railroad attorney, being for a time Solicitor of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad. In 1862 he assisted in organizing the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was commissioned its Colonel, but was compelled to resign on account of illness. After spending some time in California, he resumed practice in Chicago in 1865. His later years were spent in California, dying at San Diego, in that State, April 6, 1890.

VANDALIA, the principal city and county-seat of Fayette County. It is situated on the Kaskaskia River, 30 miles north of Centralia, 62 miles south by west of Decatur, and 68 miles east-northeast of St. Louis. It is an intersecting point for the Illinois Central and the St. Louis, Vandalia and Terre Haute Railroads. It was the capital of the State from 1820 to 1839, the seat of government being removed to Springfield, the latter year, in accordance with act of the General Assembly passed at the session of 1837. It contains a court house (old State Capitol building), six churches, two banks, three weekly papers, a graded school, flour, saw and paper mills, foundry, stove and heading mill, carriage and wagon and brick works. Pop. (1890), 2,144; (1900), 2,665.

VANDEVEER, Horatio M., pioneer lawyer, was born in Washington County, Ind., March 1, 1816; came with his family to Illinois at an early age, settling on Clear Creek, now in Christian County; taught school and studied law, using books borrowed from the late Hon. John T. Stuart of Springfield; was elected first County Recorder of Christian County and, soon after, appointed Circuit Clerk, filling both offices three years. He also held the office of County Judge from 1848 to 1857; was twice chosen Representative in the General Assembly (1842 and 1850) and once to the State Senate (1862); in 1846, enlisted and was chosen Captain of a company for the Mexican War, but, having been rejected on account of the quota being full, was appointed Assistant-Quartermaster, in this capacity serving on the staff of General Taylor at the battle of Buena Vista. Among other offices held by Mr. Vandever, were those of Postmaster of Taylorville, Master in Chancery, Presidential Elector (1848), Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and Judge of the Circuit Court (1870-79). In 1868 Judge Vandever established the private banking firm of H. M. Vandever & Co., at Taylorville, which, in conjunction with his sons, he continued successfully during the remainder of his life. Died, March 12, 1894.

VAN HORNE, William C., Railway Manager and President, was born in Will County, Ill., February, 1843; began his career as a telegraph operator on the Illinois Central Railroad in 1856, was attached to the Michigan Central and Chicago & Alton Railroads (1858-72), later being General Manager or General Superintendent of various other lines (1872-79). He next served as General Superintendent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, but soon after became General Manager of the Canadian Pacific, which he assisted to construct to the Pacific Coast; was elected Vice-President of the line in 1884, and its President in 1888. His services have been recognized by conferring upon him the order of knighthood by the British Government.

VASSEUR, Noel C., pioneer Indian-trader, was born of French parentage in Canada, Dec. 25, 1799; at the age of 17 made a trip with a trading party to the West, crossing Wisconsin by way of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the route pursued by Joliet and Marquette in 1673; later, was associated with Gordon S. Hubbard in the service of the American Fur Company, in 1820 visiting the region now embraced in Iroquois County, where he and Hubbard subsequently established a trading post among the Pottawatomie Indians, believed to have been the site of the present town of Iroquois. The way of reaching their station from Chicago was by the Chicago and Des Plaines Rivers to the Kankakee, and ascending the latter and the Iroquois. Here Vasseur remained in trade until the removal of the Indians west of the Mississippi, in which he served as agent of the Government. While in the Iroquois region he married Watseka, a somewhat famous Pottawatomie woman, for whom the town of Watseka was named, and who had previously been the Indian wife of a fellow-trader. His later years were spent at Bourbonnais Grove, in Kankakee County, where he died, Dec. 12, 1879.

VENICE, a city of Madison County, on the Mississippi River opposite St. Louis and 3 miles north of East St. Louis; is touched by six trunk lines of railroad, and at the eastern approach to the new "Merchants' Bridge," with its round-house, has two ferries to St. Louis, street car line, electric lights, water-works, some manufactures and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 933; (1900), 2,450.

VENICE & CARONDELET RAILROAD. (See Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis (Consolidated) Railroad.)

VERMILION COUNTY, an eastern county, bordering on the Indiana State line, and drained by the Vermilion and Little Vermilion Rivers, from which it takes its name. It was originally organized in 1826, when it extended north to Lake Michigan. Its present area is 926 square miles. The discovery of salt springs, in 1819, aided in attracting immigration to this region, but the manufacture of salt was abandoned many years ago. Early settlers were Seymour Treat, James Butler, Henry Johnston, Harvey Lidington, Gordon S. Hubbard and Daniel W. Beckwith. James Butler and Achilles Morgan were the first County Commissioners. Many interesting fossil remains have been found, among them the skeleton of a mastodon (1868). Fire clay is found in large quantities, and two coal seams cross the county. The surface is level and the soil fertile. Corn is the chief agricultural product, although oats, wheat, rye, and potatoes are extensively cultivated. Stock-raising and wool-growing are important industries. There are also several manufactories, chiefly at Danville, which is the county-seat. Coal mining is carried on extensively, especially in the vicinity of Danville. Population (1890), 41,588; (1890), 49,905; (1900), 65,635.

VERMILION RIVER, a tributary of the Illinois; rises in Ford and the northern part of McLean County, and, running northwestward through Livingston and the southern part of La Salle Counties, enters the Illinois River nearly opposite the city of La Salle; has a length of about 80 miles.

VERMILION RIVER, an affluent of the Wabash, formed by the union of the North, Middle and South Forks, which rise in Illinois, and come together near Danville in this State. It flows southeastward, and enters the Wabash in Vermilion County, Ind. The main stream is about 28 miles long. The South Fork, however, which rises in Champaign County and runs eastward, has a length of nearly 75 miles. The Little Vermilion River enters the Wabash about 7 or 8 miles below the Vermilion, which is sometimes called the Big Vermilion, by way of distinction.

VERMONT, a village in Fulton County, at junction of Galesburg and St. Louis Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 24 miles north of Beardstown; has a carriage manufactory, flour and saw-mills, brick and tile works, electric light plant, besides two banks, four churches, two graded schools, and one weekly newspaper. An artesian well has been sunk here to the depth of 2,600 feet. Pop. (1900), 1,195.

VERSAILLES, a town of Brown County, on the Wabash Railway, 48 miles east of Quincy; is in a timber and agricultural district; has a bank and weekly newspaper. Population (1900), 524.

VIENNA, the county-seat of Johnson County, situated on the Cairo and Vincennes branch of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, 36 miles north-northwest of Cairo. It has a court house, several churches, a graded school, banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 494; (1890), 838; (1900), 1,217.

VIGO, Francois, pioneer and early Indian-trader, was born at Mondovi, Sardinia (Western Italy), in 1747, served as a private soldier, first at Havana and afterwards at New Orleans. When he left the Spanish army he came to St. Louis, then the military headquarters of Spain for Upper Louisiana, where he became a partner of Commandant de Leba, and was extensively engaged in the fur-trade among the Indians on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. On the occupation of Kaskaskia by Col. George Rogers Clark in 1778, he rendered valuable aid to the Americans, turning out supplies to feed Clark's destitute soldiers, and accepting Virginia Continental money, at par, in payment, incurring liabilities in excess of $20,000. This, followed by the confiscation policy of the British Colonel Hamilton, at Vincennes, where Vigo had considerable property, reduced him to extreme penury. H. W. Beckwith says that, towards the close of his life, he lived on his little homestead near Vincennes, in great poverty but cheerful to the last. He was never recompensed during his life for his sacrifices in behalf of the American cause, though a tardy restitution was attempted, after his death, by the United States Government, for the benefit of his heirs. He died, at a ripe old age, at Vincennes, Ind., March 22, 1835.

VILLA RIDGE, a village of Pulaski County, on the Illinois Central Railway, 10 miles north of Cairo. Population, 500.

VINCENNES, Jean Baptiste Bissot, a Canadian explorer, born at Quebec, January, 1688, of aristocratic and wealthy ancestry. He was closely connected with Louis Joliet — probably his brother-in-law, although some historians say that he was the latter's nephew. He entered the Canadian army as ensign in 1701, and had a long and varied experience as an Indian fighter. About 1725 he took up his residence on what is now the site of the present city of Vincennes, Ind., which is named in his honor. Here he erected an earth fort and established a trading-post. In 1736, under orders, he co-operated with D'Artaguiette (then the French Governor of Illinois) in an expedition against the Chickasaws. The expedition resulted disastrously. Vincennes and D'Artaguiette were captured and burned at the stake, together with Father Senat (a Jesuit priest) and others of the command. (See also D'Artaguiette; French Governors of Illinois.)

VIRDEN, a city of Macoupin County, on the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 21 miles south by west from Springfield, and 31 miles east-southeast of Jacksonville. It has five churches, two banks, two newspapers, telephone service, electric lights, grain elevators, machine shop, and extensive coal mines. Pop. (1900), 2,280; (school census 1903), 3,651.

VIRGINIA, an incorporated city, the county-seat of Cass County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis, with the Springfield Division of the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 15 miles north of Jacksonville, and 33 miles west-northwest of Springfield. It lies in the heart of a rich agricultural region. There is a flouring mill here, besides manufacturing of wagons and cigars. The city has two National and one State bank, five churches, a

VOCKE, William, lawyer, was born at Minden, Westphalia (Germany), in 1839, the son of a Government Secretary in the Prussian service. Having lost his father at an early age, he emigrated to America in 1856, and, after a short stay in New York, came to Chicago, where he found employment as a paper-carrier for "The Staats-Zeitung," meanwhile giving his attention to the study of law. Later, he became associated with a real-estate firm; on the commencement of the Civil War, enlisted as a private in a three months' regiment, and, finally, in the Twenty-fourth Illinois (the first Hecker regiment), in which he rose to the rank of Captain. Returning from the army, he was employed as city editor of "The Staats-Zeitung," but, in 1865, became Clerk of the Chicago Police Court, serving until 1869. Meanwhile he had been admitted to the bar, and, on retirement from office, began practice, but, in 1870, was elected Representative in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly, in which he bore a leading part in framing "the burnt record act" made necessary by the fire of 1871. He has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, having been, for a number of years, attorney for the German Consulate at Chicago, also serving, for several years, on the Chicago Board of Education. Mr. Vocke is a man of high literary tastes, as shown by his publication, in 1869, of a volume of poems translated from the German, which has been highly commended, besides a legal work on "The Administration of Justice in the United States, and a Synopsis of the Mode of Procedure in our Federal and State Courts and All Federal and State Laws relating to Subjects of Interest to Aliens," which has been published in the German Language, and is highly valued by German lawyers and business men. Mr. Vocke was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1872 at Philadelphia, which nominated General Grant for the Presidency a second time.

VOLK, Leonard Wells, a distinguished Illinois sculptor, born at Wellstown (afterwards Wells), N. Y., Nov. 7, 1828. Later, his father, who was a marble cutter, removed to Pittsfield, Mass., and, at the age of 16, Leonard began work in his shop. In 1848 he came west and began modeling in clay and drawing at St. Louis, being only self-taught. He married a cousin of Stephen A. Douglas, and the latter, in 1855, aided him in the prosecution of his art studies in Italy. Two years afterward he settled in Chicago, where he modeled the first portrait bust ever made in the city, having for his subject his first patron—the "Little Giant." The next year (1858) he made a life-size marble statue of Douglas. In 1860 he made a portrait bust of Abraham Lincoln, which passed into the possession of the Chicago Historical Society and was destroyed in the great fire of 1871. In 1868-69, and again in 1871-72, he revisited Italy for purposes of study. In 1867 he was elected academician of the Chicago Academy, and was its President for eight years. He was genial, companionable and charitable, and always ready to assist his younger and less fortunate professional brethren. His best known works are the Douglas Monument, in Chicago, several soldiers' monuments in different parts of the country, the statuary for the Henry Keep mausoleum at Watertown, N. Y., life-size statues of Lincoln and Douglas, in the State House at Springfield, and numerous portrait busts of men eminent in political, ecclesiastical and commercial life. Died, at Osceola, Wis., August 18, 1895.

VOSS, Arno, journalist, lawyer and soldier, born in Prussia, April 16, 1821; emigrated to the United States and was admitted to the bar in Chicago, in 1848, the same year becoming editor of "The Staats-Zeitung"; was elected City Attorney in 1852, and again in 1853; in 1861 became Major of the Sixth Illinois Cavalry, but afterwards assisted in organizing the Twelfth Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Colonel, still later serving with his command in Virginia. He was at Harper's Ferry at the time of the capture of that place in September, 1862, but succeeded in cutting his way, with his command, through the rebel lines, escaping into Pennsylvania. Compelled by ill-health to leave the service in 1863, he retired to a farm in Will County, but, in 1869, returned to Chicago, where he served as Master in Chancery and was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly in 1876, but declined a re-election in 1878. Died, in Chicago, March 23, 1888.

WABASH, CHESTER & WESTERN RAILROAD, a railway running from Chester to Mount Vernon, Ill., 63.33 miles, with a branch extending from Chester to Menard, 1.5 miles; total mileage, 64.83. It is of standard gauge, and almost entirely laid with 60-pound steel rails.—(HISTORY.) It was organized, Feb. 20, 1878, as successor to the Iron Mountain, Chester & Eastern Railroad. During the fiscal year 1893-94 the Company purchased the Tamaroa & Mount Vernon Railroad, extending from Mount Vernon to Tamaroa, 22.5 miles. Capital stock (1898), $1,250,000; bonded indebtedness, $690,000; total capitalization, $2,028,573.

WABASH COUNTY, situated in the southeast corner of the State; area 220 square miles. The county was carved out from Edwards in 1824, and the first court house built at Centerville, in May, 1826. Later, Mount Carmel was made the county-seat. (See Mount Carmel.) The Wabash River drains the county on the east; other streams are the Bon Pas, Coffee and Crawfish Creeks. The surface is undulating with a fair growth of timber. The chief industries are the raising of live-stock and the cultivation of cereals. The wool-crop is likewise valuable. The county is crossed by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Cairo and Vincennes Division of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroads. Population (1880), 4,945; (1890), 11,866; (1900), 12,583.

WABASH RAILROAD, an extensive railroad system connecting the cities of Detroit and Toledo, on the east, with Kansas City and Council Bluffs, on the west, with branches to Chicago, St. Louis, Quincy and Altamont, Ill., and to Keokuk and Des Moines, Iowa. The total mileage (1898) is 1,874.96 miles, of which 677.4 miles are in Illinois—all of the latter being the property of the company, besides 176.7 miles of yard-tracks, sidings and spurs. The company has trackage privileges over the Toledo, Peoria & Western (6.5 miles) between Elvaston and Keokuk bridge, and over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (21.8 miles) between Camp Point and Quincy.—(HISTORY.) A considerable portion of this road in Illinois is constructed on the line upon which the Northern Cross Railroad was projected, in the "internal improvement" scheme adopted in 1837, and embraces the only section of road completed under that scheme—that between the Illinois River and Springfield. (1) The construction of this section was begun by the State, May 11, 1837, the first rail laid, May 9, 1838, the road completed to Jacksonville, Jan. 1, 1840, and to Springfield, May 13, 1842. It was operated for a time by "mule power," but the income was insufficient to keep the line in repair and it was finally abandoned. In 1847 the line was sold for $21,100 to N. H. Ridgely and Thomas Mather of Springfield, and by them transferred to New York capitalists, who organized the Sangamon & Morgan Railroad Company, reconstructed the road from Springfield to Naples and opened it for business in 1849. (2) In 1853 two corporations were organized in Ohio and Indiana, respectively, under the name of the Toledo & Illinois Railroad and the Lake Erie, Wabash & St. Louis Railroad, which were consolidated as the Toledo, Wabash & Western Railroad, June 25, 1856. In 1858 these lines were sold separately under foreclosure, and finally reorganized, under a special charter granted by the Illinois Legislature, under the name of the Great Western Railroad Company. (3) The Quincy & Toledo Railroad, extending from Camp Point to the Illinois River opposite Meredosia, was constructed in 1858-59, and that, with the Illinois & Southern Iowa (from Clayton to Keokuk), was united, July 1, 1865, with the eastern divisions extending to Toledo, the new organization taking the name of the main line, (Toledo, Wabash & Western). (4) The Hannibal & Naples Division (49.6 miles), from Bluffs to Hannibal, Mo., was chartered in 1863, opened for business in 1870 and leased to the Toledo, Wabash & Western. The latter defaulted on its interest in 1875, was placed in the hands of a receiver and, in 1877, was turned over to a new company under the name of the Wabash Railway Company. (5) In 1868 the company, as it then existed, promoted and secured the construction, and afterwards acquired the ownership, of a line extending from Decatur to East St. Louis (110.5 miles) under the name of the Decatur & East St. Louis Railroad. (6) The Eel River Railroad, from Butler to Logansport, Ind., was acquired in 1877, and afterwards extended to Detroit under the name of the Detroit, Butler & St. Louis Railroad, completing the connection from Logansport to Detroit.—In November, 1879, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway Company was organized, took the property and consolidated it with certain lines west of the Mississippi, of which the chief was the St. Louis, Kansas City & Northern. A line had been projected from Decatur to Chicago as early as 1870, but, not having been constructed in 1881, the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific purchased what was known as the Chicago & Paducah Railroad, uniting with the main line at Bement, and (by way of the Decatur and St. Louis Division) giving a direct line between Chicago and St. Louis. At this time the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific was operating the following additional leased lines: Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur (67.2 miles); Hannibal & Central Missouri (70.2 miles); Lafayette, Muncie & Bloomington (36.7 miles), and the Lafayette Bloomington & Muncie (80 miles). A connection between Chicago on the west and Toledo and Detroit on the east was established over the Grand Trunk road in 1882, but, in 1890, the company constructed a line from Montpelier, Ohio, to Clark, Ind. (149.7 miles), thence by track lease to Chicago (17.5 miles), giving an independent line between Chicago and Detroit by what is known to investors as the Detroit & Chicago Division.

The total mileage of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific system, in 1884, amounted to over 3,600 miles; but, in May of that year, default having been made in the payment of interest, the work of disintegration began. The main line east of the Mississippi and that on the west were separated, the latter taking the name of the "Wabash Western." The Eastern Division was placed in the hands of a receiver, so remaining until May, 1889, when the two divisions, having been bought in by a purchasing committee, were consolidated under the present name. The total earnings and income of the road in Illinois, for the fiscal year 1898, were $4,402,621, and the expenses $4,836,110. The total capital invested (1898) was $139,889,643, including capital stock of $52,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $81,534,000.

WABASH RIVER, rises in northwestern Ohio, passes into Indiana, and runs northwest to Huntington. It then flows nearly due west to Logansport, thence southwest to Covington, finally turning southward to Terre Haute, a few miles below which it strikes the western boundary of Indiana. It forms the boundary between Illinois and Indiana (taking into account its numerous windings) for some 200 miles. Below Vincennes it runs in a south-southwesterly direction, and enters the Ohio at the south-west extremity of Indiana, near latitude 37° 49' north. Its length is estimated at 557 miles.

WAIT, William Smith, pioneer, and original suggestor of the Illinois Central Railroad, was born in Portland, Maine, March 5, 1789, and educated in the public schools of his native place. In his youth he entered a book-publishing house in which his father was a partner, and was for a time associated with the publication of a weekly paper. Later the business was conducted at Boston, and extended over the Eastern, Middle, and Southern States, the subject of this sketch making extensive tours in the interest of the firm. In 1817 he made a tour to the West, reaching St. Louis, and, early in the following year, visited Bond County, Ill., where he made his first entry of land from the Government. Returning to Boston a few months later, he continued in the service of the publishing firm until 1820, when he again came to Illinois, and, in 1821, began farming in Ripley Township, Bond County. Returning East in 1824, he spent the next ten years in the employment of the publishing firm, with occasional visits to Illinois. In 1835 he located permanently near Greenville, Bond County, and engaged extensively in farming and fruit-raising, planting one of the largest apple orchards in the State at that early day. In 1845 he presided as chairman over the National Industrial Convention in New York, and, in 1848, was nominated as the candidate of the National Reform Association for Vice-President on the ticket with Gerrit Smith of New York, but declined. He was also prominent in County and State Agricultural Societies. Mr. Wait has been credited with being one of the first (if not the very first) to suggest the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, which he did as early as 1835; was also one of the prime movers in the construction of the Mississippi & Atlantic Railroad—now the "Vandalia Line"—giving much time to the latter enterprise from 1846 for many years, and was one of the original incorporators of the St. Louis & Illinois Bridge Company. Died, July 17, 1865.

WALKER, Cyrus, pioneer, lawyer, born in Rockbridge County, Va., May 14, 1791; was taken while an infant to Adair County, Ky., and came to Macomb, Ill., in 1823, being the second lawyer to locate in McDonough County. He had a wide reputation as a successful advocate, especially in criminal cases, and practiced extensively in the courts of Western Illinois and also in Iowa. Died, Dec. 1, 1875. Mr. Walker was uncle of the late Pinkney H. Walker of the Supreme Court, who studied law with him. He was Whig candidate for Presidential Elector for the State-at-large in 1840.

WALKER, James Barr, clergyman, was born in Philadelphia, July 29, 1805; in his youth served as errand-boy in a country store near Pittsburg and spent four years in a printing office; then became clerk in the office of Mordecai M. Noah, in New York, studied law and graduated from Western Reserve College, Ohio; edited various religious papers, including "The Watchman of the Prairies" (now "The Advance") of Chicago, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Chicago, and for some time was lecturer on "Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion" at Oberlin College and Chicago Theological Seminary. He was author of several volumes, one of which—"The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," published anonymously under the editorship of Prof. Calvin E. Stowe (1855)—ran through several editions and was translated into five different languages, including Hindustanee. Died, at Wheaton, Ill., March 6, 1887.

WALKER, James Monroe, corporation lawyer and Railway President, was born at Claremont, N. H., Feb. 14, 1820. At fifteen he removed with his parents to a farm in Michigan; was educated at Oberlin, Ohio, and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, graduating from the latter in 1849. He then entered a law office as clerk and student, was admitted to the bar the next year, and soon after elected Prosecuting Attorney of Washtenaw County; was also local attorney for the Michigan Central Railway, for which, after his removal to Chicago in 1853, he became General Solicitor. Two years later the firm of Sedgwick & Walker, which had been organized in Michigan, became attorneys for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, and, until his death, Mr. Walker was associated with this company, either as General Solicitor, General Counsel or President, filling the latter position from 1870 to 1875. Mr. Walker organized both the Chicago and Kansas City stock-yards, and was President of these corporations, as also of the Wilmington Coal Company, down to the time of his death, which occurred on Jan. 22, 1881, as a result of heart disease.

WALKER, (Rev.) Jesse, Methodist Episcopal missionary, was born in Rockingham County, Va., June 9, 1766; in 1800 removed to Tennessee, became a traveling preacher in 1802, and, in 1806, came to Illinois under the presiding-elderhood of Rev. William McKendree (afterwards Bishop), locating first at Turkey Hill, St. Clair County. In 1807 he held a camp meeting near Edwardsville—the first on Illinois soil. Later, he transferred his labors to Northern Illinois; was at Peoria in 1824; at Ottawa in 1825, and devoted much time to missionary work among the Pottawatomies, maintaining a school among them for a time. He visited Chicago in 1826, and there is evidence that he was a prominent resident there for several years, occupying a log house, which he used as a church and living-room, on "Wolf Point" at the junction of the North and South Branches of the Chicago River. While acting as superintendent of the Fox River mission, his residence appears to have been at Plainfield, in the northern part of Will County. Died, Oct. 5, 1835.

WALKER, Pinkney H., lawyer and jurist, was born in Adair County, Ky., June 18, 1815. His boyhood was chiefly passed in farm work and as clerk in a general store; in 1834 he came to Illinois, settling at Rushville, where he worked in a store for four years. In 1838 he removed to Macomb, where he began attendance at an academy and the study of law with his uncle, Cyrus Walker, a leading lawyer of his time. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, practicing at Macomb until 1848, when he returned to Rushville. In 1853 he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit, to fill a vacancy, and re-elected in 1855. This position he resigned in 1858, having been appointed, by Governor Bissell, to fill the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court occasioned by the resignation of Judge Skinner. Two months later he was elected to the same position, and re-elected in 1867 and '76. He presided as Chief Justice from January, 1864, to June, '67, and again from June, 1874, to June, '75. Before the expiration of his last term he died, Feb. 7, 1885.

WALL, George Willard, lawyer, politician and Judge, was born at Chillicothe, Ohio, April 22, 1839; brought to Perry County, Ill., in infancy, and received his preparatory education at McKendree College, finally graduating from the University of Michigan in 1858, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1859, when he began practice at Duquoin, Ill. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and, from 1864 to '68, served as State's Attorney for the Third Judicial District; was also a Delegate to the State Constitutional Convention of 1869-70. In 1873 he was an unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Congress, although running ahead of his ticket. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Third Circuit, and re-elected in '79, '85 and '91, much of the time since 1877 being on duty upon the Appellate bench. His home is at Duquoin.

WALLACE, (Rev.) Peter, D.D., clergyman and soldier; was born in Mason County, Ky., April 11, 1813; taken in infancy to Brown County, Ohio, where he grew up on a farm until 15 years of age, when he was apprenticed to a carpenter; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, where he became a contractor and builder, following this occupation for a number of years. He was converted in 1835 at Springfield, Ill., and, some years later, having decided to enter the ministry, was admitted to the Illinois Conference as a deacon by Bishop E. S. James in 1855, and placed in charge of the Danville Circuit. Two years later he was ordained by Bishop Scott, and, in the next few years, held pastorates at various places in the central and eastern parts of the State. From 1867 to 1874 he was Presiding Elder of the Mattoon and Quincy Districts, and, for six years, held the position of President of the Board of Trustees of Chaddock College at Quincy, from which he received the degree of D.D. in 1881. In the second year of the Civil War he raised a company in Sangamon County, was chosen its Captain and assigned to the Seventy-third Illinois Volunteers, known as the "preachers' regiment"—all of its officers being ministers. In 1864 he was compelled by ill-health to resign his commission. While pastor of the church at Saybrook, Ill., he was offered the position of Postmaster of that place, which he decided to accept, and was allowed to retire from the active ministry. On retirement from office, in 1884, he removed to Chicago. In 1889 he was appointed by Governor Fifer the first Chaplain of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, but retired some four years afterward, when he returned to Chicago. Dr. Wallace was an eloquent and effective preacher and continued to preach, at intervals, until within a short time of his decease, which occurred in Chicago, Feb. 21, 1897, in his 84th year. A zealous patriot, he frequently spoke very effectively upon the political rostrum. Originally a Whig, he became a Republican on the organization of that party, and took pride in the fact that the first vote he ever cast was for Abraham Lincoln, for Representative in the Legislature, in 1834. He was a Knight Templar, Vice-President of the Tippecanoe Club of Chicago, and, at his death, Chaplain of America Post, No. 708, G. A. R.

WALLACE, William Henry Lamb, lawyer and soldier, was born at Urbana, Ohio, July 8, 1821; brought to Illinois in 1833, his father settling near La Salle and, afterwards, at Mount Morris, Ogle County, where young Wallace attended the Rock River Seminary; was admitted to the bar in 1845; in 1846 enlisted as a private in the First Illinois Volunteers (Col. John J. Hardin's regiment), for the Mexican War, rising to the rank of Adjutant and participating in the battle of Buena Vista (where his commander was killed), and in other engagements. Returning to his profession at Ottawa, he served as District Attorney (1852-56), then became partner of his father-in-law, Col. T. Lyle Dickey, afterwards of the Supreme Court. In April, 1861, he was one of the first to answer the call for troops by enlisting, and became Colonel of the Eleventh Illinois (three-months' men), afterwards re-enlisting for three years. As commander of a brigade he participated in the capture of Forts Henry and Donelson, in February, 1862, receiving promotion as Brigadier-General for gallantry. At Pittsburg Landing (Shiloh), as commander of Gen. C. F. Smith's Division, devolving on him on account of the illness of his superior officer, he showed great courage, but fell mortally wounded, dying at Charleston, Tenn., April 10, 1862. His career promised great brilliancy and his loss was greatly deplored.—Martin R. M. (Wallace), brother of the preceding, was born at Urbana, Ohio, Sept. 29, 1829, came to La Salle County, Ill., with his father's family and was educated in the local schools and at Rock River Seminary; studied law at Ottawa, and was admitted to the bar in 1856, soon after locating in Chicago. In 1861 he assisted in organizing the Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, of which he became Lieutenant-Colonel, and was complimented, in 1865, with the rank of brevet Brigadier-General. After the war he served as Assessor of Internal Revenue (1866-69); County Judge (1869-77); Prosecuting Attorney (1884); and, for many years past, has been one of the Justices of the Peace of the city of Chicago.

WALNUT, a town of Bureau County, on the Mendota and Fulton branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 26 miles west of Mendota; is in a farming and stock-raising district; has two banks and two newspapers. Population (1890), 605; (1900), 791.

WAR OF 1812. Upon the declaration of war by Congress, in June, 1812, the Pottawatomies, and most of the other tribes of Indians in the Territory of Illinois, strongly sympathized with the British. The savages had been hostile and restless for some time previous, and blockhouses and family forts had been erected at a number of points, especially in the settlements most exposed to the incursions of the savages. Governor Edwards, becoming apprehensive of an outbreak, constructed Fort Russell, a few miles from Edwardsville. Taking the field in person, he made this his headquarters, and collected a force of 250 mounted volunteers, who were later reinforced by two companies of rangers, under Col. William Russell, numbering about 100 men. An independent company of twenty-one spies, of which John Reynolds—afterwards Governor—was a member, was also formed and led by Capt. Samuel Judy. The Governor organized his little army into two regiments under Colonels Rector and Stephenson, Colonel Russell serving as second to the commander-in-chief, other members of his staff being Secretary Nathaniel Pope and Robert K. McLaughlin. On Oct. 18, 1812, Governor Edwards, with his men, set out for Peoria, where it was expected that their force would meet that of General Hopkins, who had been sent from Kentucky with a force of 2,000 men. En route, two Kickapoo villages were burned, and a number of Indians unnecessarily slain by Edwards' party. Hopkins had orders to disperse the Indians on the Illinois and Wabash Rivers, and destroy their villages. He determined, however, on reaching the headwaters of the Vermilion to proceed no farther. Governor Edwards reached the head of Peoria Lake, but, failing to meet Hopkins, returned to Fort Russell. About the same time Capt. Thomas E. Craig led a party, in two boats, up the Illinois River to Peoria. His boats, as he alleged, having been fired upon in the night by Indians, who were harbored and protected by the French citizens of Peoria, he burned the greater part of the village, and capturing the population, carried them down the river, putting them on shore, in the early part of the winter, just below Alton. Other desultory expeditions marked the campaigns of 1813 and 1814. The Indians meanwhile gaining courage, remote settlements were continually harassed by marauding bands. Later in 1814, an expedition, led by Major (afterwards President) Zachary Taylor, ascended the Mississippi as far as Rock Island, where he found a large force of Indians, supported by British regulars with artillery. Finding himself unable to cope with so formidable a foe, Major Taylor retreated down the river. On the site of the present town of Warsaw he threw up fortifications, which he named Fort Edwards, from which point he was subsequently compelled to retreat. The same year the British, with their Indian allies, descended from Mackinac, captured Prairie du Chien, and burned Forts Madison and Johnston, after which they retired to Cap au Gris. The treaty of Ghent, signed Dec. 24, 1814, closed the war, although no formal treaties were made with the tribes until the year following.

WAR OF THE REBELLION. At the outbreak of the Civil War, the executive chair, in Illinois, was occupied by Gov. Richard Yates. Immediately upon the issuance of President Lincoln's first call for troops (April 15, 1861), the Governor issued his proclamation summoning the Legislature together in special session and, the same day, issued a call for "six regiments of militia," the quota assigned to the State under call of the President. Public excitement was at fever heat, and dormant patriotism in both sexes was aroused as never before. Party lines were broken down and, with comparatively few exceptions, the mass of the people were actuated by a common sentiment of patriotism. On April 19, Governor Yates was instructed, by the Secretary of War, to take possession of Cairo as an important strategic point. At that time, the State militia organizations were few in number and poorly equipped, consisting chiefly of independent companies in the larger cities. The Governor acted with great promptitude, and, on April 21, seven companies, numbering 595 men, commanded by Gen. Richard K. Swift of Chicago, were en route to Cairo. The first volunteer company to tender its services, in response to Governor Yates' proclamation, on April 16, was the Zouave Grays of Springfield. Eleven other companies were tendered the same day, and, by the evening of the 18th, the number had been increased to fifty. Simultaneously with these proceedings, Chicago bankers tendered to the Governor a war loan of $500,000, and those of Springfield, $100,000. The Legislature, at its special session, passed acts increasing the efficiency of the militia law, and provided for the creation of a war fund of $2,000,000. Besides the six regiments already called for, the raising of ten additional volunteer regiments and one battery of light artillery was authorized. The last of the six regiments, apportioned to Illinois under the first presidential call, was dispatched to Cairo early in May. The six regiments were numbered the Seventh to Twelfth, inclusive—the earlier numbers, First to Sixth, being conceded to the six regiments which had served in the war with Mexico. The regiments were commanded, respectively, by Colonels John Cook, Richard J. Oglesby, Eleazer A. Paine, James D. Morgan, William H. L. Wallace, and John McArthur, constituting the "First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers." Benjamin M. Prentiss, having been chosen Brigadier-General on arrival at Cairo, assumed command, relieving General Swift. The quota under the second call, consisting of ten regiments, was mustered into service within sixty days, 200 companies being tendered immediately. Many more volunteered than could be accepted, and large numbers crossed to Missouri and enlisted in regiments forming in that State. During June and July the Secretary of War authorized Governor Yates to recruit twenty-two additional regiments (seventeen infantry and five cavalry), which were promptly raised. On July 22, the day following the defeat of the Union army at Bull Run, President Lincoln called for 500,000 more volunteers. Governor Yates immediately responded with an offer to the War Department of sixteen more regiments (thirteen of infantry and three of cavalry), and a battalion of artillery, adding, that the State claimed it as her right, to do her full share toward the preservation of the Union. Under supplemental authority, received from the Secretary of War in August, 1861, twelve additional regiments of infantry and five of cavalry were raised, and, by December, 1861, the State had 43,000 volunteers in the field and 17,000 in camps of instruction. Other calls were made in July and August, 1862, each for 300,000 men. Illinois' quota, under both calls, was over 52,000 men, no regard being paid to the fact that the State had already furnished 16,000 troops in excess of its quotas under previous calls. Unless this number of volunteers was raised by September 1, a draft would be ordered. The tax was a severe one, inasmuch as it would fall chiefly upon the prosperous citizens, the floating population, the idle and the extremely poor having already followed the army's march, either as soldiers or as camp-followers. But recruiting was actively carried on, and, aided by liberal bounties in many of the counties, in less than a fortnight the 52,000 new troops were secured, the volunteers coming largely from the substantial classes—agricultural, mercantile, artisan and professional. By the end of December, fifty-nine regiments and four batteries had been dispatched to the front, besides a considerable number to fill up regiments already in the field, which had suffered severely from battle, exposure and disease. At this time, Illinois had an aggregate of over 135,000 enlisted men in the field. The issue of President Lincoln's preliminary proclamation of emancipation, in September, 1862, was met by a storm of hostile criticism from his political opponents, who—aided by the absence of so large a proportion of the loyal population of the State in the field—were able to carry the elections of that year. Consequently, when the Twenty-third General Assembly convened in regular session at Springfield, on Jan. 5, 1863, a large majority of that body was not only opposed to both the National and State administrations, but avowedly opposed to the further prosecution of the war under the existing policy. The Legislature reconvened in June, but was prorogued by Governor Yates Between Oct. 1, 1863, and July 1, 1864, 16,000 veterans re-enlisted and 87,000 new volunteers were enrolled; and, by the date last mentioned, Illinois had furnished to the Union army 244,496 men, being 14,596 in excess of the allotted quotas, constituting fifteen per cent of the entire population. These were comprised in 151 regiments of infantry, 17 of cavalry and two complete regiments of artillery, besides twelve independent batteries. The total losses of Illinois organizations, during the war, has been reported at 34,834, of which 5,874 were killed in battle, 4,020 died from wounds, 22,786 from disease and 2,154 from other causes—being a total of thirteen per cent of the entire force of the State in the service. The part which Illinois played in the contest was conspicuous for patriotism, promptness in response to every call, and the bravery and efficiency of its troops in the field—reflecting honor upon the State and its history. Nor were its loyal citizens—who, while staying at home, furnished moral and material support to the men at the front—less worthy of praise than those who volunteered. By upholding the Government—National and State—and by their zeal and energy in collecting and sending forward immense quantities of supplies—surgical, medical and other—often at no little sacrifice, they contributed much to the success of the Union arms. WAR OF THE REBELLION (HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS). The following is a list of the various military organizations mustered into the service during the Civil War (1861-65), with the terms of service and a summary of the more important events in the history of each, while in the field:

SEVENTH INFANTRY. Illinois having sent six regiments to the Mexican War, by courtesy the numbering of the regiments which took part in the war for the Union began with number Seven. A number of regiments which responded to the first call of the President, claimed the right to be recognized as the first regiment in the field, but the honor was finally accorded to that organized at Springfield by Col. John Cook, and hence his regiment was numbered Seventh. It was mustered into the service, April 25, 1861, and remained at Mound City during the three months' service, the period of its first enlistment. It was subsequently reorganized and mustered for the three years' service, July 25, 1861, and was engaged in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Cherokee, Allatoona Pass, Salkahatchie Swamp, Bentonville and Columbia. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans at Pulaski, Tenn., Dec. 22, 1863; was mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, July 11.

EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in for three months' service, April 26, 1861, Richard J. Oglesby of Decatur, being appointed Colonel. It remained at Cairo during its term of service, when it was mustered out. July 25, 1861, it was reorganized and mustered in for three years' service. It participated in the battles of Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Fort Gibson, Thompson Hill, Raymond, Champion Hill, Vicksburg, Brownsville, and Spanish Fort; re-enlisted as veterans, March 24, 1864; was mustered out at Baton Rouge, May 4, 1866, paid off and discharged, May 13, having served five years.

NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Springfield, April 26, 1861, for the term of three months, under Col. Eleazer A. Paine. It was reorganized at Cairo, in August, for three years, being composed of companies from St. Clair, Madison, Montgomery, Pulaski, Alexander and Mercer Counties; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Jackson (Tenn.), Mead Creek Swamps, Salem, Wyatt, Florence, Montezuma, Athens and Grenada. The regiment was mounted, March 15, 1863, and so continued during the remainder of its service. Mustered out at Louisville, July 9, 1865.

TENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into the service for three months, on April 29, 1861, at Cairo, and on July 29, 1861, was mustered into the service for three years, with Col. James D. Morgan in command. It was engaged at Sykeston, New Madrid, Corinth, Missionary Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw, Chattanooga, Savannah and Bentonville. Re-enlisted as veterans, Jan. 1, 1864, and mustered out of service, July 4, 1865, at Louisville, and received final discharge and pay, July 11, 1865, at Chicago.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, April 30, 1861, for three months. July 30, the regiment was mustered out, and re-enlisted for three years' service. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Tallahatchie, Vicksburg, Liverpool Heights, Yazoo City, Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely. W. H. L. Wallace, afterwards Brigadier-General and killed at Shiloh, was its first Colonel. Mustered out of service, at Baton Rouge, July 14, 1865; paid off and discharged at Springfield.

TWELFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service for three years, August 1, 1861; was engaged at Columbus, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Lay's Ferry, Rome Cross Roads, Dallas, Kenesaw, Nickajack Creek, Bald Knob, Decatur, Ezra Church, Atlanta, Allatoona and Goldsboro. On Jan. 16, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. John McArthur was its first Colonel, succeeded by Augustus L. Chetlain, both being promoted to Brigadier-Generals. Mustered out of service at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, and received final pay and discharge, at Springfield, July 18.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments organized under the act known as the "Ten Regiment Bill"; was mustered into service on May 24, 1861, for three years, at Dixon, with John B. Wyman as Colonel; was engaged at Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Missionary Ridge, Rossville and Ringgold Gap. Mustered out at Springfield, June 18, 1864, having served three years and two months.

FOURTEENTH INFANTRY. One of the regiments raised under the "Ten Regiment Bill," which anticipated the requirements of the General Government by organizing, equipping and drilling a regiment in each Congressional District in the State for thirty days, unless sooner required for service by the United States. It was mustered in at Jacksonville for three years, May 25, 1861, under command of John M. Palmer as its first Colonel; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora, Vicksburg, Jackson, Fort Beauregard and Meridian; consolidated with the Fifteenth Infantry, as a veteran battalion (both regiments having enlisted as veterans), on July 1, 1864. In October, 1864, the major part of the battalion was captured by General Hood and sent to Andersonville. The remainder participated in the "March to the Sea," and through the campaign in the Carolinas. In the spring of 1865 the battalion organization was discontinued, both regiments having been filled up by recruits. The regiment was mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., Sept. 16, 1865; and arrived at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 22, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge. The aggregate number of men who belonged to this organization was 1,980, and the aggregate mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, 480. During its four years and four months of service, the regiment marched 4,490 miles, traveled by rail, 2,330 miles, and, by river, 4,490 miles—making an aggregate of 11,670 miles.

FIFTEENTH INFANTRY. Raised under the "Ten Regiment Act," in the (then) First Congressional District; was organized at Freeport, and mustered into service, May 24, 1861. It was engaged at Sedalia, Shiloh, Corinth, Metamora Hill, Vicksburg, Fort Beauregard, Champion Hill, Allatoona and Bentonville. In March, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in July, 1864, was consolidated with the Fourteenth Infantry as a Veteran Battalion. At Big Shanty and Ackworth a large portion of the battalion was captured by General Hood. At Raleigh the Veteran Battalion was discontinued and the Fifteenth reorganized. From July 1, to Sept. 1, 1865, the regiment was stationed at Forts Leavenworth and Kearney. Having been mustered out at Fort Leavenworth, it was sent to Springfield for final payment and discharge—having served four years and four months. Miles marched, 4,299; miles by rail, 2,403, miles by steamer, 4,310; men enlisted from date of organization, 1,963; strength at date of muster-out, 640.

SIXTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Quincy under the "Ten-Regiment Act," May 24, 1861. The regiment was engaged at New Madrid, Tiptonville, Corinth, Buzzards' Roost, Resaca, Rome, Kenesaw Mountain, Chattahoochie River, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Savannah, Columbia, Fayetteville, Aversyboro and Bentonville. In December, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans; was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 8, 1865, after a term of service of four years and three months, and, a week later, arrived at Springfield, where it received its final pay and discharge papers.

SEVENTEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service at Peoria, Ill., on May 24, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Greenfield (Ark.), Shiloh, Corinth, Hatchie and Vicksburg. In May, 1864, the term of enlistment having expired, the regiment was ordered to Springfield for pay and discharge. Those men and officers who re-enlisted, and those whose term had not expired, were consolidated with the Eighth Infantry, which was mustered out in the spring of 1866.

EIGHTEENTH INFANTRY. Organized under the provisions of the "Ten Regiment Bill," at Anna, and mustered into the service on May 28, 1861, the term of enlistment being for three years. The regiment participated in the capture of Fort McHenry, and was actively engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh and Corinth. It was mustered out at Little Rock, Dec. 16, 1865, and Dec. 31, thereafter, arrived at Springfield, Ill., for payment and discharge. The aggregate enlistments in the regiment, from its organization to date of discharge (rank and file), numbered 2,043.

NINETEENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the United States service for three years, June 17, 1861, at Chicago, embracing four companies which had been accepted under the call for three months' men; participated in the battle of Stone River and in the Tullahoma and Chattanooga campaigns; was also engaged at Davis' Cross Roads, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Resaca. It was mustered out of service on July 9, 1864, at Chicago. Originally consisting of nearly 1,000 men, besides a large number of recruits received during the war, its strength at the final muster-out was less than 350.

TWENTIETH INFANTRY. Organized, May 14, 1861, at Joliet, and June 13, 1861, and mustered into the service for a term of three years. It participated in the following engagements, battles, sieges, etc.: Fredericktown (Mo.), Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Corinth, Thompson's Plantation, Champion Hills, Big Black River, Vicksburg, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta. After marching through the Carolinas, the regiment was finally ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out, July 16, 1865, receiving its final discharge at Chicago, on July 24.

TWENTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized under the "Ten Regiment Bill," from the (then) Seventh Congressional District, at Mattoon, and mustered into service for three years, June 28, 1861. Its first Colonel was U. S. Grant, who was in command until August 7, when he was commissioned Brigadier-General. It was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Corinth, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Chattanooga, in February, 1864. From June, 1864, to December, 1865, it was on duty in Texas. Mustered out at San Antonio, Dec. 16, 1865, and paid off and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 18, 1866.

TWENTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Belleville, and mustered into service, for three years, at Caseyville, Ill., June 25, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Charleston (Mo.), Sikestown, Tiptonville, Farmington, Corinth, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Resaca, New Hope Church, and all the battles of the Atlanta campaign, except Rocky Face Ridge. It was mustered out at Springfield, July 7, 1864, the veterans and recruits, whose term of service had not expired, being consolidated with the Forty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. The organization of the Twenty-third Infantry Volunteers commenced at Chicago, under the popular name of the "Irish Brigade," immediately upon the opening of hostilities at Sumter. The formal muster of the regiment, under the command of Col. James A. Mulligan, was made, June 15, 1861, at Chicago, when it was occupying barracks known as Kane's brewery near the river on West Polk Street. It was early ordered to Northern Missouri, and was doing garrison duty at Lexington, when, in September, 1861, it surrendered with the rest of the garrison, to the forces under the rebel General Price, and was paroled. From Oct. 8, 1861, to June 14, 1862, it was detailed to guard prisoners at Camp Douglas. Thereafter it participated in engagements in the Virginias, as follows: at South Fork, Greenland Gap, Philippi, Hedgeville, Leetown, Maryland Heights. Snicker's Gap, Kernstown, Cedar Creek, Winchester, Charlestown, Berryville, Opequan Creek, Fisher's Hill, Harrisonburg, Hatcher's Run and Petersburg. It also took part in the siege of Richmond and the pursuit of Lee, being present at the surrender at Appomattox. In January and February, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, at Greenland Gap, W. Va. In August, 1864, the ten companies of the Regiment, then numbering 440, were consolidated into five companies and designated, "Battalion, Twenty-third Regiment, Illinois Veteran Volunteer Infantry." The regiment was thanked by Congress for its part at Lexington, and was authorized to inscribe Lexington upon its colors. (See also Mulligan, James A.)

TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY, (known as the First Hecker Regiment). Organized at Chicago, with two companies—to-wit: the Union Cadets and the Lincoln Rifles—from the three months' service, in June, 1861, and mustered in, July 8, 1861. It participated in the battles of Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain and other engagements in the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out of service at Chicago, August 6, 1864. A fraction of the regiment, which had been recruited in the field, and whose term of service had not expired at the date of muster-out, was organized into one company and attached to the Third Brigade, First Division, Fourteenth Army Corps, and mustered out at Camp Butler, August 1, 1865.

TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized from the counties of Kankakee, Iroquois, Ford, Vermilion, Douglas, Coles, Champaign and Edgar, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 4, 1861. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, in the siege of Corinth, the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, the siege of Atlanta, and innumerable skirmishes; was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 5, 1864. During its three years' service the regiment traveled 4,962 miles, of which 3,252 were on foot, the remainder by steamboat and railroad.

TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, consisting of seven companies, at Springfield, August 31, 1861. On Jan. 1, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. It was authorized by the commanding General to inscribe upon its banners "New Madrid"; "Island No. 10;" "Farmington;" "Siege of Corinth;" "Iuka;" "Corinth—3d and 4th, 1862;" "Resaca;" "Kenesaw;" "Ezra Church;" "Atlanta;" "Jonesboro;" "Griswoldville;" "McAllister;" "Savannah;" "Columbia," and "Bentonville." It was mustered out at Louisville, July 20, 1865, and paid off and discharged, at Springfield, July 28—the regiment having marched, during its four years of service, 6,981 miles, and fought twenty-eight hard battles, besides innumerable skirmishes.

TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. First organized, with only seven companies, at Springfield, August 10, 1861, and organization completed by the addition of three more companies, at Cairo, on September 1. It took part in the battle of Belmont, the siege of Island No. 10, and the battles of Farmington, Nashville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Calhoun, Adairsville, Dallas, Pine Top Mountain and Kenesaw Mountain, as well as in the investment of Atlanta; was relieved from duty, August 25, 1864, while at the front, and mustered out at Springfield, September 20. Its veterans, with the recruits whose term of service had not expired, were consolidated with the Ninth Infantry.

TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Composed of companies from Pike, Fulton, Schuyler, Mason, Scott and Menard Counties; was organized at Springfield, August 15, 1861, and mustered into service for three years. It participated in the battles of Shiloh and Metamora, the siege of Vicksburg and the battles of Jackson, Mississippi, and Fort Beauregard, and in the capture of Spanish Fort, Fort Blakely and Mobile. From June, 1864, to March, 1866, it was stationed in Texas, and was mustered out at Brownsville, in that State, March 15, 1866, having served four years and seven months. It was discharged, at Springfield, May 13, 1866.

TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, August 19, 1861, and was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the sieges of Corinth, Vicksburg and Mobile. Eight companies were detailed for duty at Holly Springs, and were there captured by General Van Dorn, in December, 1862, but were exchanged, six months later. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, from June, 1864, to November, 1865, was on duty in Texas. It was mustered out of service in that State, Nov. 6, 1865, and received final discharge on November 28.

THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, August 28, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, the siege of Corinth, Median Station, Raymond, Champion Hills, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, Big Shanty, Atlanta, Savannah, Pocotaligo, Orangeburg, Columbia, Cheraw, and Fayetteville; mustered out, July 17, 1865, and received final payment and discharge at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized at Cairo, and there mustered into service on Sept. 18, 1861; was engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the two expeditions against Vicksburg, at Thompson's Hill, Ingram Heights, Raymond, Jackson, Champion Hill, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Lovejoy Station and Jonesboro; also participated in the "March to the Sea" and took part in the battles and skirmishes at Columbia, Cheraw, Fayetteville and Bentonville. A majority of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in March, 1864. It was mustered out at Louisville, July 19, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, July 23.

THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Dec. 31, 1861. By special authority from the War Department, it originally consisted of ten companies of infantry, one of cavalry, and a battery. It was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the sieges of Corinth and Vicksburg, and in the battles of La Grange, Grand Junction, Metamora, Harrisonburg, Kenesaw Mountain, Nickajack Creek, Allatoona, Savannah, Columbia, Cheraw and Bentonville. In January, 1864, the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, and, in June, 1865, was ordered to Fort Leavenworth. Mustered out there, Sept. 16, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield.

THIRTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized and mustered into service at Springfield in September, 1861; was engaged at Fredericktown (Mo.), Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, the assault and siege of Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Fort Esperanza, and in the expedition against Mobile. The regiment veteranized at Vicksburg, Jan. 1, 1864; was mustered out, at the same point, Nov. 24, 1865, and finally discharged at Springfield, Dec. 6 and 7, 1865. The aggregate enrollment of the regiment was between 1,900 and 2,000.

THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 7, 1861, was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Murfreesboro, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Big Shanty, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and, after participating in the "March to the Sea" and through the Carolinas, took part in the battle of Bentonville. After the surrender of Johnston, the regiment went with Sherman's Army to Washington, D. C., and took part in the grand review, May 24, 1865; left Washington, June 12, and arrived at Louisville, Ky., June 18, where it was mustered out, on July 12; was discharged and paid at Chicago, July 17, 1865.

THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Decatur on July 3, 1861, and its services tendered to the President, being accepted by the Secretary of War as "Col. G. A. Smith's Independent Regiment of Illinois Volunteers," on July 23, and mustered into service at St. Louis, August 12. It was engaged at Pea Ridge and in the siege of Corinth, also participated in the battles of Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Dallas and Kenesaw. Its final muster-out took place at Springfield, Sept. 27, 1864, the regiment having marched (exclusive of railroad and steamboat transportation) 3,056 miles.

THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Camp Hammond, near Aurora, Ill., and mustered into service, Sept. 23, 1861, for a term of three years. The regiment, at its organization, numbered 965 officers and enlisted men, and had two companies of Cavalry ("A" and "B"), 186 officers and men. It was engaged at Leetown, Pea Ridge, Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, the siege of Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Adairsville, New Hope Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. Mustered out, Oct. 8, 1865, and disbanded, at Springfield, Oct. 27, having marched and been transported, during its term of service, more than 10,000 miles.

THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Familiarly known as "Fremont Rifles"; organized in August, 1861, and mustered into service, Sept. 18. The regiment was presented with battle-flags by the Chicago Board of Trade. It participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Neosho, Prairie Grove and Chalk Bluffs, the siege of Vicksburg, and in the battles of Yazoo City and Morgan's Bend. In October, 1863, it was ordered to the defense of the frontier along the Rio Grande; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; took part in the siege and storming of Fort Blakely and the capture of Mobile; from July, 1865, to May, 1866, was again on duty in Texas; was mustered out at Houston, May 15, 1866, and finally discharged at Springfield, May 31, having traveled some 17,000 miles, of which nearly 3,300 were by marching.

THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, in September, 1861. The regiment was engaged in the battles of Fredericktown, Perryville, Knob Gap, Stone River, Liberty Gap, Chickamauga, Pine Top, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans in February, 1864; from June to December, 1865, was on duty in Louisiana and Texas; was mustered out at Victoria, Texas, Dec. 31, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield.

THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. The organization of this Regiment was commenced as soon as the news of the firing on Fort Sumter reached Chicago. General Thomas O. Osborne was one of its contemplated field officers, and labored zealously to get it accepted under the first call for troops, but did not accomplish his object. The regiment had already assumed the name of the "Yates Phalanx" in honor of Governor Yates. It was accepted by the War Department on the day succeeding the first Bull Run disaster (July 22, 1861), and Austin Light, of Chicago, was appointed Colonel. Under his direction the organization was completed, and the regiment left Camp Mather, Chicago, on the morning of Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Winchester, Malvern Hill (the second), Morris Island, Fort Wagner, Drury's Bluff, and in numerous engagements before Petersburg and Richmond, including the capture of Fort Gregg, and was present at Lee's surrender at Appomattox. ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Mattoon, Sept. 6, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Milton, Hoover's Gap, and Farmington; also took part in the entire Atlanta campaign, marching as cavalry and fighting as infantry. Later, it served as mounted infantry in Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama, taking a prominent part in the capture of Selma. The regiment was discharged at Springfield, July 11, 1865—the recruits, whose terms had not expired, being transferred to the Sixty-first Volunteer Infantry.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Mustered into the service, Sept. 10, 1862, at Springfield; took part in the Vicksburg campaign and in the battles of Port Gibson, Raymond and Champion Hills, the siege of Vicksburg, the Meridian raid, the Yazoo expedition, and the capture of Mobile. On the 16th of August, 1865, eleven days less than three years after the first company went into camp at Springfield, the regiment was mustered out at Chicago. Colonel Howe's history of the battle-flag of the regiment, stated that it had been borne 4,100 miles, in fourteen skirmishes, ten battles and two sieges of forty-seven days and nights, and thirteen days and nights, respectively.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 3, 1862; participated in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta and Jonesboro, and in the "March to the Sea" and the Carolina campaign, being engaged at Averysboro and Bentonville. It was mustered out at Washington, D. C., June 9, 1865, and finally discharged at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton and mustered in, Sept. 4, 1862, and participated in the siege of Vicksburg. Six companies were engaged in skirmish line, near Humboldt, Tenn., and the regiment took part in the capture of Little Rock and in the fight at Clarendon, Ark. It was mustered out July 12, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Chicago, Sept. 6, 1862; took part in the first campaign against Vicksburg, and in the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg under Grant, the capture of Jackson (Miss.), the battles of Missionary Ridge and Lookout Mountain, the Meridian raid, and in the fighting at Resaca, Dallas, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta and Jonesboro; also accompanied Sherman in his march through Georgia and the Carolinas, taking part in the battle of Bentonville; was mustered out at Chicago, June 17, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Mustered in, Dec. 18, 1862, but remained in service less than five months, when, its number of officers and men having been reduced from 860 to 161 (largely by desertions), a number of officers were dismissed, and the few remaining officers and men were formed into a detachment, and transferred to another Illinois regiment.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Pontiac, in August, 1862, and mustered into the service Sept. 8. Prior to May, 1864, the regiment was chiefly engaged in garrison duty. It marched with Sherman in the Atlanta campaign and through Georgia and the Carolinas, and took part in the battles of Resaca, Buzzard's Roost, Lost Mountain, Dallas, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Averysboro and Bentonville. It received final pay and discharge at Chicago, June 10, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, Oct. 25, 1862; was engaged at Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, Vicksburg, Jackson (Miss.), and in the Red River expedition. While on this expedition almost the entire regiment was captured at the battle of Mansfield, and not paroled until near the close of the war. The remaining officers and men were consolidated with the Seventy-seventh Infantry in January, 1865, and participated in the capture of Mobile. Six months later its regimental reorganization, as the One Hundred and Thirtieth, was ordered. It was mustered out at New Orleans, August 15, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, August 31.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Organized in September, 1862, and mustered into the service, Nov. 13, with 815 men, exclusive of officers. In October, 1863, it was consolidated with the Twenty-ninth Infantry, and ceased to exist as a separate organization. Up to that time the regiment had been in but a few conflicts and in no pitched battle.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in for 100 days from June 1, 1864. The regiment remained on duty at Paducah until the expiration of its service, when it moved to Chicago, and was mustered out, Oct. 17, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago and mustered in, May 31, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Columbus, Ky., and mustered out of service, Oct. 25, 1864, at Chicago.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered in for 100-days' service at Mattoon, June 6, 1864, having a strength of 852 men. It was chiefly engaged, during its term of service, in doing garrison duty and guarding railroads. It was mustered out at Springfield, Sept. 28, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Enlisted about the first of May, 1864, for 100 days, and went into camp at Centralia, Ill., but was not mustered into service until June 1, following. Its principal service was garrison duty, with occasional scouts and raids amongst guerrillas. At the end of its term of service the regiment re-enlisted for fifteen days; was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 22, 1864, and discharged eight days later.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, with ex-Gov. John Wood as its Colonel, and mustered in, June 5, 1864, for 100 days. Was on duty at Memphis, Tenn., and mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Sept. 4, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Quincy, and mustered in, June 21, 1864, for 100 days; was assigned to garrison duty at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and in Western Missouri. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, Ill., Oct. 14, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-day's regiment, at Peoria, June 1, 1864; was engaged in garrison duty at Columbus and Cairo, in making reprisals for guerrilla raids, and in the pursuit of the Confederate General Price in Missouri. The latter service was rendered, at the President's request, after the term of enlistment had expired. It was mustered out at Peoria, Oct. 25, 1864, having been in the service nearly five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH INFANTRY. Organized as a 100-days' regiment, at Springfield, June 18, 1864, and mustered into service on that date. The regiment was engaged in guarding railroads between Memphis and Holly Springs, and in garrison duty at Memphis. After the term of enlistment had expired and the regiment had been mustered out, it aided in the pursuit of General Price through Missouri; was finally discharged at Chicago, after serving about five months.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST INFANTRY. Mustered into service as a 100-days' regiment, at Elgin, June 16, 1864—strength, 842 men; departed for the field, June 27, 1864; was mustered out at Chicago, Oct. 10, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Freeport as a battalion of eight companies, and sent to Camp Butler, where two companies were added and the regiment mustered into service for 100 days, June 18, 1864. It was ordered to Memphis, Tenn., five days later, and assigned to duty at White's Station, eleven miles from that city, where it was employed in guarding the Memphis & Charleston railroad. It was mustered out at Chicago, on Oct. 27, 1864, the men having voluntarily served one month beyond their term of enlistment.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Mattoon, and mustered in, June 11, 1864, for 100 days. It was assigned to garrison duty, and mustered out at Mattoon, Sept. 26, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Alton, in 1864, as a one-year regiment; was mustered into the service, Oct. 21, its strength being 1,159 men. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Mustered into service at Springfield, June 9, 1864; strength, 880 men. It departed for the field, June 12, 1864; was mustered out, Sept. 23, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Sept. 18, 1864, for one year. Was assigned to the duty of guarding drafted men at Brighton, Quincy, Jacksonville and Springfield, and mustered out at Springfield, July 5, 1865.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered into service for one year, Feb. 18 and 19, 1865; was engaged chiefly on guard or garrison duty, in scouting and in skirmishing with guerrillas. Mustered out at Nashville, Jan. 22, 1866, and received final discharge at Springfield, Feb. 4.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for the term of one year; was assigned to garrison and guard duty and mustered out, Sept. 5, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn.; arrived at Springfield, Sept. 9, 1865, where it was paid off and discharged.

ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 11, 1865, and mustered in for one year; was engaged in garrison and guard duty; mustered out, Jan. 27, 1866, at Dalton, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, and mustered in, Feb. 14, 1865, for one year; was on duty in Tennessee and Georgia, guarding railroads and garrisoning towns. It was mustered out, Jan. 16, 1866, at Atlanta, Ga., and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIRST INFANTRY. This regiment was organized at Quincy, Ill., and mustered into the United States service, Feb. 23, 1865, and was composed of companies from various parts of the State, recruited, under the call of Dec. 19, 1864. It was engaged in guard duty, with a few guerrilla skirmishes, and was present at the surrender of General Warford's army, at Kingston, Ga.; was mustered out at Columbus, Ga., Jan. 24, 1866, and ordered to Springfield, where it received final payment and discharge, Feb. 8, 1866.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SECOND INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in, Feb. 18, 1865, for one year; was mustered out of service, to date Sept. 11, at Memphis, Tenn., and arrived at Camp Butler, Sept. 9, 1865, where it received final payment and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-THIRD INFANTRY. Organized at Chicago, and mustered in, Feb. 27, 1865, for one year; was not engaged in any battles. It was mustered out, Sept. 15, 1865, and moved to Springfield, Ill., and, Sept. 24, received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FOURTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield, Feb. 21, 1865, for one year. Sept. 18, 1865, the regiment was mustered out at Nashville, Tenn., and ordered to Springfield for final payment and discharge, where it arrived, Sept. 22; was paid off and discharged at Camp Butler, Sept. 29.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-FIFTH INFANTRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered in Feb. 28, 1865, for one year, 904 strong. On Sept. 4, 1865, it was mustered out of service, and moved to Camp Butler, where it received final pay and discharge.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIXTH INFANTRY. Organized and mustered in during the months of February and March, 1865, from the northern counties of the State, for the term of one year. The officers of the regiment have left no written record of its history, but its service seems to have been rendered chiefly in Tennessee in the neighborhood of Memphis, Nashville and Chattanooga. Judging by the muster-rolls of the Adjutant-General, the regiment would appear to have been greatly depleted by desertions and otherwise, the remnant being finally mustered out, Sept. 20, 1865.

FIRST CAVALRY. Organized — consisting of seven companies, A, B, C, D, E, F and G—at Alton, in 1861, and mustered into the United States service, July 3. After some service in Missouri, the regiment participated in the battle of Lexington, in that State, and was surrendered, with the remainder of the garrison, Sept. 20, 1861. The officers were paroled, and the men sworn not to take up arms again until discharged. No exchange having been effected in November, the non-commissioned officers and privates were ordered to Springfield and discharged. In June, 1862, the regiment was reorganized at Benton Barracks, Mo., being afterwards employed in guarding supply trains and supply depots at various points. Mustered out, at Benton Barracks, July 14, 1862.

SECOND CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield and mustered into service, August 12, 1861, with Company M (which joined the regiment some months later), numbering 47 commissioned officers and 1,040 enlisted men. This number was increased by recruits and re-enlistments, during its four and a half year's term of service, to 2,236 enlisted men and 145 commissioned officers. It was engaged at Belmont; a portion of the regiment took part in the battles at Fort Henry, Fort Donelson and Shiloh, another portion at Merriweather's Ferry, Bolivar and Holly Springs, and participated in the investment of Vicksburg. In January, 1864, the major part of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, later, participating in the Red River expedition and the investment of Fort Blakely. It was mustered out at San Antonio, Tex., Nov. 22, 1865, and finally paid and discharged at Springfield, Jan. 3, 1866.

THIRD CAVALRY. Composed of twelve companies, from various localities in the State, the grand total of company officers and enlisted men, under the first organization, being 1,493. It was organized at Springfield, in August, 1861; participated in the battles of Pea Ridge, Haines' Bluff, Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the siege of Vicksburg. In July, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. The remainder were mustered out, Sept. 5, 1864. The veterans participated in the repulse of Forrest, at Memphis, and in the battles of Lawrenceburg, Spring Hill, Campbellsville and Franklin. From May to October, 1865, engaged in service against the Indians in the Northwest. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, Oct. 18, 1865.

FOURTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service, Sept. 26, 1861, and participated in the battles of Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, and Shiloh; in the siege of Corinth, and in many engagements of less historic note; was mustered out at Springfield in November, 1864. By order of the War Department, of June 18, 1865, the members of the regiment whose terms had not expired, were consolidated with the Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

FIFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Camp Butler, in November, 1861; took part in the Meridian raid and the expedition against Jackson, Miss., and in numerous minor expeditions, doing effective work at Canton, Grenada, Woodville, and other points. On Jan. 1, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans. Its final muster-out took place, Oct. 27, 1865, and it received final payment and discharge, October 30.

SIXTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, Nov. 19, 1861; participated in Sherman's advance upon Grenada; in the Grierson raid through Mississippi and Louisiana, the siege of Port Hudson, the battles of Moscow (Tenn.), West Point (Miss.), Franklin and Nashville; re-enlisted as veterans, March 30, 1864; was mustered out at Selma, Ala., Nov. 5, 1865, and received discharge, November 20, at Springfield.

SEVENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, and was mustered into service, Oct. 13, 1861. It participated in the battles of Farmington, Iuka, Corinth (second battle); in Grierson's raid through Mississippi and Louisiana; in the engagement at Plain's Store (La.), and the investment of Port Hudson. In March, 1864, 288 officers and men re-enlisted as veterans. The non-veterans were engaged at Guntown, and the entire regiment took part in the battle of Franklin. After the close of hostilities, it was stationed in Alabama and Mississippi, until the latter part of October, 1865; was mustered out at Nashville, and finally discharged at Springfield, Nov. 17, 1865.

EIGHTH CAVALRY. Organized at St. Charles, Ill., and mustered in, Sept. 18, 1861. The regiment was ordered to Virginia, and participated in the general advance on Manassas in March, 1862; was engaged at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Malvern Hill, Sugar Loaf Mountain, Middletown, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Sulphur Springs, Warrenton, Rapidan Station, Northern Neck, Gettysburg, Williamsburg, Funkstown, Falling Water, Chester Gap, Sandy Hook, Culpepper, Brandy Station, and in many raids and skirmishes. It was mustered out of service at Benton Barracks, Mo., July 17, 1865, and ordered to Chicago, where it received final payment and discharge.

NINTH CAVALRY Organized at Chicago, in the autumn of 1861, and mustered in, November 30; was engaged at Coldwater, Grenada, Wyatt, Saulsbury, Moscow, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo, Old Town Creek, Hurricane Creek, Lawrenceburg, Campellsville, Franklin and Nashville. The regiment re-enlisted as veterans, March 16, 1864; was mustered out of service at Selma, Ala., Oct. 31, 1865, and ordered to Springfield, where the men received final payment and discharge.

TENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield in the latter part of September, 1861, and mustered into service, Nov. 25, 1861; was engaged at Prairie Grove, Cotton Plant, Arkansas Post, in the Yazoo Pass expedition, at Richmond (La.), Brownsville, Bayou Metee, Bayou La Fourche and Little Rock. In February, 1864, a large portion of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans, the non-veterans accompanying General Banks in his Red River expedition. On Jan. 27, 1865, the veterans, and recruits were consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, and all reorganized under the name of the Tenth Illinois Veteran Volunteer Cavalry. Mustered out of service at San Antonio, Texas, Nov. 22, 1865, and received final discharge at Springfield, Jan. 6, 1866.

ELEVENTH CAVALRY. Robert G. Ingersoll of Peoria, and Basil D. Meeks, of Woodford County, obtained permission to raise a regiment of cavalry, and recruiting commenced in October, 1861. The regiment was recruited from the counties of Peoria, Fulton, Tazewell, Woodford, Marshall, Stark, Knox, Henderson and Warren; was mustered into the service at Peoria, Dec. 20, 1861, and was first under fire at Shiloh. It also took part in the raid in the rear of Corinth, and in the battles of Bolivar, Corinth (second battle), Iuka, Lexington and Jackson (Tenn.); in McPherson's expedition to Canton and Sherman's Meridian raid, in the relief of Yazoo City, and in numerous less important raids and skirmishes. Most of the regiment re-enlisted as veterans in December, 1863; the non-veterans being mustered out at Memphis, in the autumn of 1864. The veterans were mustered out at the same place, Sept. 30, 1865, and discharged at Springfield, October 20.

TWELFTH CAVALRY. Organized at Springfield, in February, 1862, and remained there guarding rebel prisoners until June 25, when it was mounted and sent to Martinsburg, Va. It was engaged at Fredericksburg, Williamsport, Falling Waters, the Rapidan and Stevensburg. On Nov. 26, 1863, the regiment was relieved from service and ordered home to reorganize as veterans. Subsequently it joined Banks in the Red River expedition and in Davidson's expedition against Mobile. While at Memphis the Twelfth Cavalry was consolidated into an eight-company organization, and the Fourth Cavalry, having previously been consolidated into a battalion of five companies, was consolidated with the Twelfth. The consolidated regiment was mustered out at Houston, Texas, May 29, 1866, and, on June 18, received final pay and discharge at Springfield.

THIRTEENTH CAVALRY. Organized at Chicago, in December, 1861; moved to the front from Benton Barracks, Mo., in February, 1862, and was engaged in the following battles and skirmishes (all in Missouri and Arkansas): Putnam's Ferry, Cotton Plant, Union City (twice), Camp Pillow, Bloomfield (first and second battles), Van Buren, Allen, Eleven Point River, Jackson, White River, Chalk Bluff, Bushy Creek, near Helena, Grand Prairie, White River, Deadman's Lake, Brownsville, Bayou Metoe, Austin, Little Rock, Benton, Batesville, Pine Bluff, Arkadelphia, Okolona, Little Missouri River, Prairie du Anne, Camden, Jenkins' Ferry, Cross Roads, Mount Elba, Douglas Landing and Monticello. The regiment was mustered out, August 31, 1865, and received final pay and discharge at Springfield, Sept. 13, 1865.

FOURTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service at Peoria, in January and February, 1863; participated in the battle of Cumberland Gap, in the defense of Knoxville and the pursuit of Longstreet, in the engagements at Bean Station and Dandridge, in the Macon raid, and in the cavalry battle at Sunshine Church. In the latter General Stoneman surrendered, but the Fourteenth cut its way out. On their retreat the men were betrayed by a guide and the regiment badly cut up and scattered, those escaping being hunted by soldiers with bloodhounds. Later, it was engaged at Waynesboro and in the battles of Franklin and Nashville, and was mustered out at Nashville, July 31, 1865, having marched over 10,000 miles, exclusive of duty done by detachments.

FIFTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed of companies originally independent, attached to infantry regiments and acting as such; participated in the battles of Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege and capture of Corinth. Regimental organization was effected in the spring of 1863, and thereafter it was engaged chiefly in scouting and post duty. It was mustered out at Springfield, August 25, 1864, the recruits (whose term of service had not expired) being consolidated with the Tenth Cavalry.

SIXTEENTH CAVALRY. Composed principally of Chicago men—Thieleman's and Schambeck's Cavalry Companies, raised at the outset of the war, forming the nucleus of the regiment. The former served as General Sherman's body-guard for some time. Captain Thieleman was made a Major and authorized to raise a battalion, the two companies named thenceforth being known as Thieleman's Battalion. In September, 1862, the War Department authorized the extension of the battalion to a regiment, and, on the 11th of June, 1863, the regimental organization was completed. It took part in the East Tennessee campaign, a portion of the regiment aiding in the defense of Knoxville, a part garrisoning Cumberland Gap, and one battalion being captured by Longstreet. The regiment also participated in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Cartersville, Allatoona, Kenesaw, Lost Mountain, Mines Ridge, Powder Springs, Chattahoochie, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Franklin and Nashville. It arrived in Chicago, August 23, 1865, for final payment and discharge, having marched about 5,000 miles and engaged in thirty-one battles, besides numerous skirmishes.

SEVENTEENTH CAVALRY. Mustered into service in January and February, 1864; aided in the repulse of Price at Jefferson City, Mo., and was engaged at Booneville, Independence, Mine Creek, and Fort Scott, besides doing garrison duty, scouting and raiding. It was mustered out in November and December, 1865, at Leavenworth, Kan. Gov. John L. Beveridge, who had previously been a Captain and Major of the Eighth Cavalry, was the Colonel of this regiment.

FIRST LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of ten batteries. Battery A was organized under the first call for State troops, April 21, 1861, but not mustered into the three years' service until July 16; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the Atlanta campaign; was in reserve at Champion Hills and Nashville, and mustered out July 3, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery B was organized in April, 1861, engaged at Belmont, Fort Donelson, Shiloh, in the siege of Corinth and at La Grange, Holly Springs, Memphis, Chickasaw Bayou, Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, Mechanicsburg, Richmond (La.), the Atlanta campaign and the battle of Nashville. The Battery was reorganized by consolidation with Battery A, and mustered out at Chicago, July 2, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, Sept. 2, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and at Shiloh, and mustered out, July 28, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery E was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into service, Dec. 19, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, Corinth, Jackson, Vicksburg, Guntown, Pontotoc, Tupelo and Nashville, and mustered out at Louisville, Dec. 24, 1864.

Battery F was recruited at Dixon and mustered in at Springfield, Feb. 25, 1862. It took part in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition, and was consolidated with the other batteries in the regiment, March 7, 1865.

Battery G was organized at Cairo and mustered in Sept. 28, 1861; was engaged in the siege and the second battle of Corinth, and mustered out at Springfield, July 24, 1865.

Battery H was recruited in and about Chicago, during January and February, 1862; participated in the battle of Shiloh, siege of Vicksburg, and in the Atlanta campaign, the "March to the Sea," and through the Carolinas with Sherman.

Battery I was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered in, Feb. 10, 1862; was engaged at Shiloh, in the Tallahatchie raid, the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson, and in the battles of Chattanooga and Vicksburg. It was veteranized, March 17, 1864, and was mustered out, July 26, 1865.

Battery K was organized at Shawneetown and mustered in, Jan. 9, 1862; participated in Burnside's campaign in Tennessee, and in the capture of Knoxville. Part of the men were mustered out at Springfield in June, 1865, and the remainder at Chicago in July.

Battery M was organized at Camp Douglas and mustered into the service, August 12, 1862, for three years. It served through the Chickamauga campaign, being engaged at Chickamauga; also was engaged at Missionary Ridge, was besieged at Chattanooga, and took part in all the important battles of the Atlanta campaign. It was mustered out at Chicago, July 24, 1864, having traveled 3,102 miles and been under fire 178 days.

SECOND LIGHT ARTILLERY. Consisted of nine batteries. Battery A was organized at Peoria, and mustered into service, May 23, 1861; served in Missouri and Arkansas, doing brilliant work at Pea Ridge. It was mustered out of service at Springfield, July 27, 1865.

Battery D was organized at Cairo, and mustered into service in December, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Vicksburg, Jackson, Meridian and Decatur, and mustered out at Louisville, Nov. 21, 1864.

Battery E was organized at St. Louis, Mo., in August, 1861, and mustered into service, August 20, at that point. It was engaged at Fort Donelson and Shiloh, and in the siege of Corinth and the Yocona expedition—was consolidated with Battery A.

Battery F was organized at Cape Girardeau, Mo., and mustered in, Dec. 11, 1861; was engaged at Shiloh, in the siege and second battle of Corinth, and the Meridian campaign; also at Kenesaw, Atlanta and Jonesboro. It was mustered out, July 27, 1865, at Springfield.

Battery H was organized at Springfield, December, 1861, and mustered in, Dec. 31, 1861; was engaged at Fort Donelson and in the siege of Fort Pillow; veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, was mounted as cavalry the following summer, and mustered out at Springfield, July 29, 1865.

Battery I was recruited in Will County, and mustered into service at Camp Butler, Dec. 31, 1861. It participated in the siege of Island No. 10, in the advance upon Corinth, and in the battles of Perryville, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge and Chattanooga. It was veteranized, Jan. 1, 1864, marched with Sherman to Atlanta, and thence to Savannah and through the Carolinas, and was mustered out at Springfield.

Battery K was organized at Springfield and mustered in Dec. 31, 1863; was engaged at Fort Pillow, the capture of Clarkston, Mo., and the siege of Vicksburg. It was mustered out, July 14, 1865, at Chicago.

Battery L was organized at Chicago and mustered in, Feb. 28, 1862; participated in the advance on Corinth, the battle of Hatchie and the advance on the Tallahatchie, and was mustered out at Chicago, August 9, 1865.

Battery M was organized at Chicago, and mustered in at Springfield, June, 1862; was engaged at Jonesboro, Blue Spring, Blountsville and Rogersville, being finally consolidated with other batteries of the regiment.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE BATTERY. Organized through the efforts of the Chicago Board of Trade, which raised $15,000 for its equipment, within forty-eight hours. It was mustered into service, August 1, 1862, was engaged at Lawrenceburg, Murfreesboro, Stone River, Chickamauga, Farmington, Decatur (Ga.), Atlanta, Lovejoy Station, Nashville, Selma and Columbus (Ga.) It was mustered out at Chicago, June 30, 1865, and paid in full, July 3, having marched 5,205 miles and traveled by rail 1,231 miles. The battery was in eleven of the hardest battles fought in the West, and in twenty-six minor battles, being in action forty-two times while on scouts, reconnoissances or outpost duty.

CHICAGO MERCANTILE BATTERY. Recruited and organized under the auspices of the Mercantile Association, an association of prominent and patriotic merchants of the City of Chicago. It was mustered into service, August 29, 1862, at Camp Douglas, participated in the Tallahatchie and Yazoo expeditions, the first attack upon Vicksburg, the battle of Arkansas Post, the siege of Vicksburg, the battles of Magnolia Hills, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge and Jackson (Miss.); also took part in Banks' Red River expedition; was mustered out at Chicago, and received final payment, July 10, 1865, having traveled, by river, sea and land, over 11,000 miles.

SPRINGFIELD LIGHT ARTILLERY. Recruited principally from the cities of Springfield, Belleville and Wenona, and mustered into service at Springfield, for the term of three years, August 21, 1862, numbering 199 men and officers. It participated in the capture of Little Rock and in the Red River expedition, and was mustered out at Springfield, 114 strong, June 30, 1865.

COGSWELL'S BATTERY, LIGHT ARTILLERY. Organized at Ottawa, Ill., and mustered in, Nov. 11, 1861, as Company A (Artillery) Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers, Colonel Cushman commanding the regiment. It participated in the advance on Corinth, the siege of Vicksburg, the battle of Missionary Ridge, and the capture of Spanish Fort and Fort Blakely, near Mobile. The regiment was mustered out at Springfield, August 14, 1865, having served three years and nine months, marched over 7,500 miles, and participated in seven sieges and battles.

STURGES RIFLES. An independent company, organized at Chicago, armed, equipped and subsisted for nearly two months, by the patriotic generosity of Mr. Solomon Sturges; was mustered into service, May 6, 1861; in June following, was ordered to West Virginia, serving as body-guard of General McClellan; was engaged at Rich Mountain, in the siege of Yorktown, and in the seven days' battle of the Chickahominy. A portion of the company was at Antietam, the remainder having been detached as foragers, scouts, etc. It was mustered out at Washington, Nov. 25, 1862.

WAR, THE SPANISH-AMERICAN. The oppressions and misrule which had characterized the administration of affairs by the Spanish Government and its agents for generations, in the Island of Cuba, culminated, in April, 1898, in mutual declarations of war between Spain and the United States. The causes leading up to this result were the injurious effects upon American commerce and the interests of American citizens owning property in Cuba, as well as the constant expense imposed upon the Government of the United States in the maintenance of a large navy along the South Atlantic coast to suppress filibustering, superadded to the friction and unrest produced among the people of this country by the long continuance of disorders and abuses so near to our own shores, which aroused the sympathy and indignation of the entire civilized world. For three years a large proportion of the Cuban population had been in open rebellion against the Spanish Government, and, while the latter had imported a large army to the island and subjected the insurgents and their families and sympathizers to the grossest cruelties, not even excepting torture and starvation itself, their policy had failed to bring the insurgents into subjection or to restore order. In this condition of affairs the United States Government had endeavored, through negotiation, to secure a mitigation of the evils complained of, by a modification of the Spanish policy of government in the island; but all suggestions in this direction had either been resented by Spain as unwarrantable interference in her affairs, or promises of reform, when made, had been as invariably broken.

In the meantime an increasing sentiment had been growing up in the United States in favor of conceding belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, or the recognition of their independence, which found expression in measures proposed in Congress—all offers of friendly intervention by the United States having been rejected by Spain with evidences of indignation. Compelled, at last, to recognize its inability to subdue the insurrection, the Spanish Government, in November, 1897, made a pretense of tendering autonomy to the Cuban people, with the privilege of amnesty to the insurgents on laying down their arms. The long duration of the war and the outrages perpetrated upon the helpless "reconcentrados," coupled with the increased confidence of the insurgents in the final triumph of their cause, rendered this movement—even if intended to be carried out to the letter—of no avail. The proffer came too late, and was promptly rejected.

In this condition of affairs and with a view to greater security for American interests, the American battleship Maine was ordered to Havana, on Jan. 24, 1898. It arrived in Havana Harbor the following day, and was anchored at a point designated by the Spanish commander. On the night of February 15, following, it was blown up and destroyed by some force, as shown by after investigation, applied from without. Of a crew of 354 men belonging to the vessel at the time, 266 were either killed outright by the explosion, or died from their wounds. Not only the American people, but the entire civilized world, was shocked by the catastrophe. An act of horrible treachery had been perpetrated against an American vessel and its crew on a peaceful mission in the harbor of a professedly friendly nation.

The successive steps leading to actual hostilities were rapid and eventful. One of the earliest and most significant of these was the passage, by a unanimous vote of both houses of Congress, on March 9, of an appropriation placing $50,000,000 in the hands of the President as an emergency fund for purposes of national defense. This was followed, two days later, by an order for the mobilization of the army. The more important events following this step were: An order, under date of April 5, withdrawing American consuls from Spanish stations; the departure, on April 9, of Consul-General Fitzhugh Lee from Havana; April 19, the adoption by Congress of concurrent resolutions declaring Cuba independent and directing the President to use the land and naval forces of the United States to put an end to Spanish authority in the island; April 20, the sending to the Spanish Government, by the President, of an ultimatum in accordance with this act; April 21, the delivery to Minister Woodford, at Madrid, of his passports without waiting for the presentation of the ultimatum, with the departure of the Spanish Minister from Washington; April 23, the issue of a call by the President for 125,000 volunteers; April 24, the final declaration of war by Spain; April 25, the adoption by Congress of a resolution declaring that war had existed from April 21; on the same date an order to Admiral Dewey, in command of the Asiatic Squadron at Hongkong, to sail for Manila with a view to investing that city and blockading Philippine ports.

The chief events subsequent to the declaration of war embraced the following: May 1, the destruction by Admiral Dewey's squadron of the Spanish fleet in the harbor of Manila; May 19, the arrival of the Spanish Admiral Cervera's fleet at Santiago de Cuba; May 25, a second call by the President for 75,000 volunteers; July 3, the attempt of Cervera's fleet to escape, and its destruction off Santiago; July 17, the surrender of Santiago to the forces under General Shafter; July 30, the statement by the President, through the French Ambassador at Washington, of the terms on which the United States would consent to make peace; August 9, acceptance of the peace terms by Spain, followed, three days later, by the signing of the peace protocol; September 9, the appointment by the President of Peace Commissioners on the part of the United States; Sept. 18, the announcement of the Peace Commissioners selected by Spain; October 1, the beginning of the Peace Conference by the representatives of the two powers, at Paris, and the formal signing, on December 10, of the peace treaty, including the recognition by Spain of the freedom of Cuba, with the transfer to the United States of Porto Rico and her other West India islands, together with the surrender of the Philippines for a consideration of $20,000,000.

Seldom, if ever, in the history of nations have such vast and far-reaching results been accomplished within so short a period. The war, which practically began with the destruction of the Spanish fleet in Manila Harbor—an event which aroused the enthusiasm of the whole American people, and won the respect and admiration of other nations—was practically ended by the surrender of Santiago and the declaration by the President of the conditions of peace just three months later. Succeeding events, up to the formal signing of the peace treaty, were merely the recognition of results previously determined.

HISTORY OF ILLINOIS REGIMENTS.—The part played by Illinois in connection with these events may be briefly summarized in the history of Illinois regiments and other organizations. Under the first call of the President for 125,000 volunteers, eight regiments—seven of infantry and one of cavalry—were assigned to Illinois, to which was subsequently added, on application through Governor Tanner, one battery of light artillery. The infantry regiments were made up of the Illinois National Guard, numbered consecutively from one to seven, and were practically mobilized at their home stations within forty-eight hours from the receipt of the call, and began to arrive at Camp Tanner, near Springfield, the place of rendezvous, on April 26, the day after the issue of the Governor's call. The record of Illinois troops is conspicuous for the promptness of their response and the completeness of their organization—in this respect being unsurpassed by those of any other State. Under the call of May 25 for an additional force of 75,000 men, the quota assigned to Illinois was two regiments, which were promptly furnished, taking the names of the Eighth and Ninth. The first of these belonged to the Illinois National Guard, as the regiments mustered in under the first call had done, while the Ninth was one of a number of "Provisional Regiments" which had tendered their services to the Government. Some twenty-five other regiments of this class, more or less complete, stood ready to perfect their organizations should there be occasion for their services. The aggregate strength of Illinois organizations at date of muster out from the United States service was 12,280—11,789 men and 491 officers.

FIRST REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEERS (originally Illinois National Guard) was organized at Chicago, and mustered into the United States service at Camp Tanner (Springfield), under the command of Col. Henry L. Turner, May 13, 1898; left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga) May 17; assigned to First Brigade, Third Division, of the First Army Corps; started for Tampa, Fla., June 2, but soon after arrival there was transferred to Picnic Island, and assigned to provost duty in place of the First United States Infantry. On June 30 the bulk of the regiment embarked for Cuba, but was detained in the harbor at Key West until July 5, when the vessel sailed for Santiago, arriving in Guantanamo Bay on the evening of the 8th. Disembarking on the 10th, the whole regiment arrived on the firing line on the 11th, spent several days and nights in the trenches before Santiago, and were present at the surrender of that city on the 17th. Two companies had previously been detached for the scarcely less perilous duty of service in the fever hospitals and in caring for their wounded comrades. The next month was spent on guard duty in the captured city, until August 25, when, depleted in numbers and weakened by fever, the bulk of the regiment was transferred by hospital boats to Camp Wikoff, on Montauk Point, L. I. The members of the regiment able to travel left Camp Wikoff, September 8, for Chicago, arriving two days later, where they met an enthusiastic reception and were mustered out, November 17, 1,235 strong (rank and file)—a considerable number of recruits having joined the regiment just before leaving Tampa. The record of the First was conspicuous by the fact that it was the only Illinois regiment to see service in Cuba during the progress of actual hostilities. Before leaving Tampa some eighty members of the regiment were detailed for engineering duty in Porto Rico, sailed for that island on July 12, and were among the first to perform service there. The First suffered severely from yellow fever while in Cuba, but, as a regiment, while in the service, made a brilliant record, which was highly complimented in the official reports of its commanding officers.

SECOND REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (originally Second I. N. G.). This regiment, also from Chicago, began to arrive at Springfield, April 27, 1898—at that time numbering 1,202 men and 47 officers, under command of Col. George M. Moulton; was mustered in between May 4 and May 15; on May 17 started for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where, as a part of the Seventh Army Corps, under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, it assisted in the dedication of Camp Cuba Libre. October 25 it was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at "Camp Lee" until December 8, when two battalions embarked for Havana, landing on the 15th, being followed, a few days later, by the Third Battalion, and stationed at Camp Columbia. From Dec. 17 to Jan. 11, 1899, Colonel Moulton served as Chief of Police for the city of Havana. On March 28 to 30 the regiment left Camp Columbia in detachments for Augusta, Ga., where it arrived April 5, and was mustered out, April 26, 1,051 strong (rank and file), and returned to Chicago. During its stay in Cuba the regiment did not lose a man. A history of this regiment has been written by Rev. H. W. Bolton, its late Chaplain.

THIRD REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies of the Illinois National Guard from the counties of La Salle, Livingston, Kane, Kankakee, McHenry, Ogle, Will, and Winnebago, under command of Col. Fred Bennitt, reported at Springfield, with 1,170 men and 50 officers, on April 27; was mustered in May 7, 1898; transferred from Springfield to Camp Thomas (Chickamauga), May 14; on July 22 left Chickamauga for Porto Rico; on the 28th sailed from Newport News, on the liner St. Louis, arriving at Ponce, Porto Rico, on July 31; soon after disembarking captured Arroyo, and assisted in the capture of Guayama, which was the beginning of General Brooke's advance across the island to San Juan, when intelligence was received of the signing of the peace protocol by Spain. From August 13 to October 1 the Third continued in the performance of guard duty in Porto Rico; on October 22, 986 men and 39 officers took transport for home by way of New York, arriving in Chicago, November 11, the several companies being mustered out at their respective home stations. Its strength at final muster-out was 1,273 men and officers. This regiment had the distinction of being one of the first to see service in Porto Rico, but suffered severely from fever and other diseases during the three months of its stay in the island.

FOURTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, composed of companies from Champaign, Coles, Douglas, Edgar, Effingham, Fayette, Jackson, Jefferson, Montgomery, Richland, and St. Clair counties; mustered into the service at Springfield, May 20, under command of Col. Casimer Andel; started immediately for Tampa, Fla., but en route its destination was changed to Jacksonville, where it was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre as a part of the Seventh Corps under command of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee; in October was transferred to Savannah, Ga., remaining at Camp Onward until about the first of January, when the regiment took ship for Havana. Here the regiment was stationed at Camp Columbia until April 4, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out at Camp Mackenzie (Augusta), May 2, the companies returning to their respective home stations. During a part of its stay at Jacksonville, and again at Savannah, the regiment was employed on guard duty. While at Jacksonville Colonel Andel was suspended by court-martial, and finally tendered his resignation, his place being supplied by Lieut.-Col. Eben Swift, of the Ninth.

FIFTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was the first regiment to report, and was mustered in at Springfield, May 7, 1898, under command of Col. James S. Culver, being finally composed of twelve companies from Pike, Christian, Sangamon, McLean, Montgomery, Adams, Tazewell, Macon, Morgan, Peoria, and Fulton counties; on May 14 left Springfield for Camp Thomas (Chickamauga, Ga.), being assigned to the command of General Brooke; August 3 left Chickamauga for Newport News, Va., with the expectation of embarking for Porto Rico—a previous order of July 26 to the same purport having been countermanded; at Newport News embarked on the transport Odbam, but again the order was rescinded, and, after remaining on board thirty-six hours, the regiment was disembarked. The next move was made to Lexington, Ky., where the regiment—having lost hope of reaching “the front”—remained until Sept. 5, when it returned to Springfield for final muster-out. This regiment was composed of some of the best material in the State, and anxious for active service, but after a succession of disappointments, was compelled to return to its home station without meeting the enemy. After its arrival at Springfield the regiment was furloughed for thirty days and finally mustered out, October 16, numbering 1,213 men and 47 officers.

SIXTH REGIMENT ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY, consisting of twelve companies from the counties of Rock Island, Knox, Whiteside, Lee, Carroll, Stephenson, Henry, Warren, Bureau, and Jo Daviess, was mustered in May 11, 1898, under command of Col. D. Jack Foster; on May 17 left Springfield for Camp Alger, Va.; July 5 the regiment moved to Charleston, S. C., where a part embarked for Siboney, Cuba, but the whole regiment was soon after united in General Miles' expedition for the invasion of Porto Rico, landing at Guanico on July 25, and advancing into the interior as far as Adjunta and Utuado. After several weeks' service in the interior, the regiment returned to Ponce, and on September 7 took transport for the return home, arrived at Springfield a week later, and was mustered out November 25, the regiment at that time consisting of 1,239 men and 49 officers.

SEVENTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (known as the “Hibernian Rifles”). Two battalions of this regiment reported at Springfield, April 27, with 33 officers and 765 enlisted men, being afterwards increased to the maxi-mun; was mustered into the United States service, under command of Col. Marcus Kavanaugh, May 18, 1898; on May 28 started for Camp Alger, Va.; was afterwards encamped at Thoroughfare Gap and Camp Meade; on September 9 returned to Springfield, was furloughed for thirty days, and mustered out, October 20, numbering 1,260 men and 49 officers. Like the Fifth, the Seventh saw no actual service in the field.

EIGHTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY (colored regiment), mustered into the service at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 23, 1898, being composed wholly of Afro-Americans under officers of their own race, with Col. John R. Marshall in command, the muster-roll showing 1,195 men and 76 officers. The six companies, from A to F, were from Chicago, the other five being, respectively, from Bloomington, Springfield, Quincy, Litchfield, Mound City and Metropolis, and Cairo. The regiment having tendered their services to relieve the First Illinois on duty at Santiago de Cuba, it started for Cuba, August 8, by way of New York; immediately on arrival at Santiago, a week later, was assigned to duty, but subsequently transferred to San Luis, where Colone, Marshall was made military governor. The major part of the regiment remained here until ordered home early in March, 1899, arrived at Chicago, March 15, and was mustered out, April 3, 1,226 strong, rank and file, having been in service nine months and six days.

NINTH ILLINOIS VOLUNTEER INFANTRY was organized from the counties of Southern Illinois, and mustered in at Springfield under the second call of the President, July 4-11, 1898, under command of Col. James R. Campbell; arrived at Camp Cuba Libre (Jacksonville, Fla.), August 9; two months later was transferred to Savannah, Ga.; was moved to Havana in December, where it remained until May, 1899, when it returned to Augusta, Ga., and was mustered out there, May 20, 1899, at that time consisting of 1,095 men and 46 officers. From Augusta the several companies returned to their respective home stations. The Ninth was the only "Provisional Regiment" from Illinois mustered into the service during the war, the other regiments all belonging to the National Guard.

FIRST ILLINOIS CAVALRY was organized at Chicago immediately after the President's first call, seven companies being recruited from Chicago, two from Bloomington, and one each from Springfield, Elkhart, and Lacon; was mustered in at Springfield, May 21, 1898, under command of Col. Edward C. Young; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 30, remaining there until August 24, when it returned to Fort Sheridan, near Chicago, where it was stationed until October 11, when it was mustered out, at that time consisting of 1,158 men and 50 officers. Although the regiment saw no active service in the field, it established an excellent record for itself in respect to discipline.

FIRST ENGINEERING CORPS, consisting of 80 men detailed from the First Illinois Volunteers, were among the first Illinois soldiers to see service in Porto Rico, accompanying General Miles' expedition in the latter part of July, and being engaged for a time in the construction of bridges in aid of the intended advance across the island. On September 8 they embarked for the return home, arrived at Chicago, September 17, and were mustered out November 20.

BATTERY A (I. N. G.), from Danville, Ill., was mustered in under a special order of the War Department, May 12, 1898, under command of Capt. Oscar P. Yaeger, consisting of 118 men; left Springfield for Camp Thomas, Ga., May 19, and, two months later, joined in General Miles' Porto Rico expedition, landing at Guanico on August 3, and taking part in the affair at Guayama on the 12th. News of peace having been received, the Battery returned to Ponce, where it remained until September 7, when it started on the return home by way of New York, arrived at Danville, September 17, was furloughed for sixty days, and mustered out November 25. The Battery was equipped with modern breech-loading rapid-firing guns, operated by practical artillerymen and prepared for effective service.

NAVAL RESERVES.—One of the earliest steps taken by the Government after it became apparent that hostilities could not be averted, was to begin preparation for strengthening the naval arm of the service. The existence of the "Naval Militia," first organized in 1893, placed Illinois in an exceptionally favorable position for making a prompt response to the call of the Government, as well as furnishing a superior class of men for service—a fact evidenced during the operations in the West Indies. Gen. John McNulta, as head of the local committee, was active in calling the attention of the Navy Department to the value of the service to be rendered by this organization, which resulted in its being enlisted practically as a body, taking the name of "Naval Reserves"—all but eighty-eight of the number passing the physical examination, the places of these being promptly filled by new recruits. The first detachment of over 200 left Chicago May 2, under the command of Lieut.-Com. John M. Hawley, followed soon after by the remainder of the First Battalion, making the whole number from Chicago 400, with 267, constituting the Second Battalion, from other towns of the State. The latter was made up of 147 men from Moline, 58 from Quincy, and 62 from Alton—making a total from the State of 667. This does not include others, not belonging to this organization, who enlisted for service in the navy during the war, which raised the whole number for the State over 1,000. The Reserves enlisted from Illinois occupied a different relation to the Government from that of the "naval militia" of other States, which retained their State organizations, while those from Illinois were regularly mustered into the United States service. The recruits from Illinois were embarked at Key West, Norfolk and New York, and distributed among fifty-two different vessels, including nearly every vessel belonging to the North Atlantic Squadron. They saw service in nearly every department from the position of stokers in the hold to that of gunners in the turrets of the big battleships, the largest number (60) being assigned to the famous battleship Oregon, while the cruiser Yale followed with 47; the Harvard with 35; Cincinnati, 27; Yankton, 19; Franklin, 18; Montgomery and Indiana, each, 17; Hector, 14; Marietta, 11; Wilmington and Lancaster, 10 each, and others down to one each. Illinois sailors thus had the privilege of participating in the brilliant affair of July 3, which resulted in the destruction of Cervera's fleet off Santiago, as also in nearly every other event in the West Indies of less importance, without the loss of a man while in the service, although among the most exposed. They were mustered out at different times, as they could be spared from the service, or the vessels to which they were attached went out of commission, a portion serving out their full term of one year. The Reserves from Chicago retain their organization under the name of "Naval Reserve Veterans," with headquarters in the Masonic Temple Building, Chicago.

WARD, James H., ex-Congressman, was born in Chicago, Nov. 30, 1853, and educated in the Chicago public schools and at the University of Notre Dame, graduating from the latter in 1873. Three years later he graduated from the Union College of Law, Chicago, and was admitted to the bar. Since then he has continued to practice his profession in his native city. In 1879 he was elected Supervisor of the town of West Chicago, and, in 1884, was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Democratic ticket, and the same year, was the successful candidate of his party for Congress in the Third Illinois District, serving one term.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS, a tribe of the Dakota, or Sioux, stock, which at one time occupied a part of Northern Illinois. The word Winnebago is a corruption of the French Ouinebegoutz, Ouimbegouc, etc., the diphthong "ou" taking the place of the consonant "w," which is wanting in the French alphabet. These were, in turn, French misspellings of an Algonquin term meaning "fetid," which the latter tribe applied to the Winnebagoes because they had come from the western ocean—the salt (or "fetid") water. In their advance towards the East the Winnebagoes early invaded the country of the Illinois, but were finally driven northward by the latter, who surpassed them in numbers rather than in bravery. The invaders settled in Wisconsin, near the Fox River, and here they were first visited by the Jesuit Fathers in the seventeenth century. (See Jesuit Relations.) The Winnebagoes are commonly regarded as a Wisconsin tribe; yet, that they claimed territorial rights in Illinois is shown by the fact that the treaty of Prairie du Chien (August 1, 1829), alludes to a Winnebago village located in what is now Jo Daviess County, near the mouth of the Pecatonica River. While, as a rule, the tribe, if left to itself, was disposed to live in amity with the whites, it was carried away by the eloquence and diplomacy of Tecumseh and the cajoleries of "The Prophet." General Harrison especially alludes to the bravery of the Winnebago warriors at Tippecanoe, which he attributes in part, however, to a superstitious faith in "The Prophet." In June or July, 1827, an unprovoked and brutal outrage by the whites upon an unoffending and practically defenseless party of Winnebagoes, near Prairie du Chien brought on what is known as the "Winnebago War." (See Winnebago War.) The tribe took no part in the Black Hawk War, largely because of the great influence and shrewd tactic of their chief, Naw-caw. By treaties executed in 1832 and 1837 the Winnebagoes ceded to the United States all their lands lying east of the Mississippi. They were finally removed west of that river, and, after many shiftings of location, were placed upon the Omaha Reservation in Eastern Nebraska, where their industry, thrift and peaceable disposition elicited high praise from Government officials.

WARNER, Vespasian, lawyer and Member of Congress, was born in De Witt County, Ill., April 23, 1842, and has lived all his life in his native county—his present residence being Clinton. After a short course in Lombard University, while studying law in the office of Hon. Lawrence Weldon, at Clinton, he enlisted as a private soldier of the Twentieth Illinois Volunteers, in June, 1861, serving until July, 1866, when he was mustered out with the rank of Captain and brevet Major. He received a gunshot wound at Shiloh, but continued to serve in the Army of the Tennessee until the evacuation of Atlanta, when he was ordered North on account of disability. His last service was in fighting Indians on the plains. After the war he completed his law studies at Harvard University, graduating in 1868, when he entered into a law partnership with Clifton H. Moore of Clinton. He served as Judge-Advocate General of the Illinois National Guard for several years, with the rank of Colonel, under the administrations of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer, and, in 1894, was nominated and elected, as a Republican, to the Fifty-fourth Congress for the Thirteenth District, being re-elected in 1896, and again in 1898. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, Mr. Warner was a member of the Committees on Agriculture and Invalid Pensions, and Chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

WARREN, a village in Jo Daviess County, at intersection of the Illinois Central and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railways, 26 miles west-northwest of Freeport and 27 miles east by north of Galena. The surrounding region is agricultural and stock-raising; there are also lead mines in the vicinity. Tobacco is grown to some extent. Warren has a flouring mill, tin factory, creamery and stone quarries, a State bank, water supply from artesian wells, fire department, gas plant, two weekly newspapers, five churches, a high school, an academy and a public library. Pop. (1890), 1,172; (1900), 1,327.

WARREN, Calvin A., lawyer, was born in Essex County, N. Y., June 3, 1807; in his youth, worked for a time, as a typographer, in the office of "The Northern Spectator," at Poultney, Vt., side by side with Horace Greeley, afterwards the founder of "The New York Tribune." Later, he became one of the publishers of "The Palladium" at Ballston, N. Y., but, in 1832, removed to Hamilton County, Ohio, where he began the study of law, completing his course at Transylvania University, Ky., in 1834, and beginning practice at Batavia, Ohio, as the partner of Thomas Morris, then a United States Senator from Ohio, whose daughter he married, thereby becoming the brother-in-law of the late Isaac N. Morris, of Quincy, Ill. In 1836, Mr. Warren came to Quincy, Adams County, Ill., but soon after removed to Warsaw in Hancock County, where he resided until 1839, when he returned to Quincy. Here he continued in practice, either alone or as a partner, at different times, of several of the leading attorneys of that city. Although he held no office except that of Master in Chancery, which he occupied for some sixteen years, the possession of an inexhaustible fund of humor, with strong practical sense and decided ability as a speaker, gave him great popularity at the bar and upon the stump, and made him a recognized leader in the ranks of the Democratic party, of which he was a life-long member. He served as Presidential Elector on the Pierce ticket in 1852, and was the nominee of his party for the same position on one or two other occasions. Died, at Quincy, Feb. 22, 1881.

WARREN, Hooper, pioneer journalist, was born at Walpole, N. H., in 1790; learned the printer's trade on the Rutland (Vt.) "Herald"; in 1814 went to Delaware, whence, three years later, he emigrated to Kentucky, working for a time on a paper at Frankfort. In 1818 he came to St. Louis and worked in the office of the old "Missouri Gazette" (the predecessor of "The Republican"), and also acted as the agent of a lumber company at Cairo, Ill., when the whole population of that place consisted of one family domiciled on a grounded flat-boat. In March, 1819, he established, at Edwardsville, the third paper in Illinois, its predecessors being "The Illinois Intelligencer," at Kaskaskia, and "The Illinois Emigrant," at Shawneetown. The name given to the new paper was "The Spectator," and the contest over the effort to introduce a pro-slavery clause in the State Constitution soon brought it into prominence. Backed by Governor Coles, Congressman Daniel P. Cook, Judge S. D. Lockwood, Rev. Thomas Lippincott, Judge Wm. H. Brown (afterwards of Chicago), George Churchill and other opponents of slavery, "The Spectator" made a sturdy fight in opposition to the scheme, which ended in defeat of the measure by the rejection at the polls, in 1824, of the proposition for a Constitutional Convention. Warren left the Edwardsville paper in 1825, and was, for a time, associated with "The National Crisis," an anti-slavery paper at Cincinnati, but soon returned to Illinois and established "The Sangamon Spectator"—the first paper ever published at the present State capital. This he sold out in 1829, and, for the next three years, was connected with "The Advertiser and Upper Mississippi Herald," at Galena. Abandoning this field in 1832, he removed to Hennepin, where, within the next five years, he held the offices of Clerk of the Circuit and County Commissioners' Courts and ex-officio Recorder of Deeds. In 1836 he began the publication of the third paper in Chicago—"The Commercial Advertiser" (a weekly)—which was continued a little more than a year, when it was abandoned, and he settled on a farm at Henry, Marshall County. His further newspaper ventures were, as the associate of Zebina Eastman, in the publication of "The Genius of Liberty," at Lowell, La Salle County, and "The Western Citizen"—afterwards "The Free West"—in Chicago. (See Eastman, Zebina, and Lundy, Benjamin.) On the discontinuance of "The Free West" in 1856, he again retired to his farm at Henry, where he spent the remainder of his days. While returning home from a visit to Chicago, in August, 1864, he was taken ill at Mendota, dying there on the 23d of the month.

WARREN, John Esaias, diplomatist and real-estate operator, was born in Troy, N. Y., in 1826, graduated at Union College and was connected with the American Legation to Spain during the administration of President Pierce; in 1859-60 was a member of the Minnesota Legislature and, in 1861-62, Mayor of St. Paul; in 1867, came to Chicago, where, while engaged in real-estate business, he became known to the press as the author of a series of articles entitled "Topics of the Time." In 1886 he took up his residence in Brussels, Belgium, where he died, July 6, 1896. Mr. Warren was author of several volumes of travel, of which "An Attache in Spain" and "Para" are most important.

WARREN COUNTY. A western county, created by act of the Legislature, in 1825, but not fully organized until 1830, having at that time about 350 inhabitants; has an area of 540 square miles, and was named for Gen. Joseph Warren. It is drained by the Henderson River and its affluents, and is traversed by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy (two divisions), the Iowa Central and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroads. Bituminous coal is mined and limestone is quarried in large quantities. The county's early development was retarded in consequence of having become the "seat of war," during the Black Hawk War. The principal products are grain and live-stock, although manufacturing is carried on to some extent. The county-seat and chief city is Monmouth (which see). Roseville is a shipping point. Population (1880), 22,933. (1890), 21,281; (1900), 23,163.

WARRENSBURG, a town of Macon County, on Peoria Division Ill. Cent. Railway, 9 miles northwest of Decatur; has elevators, canning factory, a bank and newspaper. Pop. (1900), 503.

WARSAW, the largest town in Hancock County, and admirably situated for trade. It stands on a bluff on the Mississippi River, some three miles below Keokuk, and about 40 miles above Quincy. It is the western terminus of the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railway, and lies 116 miles west-southwest of Peoria. Old Fort Edwards, established by Gen. Zachary Taylor, during the War of 1812, was located within the limits of the present city of Warsaw, opposite the mouth of the Des Moines River. An iron foundry, a large woolen mill, a plow factory and cooperage works are its principal manufacturing establishments. The channel of the Mississippi admits of the passage of the largest steamers up to this point. Warsaw has eight churches, a system of common schools comprising one high and three grammar schools, a National bank and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 3,105; (1890), 2,721; (1900), 2,335.

WASHBURN, a village of Woodford County, on a branch of the Chicago & Alton Railway 25 miles northeast of Peoria; has banks and a weekly paper; the district is agricultural. Population (1890), 598; (1900), 703.

WASHBURNE, Elihu Benjamin, Congressman and diplomatist, was born at Livermore, Maine, Sept. 23, 1816; in early life learned the trade of a printer, but graduated from Harvard Law School and was admitted to the bar in 1840. Coming west, he settled at Galena, forming a partnership with Charles S. Hempstead, for the practice of law, in 1841. He was a stalwart Whig, and, as such, was elected to Congress in 1852. He continued to represent his District until 1869, taking a prominent position, as a Republican, on the organization of that party. On account of his long service he was known as the "Father of the House," administering the Speaker's oath three times to Schuyler Colfax and once to James G. Blaine. He was appointed Secretary of State by General Grant in 1869, but surrendered his portfolio to become Envoy to France, in which capacity he achieved great distinction. He was the only official representative of a foreign government who remained in Paris, during the siege of that city by the Germans (1870-71) and the reign of the "Commune." For his conduct he was honored by the Governments of France and Germany alike. On his return to the United States, he made his home in Chicago, where he devoted his latter years chiefly to literary labor, and where he died, Oct. 22, 1887. He was strongly favored as a candidate for the Presidency in 1880.

WASHINGTON, a city in Tazewell County, situated at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads. It is 21 miles west of El Paso, and 12 miles east of Peoria. Carriages, plows and farming implements constitute the manufactured output. It is also an important shipping-point for farm products. It has electric light and water-works plants, eight churches, a graded school, two banks and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,301; (1900), 1,451.

WASHINGTON COUNTY, an interior county of Southern Illinois, east of St. Louis; is drained by the Kaskaskia River and the Elkhorn, Beaucoup and Muddy Creeks; was organized in 1818, and has an area of 540 square miles. The surface is diversified, well watered and timbered. The soil is of variable fertility. Corn, wheat and oats are the chief agricultural products. Manufacturing is carried on to some extent, among the products being agricultural implements, flour, carriages and wagons. The most important town is Nashville, which is also the county-seat. Population (1890), 19,262; (1900), 19,526. Washington was one of the fifteen counties into which Illinois was divided at the organization of the State Government, being one of the last three created during the Territorial period—the other two being Franklin and Union.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railways, 12 miles southwest of Chicago; has a graded school, female seminary, military school, a car factory, several churches and a newspaper. Annexed to City of Chicago, 1890.

WATAGA, a village of Knox County, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 8 miles northeast of Galesburg. Population (1900), 545.

WATERLOO, the county-seat and chief town of Monroe County, on the Illinois Division of the Mobile & Ohio Railroad, 24 miles east of south from St. Louis. The region is chiefly agricultural, but underlaid with coal. Its industries embrace two flour mills, a plow factory, distillery, creamery, two ice plants, and some minor concerns. The city has municipal water and electric light plants, four churches, a graded school and two newspapers. Pop. (1890), 1,860; (1900), 2,114.

WATERMAN, Arba Nelson, lawyer and jurist, was born at Greensboro, Orleans County, Vt., Feb. 3, 1836. After receiving an academic education and teaching for a time, he read law at Montpelier and, later, passed through the Albany Law School. In 1861 he was admitted to the bar, removed to Joliet, Ill., and opened an office. In 1862 he enlisted as a private in the One Hundredth Illinois Volunteers, serving with the Army of the Cumberland for two years, and being mustered out in August, 1864, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. On leaving the army, Colonel Waterman commenced practice in Chicago. In 1873-74 he represented the Eleventh Ward in the City Council. In 1887 he was elected to the bench of the Cook County Circuit Court, and was re-elected in 1891 and, again, in 1897. In 1890 he was assigned as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court.

WATSEKA, the county-seat of Iroquois County, situated on the Iroquois River, at the mouth of Sugar Creek, and at the intersection of the Chicago & Eastern Illinois and the Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroads, 77 miles south of Chicago, 46 miles north of Danville and 14 miles east of Gilman. It has flour-mills, brick and tile works and foundries, besides several churches, banks, a graded school and three weekly newspapers. Artesian well water is obtained by boring to the depth of 100 to 160 feet, and some forty flowing streams from these shafts are in the place. Population (1890), 2,017; (1900), 2,505.

WATTS, Amos, jurist, was born in St. Clair County, Ill., Oct. 25, 1821, but removed to Washington County in boyhood, and was elected County Clerk in 1847, '49 and '53, and State's Attorney for the Second Judicial District in 1856 and '60; then became editor and proprietor of a newspaper, later resuming the practice of law, and, in 1873, was elected Circuit Judge, remaining in office until his death, at Nashville, Ill., Dec. 6, 1888.

WAUKEGAN, the county-seat and principal city of Lake County, situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, about 36 miles north by west from Chicago, and 50 miles south of Milwaukee; is also the northern terminus of the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad and connected by electric lines with Chicago and Fox Lake. Lake Michigan is about 80 miles wide opposite this point. Waukegan was first known as "Little Fort," from the remains of an old fort that stood on its site. The principal part of the city is built on a bluff, which rises abruptly to the height of about fifty feet. Between the bluff and the shore is a flat tract about 400 yards wide which is occupied by gardens, dwellings, warehouses and manufactories. The manufactures include steel-wire, refined sugar, scales, agricultural implements, brass and iron products, sash, doors and blinds, leather, beer, etc.; the city has paved streets, gas and electric light plants, three banks, eight or ten churches, graded and high schools and two newspapers. A large trade in grain, lumber, coal and dairy products is carried on. Pop. (1890), 4,915; (1900), 9,426.

WAUKEGAN & SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY. (See Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railway.)

WAVERLY, a city in Morgan County, 18 miles southeast of Jacksonville, on the Jacksonville & St. Louis and the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis Railroads. It was originally settled by enterprising emigrants from New England, whose descendants constitute a large proportion of the population. It is the center of a rich agricultural region, has a fine graded school, six or seven churches, two banks, two newspapers and tile works. Population (1880), 1,124; (1890), 1,337; (1900), 1,573.

WAYNE, (Gen.) Anthony, soldier, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 1, 1745, of Anglo-Irish descent, graduated as a Surveyor, and first practiced his profession in Nova Scotia. During the years immediately antecedent to the Revolution he was prominent in the colonial councils of his native State, to which he had returned in 1767, where he became a member of the "Committee of Safety." On June 3, 1776, he was commissioned Colonel of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania troops in the Continental army, and, during the War of the Revolution, was conspicuous for his courage and ability as a leader. One of his most daring and successful achievements was the capture of Stony Point, in 1779, when—the works having been carried and Wayne having received, what was supposed to be, his death-wound—he entered the fort, supported by his aids. For this service he was awarded a gold medal by Congress. He also took a conspicuous part in the investiture and capture of Yorktown. In October, 1783, he was brevetted Major-General. In 1784 he was elected to the Pennsylvania Legislature. A few years later he settled in Georgia, which State he represented in Congress for seven months, when his seat was declared vacant after contest. In April, 1792, he was confirmed as General-in-Chief of the United States Army, on nomination of President Washington. His connection with Illinois history began shortly after

St. Clair's defeat, when he led a force into Ohio (1783) and erected a stockade at Greenville, which he named Fort Recovery; his object being to subdue the hostile savage tribes. In this he was eminently successful and, on August 3, 1793, after a victorious campaign, negotiated the Treaty of Greenville, as broad in its provisions as it was far-reaching in its influence. He was a daring fighter, and although Washington called him "prudent," his dauntlessness earned for him the sobriquet of "Mad Anthony." In matters of dress he was punctilious, and, on this account, he was sometimes dubbed "Dandy Wayne." He was one of the few white officers whom all the Western Indian tribes at once feared and respected. They named him "Black Snake" and "Tornado." He died at Presque Isle near Erie, Dec. 15, 1796. Thirteen years afterward his remains were removed by one of his sons, and interred in Badnor churchyard, in his native county. The Pennsylvania Historical Society erected a marble monument over his grave, and appropriately dedicated it on July 4 of the same year.

WAYNE COUNTY, in the southeast quarter of the State; has an area of 720 square miles; was organized in 1819, and named for Gen. Anthony Wayne. The county is watered and drained by the Little Wabash and its branches, notably the Skillet Fork. At the first election held in the county, only fifteen votes were cast. Early life was exceedingly primitive, the first settlers pounding corn into meal with a wooden pestle, a hollowed stump being used as a mortar. The first mill erected (of the antique South Carolina pattern) charged 25 cents per bushel for grinding. Prairie and woodland make up the surface, and the soil is fertile. Railroad facilities are furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis and the Baltimore & Ohio (Southwestern) Railroads. Corn, oats, tobacco, wheat, hay and wool are the chief agricultural products. Saw mills are numerous and there are also carriage and wagon factories. Fairfield is the county-seat. Population (1880), 21,291; (1890), 23,806; (1900), 27,626.

WEAS, THE, a branch of the Miami tribe of Indians. They called themselves "We-wee-hahs," and were spoken of by the French as "Oui-at-a-nons" and "Oui-as." Other corruptions of the name were common among the British and American colonists. In 1718 they had a village at Chicago, but abandoned it through fear of their hostile neighbors, the Chippewas and Pottawatomies. The Weas were, at one time, brave and warlike; but their numbers were reduced by constant warfare and disease, and, in the end, debauchery enervated and demoralized them. They were removed west of the Mississippi and given a reservation in Miami County, Kan. This they ultimately sold, and, under the leadership of Baptiste Peoria, united with their few remaining brethren of the Miamis and with the remnant of the Ill-i-ni under the title of the "confederated tribes," and settled in Indian Territory. (See also Miamis; Piankeshaws.)

WEBB, Edwin B., early lawyer and politician, was born about 1802, came to the vicinity of Carmi, White County, Ill., about 1829 to 1830, and, still later, studied law at Transylvania University. He held the office of Prosecuting Attorney of White County, and, in 1834, was elected to the lower branch of the General Assembly, serving, by successive re-elections, until 1842, and, in the Senate, from 1842 to '46. During his service in the House he was a colleague and political and personal friend of Abraham Lincoln. He opposed the internal improvement scheme of 1837, predicting many of the disasters which were actually realized a few years later. He was a candidate for Presidential Elector on the Whig ticket, in 1844 and '48, and, in 1852, received the nomination for Governor as the opponent of Joel A. Matteson, two years later, being an unsuccessful candidate for Justice of the Supreme Court in opposition to Judge W. B. Scates. While practicing law at Carmi, he was also a partner of his brother in the mercantile business. Died, Oct. 14, 1858, in the 56th year of his age.

WEBB, Henry Livingston, soldier and pioneer (an elder brother of James Watson Webb, a noted New York journalist), was born at Claverack, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1795; served as a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Southern Illinois in 1817, and became one of the founders of the town of America near the mouth of the Ohio; was Representative in the Fourth and Eleventh General Assemblies, a Major in the Black Hawk War and Captain of volunteers and, afterwards, Colonel of regulars, in the Mexican War. In 1860 he went to Texas and served, for a time, in a semi-military capacity under the Confederate Government; returned to Illinois in 1869, and died, at Makanda, Oct. 5, 1876.

WEBSTER, Fletcher, lawyer and soldier, was born at Portsmouth, N. H., July 23, 1813; graduated at Harvard in 1833, and studied law with his father (Daniel Webster); in 1837, located at Peru, Ill., where he practiced three years. His father having been appointed Secretary of State in 1841, the son became his private secretary, was also Secretary of Legation to Caleb Cushing (Minister to China) in 1843, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature in 1847, and Surveyor of the Port of Boston, 1850-61; the latter year became Colonel of the Twelfth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was killed in the second battle of Bull Run, August 30, 1862.

WEBSTER, Joseph Dana, civil engineer and soldier, was born at Old Hampton, N. H., August 25, 1811. He graduated from Dartmouth College in 1832, and afterwards read law at Newburyport, Mass. His natural inclination was for engineering, and, after serving for a time in the Engineer and War offices, at Washington, was made a United States civil engineer (1835) and, on July 7, 1838, entered the army as Second Lieutenant of Topographical Engineers. He served through the Mexican War, was made First Lieutenant in 1849, and promoted to a captaincy, in March, 1853. Thirteen months later he resigned, removing to Chicago, where he made his permanent home, and soon after was identified, for a time, with the proprietorship of "The Chicago Tribune." He was President of the commission that perfected the Chicago sewerage system, and designed and executed the raising of the grade of a large portion of the city from two to eight feet, whole blocks of buildings being raised by jack screws, while new foundations were inserted. At the outbreak of the Civil War he tendered his services to the Government and superintended the erection of the fortifications at Cairo, Ill., and Paducah, Ky. On April 7, 1861, he was commissioned Paymaster of Volunteers, with the rank of Major, and, in February, 1862, Colonel of the First Illinois Artillery. For several months he was chief of General Grant's staff, participating in the capture of Forts Donelson and Henry, and in the battle of Shiloh, in the latter as Chief of Artillery. In October, 1862, the War Department detailed him to make a survey of the Illinois & Michigan Canal, and, the following month, he was commissioned Brigadier-General of Volunteers, serving as Military Governor of Memphis and Superintendent of military railroads. He was again chief of staff to General Grant during the Vicksburg campaign, and, from 1864 until the close of the war, occupied the same relation to General Sherman. He was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers, March 13, 1865, but, resigning Nov. 6, following, returned to Chicago, where he spent the remainder of his life. From 1869 to 1872 he was Assessor of Internal Revenue there, and, later, Assistant United States Treasurer, and, in July, 1872, was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue. Died, at Chicago, March 12, 1876.

WELCH, William R., lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Jan. 22, 1828, educated at Transylvania University, Lexington, graduating from the academic department in 1847, and, from the law school, in 1851. In 1864 he removed to Carlinville, Macoupin County, Ill., which place he made his permanent home. In 1877 he was elected to the bench of the Fifth Circuit, and re-elected in 1879 and '85. In 1884 he was assigned to the bench of the Appellate Court for the Second District. Died, Sept. 1, 1888.

WELDON, Lawrence, one of the Judges of the United States Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, in 1829; while a child, removed with his parents to Madison County, and was educated in the common schools, the local academy and at Wittenberg College, Springfield, in the same State; read law with Hon. R. A. Harrison, a prominent member of the Ohio bar, and was admitted to practice in 1854, meanwhile, in 1852-53, having served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State at Columbus. In 1854 he removed to Illinois, locating at Clinton, DeWitt County, where he engaged in practice; in 1860 was elected a Representative in the Twenty-second General Assembly, was also chosen a Presidential Elector the same year, and assisted in the first election of Abraham Lincoln to the Presidency. Early in 1861 he resigned his seat in the Legislature to accept the position of United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, tendered him by President Lincoln, but resigned the latter office in 1866 and, the following year, removed to Bloomington, where he continued the practice of his profession until 1883, when he was appointed, by President Arthur, an Associate Justice of the United States Court of Claims at Washington—a position which he still (1899) continues to fill. Judge Weldon is among the remaining few who rode the circuit and practiced law with Mr. Lincoln. From the time of coming to the State in 1854 to 1860, he was one of Mr. Lincoln's most intimate traveling companions in the old Eighth Circuit, which extended from Sangamon County on the west to Vermilion on the east, and of which Judge David Davis, afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States and United States Senator, was the presiding Justice. The Judge holds in his memory many pleasant reminiscences of that day, especially of the eastern portion of the District, where he was accustomed to meet the late Senator Voorhees, Senator McDonald and other leading lawyers of Indiana, as well as the historic men whom he met at the State capital.

WELLS, Albert W., lawyer and legislator, was born at Woodstock, Conn., May 9, 1839, and enjoyed only such educational and other advantages as belonged to the average New England boy of that period. During his boyhood his family removed to New Jersey, where he attended an academy, later, graduating from Columbia College and Law School in New York City, and began practice with State Senator Robert Allen at Red Bank, N. J. During the Civil War he enlisted in a New Jersey regiment and took part in the battle of Gettysburg, resuming his profession at the close of the war. Coming west in 1870, he settled in Quincy, Ill., where he continued practice. In 1886 he was elected to the House of Representatives from Adams County, as a Democrat, and re-elected two years later. In 1890 he was advanced to the Senate, where, by re-election in 1894, he served continuously until his death in office, March 5, 1897. His abilities and long service—covering the sessions of the Thirty-fifth to the Fortieth General Assemblies—placed him at the head of the Democratic side of the Senate during the latter part of his legislative career.

WELLS, William, soldier and victim of the Fort Dearborn massacre, was born in Kentucky, about 1770. When a boy of 12, he was captured by the Miami Indians, whose chief, Little Turtle, adopted him, giving him his daughter in marriage when he grew to manhood. He was highly esteemed by the tribe as a warrior, and, in 1790, was present at the battle where Gen. Arthur St. Clair was defeated. He then realized that he was fighting against his own race, and informed his father-in-law that he intended to ally himself with the whites. Leaving the Miamis, he made his way to General Wayne, who made him Captain of a company of scouts. After the treaty of Greenville (1795) he settled on a farm near Fort Wayne, where he was joined by his Indian wife. Here he acted as Indian Agent and Justice of the Peace. In 1812 he learned of the contemplated evacuation of Fort Dearborn, and, at the head of thirty Miamis, he set out for the post, his intention being to furnish a body-guard to the non-combatants on their proposed march to Fort Wayne. On August 13, he marched out of the fort with fifteen of his dusky warriors behind him, the remainder bringing up the rear. Before a mile and a half had been traveled, the party fell into an Indian ambushade, and an indiscriminate massacre followed. (See Fort Dearborn.) The Miamis fled, and Captain Wells' body was riddled with bullets, his head cut off and his heart taken out. He was an uncle of Mrs. Heald, wife of the commander of Fort Dearborn.

WELLS, William Harvey, educator, was born in Tolland, Conn., Feb. 27, 1812; lived on a farm until 17 years old, attending school irregularly, but made such progress that he became successively a teacher in the Teachers' Seminary at Andover and Newburyport, and, finally, Principal of the State Normal School at Westfield, Mass. In 1856 he accepted the position of Superintendent of Public Schools for the city of Chicago, serving till 1864, when he resigned. He was an organizer of the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, one of the first editors of "The Massachusetts Teacher" and prominently connected with various benevolent, educational and learned societies; was also author of several textbooks, and assisted in the revision of "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary." Died, Jan. 21, 1885.

WENONA, city on the eastern border of Marshall County, 20 miles south of La Salle, has zinc works, public and parochial schools, a weekly paper, two banks, and five churches. A good quality of soft coal is mined here. Population (1880), 911; (1890), 1,053; (1900), 1,486.

WENTWORTH, John, early journalist and Congressman, was born at Sandwich, N. H., March 5, 1815, graduated from Dartmouth College in 1836, and came to Chicago the same year, where he became editor of "The Chicago Democrat," which had been established by John Calhoun three years previous. He soon after became proprietor of "The Democrat," of which he continued to be the publisher until it was merged into "The Chicago Tribune," July 24, 1864. He also studied law, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1841. He served in Congress as a Democrat from 1843 to 1851, and again from 1853 to 1855, but left the Democratic party on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. He was elected Mayor of Chicago in 1857, and again in 1860, during his incumbency introducing a number of important municipal reforms; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1862, and twice served on the Board of Education. He again represented Illinois in Congress as a Republican from 1865 to 1867—making fourteen years of service in that body. In 1872 he joined in the Greeley movement, but later renewed his allegiance to the Republican party. In 1878 Mr. Wentworth published an elaborate genealogical work in three volumes, entitled "History of the Wentworth Family." A volume of "Congressional Reminiscences" and two by him on "Early Chicago," published in connection with the Fergus Historical Series, contain some valuable information on early local and national history. On account of his extraordinary height he received the sobriquet of "Long John," by which he was familiarly known throughout the State. Died, in Chicago, Oct. 16, 1888.

WEST, Edward M., merchant and banker, was born in Virginia, May 2, 1814; came with his father to Illinois in 1818; in 1829 became a clerk in the Recorder's office at Edwardsville, also served as deputy postmaster, and, in 1833, took a position in the United States Land Office there. Two years later he engaged in mercantile business, which he prosecuted over thirty years—meanwhile filling the office of County Treasurer, ex-officio Superintendent of Schools, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. In 1867, in conjunction with W. R. Prickett, he established a bank at Edwardsville, with which he was connected until his death, Oct. 31, 1887. Mr. West officiated frequently as a "local preacher" of the Methodist Church, in which capacity he showed much ability as a public speaker.

WEST, Mary Allen, educator and philanthropist, was born at Galesburg, Ill., July 31, 1837; graduated at Knox Seminary in 1854 and taught until 1873, when she was elected County Superintendent of Schools, serving nine years. She took an active and influential interest in educational and reformatory movements, was for two years editor of "Our Home Monthly," in Philadelphia, and also a contributor to other journals, besides being editor-in-chief of "The Union Signal," Chicago, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union—in which she held the position of President; was also President, in the latter days of her life, of the Illinois Woman's Press Association of Chicago, that city having become her home in 1885. In 1892, Miss West started on a tour of the world for the benefit of her health, but died at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 1, 1892.

WESTERN HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE, an institution for the treatment of the insane, located at Watertown, Rock Island County, in accordance with an act of the General Assembly, approved, May 22, 1895. The Thirty-ninth General Assembly made an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of fire-proof buildings, while Rock Island County donated a tract of 400 acres of land valued at $40,000. The site selected by the Commissioners, is a commanding one overlooking the Mississippi River, eight miles above Rock Island, and five and a half miles from Moline, and the buildings are of the most modern style of construction. Watertown is reached by two lines of railroad—the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy—besides the Mississippi River. The erection of buildings was begun in 1896, and they were opened for the reception of patients in 1898. They have a capacity for 800 patients.

WESTERN MILITARY ACADEMY, an institution located at Upper Alton, Madison County, incorporated in 1892; has a faculty of eight members and reports eighty pupils for 1897-98, with property valued at $70,000. The institution gives instruction in literary and scientific branches, besides preparatory and business courses.

WESTERN NORMAL COLLEGE, located at Bushnell, McDonough County; incorporated in 1888. It is co-educational, has a corps of twelve instructors and reported 500 pupils for 1897-98, 300 males and 200 females.

WESTERN SPRINGS, a village of Cook County, and residence suburb of the city of Chicago, on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of the initial station. Population (1890), 451; (1900), 662.

WESTERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, located in Chicago and controlled by the Protestant Episcopal Church. It was founded in 1883 through the munificence of Dr. Tolman Wheeler, and was opened for students two years later. It has two buildings, of a superior order of architecture—one including the school and lecture rooms and the other a dormitory. A hospital and gymnasium are attached to the latter, and a school for boys is conducted on the first floor of the main building, which is known as Wheeler Hall. The institution is under the general supervision of Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Illinois.

WESTFIELD, village of Clark County, on Cin., Ham. & Dayton R. R., 10 m. s.-e. of Charleston; seat of Westfield College; has a bank, five churches and two newspapers. Pop. (1900), 820.

WEST SALEM, a town of Edwards County, on the Peoria-Evansville Div. Ill. Cent. R. R., 12 miles northeast of Albion; has a bank and a weekly paper. Pop. (1890), 476; (1900), 700.

WETHERELL, Emma Abbott, vocalist, was born in Chicago, Dec. 9, 1849; in her childhood attracted attention while singing with her father (a poor musician) in hotels and on the streets in Chicago, Peoria and elsewhere; at 18 years of age, went to New York to study, earning her way by giving concerts en route, and receiving aid and encouragement from Clara Louisa Kellogg; in New York was patronized by Henry Ward Beecher and others, and aided in securing the training of European masters. Compelled to surmount many obstacles from poverty and other causes, her after success in her profession was phenomenal. Died, during a professional tour, at Salt Lake City, Jan. 5, 1891. Miss Abbott married her manager, Eugene Wetherell, who died before her.

WHEATON, a city and the county-seat of Du Page County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 25 miles west of Chicago. Agriculture and stock-raising are the chief industries in the surrounding region. The city owns a new water-works plant (costing $60,000) and has a public library valued at $75,000, the gift of a resident, Mr. John Quincy Adams; has a court house, electric light plant, sewerage and drainage system, seven churches, three graded schools, four weekly newspapers and a State bank. Wheaton is the seat of Wheaton College (which see). Population (1880), 1,160; (1890), 1,622; (1900), 2,345.

WHEATON COLLEGE, an educational institution located at Wheaton, Du Page County, and under Congregational control. It was founded in 1853, as the Illinois Institute, and was chartered under its present name in 1860. Its early existence was one of struggle, but of late years it has been established on a better foundation, in 1898 having $54,000 invested in productive funds, and property aggregating $136,000. The faculty comprises fifteen professors, and, in 1898, there were 321 students in attendance. It is co-educational and instruction is given in business and preparatory studies, as well as the fine arts, music and classical literature.

WHEELER, David Hilton, D.D., LL.D., clergyman, was born at Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1829; graduated at Rock River Seminary, Mount Morris, in 1851; edited "The Carroll County Republican" and held a professorship in Cornell College, Iowa, (1857-61); was United States Consul at Geneva, Switzerland, (1861-66); Professor of English Literature in Northwestern University (1867-75); edited "The Methodist" in New York seven years, and was President of Allegheny College (1883-87); received the degree of D.D. from Cornell College in 1867, and that of LL.D. from the Northwestern University in 1881. He is the author of "Brigandage in South Italy"

(two volumes, 1864) and "By-Ways of Literature" (1883), besides some translations.

WHEELER, Hamilton K., ex-Congressman, was born at Ballston, N. Y., August 5, 1848, but emigrated with his parents to Illinois in 1852; remained on a farm until 19 years of age, his educational advantages being limited to three months' attendance upon a district school each year. In 1871, he was admitted to the bar at Kankakee, where he has since continued to practice. In 1884 he was elected to represent the Sixteenth District in the State Senate, where he served on many important committees, being Chairman of that on the Judicial Department. In 1892 he was elected Representative in Congress from the Ninth Illinois District, on the Republican ticket.

WHEELING, a town on the northern border of Cook County, on the Wisconsin Central Railway. Population (1890), 811; (1900), 331.

WHISTLER, (Maj.) John, soldier and builder of the first Fort Dearborn, was born in Ulster, Ireland, about 1756; served under Burgoyne in the Revolution, and was with the force surrendered by that officer at Saratoga, in 1777. After the peace he returned to the United States, settled at Hagerstown, Md., and entered the United States Army, serving at first in the ranks and being severely wounded in the disastrous Indian campaigns of 1791. Later, he was promoted to a captaincy and, in the summer of 1803, sent with his company, to the head of Lake Michigan, where he constructed the first Fort Dearborn within the limits of the present city of Chicago, remaining in command until 1811, when he was succeeded by Captain Heald. He received the brevet rank of Major, in 1815 was appointed military store-keeper at Newport, Ky., and afterwards at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, where he died, Sept. 3, 1829. Lieut. William Whistler, his son, who was with his father, for a time, in old Fort Dearborn—but transferred, in 1809, to Fort Wayne—was of the force included in Hull's surrender at Detroit in 1812. After his exchange he was promoted to a captaincy, to the rank of Major in 1826 and to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy in 1845, dying at Newport, Ky., in 1863. James Abbott McNeil Whistler, the celebrated, but eccentric artist of that name, is a grandson of the first Major Whistler.

WHITE, George E., ex-Congressman, was born in Massachusetts in 1848; after graduating, at the age of 16, he enlisted as a private in the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Veteran Volunteers, serving under General Grant in the campaign against Richmond from the battle of the Wilderness until the surrender of Lee. Having taken a course in a commercial college at Worcester, Mass., in 1867 he came to Chicago, securing employment in a lumber yard, but a year later began business on his own account, which he has successfully conducted. In 1878 he was elected to the State Senate, as a Republican, from one of the Chicago Districts, and re-elected four years later, serving in that body eight years. He declined a nomination for Congress in 1884, but accepted in 1894, and was elected for the Fifth District, as he was again in 1896, but was defeated, in 1898, by Edward T. Noonan, Democrat.

WHITE, Horace, journalist, was born at Colebrook, N. H., August 10, 1834; in 1853 graduated at Beloit College, Wis., whither his father had removed in 1837; engaged in journalism as city editor of "The Chicago Evening Journal," later becoming agent of the Associated Press, and, in 1857, an editorial writer on "The Chicago Tribune," during a part of the war acting as its Washington correspondent. He also served, in 1856, as Assistant Secretary of the Kansas National Committee, and, later, as Secretary of the Republican State Central Committee. In 1864 he purchased an interest in "The Tribune," a year or so later becoming editor-in-chief, but retired in October, 1874. After a protracted European tour, he united with Carl Schurz and E. L. Godkin of "The Nation," in the purchase and reorganization of "The New York Evening Post," of which he is now editor-in-chief.

WHITE, Julius, soldier, was born in Cazenovia, N. Y., Sept. 29, 1816; removed to Illinois in 1836, residing there and in Wisconsin, where he was a member of the Legislature of 1849; in 1861 was made Collector of Customs at Chicago, but resigned to assume the colonelcy of the Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, which he commanded on the Fremont expedition to Southwest Missouri. He afterwards served with General Curtiss in Arkansas, participated in the battle of Pea Ridge and was promoted to the rank of Brigadier-General. He was subsequently assigned to the Department of the Shenandoah, but finding his position at Martinsburg, W. Va., untenable, retired to Harper's Ferry, voluntarily serving under Colonel Miles, his inferior in command. When this post was surrendered (Sept. 15, 1862), he was made a prisoner, but released under parole; was tried by a court of inquiry at his own request, and acquitted, the court finding that he had acted with courage and capability.

He resigned in 1864, and, in March, 1865, was brevetted Major-General of Volunteers. Died, at Evanston, May 12, 1890.

WHITE COUNTY, situated in the southeastern quarter of the State, and bounded on the east by the Wabash River; was organized in 1816, being the tenth county organized during the Territorial period: area, 500 square miles. The county is crossed by three railroads and drained by the Wabash and Little Wabash Rivers. The surface consists of prairie and woodland, and the soil is, for the most part, highly productive. The principal agricultural products are corn, wheat, oats, potatoes, tobacco, fruit, butter, sorghum and wool. The principal industrial establishments are carriage factories, saw mills and flour mills. Carmi is the county-seat. Other towns are Enfield, Grayville and Norris City. Population (1880), 23,087; (1890), 25,005; (1900), 25,386.

WHITEHALL, a city in Greene County, at the intersection of the Chicago & Alton and the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroads, 65 miles north of St. Louis and 24 miles south-southwest of Jacksonville; in rich farming region; has stoneware and sewer-pipe factories, foundry and machine shop, flour mill, elevators, wagon shops, creamery, water system, sanitarium, heating, electric light and power system, nurseries and fruit-supply houses, and two poultry packing houses; also has five churches, a graded school, two banks and three newspapers—one daily. Population (1890), 1,961; (1900), 2,030.

WHITEHOUSE, Henry John, Protestant Episcopal Bishop, was born in New York City, August 19, 1803; graduated from Columbia College in 1831, and from the (New York) General Theological Seminary in 1834. After ordination he was rector of various parishes in Pennsylvania and New York until 1851, when he was chosen Assistant Bishop of Illinois, succeeding Bishop Chase in 1853. In 1867, by invitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury, he delivered the opening sermon before the Pan-Anglican Conference held in England. During this visit he received the degree of D.D. from Oxford University, and that of LL.D. from Cambridge. His rigid views as a churchman and a disciplinarian, were illustrated in his prosecution of Rev. Charles Edward Cheney, which resulted in the formation of the Reformed Episcopal Church. He was a brilliant orator and a trenchant and unyielding controversialist. Died, in Chicago, August 10, 1874.

WHITESIDE COUNTY, in the northwest portion of the State bordering on the Mississippi River; created by act of the Legislature passed in 1836, and named for Capt. Samuel Whiteside, a noted Indian fighter; area, 700 square miles. The surface is level, diversified by prairies and woodland, and the soil is extremely fertile. The county-seat was first fixed at Lyndon, then at Sterling, and finally at Morrison, its present location. The Rock River crosses the county and furnishes abundant water power for numerous factories, turning out agricultural implements, carriages and wagons, furniture, woolen goods, flour and wrapping paper. There are also distilling and brewing interests, besides saw and planing mills. Corn is the staple agricultural product, although all the leading cereals are extensively grown. The principal towns are Morrison, Sterling, Fulton and Rock Falls. Population (1880), 30,885; (1890), 30,854; (1900), 34,710.

WHITESIDE, William, pioneer and soldier of the Revolution, emigrated from the frontier of North Carolina to Kentucky, and thence, in 1793, to the present limits of Monroe County, Ill., erecting a fort between Cahokia and Kaskaskia, which became widely known as "Whiteside Station." He served as a Justice of the Peace, and was active in organizing the militia during the War of 1812-14, dying at the old Station in 1815.—John (Whiteside), a brother of the preceding, and also a Revolutionary soldier, came to Illinois at the same time, as also did William B. and Samuel, sons of the two brothers, respectively. All of them became famous as Indian fighters. The two latter served as Captains of companies of "Rangers" in the War of 1812, Samuel taking part in the battle of Rock Island in 1814, and contributing greatly to the success of the day. During the Black Hawk War (1832) he attained the rank of Brigadier-General. Whiteside County was named in his honor. He made one of the earliest improvements in Ridge Prairie, a rich section of Madison County, and represented that county in the First General Assembly. William B. served as Sheriff of Madison County for a number of years.—John D. (Whiteside), another member of this historic family, became very prominent, serving in the lower House of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Fourteenth General Assemblies, and in the Senate of the Tenth, from Monroe County; was a Presidential Elector in 1836, State Treasurer (1837-41) and a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1847. General Whiteside, as he was known, was the second of James Shields in the famous Shields and Lincoln duel (so-called) in 1842, and, as such, carried the challenge of the former to Mr. Lincoln. (See Duels.)

WHITING, Lorenzo D., legislator, was born in Wayne County, N. Y., Nov. 17, 1819; came to Illinois in 1838, but did not settle there permanently until 1849, when he located in Bureau County. He was a Representative from that county in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1869), and a member of the Senate continuously from 1871 to 1887, serving in the latter through eight General Assemblies. Died at his home near Tiskilwa, Bureau County, Ill., Oct. 10, 1889.

WHITING, Richard H., Congressman, was born at West Hartford, Conn., June 17, 1826, and received a common school education. In 1862 he was commissioned Paymaster in the Volunteer Army of the Union, and resigned in 1866. Having removed to Illinois, he was appointed Assistant Assessor of Internal Revenue for the Fifth Illinois District, in February, 1870, and so continued until the abolition of the office in 1873. On retiring from the Assessorship he was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue, and served until March 4, 1875, when he resigned to take his seat as Republican Representative in Congress from the Peoria District, to which he had been elected in November, 1874. After the expiration of his term he held no public office, but was a member of the Republican National Convention of 1884. Died, at the Continental Hotel, in New York City, May 24, 1888.

WHITNEY, James W., pioneer lawyer and early teacher, known by the nickname of "Lord Coke"; came to Illinois in Territorial days (believed to have been about 1800); resided for some time at or near Edwardsville, then became a teacher at Atlas, Pike County, and, still later, the first Circuit and County Clerk of that county. Though nominally a lawyer, he had little if any practice. He acquired the title, by which he was popularly known for a quarter of a century, by his custom of visiting the State Capital, during the sessions of the General Assembly, when he would organize the lobbyists and visitors about the capital—of which there were an unusual number in those days—into what was called the "Third House." Having been regularly chosen to preside under the name of "Speaker of the Lobby," he would deliver a message full of practical hits and jokes, aimed at members of the two houses and others, which would be received with cheers and laughter. The meetings of the "Third House," being held in the evening, were attended by many members and visitors in lieu of other forms of entertainment. Mr. Whitney's home, in his latter years, was at Pittsfield. He resided for a time at Quincy. Died, Dec. 13, 1860, aged over 80 years.

WHITTEMORE, Floyd K., State Treasurer, is a native of New York, came at an early age, with his parents, to Sycamore, Ill., where he was educated in the high school there. He purposed becoming a lawyer, but, on the election of the late James H. Beveridge State Treasurer, in 1864, accepted the position of clerk in the office. Later, he was employed as a clerk in the banking house of Jacob Bunn in Springfield, and, on the organization of the State National Bank, was chosen cashier of that institution, retaining the position some twenty years. After the appointment of Hon. John R. Tanner to the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Chicago, in 1892, Mr. Whittemore became cashier in that office, and, in 1865, Assistant State Treasurer under the administration of State Treasurer Henry Wulff. In 1898 he was elected State Treasurer, receiving a plurality of 43,450 over his Democratic opponent.

WICKERSHAM, (Col.) Dudley, soldier and merchant, was born in Woodford County, Ky., Nov. 22, 1819; came to Springfield, Ill., in 1843, and served as a member of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers (Col. E. D. Baker's) through the Mexican War. On the return of peace he engaged in the dry-goods trade in Springfield, until 1861, when he enlisted in the Tenth Regiment Illinois Cavalry, serving, first as Lieutenant-Colonel and then as Colonel, until May, 1864, when, his regiment having been consolidated with the Fifteenth Cavalry, he resigned. After the war, he held the office of Assessor of Internal Revenue for several years, after which he engaged in the grocery trade. Died, in Springfield, August 8, 1898.

WIDEN, Raphael, pioneer and early legislator, was a native of Sweden, who, having been taken to France at eight years of age, was educated for a Catholic priest. Coming to the United States in 1815, he was at Cahokia, Ill., in 1818, where, during the same year, he married into a French family of that place. He served in the House of Representatives from Randolph County, in the Second and Third General Assemblies (1820-24), and as Senator in the Fourth and Fifth (1824-28). During his last term in the House, he was one of those who voted against the pro-slavery Convention resolution. He died of cholera, at Kaskaskia, in 1833.

and, in 1844, to Pike County. Having graduated from Lombard University, Galesburg, in 1857, he began reading law with Judge O. C. Skinner of Quincy. He was admitted to the bar in 1858, but, before commencing practice, spent a year at Harvard Law School, graduating there in 1859. Immediately thereafter he opened an office at Pittsfield, Ill., and has resided there ever since. In politics he has always been a strong Democrat. He served two terms in the Legislature (1863-67) and, in 1874, was chosen Representative from his District in Congress, being re-elected in 1888 and, again, in 1890. In 1893 he was appointed by President Cleveland Third Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which position he continued to fill until March, 1897, when he resumed the practice of law at Pittsfield. Died Jan. 15, 1901.

WILEY, (Col.) Benjamin Ladd, soldier, was born in Smithfield, Jefferson County, Ohio, March 25, 1821, came to Illinois in 1845 and began life at Vienna, Johnson County, as a teacher. In 1846 he enlisted for the Mexican War, as a member of the Fifth (Colonel Newby's) Regiment Illinois Volunteers, serving chiefly in New Mexico until mustered out in 1848. A year later he removed to Jonesboro, where he spent some time at the carpenter's trade, after which he became clerk in a store, meanwhile assisting to edit "The Jonesboro Gazette" until 1853; then became traveling salesman for a St. Louis firm, but later engaged in the hardware trade at Jonesboro, in which he continued for several years. In 1856 he was the Republican candidate for Congress for the Ninth District, receiving 4,000 votes, while Fremont, the Republican candidate for President, received only 825 in the same district. In 1857 he opened a real estate office in Jonesboro in conjunction with David L. Phillips and Col. J. W. Ashley, with which he was connected until 1860, when he removed to Makanda, Jackson County. In September, 1861, he was mustered in as Lieutenant-Colonel of the Fifth Illinois Cavalry, later serving in Missouri and Arkansas under Generals Steele and Curtiss, being, a part of the time, in command of the First Brigade of Cavalry, and, in the advance on Vicksburg, having command of the right wing of General Grant's cavalry. Being disabled by rheumatism at the end of the siege, he tendered his resignation, and was immediately appointed Enrolling Officer at Cairo, serving in this capacity until May, 1865, when he was mustered out. In 1869 he was appointed by Governor Palmer one of the Commissioners to locate the Southern Illinois Hospital for the Insane, and served as Secretary of the Board until the institution was opened at Anna, in May, 1871. In 1869 he was defeated as a candidate for County Judge of Jackson County, and, in 1872, for the State Senate, by a small majority in a strongly Democratic District; in 1876 was the Republican candidate for Congress, in the Eighteenth District, against William Hartzell, but was defeated by only twenty votes, while carrying six out of the ten counties comprising the District. In the latter years of his life, Colonel Wiley was engaged quite extensively in fruit-growing at Makanda, Jackson County, where he died, March 22, 1890.

WILKIE, Franc Bangs, journalist, was born in Saratoga County, N. Y., July 2, 1830; took a partial course at Union College, after which he edited papers at Schenectady, N. Y., Elgin, Ill., and Davenport and Dubuque, Iowa; also serving, during a part of the Civil War, as the western war correspondent of "The New York Times." In 1863 he became an editorial writer on "The Chicago Times," remaining with that paper, with the exception of a brief interval, until 1888—a part of the time as its European correspondent. He was the author of a series of sketches over the nom de plume of "Poliuto," and of a volume of reminiscences under the title, "Thirty-five Years of Journalism," published shortly before his death, which took place, April 12, 1892.

WILKIN, Jacob W., Justice of the Supreme Court, was born in Licking County, Ohio, June 7, 1837; removed with his parents to Illinois, at 12 years of age, and was educated at McKendree College; served three years in the War for the Union; studied law with Judge Scholfield and was admitted to the bar in 1866. In 1872, he was chosen Presidential Elector on the Republican ticket, and, in 1879, elected Judge of the Circuit Court and re-elected in 1885—the latter year being assigned to the Appellate bench for the Fourth District, where he remained until his election to the Supreme bench in 1888, being re-elected to the latter office in 1897. His home is at Danville.

WILKINSON, Ira O., lawyer and Judge, was born in Virginia in 1822, and accompanied his father to Jacksonville (1835), where he was educated. During a short service as Deputy Clerk of Morgan County, he conceived a fondness for the profession of the law, and, after a course of study under Judge William Thomas, was admitted to practice in 1847. Richard Yates (afterwards Governor and Senator) was his first partner. In 1845 he removed to Rock Island, and, six years later, was elected a Circuit Judge, being again chosen to the same position in 1861. At the expiration of his second term he removed to Chicago. Died, at Jacksonville, August 24, 1894.

WILKINSON, John P., early merchant, was born, Dec. 14, 1790, in New Kent County, Va., emigrated first to Kentucky, and, in 1828, settled in Jacksonville, Ill., where he engaged in mercantile business. Mr. Wilkinson was a liberal friend of Illinois College and Jacksonville Female Academy, of each of which he was a Trustee from their origin until his death, which occurred, during a business visit to St. Louis, in December, 1841.

WILL, Conrad, pioneer physician and early legislator, was born in Philadelphia, June 4, 1778; about 1804 removed to Somerset County Pa., and, in 1813, to Kaskaskia, Ill. He was a physician by profession, but having leased the saline lands on the Big Muddy, in the vicinity of what afterwards became the town of Brownsville, he engaged in the manufacture of salt, removing thither in 1815, and becoming one of the founders of Brownsville, afterwards the first county-seat of Jackson County. On the organization of Jackson County, in 1816, he became a member of the first Board of County Commissioners, and, in 1818, served as Delegate from that county in the Convention which framed the first State Constitution. Thereafter he served continuously as a member of the Legislature from 1818 to '34—first as Senator in the First General Assembly, then as Representative in the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth, and again as Senator in the Sixth, Seventh, Eighth and Ninth—his career being conspicuous for long service. He died in office, June 11, 1834. Dr. Will was short of stature, fleshy, of jovial disposition and fond of playing practical jokes upon his associates, but very popular, as shown by his successive elections to the Legislature. He has been called "The Father of Jackson County." Will County, organized by act of the Legislature two years after his death, was named in his honor.

WILL COUNTY, a northeastern county, embracing 850 square miles, named in honor of Dr. Conrad Will, an early politician and legislator. Early explorations of the territory were made in 1829, when white settlers were few. The bluff west of Joliet is said to have been first occupied by David and Benjamin Maggard. Joseph Smith, the Mormon "apostle," expounded his peculiar doctrines at "the Point" in 1831. Several of the early settlers fled from the country during (or after) a raid by the Sac Indians.

There is a legend, seemingly well supported, to the effect that the first lumber, sawed to build the first frame house in Chicago (that of P. F. W. Peck), was sawed at Plainfield. Will County, originally a part of Cook, was separately erected in 1836, Joliet being made the county-seat. Agriculture, quarrying and manufacturing are the chief industries. Joliet, Lockport and Wilmington are the principal towns. Population (1880), 53,422; (1890), 62,007; (1900), 74,764.

WILLARD, Frances Elizabeth, teacher and reformer, was born at Churchville, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1839, graduated from the Northwestern Female College at Evanston, Ill., in 1859, and, in 1862, accepted the Professorship of Natural Sciences in that institution. During 1866-67 she was the Principal of the Genessee Wesleyan Seminary. The next two years she devoted to travel and study abroad, meanwhile contributing to various periodicals. From 1871 to 1874 she was Professor of Æsthetics in the Northwestern University and dean of the Woman's College. She was always an enthusiastic champion of temperance, and, in 1874, abandoned her profession to identify herself with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. For five years she was Corresponding Secretary of the national body, and, from 1879, its President. While Secretary she organized the Home Protective Association, and prepared a petition to the Illinois Legislature, to which nearly 200,000 names were attached, asking for the granting to women of the right to vote on the license question. In 1878 she succeeded her brother, Oliver A. Willard (who had died), as editor of "The Chicago Evening Post," but, a few months later, withdrew, and, in 1882, was elected as a member of the executive committee of the National Prohibition party. In 1886 she became leader of the White Cross Movement for the protection of women, and succeeded in securing favorable legislation, in this direction, in twelve States. In 1883 she founded the World's Christian Temperance Union, and, in 1888, was chosen its President, as also President of the International Council of Women. The latter years of her life were spent chiefly abroad, much of the time as the guest and co-worker of Lady Henry Somerset, of England, during which she devoted much attention to investigating the condition of women in the Orient. Miss Willard was a prolific and highly valued contributor to the magazines, and (besides numerous pamphlets) published several volumes, including "Nineteen Beautiful Years" (a tribute to her sister); "Woman in Temperance"; "How to Win," and "Woman in the Pulpit." Died, in New York, Feb. 18, 1898.

WILLARD, Samuel, A.M., M.D., LL.D., physician and educator, was born in Lunenburg, Vt., Dec. 30, 1821—the lineal descendant of Maj. Simon Willard, one of the founders of Concord, Mass., and prominent in "King Philip's War," and of his son, Rev. Dr. Samuel Willard, of the Old South Church, Boston, and seventh President of Harvard College. The subject of this sketch was taken in his infancy to Boston, and, in 1831, to Carrollton, Ill., where his father pursued the avocation of a druggist. After a preparatory course at Shurtleff College, Upper Alton, in 1836 he entered the freshman class in Illinois College at Jacksonville, but withdrew the following year, re-entering college in 1840 and graduating in the class of 1843, as a classmate of Dr. Newton Bateman, afterwards State Superintendent of Public Instruction and President of Knox College, and Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, now of Elmira, N. Y. The next year he spent as Tutor in Illinois College, when he began the study of medicine at Quincy, graduating from the Medical Department of Illinois College in 1848. During a part of the latter year he edited a Free-Soil campaign paper ("The Tribune") at Quincy, and, later, "The Western Temperance Magazine" at the same place. In 1849 he began the practice of his profession at St. Louis, but the next year removed to Collinsville, Ill., remaining until 1857, when he took charge of the Department of Languages in the newly organized State Normal University at Normal. The second year of the Civil War (1862) he enlisted as a private in the Ninety-seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but was soon after commissioned as Surgeon with the rank of Major, participating in the campaigns in Tennessee and in the first attack upon Vicksburg. Being disabled by an attack of paralysis, in February, 1863, he was compelled to resign, when he had sufficiently recovered accepting a position in the office of Provost Marshal General Oakes, at Springfield, where he remained until the close of the war. He then became Grand Secretary of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows for the State of Illinois—a position which he had held from 1856 to 1862—remaining under his second appointment from 1865 to '69. The next year he served as Superintendent of Schools at Springfield, meanwhile assisting in founding the Springfield public library, and serving as its first librarian. In 1870 he accepted the professorship of History in the West Side High School of Chicago, which, with the exception of two years (1884-86), he continued to occupy for more than twenty-five years, retiring in 1898. In the meantime, Dr. Willard has been a laborious literary worker, having been, for a considerable period, editor, or assistant-editor, of "The Illinois Teacher," a contributor to "The Century Magazine" and "The Dial" of Chicago, besides having published a "Digest of the Laws of Odd Fellowship" in sixteen volumes, begun while he was Grand Secretary of the Order in 1864, and continued in 1872 and '82; a "Synopsis of History and Historical Chart," covering the period from B. C. 800 to A. D. 1876—of which he has had a second edition in course of preparation. Of late years he has been engaged upon a "Historical Dictionary of Names and Places," which will include some 12,000 topics, and which promises to be the most important work of his life. Previous to the war he was an avowed Abolitionist and operator on the "Underground Railroad," who made no concealment of his opinions, and, on one or two occasions, was called to answer for them in prosecutions under the "Fugitive Slave Act." (See "Underground Railroad.") His friend and classmate, the late Dr. Bateman, says of him: "Dr. Willard is a sound thinker; a clear and forcible writer; of broad and accurate scholarship; conscientious, genial and kindly, and a most estimable gentleman."

WILLIAMS, Archibald, lawyer and jurist, was born in Montgomery County, Ky., June 10, 1801; with moderate advantages but natural fondness for study, he chose the profession of law, and was admitted to the bar in Tennessee in 1828, coming to Quincy, Ill., the following year. He was elected to the General Assembly three times—serving in the Senate in 1832-36, and in the House, 1836-40; was United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois, by appointment of President Taylor, 1849-53; was twice the candidate of his party (the Whig) for United States Senator, and appointed by President Lincoln, in 1861, United States District Judge for the State of Kansas. His abilities and high character were widely recognized. Died, in Quincy, Sept. 21, 1863—His son, John H., an attorney at Quincy, served as Judge of the Circuit Court 1879-85.—Another son, Abraham Lincoln, was twice elected Attorney-General of Kansas.

WILLIAMS, Erastus Smith, lawyer and jurist, was born at Salem, N. Y., May 22, 1821. In 1842 he removed to Chicago, where, after reading law, he was admitted to the bar in 1844. In 1854 he was appointed Master in Chancery, which office he filled until 1863, when he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court of Cook County. After re-election in 1870 he became Chief Justice, and, at the same time, heard most of the cases on the equity side of the court. In 1879 he was a candidate for re-election as a Republican, but was defeated with the party ticket. After his retirement from the bench he resumed private practice. Died, Feb. 24, 1884.

WILLIAMS, James R., Congressman, was born in White County, Ill., Dec. 27, 1850, at the age of 25 graduated from the Indiana State University, at Bloomington, and, in 1876, from the Union College of Law, Chicago, since then being an active and successful practitioner at Carmi. In 1880 he was appointed Master in Chancery and served two years. From 1882 to 1886 he was County Judge. In 1892 he was a nominee on the Democratic ticket for Presidential Elector. He was elected to represent the Nineteenth Illinois District in the Fifty-first Congress at a special election held to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of R. W. Townshend, was re-elected in 1890 and 1892, but defeated by Orlando Burrell (Republican) for re-election in the newly organized Twentieth District in 1894. In 1898 he was again a candidate and elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress.

WILLIAMS, John, pioneer merchant, was born in Bath County, Ky., Sept. 11, 1808; between 14 and 16 years of age was clerk in a store in his native State; then, joining his parents, who had settled on a tract of land in a part of Sangamon (now Menard) County, Ill., he found employment as clerk in the store of Major Elijah Iles at Springfield, whom he succeeded in business at the age of 23, continuing it without interruption until 1880. In 1856 Mr. Williams was the Republican candidate for Congress in the Springfield District, and, in 1861, was appointed Commissary-General for the State, rendering valuable service in furnishing supplies for State troops, in camps of instruction and while proceeding to the field, in the first years of the war; was also chief officer of the Illinois Sanitary Commission for two years, and, as one of the intimate personal friends of Mr. Lincoln, was chosen to accompany the remains of the martyred President, from Washington to Springfield, for burial. Liberal, enterprising and public-spirited, his name was associated with nearly every public enterprise of importance in Springfield during his business career—being one of the founders, and, for eleven years President, of the First National Bank; a chief promoter in the construction of what is now the Springfield Division of the Illinois Central Railroad, and the Springfield and Peoria line; a Director of the Springfield Iron Company; one of the Commissioners who constructed the Springfield water-works, and an officer of the Lincoln Monument Association, from 1865 to his death, May 29, 1890.

WILLIAMS, Norman, lawyer, was born at Woodstock, Vt., Feb. 1, 1833, being related, on both the paternal and maternal sides, to some of the most prominent families of New England. He fitted for college at Union Academy, Meriden, and graduated from the University of Vermont in the class of 1855. After taking a course in the Albany Law School and with a law firm in his native town, he was admitted to practice in both New York and Vermont, removed to Chicago in 1858, and, in 1860, became a member of the firm of King, Kales & Williams, still later forming a partnership with Gen. John L. Thompson, which ended with the death of the latter in 1888. In a professional capacity he assisted in the organization of the Pullman Palace Car Company, and was a member of its Board of Directors; also assisted in organizing the Western Electric Company, and was prominently identified with the Chicago Telephone Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company. In 1881 he served as the United States Commissioner to the Electrical Exposition at Paris. In conjunction with his brother (Edward H. Williams) he assisted in founding the public library at Woodstock, Vt., which, in honor of his father, received the name of "The Norman Williams Public Library." With Col. Huntington W. Jackson and J. McGregor Adams, Mr. Williams was named, in the will of the late John Crerar, as an executor of the Crerar estate and one of the Trustees of the Crerar Public Library, and became its first President; was also a Director of the Chicago Public Library, and trustee of a number of large estates. Mr. Williams was a son-in-law of the late Judge John D. Caton, and his oldest daughter became the wife of Major-General Wesley Merritt, a few months before his death, which occurred at Hampton Beach, N. H., June 19, 1899—his remains being interred in his native town of Woodstock, Vt.

WILLIAMS, Robert Ebenezer, lawyer, born Dec. 3, 1825, at Clarksville, Pa., his grandfathers on both sides being soldiers of the Revolutionary War. In 1830 his parents removed to Washington in the same State, where in boyhood he worked as a mechanic in his father's shop, attending a common school in the winter until he reached the age of 17 years, when he entered Washington College, remaining for more than a year. He then began teaching, and, in 1845 went to Kentucky, where he pursued the business of a teacher for four years. Then he entered Bethany College in West Virginia, at the same time prosecuting his law studies, but left at the close of his junior year, when, having been licensed to practice, he removed to Clinton, Texas. Here he accepted, from a retired lawyer, the loan of a law library, which he afterwards purchased; served for two years as State's Attorney, and, in 1856, came to Bloomington, Ill., where he spent the remainder of his life in the practice of his profession. Much of his time was devoted to practice as a railroad attorney, especially in connection with the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central Railroads, in which he acquired prominence and wealth. He was a life-long Democrat and, in 1868, was the unsuccessful candidate of his party for Attorney-General of the State. The last three years of his life he had been in bad health, dying at Bloomington, Feb. 15, 1899.

WILLIAMS, Samuel, Bank President, was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 11, 1820; came to Winnebago County, Ill., in 1835, and, in 1842, removed to Iroquois County, where he held various local offices, including that of County Judge, to which he was elected in 1861. During his later years he had been President of the Watseka Citizens' Bank. Died, June 16, 1896.

WILLIAMSON, Rollin Samuel, legislator and jurist, was born at Cornwall, Vt., May 23, 1839. At the age of 14 he went to Boston, where he began life as a telegraph messenger boy. In two years he had become a skillful operator, and, as such, was employed in various offices in New England and New York. In 1857 he came to Chicago seeking employment and, through the fortunate correction of an error on the part of the receiver of a message, secured the position of operator and station agent at Palatine, Cook County. Here he read law during his leisure time without a preceptor, and, in 1870, was admitted to the bar. The same year he was elected to the lower House of the General Assembly and, in 1873, to the Senate. In 1880 he was elected to the bench of the Superior Court of Cook County, and, in 1887, was chosen a Judge of the Cook County Circuit Court. Died, August 10, 1889.

WILLIAMSON COUNTY, in the southern part of the State, originally set off from Franklin and organized in 1839. The county is well watered, the principal streams being the Big Muddy and the South Fork of the Saline. The surface is undulating and the soil fertile. The region was originally well covered with forests. All the cereals (as well as potatoes) are cultivated, and rich meadows encourage stock-raising. Coal and sandstone underlie the entire county. Area, 440 square miles; population (1880), 19,324; (1890) 22,326; (1900), 27,796.

WILLIAMSVILLE, village of Sangamon County, on Chicago & Alton Railroad, 12 miles north of Springfield; has a bank, elevator, 3 churches, a newspaper and coal-mines. Pop. (1900), 573.

WILLIS, Jonathan Clay, soldier and former Railroad and Warehouse Commissioner, was born in Sumner County, Tenn., June 27, 1826; brought to Gallatin County, Ill., in 1834, and settled at Golconda in 1843; was elected Sheriff of Pope County in 1856, removed to Metropolis in 1859, and engaged in the wharf-boat and commission business. He entered the service as Quartermaster of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers in 1861, but was compelled to resign on account of injuries, in 1863; was elected Representative in the Twenty-sixth General Assembly (1868), appointed Collector of Internal Revenue in 1869, and Railway and Warehouse Commissioner in 1892, as the successor of John R. Tanner, serving until 1893.

WILMETTE, a village in Cook County, 14 miles north of Chicago, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, a handsome suburb of Chicago on the shore of Lake Michigan; principal streets paved and shaded with fine forest trees; has public library and good schools. Pop. (1900), 2,300.

WILMINGTON, a city of Will County, on the Kankakee River and the Chicago & Alton Railroad, 53 miles from Chicago and 15 south-southwest of Joliet; has considerable manufactures, two National banks, a graded school, churches and one newspaper. Wilmington is the location of the Illinois Soldiers' Widows' Home. Population (1890), 1,576; (1900), 1,420.

WILSON, Charles Lush, journalist, was born in Fairfield County, Conn., Oct. 10, 1818, educated in the common schools and at an academy in his native State, and, in 1835, removed to Chicago, entering the employment of his older brothers, who were connected with the construction of the Illinois & Michigan Canal at Joliet. His brother, Richard L., having assumed charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" (the successor of "The Chicago American"), in 1844, Charles L. took a position in the office, ultimately securing a partnership, which continued until the death of his brother in 1856, when he succeeded to the ownership of the paper. Mr. Wilson was an ardent friend and supporter of Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate in 1858, but, in 1860, favored the nomination of Mr. Seward for the Presidency, though earnestly supporting Mr. Lincoln after his nomination. In 1861 he was appointed Secretary of the American Legation at London, serving with the late Minister Charles Francis Adams, until 1864, when he resigned and resumed his connection with "The Journal." In 1875 his health began to fail, and three years later, having gone to San Antonio, Tex., in the hope of receiving benefit from a change of climate, he died in that city, March 9, 1878.—Richard Lush (Wilson), an older brother of the preceding, the first editor and publisher of "The Chicago Evening Journal," the oldest paper of consecutive publication in Chicago, was a native of New York. Coming to Chicago with his brother John L., in 1834, they soon after established themselves in business on the Illinois & Michigan Canal, then in course of construction. In 1844 he took charge of "The Chicago Daily Journal" for a publishing committee which had purchased the material of "The Chicago American," but soon after became principal proprietor. In April, 1847, while firing a salute in honor of the victory of Buena Vista, he lost an arm and was otherwise injured by the explosion of the cannon. Early in 1849, he was appointed, by President Taylor, Postmaster of the city of Chicago, but, having failed of confirmation, was compelled to retire in favor of a successor appointed by Millard Fillmore, eleven months later. Mr. Wilson published a little volume in 1842 entitled "A Trip to Santa Fe," and, a few years later, a story of travel under the title, "Short Ravelings from a Long Yarn." Died, December, 1856.—John Lush (Wilson), another brother, also a native of New York, came to Illinois in 1834, was afterwards associated with his brothers in business, being for a time business manager of "The Chicago Journal;" also served one term as Sheriff of Cook County. Died, in Chicago, April 13, 1888.

WILSON, Isaac Grant, jurist, was born at Middlebury, N. Y., April 26, 1817, graduated from Brown University in 1838, and the same year came to Chicago, whither his father's family had preceded him in 1835. After reading law for two years, he entered the senior class at Cambridge (Mass.) Law School, graduating in 1841. In August of that year he opened an office at Elgin, and, for ten years "rode the circuit." In 1851 he was elected to the bench of the Thirteenth Judicial Circuit to fill a vacancy, and re-elected for a full term in 1855, and again in '61. In November of the latter year he was commissioned the first Colonel of the Fifty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, but resigned, a few weeks later, and resumed his place upon the bench. From 1867 to 1879 he devoted himself to private practice, which was largely in the Federal Courts. In 1879 he resumed his seat upon the bench (this time for the Twelfth Circuit), and was at once designated as one of the Judges of the Appellate Court at Chicago, of which tribunal he became Chief Justice in 1881. In 1885 he was re-elected Circuit Judge, but died, about the close of his term, at Geneva, June 8, 1891.

WILSON, James Grant, soldier and author, was born at Edinburgh, Scotland, April 28, 1832, and, when only a year old, was brought by his father, William Wilson, to America. The family settled at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where James Grant was educated at College Hill and under private teachers. After finishing his studies he became his father's partner in business, but, in 1855, went abroad, and, shortly after his return, removed to Chicago, where he founded the first literary paper established in the Northwest. At the outbreak of the Civil War, he disposed of his journal to enlist in the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, of which he was commissioned Major and afterwards promoted to the colonelcy. In August, 1863, while at New Orleans, by advice of General Grant, he accepted a commission as Colonel of the Fourth Regiment United States Colored Cavalry, and was assigned, as Aid-de-camp, to the staff of the Commander of the Department of the Gulf, filling this post until April, 1865. When General Banks was relieved, Colonel Wilson was brevetted Brigadier-General and placed in command at Port Hudson, resigning in July, 1865, since which time his home has been in New York. He is best known as an author, having published numerous addresses, and being a frequent contributor to American and European magazines. Among larger works which he has written or edited are "Biographical Sketches of Illinois Officers"; "Love in Letters"; "Life of General U. S. Grant"; "Life and Letters of Fitz Greene Halleck"; "Poets and Poetry of Scotland"; "Bryant and His Friends"; and "Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography."

WILSON, James Harrison, soldier and military engineer, was born near Shawneetown, Ill., Sept. 2, 1837. His grandfather, Alexander Wilson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and his father (Harrison Wilson) was an ensign during the War of 1812 and a Captain in the Black Hawk War. His brother (Blaford Wilson) served as Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers during the Civil War, and as Solicitor of the United States Treasury during the "whisky ring" prosecutions. James H. was educated in the common schools, at McKendree College, and the United States Military Academy at West Point, graduating from the latter in 1860, and being assigned to the Topographical Engineer Corps. In September, 1861, he was promoted to a First Lieutenancy, then served as Chief Topographical Engineer of the Port Royal expedition until March, 1862; was afterwards attached to the Department of the South, being present at the bombardment of Fort Pulaski; was Aid-de-camp to McClellan, and participated in the battles of South Mountain and Antietam; was made Lieutenant-Colonel of Volunteers in November, 1862; was Chief Topographical Engineer and Inspector-General of the Army of the Tennessee until October, 1863, being actively engaged in the operations around Vicksburg; was made Captain of Engineers in May, 1863, and Brigadier-General of Volunteers, Oct. 31, following. He also conducted operations preliminary to the battle of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge, and for the relief of Knoxville. Later, he was placed in command of the Third Division of the cavalry corps of the Army of the Potomac, serving from May to August, 1864, under General Sheridan. Subsequently he was transferred to the Department of the Mississippi, where he so distinguished himself that, on April 20, 1865, he was made Major-General of Volunteers. In twenty-eight days he captured five fortified cities, twenty-three stands of colors, 288 guns and 6,820 prisoners—among the latter being Jefferson Davis. He was mustered out of the volunteer service in January, 1866, and, on July 28, following, was commissioned Lieutenant-Colonel of the Thirty-fifth United States Infantry, being also brevetted Major-General in the regular army. On Dec. 31, 1870, he returned to civil life, and was afterwards largely engaged in railroad and engineering operations, especially in West Virginia. Promptly after the declaration of war with Spain (1898) General Wilson was appointed, by the President, Major-General of Volunteers, serving until its close. He is the author of "China: Travels and Investigations in the Middle Kingdom"; "Life of Andrew J. Alexander"; and the "Life of Gen. U. S. Grant," in conjunction with Charles A.

WILSON, John M., lawyer and jurist, was born in New Hampshire in 1802, graduated at Bowdoin College in 1824—the classmate of Franklin Pierce and Nathaniel Hawthorne; studied law in New Hampshire and came to Illinois in 1835, locating at Joliet; removed to Chicago in 1841, where he was the partner of Norman B. Judd, serving, at different periods, as attorney of the Chicago & Rock Island, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern and the Chicago & Northwestern Railways; was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Cook County, 1853-59, when he became Presiding Judge of the Superior Court of Chicago, serving until 1868. Died, Dec. 7, 1883.

WILSON, John P., lawyer, was born in Whiteside County, Ill., July 3, 1844; educated in the common schools and at Knox College, Galesburg, graduating from the latter in 1865; two years later was admitted to the bar in Chicago, and speedily attained prominence in his profession. During the World's Fair period he was retained as counsel by the Committee on Grounds and Buildings, and was prominently connected, as counsel for the city, with the Lake Front litigation.

WILSON, Robert L., early legislator, was born in Washington County, Pa., Sept. 11, 1805, taken to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1810, graduated at Franklin College in 1831, studied law and, in 1833, removed to Athens (now in Menard County), Ill.; was elected Representative in 1836, and was one of the members from Sangamon County, known as the "Long Nine," who assisted in securing the removal of the State Capital to Springfield. Mr. Wilson removed to Sterling, Whiteside County, in 1840, was elected five times Circuit Clerk and served eight years as Probate Judge. Immediately after the fall of Fort Sumter, he enlisted as private in a battalion in Washington City under command of Cassius M. Clay, for guard duty until the arrival of the Seventh New York Regiment. He subsequently assisted in raising troops in Illinois, was appointed Paymaster by Lincoln, serving at Washington, St. Louis, and, after the fall of Vicksburg, at Springfield—being mustered out in November, 1865. Died, in Whiteside County, 1880.

WILSON, Robert S., lawyer and jurist, was born at Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., Nov. 6, 1812; learned the printer's art, then studied law and was admitted to the bar in Allegheny County, about 1833; in 1836 removed to Ann Arbor, Mich., where he served as Probate Judge and State Senator; in 1850 came to Chicago, was elected Judge of the Recorder's Court in 1853, and re-elected in 1858, serving ten years, and proving "a terror to evil-doers." Died, at Lawrence, Mich., Dec. 23, 1882.

WILSON, William, early jurist, was born in Loudoun County, Va., April 27, 1794; studied law with Hon. John Cook, a distinguished lawyer, and minister to France in the early part of the century; in 1817 removed to Kentucky, soon after came to Illinois, two years later locating in White County, near Carmi, which continued to be his home during the remainder of his life. In 1819 he was appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court as successor to William P. Foster, who is described by Governor Ford as "a great rascal and no lawyer," and who held office only about nine months. Judge Wilson was re-elected to the Supreme bench, as Chief-Justice, in 1825, being then only a little over 30 years old, and held office until the reorganization of the Supreme Court under the Constitution of 1848—a period of over twenty-nine years, and, with the exception of Judge Browne's, the longest term of service in the history of the court. He died at his home in White County, April 29, 1857. A Whig in early life, he allied himself with the Democratic party on the dissolution of the former. Hon. James C. Conkling, of Springfield, says of him, "as a writer, his style was clear and distinct; as a lawyer, his judgment was sound and discriminating."

WINCHESTER, a city and county-seat of Scott County, founded in 1839, situated on Big Sandy Creek and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 29 miles south of Beardstown and 84 miles north by west of St. Louis. While the surrounding region is agricultural and largely devoted to wheat growing, there is some coal mining. Winchester is an important shipping-point, having three grain elevators, two flouring mills, and a coal mine employing fifty miners. There are four Protestant and one Catholic church, a court house, a high school, a graded school building, two banks and two weekly newspapers. Population (1880), 1,626; (1890), 1,542; (1900), 1,711.

WINDSOR, a city of Shelby County at the crossing of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis and the Wabash Railways, 11 miles north-east of Shelbyville. Population (1880), 768; (1890), 889; (1900), 866.

WINES, Frederick Howard, clergyman and sociologist, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 9, 1838, graduated at Washington (Pa.) College in 1857, and, after serving as tutor there for a short time, entered Princeton Theological Seminary, but was compelled temporarily to discontinue his studies on account of a weakness of the eyes. The Presbytery of St. Louis licensed him to preach in 1860, and, in 1862, he was commissioned Hospital Chaplain in the Union army. During 1862-64 he was stationed at Springfield, Mo., participating in the battle of Springfield on Jan. 8, 1863, and being personally mentioned for bravery on the field in the official report. Re-entering the seminary at Princeton in 1864, he graduated in 1865, and at once accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Ill., which he filled for four years. In 1869 he was appointed Secretary of the newly created Board of Commissioners of Public Charities of Illinois, in which capacity he continued until 1893, when he resigned. For the next four years he was chiefly engaged in literary work, in lecturing before universities on topics connected with social science, in aiding in the organization of charitable work, and in the conduct of a thorough investigation into the relations between liquor legislation and crime. At an early period he took a prominent part in organizing the various Boards of Public Charities of the United States into an organization known as the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, and, at the Louisville meeting (1883), was elected its President. At the International Penitentiary Congress at Stockholm (1878) he was the official delegate from Illinois. On his return, as a result of his observations while abroad, he submitted to the Legislature a report strongly advocating the construction of the Kankakee Hospital for the Insane, then about to be built, upon the "detached ward" or "village" plan, a departure from then existing methods, which marks an era in the treatment of insane in the United States. Mr. Wines conducted the investigation into the condition and number of the defective, dependent and delinquent classes throughout the country, his report constituting a separate volume under the "Tenth Census," and rendered a similar service in connection with the eleventh census (1890). In 1887 he was elected Secretary of the National Prison Association, succeeding to the post formerly held by his father, Enoch Cobb Wines, D.D., LL.D. After the inauguration of Governor Tanner in 1897, he resumed his former position of Secretary of the Board of Public Charities, remaining until 1899, when he again tendered his resignation, having received the appointment to the position of Assistant Director of the Twelfth Census, which he now holds. He is the author of "Crime and Reformation" (1895); of a voluminous series of reports; also of numerous pamphlets and brochures, among which may be mentioned "The County Jail System; An Argument for its Abolition" (1878); "The Kankakee Hospital" (1883); "Provision for the Insane in the United States" (1885); "Conditional Liberation, or the Paroling of Prisoners" (1886), and "American Prisons in the Tenth Census" (1888).

WINES, Walter B., lawyer (brother of Frederick H. Wines), was born in Boston, Mass., Oct. 10, 1848, received his primary education at Williston Academy, East Hampton, Mass., after which he entered Middlebury College, Vt., taking a classical course and graduating there. He afterwards became a student in the law department of Columbia College, N. Y., graduating in 1871, being admitted to the bar the same year and commencing practice in New York City. In 1879 he came to Springfield, Ill., and was, for a time, identified with the bar of that city. Later, he removed to Chicago, where he has been engaged in literary and journalistic work.

WINNEBAGO COUNTY, situated in the "northern tier," bordering on the Wisconsin State line; was organized, under an act passed in 1836, from La Salle and Jo Daviess Counties, and has an area of 552 square miles. The county is drained by the Rock and Pecatonica Rivers. The surface is rolling prairie and the soil fertile. The geology is simple, the quaternary deposits being underlaid by the Galena blue and buff limestone, adapted for building purposes. All the cereals are raised in abundance, the chief product being corn. The Winnebago Indians (who gave name to the county) formerly lived on the west side of the Rock River, and the Pottawatomies on the east, but both tribes removed westward in 1835. (As to manufacturing interests see Rockford.) Population (1880), 30,505; (1890), 39,938; (1900), 47,845.

WINNEBAGO WAR. The name given to an Indian disturbance which had its origin in 1827, during the administration of Gov. Ninian Edwards. The Indians had been quiet since the conclusion of the War of 1812, but a few isolated outrages were sufficient to start terrified "runners" in all directions. In the northern portion of the State, from Galena to Chicago (then Fort Dearborn) the alarm was intense. The meagre militia force of the State was summoned and volunteers were called for. Meanwhile, 600 United States Regular Infantry, under command of Gen. Henry Atkinson, put in an appearance. Besides the infantry, Atkinson had at his disposal some 130 mounted sharpshooters. The origin of the disturbance was as follows: The Winnebagoes attacked a band of Chippewas, who were (by treaty) under Government protection, several of the latter being killed. For participation in this offense, four Winnebago Indians were summarily apprehended, surrendered to the Chippewas and shot. Meanwhile, some dispute had arisen as to the title of the lands, claimed by the Winnebagoes in the vicinity of Galea, which had been occupied by white miners. Repeated acts of hostility and of reprisal, along the Upper Mississippi, intensified mutual distrust. A gathering of the Indians around two keel-boats, laden with supplies for Fort Snelling, which had anchored near Prairie du Chien and opposite a Winnebago camp, was regarded by the whites as a hostile act. Liquor was freely distributed, and there is historical evidence that a half-dozen drunken squaws were carried off and shamefully maltreated. Several hundred warriors assembled to avenge the deception which had been practiced upon them. They laid in ambush for the boats on their return trip. The first passed too rapidly to be successfully assailed, but the second grounded and was savagely, yet unsuccessfully, attacked. The presence of General Atkinson's forces prevented an actual outbreak, and, on his demand, the great Winnebago Chief, Red Bird, with six other leading men of the tribe, surrendered themselves as hostages to save their nation from extermination. A majority of these were, after trial, acquitted. Red Bird, however, unable to endure confinement, literally pined to death in prison, dying on Feb. 16, 1828. He is described as having been a savage of superior intelligence and noble character. A treaty of peace was concluded with the Winnebagoes in a council held at Prairie du Chien, a few months later, but the affair seems to have produced as much alarm among the Indians as it did among the whites. (For Winnebago Indians see page 576.)

WINNETKA, a village of Cook County, on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, 16½ miles north of Chicago. It stands eighty feet above the level of Lake Michigan, has good schools (being the seat of the Winnetka Institute), several churches, and is a popular residence town. Population (1880), 584; (1890), 1,079; (1900), 1,833.

WINSTON, Frederick Hampton, lawyer, was born in Liberty County, Ga., Nov. 20, 1830, was brought to Woodford County, Ky., in 1835, left an orphan at 12, and attended the common schools until 18, when, returning to Georgia, he engaged in cotton manufacture. He finally began the study of law with United States Senator W. C. Dawson, and graduated from Harvard Law School in 1852; spent some time in the office of W. M. Evarts in New York, was admitted to the bar and came to Chicago in 1853, where he formed a partnership with Norman B. Judd, afterwards being associated with Judge Henry W. Blodgett; served as general solicitor of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railways—remaining with the latter twenty years. In 1885 he was appointed, by President Cleveland, Minister to Persia, but resigned the following year, and traveled extensively in Russia, Scandinavia and other foreign countries. Mr. Winston was a delegate to the Democratic National Conventions of 1868, '76 and '84; first President of the Stock Yards at Jersey City, for twelve years President of the Lincoln Park Commission, and a Director of the Lincoln National Bank.

WISCONSIN CENTRAL LINES. The Wisconsin Central Company was organized, June 17, 1887, and subsequently acquired the Minnesota, St. Croix & Wisconsin, the Wisconsin & Minnesota, the Chippewa Falls & Western, the St. Paul & St. Croix Falls, the Wisconsin Central, the Penokee, and the Packwaukee & Montebello Railroads, and assumed the leases of the Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago and the Wisconsin & Minnesota Roads. On July 1, 1888, the company began to operate the entire Wisconsin Central system, with the exception of the Wisconsin Central Railroad and the leased Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago, which remained in charge of the Wisconsin Central Railroad mortgage trustees until Nov. 1, 1889, when these, too, passed under the control of the Wisconsin Central Company. The Wisconsin Central Railroad Company is a reorganization (Oct. 1, 1879) of a company formed Jan. 1, 1871. The Wisconsin Central and the Wisconsin Central Railroad Companies, though differing in name, are a financial unit; the former holding most of the first mortgage bonds of the latter, and substantially all its notes, stocks and income bonds, but, for legal reasons (such as the protection of land titles), it is necessary that separate corporations be maintained. On April 1, 1890, the Wisconsin Central Company executed a lease to the Northern Pacific Railroad, but this was set aside by the courts, on Sept. 27, 1893, for non-payment of rent, and was finally canceled. On the same day receivers were appointed to insure the protection of all interests. The total mileage is 415.46 miles, of which the Company owns 258.90—only .10 of a mile in Illinois. A line, 58.10 miles in length, with 8.44 miles of side-track (total, 66.54 miles), lying wholly within the State of Illinois, is operated by the Chicago & Wisconsin and furnishes the allied line an entrance into Chicago.

WITHROW, Thomas F., lawyer, was born in Virginia in March, 1833, removed with his parents to Ohio in childhood, attended the Western Reserve College, and, after the death of his father, taught school and worked as a printer, later, editing a paper at Mount Vernon. In 1855 he removed to Janesville, Wis., where he again engaged in journalistic work, studied law, was admitted to the bar in Iowa in 1857, settled at Des Moines and served as private secretary of Governors Lowe and Kirkwood. In 1860 he became Supreme Court Reporter; served as Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee in 1863 and, in 1866, became associated with the Rock Island Railroad in the capacity of local attorney, was made chief law officer of the Company in 1873, and removed to Chicago, and, in 1890, was promoted to the position of General Counsel. Died, in Chicago, Feb. 3, 1893.

WOLCOTT, (Dr.) Alexander, early Indian Agent, was born at East Windsor, Conn., Feb. 14, 1790; graduated from Yale College in 1809, and, after a course in medicine, was commissioned, in 1812, Surgeon's Mate in the United States Army. In 1820 he was appointed Indian Agent at Fort Dearborn (now Chicago), as successor to Charles Jouett—the first Agent—who had been appointed a United States Judge in Arkansas. The same year he accompanied General Lewis Cass and Henry Schoolcraft on their tour among the Indians of the Northwest; was married in 1823 to Ellen Marion Kinzie, a daughter of Col. John Kinzie, the first permanent settler of Chicago; in 1825 was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Peoria County, which then included Cook County; was a Judge of Election in 1830, and one of the purchasers of a block of ground in the heart of the present city of Chicago, at the first sale of lots, held Sept. 27, 1830, but died before the close of the year. Dr. Wolcott appears to have been a high-minded and honorable man, as well as far in advance of the mass of pioneers in point of education and intelligence.

WOMAN'S MEDICAL COLLEGE OF CHICAGO. (See Northwestern University Woman's Medical School.)

WOMAN SUFFRAGE. (See Suffrage.)

WOOD, Benson, lawyer and Congressman, was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1839; received a common school and academic education; at the age of 20 came to Illinois, and, for two years, taught school in Lee County. He then enlisted as a soldier in an Illinois regiment, attaining the rank of Captain of Infantry; after the war, graduated from the Law Department of the old Chicago University, and has since been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected a member of the Twenty-eighth General Assembly (1872) and was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876 and 1888; also served as Mayor of the city of Effingham, where he now resides. In 1894 he was elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress by the Republicans of the Nineteenth District, which has uniformly returned a Democrat, and, in office, proved himself a most industrious and efficient member. Mr. Wood was defeated as a candidate for re-election in 1896.

WOOD, John, pioneer, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor, was born at Moravia, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1798—his father being a Revolutionary soldier who had served as Surgeon and Captain in the army. At the age of 21 years young Wood removed to Illinois, settling in what is now Adams County, and building the first log-cabin on the site of the present city of Quincy. He was a member of the upper house of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth General Assemblies, and was elected Lieutenant-Governor in 1859 on the same ticket with Governor Bissell, and served out the unexpired term of the latter, who died in office. (See Bissell, William H.) He was succeeded by Richard Yates in 1861. In February of that year he was appointed one of the five Commissioners from Illinois to the "Peace Conference" at Washington, to consider methods for averting civil war. The following May he was appointed Quartermaster-General for the State by Governor Yates, and assisted most efficiently in fitting out the troops for the field. In June, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers (100-days' men) and mustered out of service the following September. Died, at Quincy, June 11, 1880. He was liberal, patriotic and public-spirited. His fellow-citizens of Quincy erected a monument to his memory, which was appropriately dedicated, July 4, 1883.

WOODFORD COUNTY, situated a little north of the center of the State, bounded on the west by the Illinois River; organized in 1841; area, 540 square miles. The surface is generally level, except along the Illinois River, the soil fertile and well watered. The county lies in the northern section of the great coal field of the State. Eureka is the county-seat. Other thriving cities and towns are Metamora, Minonk, El Paso and Roanoke. Corn, oats, wheat, potatoes and barley are the principal crops. The chief mechanical industries are flour manufacture, carriage and wagon-making, and saddlery and harness work. Population (1890), 21,429; (1900), 21,822.

WOODHULL, a village of Henry County, on Keithsburg branch Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 15 miles west of Galva; has a bank, electric lights, water works, brick and tile works, six churches and weekly paper. Pop. (1900), 774.

WOODMAN, Charles W., lawyer and Congressman, was born in Aalborg, Denmark, March 11, 1844; received his early education in the schools of his native country, but took to the sea in 1860, following the life of a sailor until 1863, when, coming to Philadelphia, he enlisted in the Gulf Squadron of the United States. After the war, he came to Chicago, and, after reading law for some time in the office of James L. High, graduated from the Law Department of the Chicago University in 1871. Some years later he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for some of the lower courts, and, in 1881, was nominated by the Judges of Cook County as one of the Justices of the Peace for the city of Chicago. In 1894 he became the Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District and was elected, but failed to secure a renomination in 1896. Died, in Elgin Asylum for the Insane, March 18, 1898.

WOODS, Robert Mann, was born at Greenville, Pa., April 17, 1840; came with his parents to Illinois in 1842, the family settling at Barry, Pike County, but subsequently residing at Pittsfield, Canton and Galesburg. He was educated at Knox College in the latter place, which was his home from 1849 to '58; later, taught school in Iowa and Missouri until 1861, when he went to Springfield and began the study of law with Milton Hay and Shelby M. Cullom. His law studies having been interrupted by the Civil War, after spending some time in the mustering and disbursing office, he was promoted by Governor Yates to a place in the executive office, from which he went to the field as Adjutant of the Sixty-fourth Illinois Infantry, known as the "Yates Sharp-Shooters." After participating, with the Army of the Tennessee, in the Atlanta campaign, he took part in the "March to the Sea," and the campaign in the Carolinas, including the siege of Savannah and the forcing of the Salkahatchie, where he distinguished himself, as also in the taking of Columbia, Fayetteville, Cheraw, Raleigh and Bentonville. At the latter place he had a horse shot under him and won the brevet rank of Major for gallantry in the field, having previously been commissioned Captain of Company A of his regiment. He also served on the staffs of Gens. Giles A. Smith, Benjamin F. Potts, and William W. Belknap, and was the last mustering officer in General Sherman's army. In 1867 Major Woods removed to Chicago, where he was in business for a number of years, serving as chief clerk of Custom House construction from 1872 to 1877. In 1879 he purchased "The Daily Republican" at Joliet, which he conducted successfully for fifteen years. While connected with "The Republican," he served as Secretary of the Illinois Republican Press Association and in various other positions.

Major Woods was one of the founders of the Grand Army of the Republic, whose birth-place was in Illinois. (See Grand Army of the Republic; also Stephenson, Dr. B. F.) When Dr. Stephenson (who had been Surgeon of the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry), conceived the idea of founding such an order, he called to his assistance Major Woods, who was then engaged in writing the histories of Illinois regiments for the Adjutant-General's Report. The Major wrote the Constitution and By-laws of the Order, the charter blanks for all the reports, etc. The first official order bears his name as the first Adjutant-General of the Order, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF ILLINOIS
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., APRIL 1, 1866.

GENERAL ORDERS!

No. 1. [The following named officers are hereby appointed and assigned to duty at these headquarters. They will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

Colonel Jules C. Weber, A.D.C. and Chief of Staff.

Colonel John M. Snyder, Quartermaster-General.

Major Robert M. Woods, Adjutant-General.

Captain John A. Lightfoot, Assistant Adjutant-General.

Captain John S. Phelps, Aid-de-Camp.

By order of B. F. Stephenson, Department Commander.

ROBERT M. WOODS,
Adjutant-General.

Major Woods afterwards organized the various Departments in the West, and it has been conceded that he furnished the money necessary to carry on the work during the first six months of the existence of the Order. He has never accepted a nomination or run for any political office, but is now engaged in financial business in Joliet and Chicago, with his residence in the former place.

WOODSON, David Meade, lawyer and jurist, was born in Jessamine County, Ky., May 18, 1806; was educated in private schools and at Transylvania University, and read law with his father. He served a term in the Kentucky Legislature in 1832, and, in 1834, removed to Illinois, settling at Carrollton, Greene County. In 1839 he was elected State's Attorney and, in 1840, a member of the lower house of the Legislature, being elected a second time in 1868. In 1843 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in the Fifth District, but was defeated by Stephen A. Douglas. He was a member of the Constitutional Conventions of 1847 and 1869-70. In 1848 he was elected a Judge of the First Judicial Circuit, remaining in office until 1867. Died, in 1877.

WOODSTOCK, the county-seat of McHenry County, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern Railway, about 51 miles northwest of Chicago and 32 miles east of Rockford. It contains a court house, eight churches, four banks, three newspaper offices, foundry and machine shops, planing mills, canning works, pickle, cheese and butter factories. The Oliver Typewriter Factory is located here; the town is also the seat of the Todd Seminary for boys. Population (1890), 1,683; (1900), 2,502.

WORCESTER, Linus E., State Senator, was born in Windsor, Vt., Dec. 5, 1811, was educated in the common schools of his native State and at Chester Academy, came to Illinois in 1836, and, after teaching three years, entered a dry-goods store at Whitehall as clerk, later becoming a partner. He was also engaged in various other branches of business at different times, including the drug, hardware, grocery, agricultural implement and lumber business. In 1843 he was appointed Postmaster at Whitehall, serving twelve years; was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847, served as County Judge for six years from 1853, and as Trustee of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Jacksonville, from 1859, by successive reappointments, for twelve years. In 1856 he was elected, as a Democrat, to the State Senate, to succeed John M. Palmer, resigned; was re-elected in 1860, and, at the session of 1865, was one of the five Democratic members of that body who voted for the ratification of the Emancipation Amendment of the National Constitution. He was elected County Judge a second time, in 1863, and re-elected in 1867, served as delegate to the Democratic National Convention of 1876, and, for more than thirty years, was one of the Directors of the Jacksonville branch of the Chicago & Alton Railroad, serving from the organization of the corporation until his death, which occurred Oct. 19, 1891.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION. An exhibition of the scientific, liberal and mechanical arts of all nations, held at Chicago, between May 1 and Oct. 31, 1893. The project had its inception in November, 1885, in a resolution adopted by the directorate of the Chicago Interstate Exposition Company. On July 6, 1888, the first well defined action was taken, the Iroquois Club, of Chicago, inviting the co-operation of six other leading clubs of that city in "securing the location of an international celebration at Chicago of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus." In July, 1889, a decisive step was taken in the appointment by Mayor Cregier, under resolution of the City Council, of a committee of 100 (afterwards increased to 256) citizens, who were charged with the duty of promoting the selection of Chicago as the site for the Exposition. New York, Washington and St. Louis were competing points, but the choice of Congress fell upon Chicago, and the act establishing the World's Fair at that city was signed by President Harrison on April 25, 1890. Under the requirements of the law, the President appointed eight Commissioners-at-large, with two Commissioners and two alternates from each State and Territory and the District of Columbia. Col. George R. Davis, of Chicago, was elected Director-General by the body thus constituted. Ex-Senator Thomas M. Palmer, of Michigan, was chosen President of the Commission and John T. Dickinson, of Texas, Secretary. This Commission delegated much of its power to a Board of Reference and Control, who were instructed to act with a similar number appointed by the World's Columbian Exposition. The latter organization was an incorporation, with a directorate of forty-five members, elected annually by the stockholders. Lyman J. Gage, of Chicago, was the first President of the corporation, and was succeeded by W. T. Baker and Harlow N. Higinbotham.

In addition to these bodies, certain powers were vested in a Board of Lady Managers, composed of two members, with alternates, from each State and Territory, besides nine from the city of Chicago. Mrs. Potter Palmer was chosen President of the latter. This Board was particularly charged with supervision of women's participation in the Exposition, and of the exhibits of women's work.

The supreme executive power was vested in the Joint Board of Control. The site selected was Jackson Park, in the South Division of Chicago, with a strip connecting Jackson and Washington Parks, known as the "Midway Plaisance," which was surrendered to "concessionaires" who purchased the privilege of giving exhibitions, or conducting restaurants or selling-booths thereon. The total area of the site was 633 acres, and that of the buildings—not reckoning those erected by States other than Illinois, and by foreign governments—was about 200 acres. When to this is added the acreage of the foreign and State buildings, the total space under roof approximated 250 acres. These figures do not include the buildings erected by private exhibitors, caterers and venders, which would add a small percentage to the grand total. Forty-seven foreign Governments made appropriations for the erection of their own buildings and other expenses connected with official representation, and there were exhibitors from eighty-six nations. The United States Government erected its own building, and appropriated $500,000 to defray the expenses of a national exhibit, besides $2,500,000 toward the general cost of the Exposition. The appropriations by foreign Governments aggregated about $6,500,000, and those by the States and Territories, $6,120,000—that of Illinois being $800,000. The entire outlay of the World's Columbian Exposition Company, up to March 31, 1894, including the cost of preliminary organization, construction, operating and post-Exposition expenses, was $27,151,800. This is, of course, exclusive of foreign and State expenditures, which would swell the aggregate cost to nearly $45,000,000. Citizens of Chicago subscribed $5,608,206 toward the capital stock of the Exposition Company, and the municipality, $5,000,000, which was raised by the sale of bonds. (See Thirty-sixth General Assembly.)

The site, while admirably adapted to the purpose, was, when chosen, a marshy flat, crossed by low sand ridges, upon which stood occasional clumps of stunted scrub oaks. Before the gates of the great fair were opened to the public, the entire area had been transformed into a dream of beauty. Marshes had been drained, filled in and sodded; driveways and broad walks constructed; artificial ponds and lagoons dug and embanked, and all the highest skill of the landscape gardener's art had been called into play to produce varied and striking effects. But the task had been a Herculean one. There were seventeen principal (or, as they may be called, departmental) buildings, all of beautiful and ornate design, and all of vast size. They were known as the Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, the Machinery, Electrical, Transportation, Woman's, Horticultural, Mines and Mining, Anthropological, Administration, Art Galleries, Agricultural, Art Institute, Fisheries, Live Stock, Dairy and Forestry buildings, and the Music Hall and Casino. Several of these had large annexes. The Manufacturers' Building was the largest. It was rectangular (1687 x 787 feet), having a ground area of 31 acres and a floor and gallery area of 44 acres. Its central chamber was 1280x380 feet, with a nave 107 feet wide, both hall and nave being surrounded by a gallery 50 feet wide. It was four times as large as the Roman Coliseum and three times as large as St. Peter's at Rome; 17,000,000 feet of lumber, 13,000,000 pounds of steel, and 2,000,000 pounds of iron had been used in its construction, involving a cost of $1,800,000.

It was originally intended to open the Exposition, formally, on Oct. 21, 1893, the quadri-centennial of Columbus' discovery of land on the Western Hemisphere, but the magnitude of the undertaking rendered this impracticable. Consequently, while dedicatory ceremonies were held on that day, preceded by a monster procession and followed by elaborate pyrotechnic displays at night, May 1, 1893, was fixed as the opening day—the machinery and fountains being put in operation, at the touch of an electric button by President Cleveland, at the close of a short address. The total number of admissions from that date to Oct. 31, was 27,530,460—the largest for any single day being on Oct. 9 (Chicago Day) amounting to 761,944. The total receipts from all sources (including National and State appropriations, subscriptions, etc.), amounted to $28,151,168.75, of which $10,626,330.76 was from the sale of tickets, and $3,699,581.43 from concessions. The aggregate attendance fell short of that at the Paris Exposition of 1889 by about 500,000, while the receipts from the sale of tickets and concessions exceeded the latter by nearly $5,800,000. Subscribers to the Exposition stock received a return of ten per cent on the same.

The Illinois building was the first of the State buildings to be completed. It was also the largest and most costly, but was severely criticised from an architectural standpoint. The exhibits showed the internal resources of the State, as well as the development of its governmental system, and its progress in civilization from the days of the first pioneers. The entire Illinois exhibit in the State building was under charge of the State Board of Agriculture, who devoted one-tenth of the appropriation, and a like proportion of floor space, to the exhibition of the work of Illinois women as scientists, authors, artists, decorators, etc. Among special features of the Illinois exhibit were: State trophies and relics, kept in a fire-proof memorial hall; the display of grains and minerals, and an immense topographical map (prepared at a cost of $15,000), drafted on a scale of two miles to the inch, showing the character and resources of the State, and correcting many serious cartographical errors previously undiscovered.

WORTHEN, Amos Henry, scientist and State Geologist, was born at Bradford, Vt., Oct. 31, 1813, emigrated to Kentucky in 1834, and, in 1836, removed to Illinois, locating at Warsaw. Teaching, surveying and mercantile business were his pursuits until 1842, when he returned to the East, spending two years in Boston, but returning to Warsaw in 1844. His natural predilections were toward the natural sciences, and, after coming west, he devoted most of his leisure time to the collection and study of specimens of mineralogy, geology and conchology. On the organization of the geological survey of Illinois in 1851, he was appointed assistant to Dr. J. G. Norwood, then State Geologist, and, in 1858, succeeded to the office, having meanwhile spent three years as Assistant Geologist in the first Iowa survey. As State Geologist he published seven volumes of reports, and was engaged upon the eighth when overtaken by death, May 6, 1888. These reports, which are as comprehensive as they are voluminous, have been reviewed and warmly commended by the leading scientific periodicals of this country and Europe. In 1877 field work was discontinued, and the State Historical Library and Natural History Museum were established, Professor Worthen being placed in charge as curator. He was the author of various valuable scientific papers and member of numerous scientific societies in this country and in Europe.

WORTHINGTON, Nicholas Ellsworth, ex-Congressman, was born in Brooke County, W. Va., March 30, 1836, and completed his education at Allegheny College, Pa., studied Law at Morgantown, Va., and was admitted to the bar in 1860. He is a resident of Peoria, and, by profession, a lawyer; was County Superintendent of Schools of Peoria County from 1868 to 1872, and a member of the State Board of Education from 1869 to 1872. In 1882 he was elected to Congress, as a Democrat, from the Tenth Congressional District, and re-elected in 1884. In 1886 he was again a candidate, but was defeated by his Republican opponent, Philip Sidney Post. He was elected Circuit Judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1891, and re-elected in 1897. In 1894 he served upon a commission appointed by President Cleveland, to investigate the labor strikes of that year at Chicago.

WRIGHT, John Stephen, manufacturer, was born at Sheffield, Mass., July 16, 1815; came to Chicago in 1832, with his father, who opened a store in that city; in 1837, at his own expense, built the first school building in Chicago; in 1840 established "The Prairie Farmer," which he conducted for many years in the interest of popular education and progressive agriculture. In 1852 he engaged in the manufacture of Atkins' self-raking reaper and mower, was one of the promoters of the Galena & Chicago Union and the Illinois Central Railways, and wrote a volume entitled, "Chicago: Past, Present and Future," published in 1870. Died, in Chicago, Sept. 26, 1874.

WULFF, Henry, ex-State Treasurer, was born in Meldorf, Germany, August 24, 1854; came to Chicago in 1863, and began his political career as a Trustee of the town of Jefferson. In 1866 he was elected County Clerk of Cook County, and re-elected in 1890; in 1894 became the Republican nominee for State Treasurer, receiving, at the November election of that year, the unprecedented plurality of 133,427 votes over his Democratic opponent.

WYANET, a town of Bureau County, at the intersection of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railways, 7 miles southwest of Princeton. Population (1890), 670; (1900), 902.

WYLIE, (Rev.) Samuel, domestic missionary, born in Ireland and came to America in boyhood; was educated at the University of Pennsylvania and the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, and ordained in 1818. Soon after this he came west as a domestic missionary and, in 1820, became pastor of a church at Sparta, Ill., where he remained until his death, March 20, 1872, after a pastorate of 52 years. During his pastorate the church sent out a dozen colonies to form new church organizations elsewhere. He is described as able, eloquent and scholarly.

WYMAN, (Col.) John B., soldier, was born in Massachusetts, July 12, 1817, and educated in the schools of that State until 14 years of age, when he became a clerk in a clothing store in his native town of Shrewsbury, later being associated with mercantile establishments in Cincinnati, and again in his native State. From 1846 to 1850 he was employed successively as a clerk in the car and machine shops at Springfield, Mass., then as Superintendent of Construction, and, later, as conductor on the New York & New Haven Railroad, finally, in 1850, becoming Superintendent of the Connecticut River Railroad. In 1852 he entered the service of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, assisting in the survey and construction of the line under Col. R. B. Mason, the Chief Engineer, and finally becoming Assistant Superintendent of the Northern Division. He was one of the original proprietors of the town of Amboy, in Lee County, and its first Mayor, also serving a second term. Having a fondness for military affairs, he was usually connected with some military organization—while in Cincinnati being attached to a company, of which Prof. O. M. Mitchell, the celebrated astronomer (afterwards Major-General Mitchell), was Captain. After coming to Illinois he became Captain of the Chicago Light Guards. Having left the employ of the Railroad in 1858, he was in private business at Amboy at the beginning of the Civil War in 1861. As Assistant-Adjutant General, by appointment of Governor Yates, he rendered valuable service in the early weeks of the war in securing arms from Jefferson Barracks and in the organization of the three-months' regiments. Then, having organized the Thirteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry—the first organized in the State for the three years' service—he was commissioned its Colonel, and, in July following, entered upon the duty of guarding the railroad lines in Southwest Missouri and Arkansas. The following year his regiment was attached to General Sherman's command in the first campaign against Vicksburg. On the second day of the Battle of Chickasaw Bayou, he fell mortally wounded, dying on the field, Dec. 28, 1862. Colonel Wyman was one of the most accomplished and promising of the volunteer soldiers sent to the field from Illinois, of whom so many were former employes of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WYOMING, a town of Stark County, 31 miles north-northwest from Peoria, at the junction of the Peoria branch Rock Island & Pacific and the Rushville branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway; has two high schools, churches, two banks, flour mills, water-works, machine shop, and two weekly newspapers. Coal is mined here. Pop. (1890), 1,116; (1900), 1,277.

XENIA, a village of Clay County, on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railroad, 87 miles east of St. Louis. Population (1900), 800.

YATES CITY, a village of Knox County, at the junction of the Peoria Division of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, with the Rushville branch, 23 miles southeast of Galesburg. The town has banks, a coal mine, telephone exchange, school, churches and a newspaper. Pop. (1890), 687; (1900), 650.

YATES, Henry, pioneer, was born in Caroline County, Va., Oct. 29, 1786—being a grand-nephew of Chief Justice John Marshall; removed to Fayette County, Ky., where he located and laid out the town of Warsaw, which afterwards became the county-seat of Gallatin County. In 1831 he removed to Sangamon County, Ill., and, in 1832, settled at the site of the present town of Berlin, which he laid out the following year, also laying out the town of New Berlin, a few years later, on the line of the Wabash Railway. He was father of Gov. Richard Yates. Died, Sept. 13, 1865.—Henry (Yates), Jr., son of the preceding, was born at Berlin, Ill., March 7, 1835; engaged in merchandising at New Berlin; in 1862, raised a company of volunteers for the One Hundred and Sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel and brevetted Colonel and Brigadier-General. He was accidentally shot in 1863, and suffered sun-stroke at Little Rock, from which he never fully recovered. Died, August 3, 1871.

YATES, Richard, former Governor and United States Senator, was born at Warsaw, Ky., Jan. 18, 1815, of English descent. In 1831 he accompanied his father to Illinois, the family settling first at Springfield and later at Berlin, Sangamon County. He soon after entered Illinois College, from which he graduated in 1835, and subsequently read law with Col. John J. Hardin, at Jacksonville, which thereafter became his home. In 1842 he was elected Representative in the General Assembly from Morgan County, and was re-elected in 1844, and again in 1848. In 1850 he was a candidate for Congress from the Seventh District and elected over Maj. Thomas L. Harris, the previous incumbent, being the only Whig Representative in the Thirty-second Congress from Illinois. Two years later he was re-elected over John Calhoun, but was defeated, in 1854, by his old opponent, Harris. He was one of the most vigorous opponents of the Kansas-Nebraska Bill in the Thirty-third Congress, and an early participant in the movement for the organization of the Republican party to resist the further extension of slavery, being a prominent speaker. On the same platform with Lincoln, before the first Republican State Convention held at Bloomington, in May, 1856, and serving as one of the Vice-Presidents of that body. In 1860 he was elected to the executive chair on the ticket headed by Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency, and, by his energetic support of the National administration in its measures for the suppression of the Rebellion, won the sobriquet of "the Illinois War-Governor." In 1865 he was elected United States Senator, serving until 1871. He died suddenly, at St. Louis, Nov. 27, 1873, while returning from Arkansas, whither he had gone, as a United States Commissioner, by appointment of President Grant, to inspect a land-subsidy railroad. He was a man of rare ability, earnestness of purpose and extraordinary personal magnetism, as well as of a lofty order of patriotism. His faults were those of a nature generous, impulsive and warm-hearted.

VORKVILLE, the county-seat of Kendall County, on Fox River and Streator Division of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad, 12 miles southwest of Aurora; on interurban electric line; has water-power, electric lights, a bank, churches and weekly newspaper. Pop. (1890) 375; (1900), 413.

YOUNG, Brigham, Mormon leader, was born at Whittingham, Vt., June 1, 1801, joined the Mormons in 1831 and, the next year, became associated with Joseph Smith, at Kirtland, Ohio, and, in 1835, an "apostle." He accompanied a considerable body of that sect to Independence, Mo., but was driven out with them in 1837, settling for a short time at Quincy, Ill., but later removing to Nauvoo, of which he was one of the founders. On the assassination of Smith, in 1844, he became the successor of the latter, as head of the Mormon Church, and, the following year, headed the exodus from Illinois, which finally resulted in the Mormon settlement in Utah. His subsequent career there, where he was appointed Governor by President Fillmore, and, for a time, successfully defied national authority, is a matter of national rather than State history. He remained at the head of the Mormon Church until his death at Salt Lake City, August 29, 1877.

YOUNG, Richard Montgomery, United States Senator, was born in Kentucky in 1796, studied law and removed to Jonesboro, Ill., where he was admitted to the bar in 1817; served in the Second

General Assembly (1820-22) as Representative from Union County; was a Circuit Judge, 1825-27; Presidential Elector in 1828; Circuit Judge again, 1829-37; elected United States Senator in 1837 as successor to W. L. D. Ewing, serving until 1843, when he was commissioned Justice of the Supreme Court, but resigned in 1847 to become Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington. During the session of 1850-51, he served as Clerk of the National House of Representatives. Died, in an insane asylum, in Washington, in 1853.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, first permanently organized at Chicago, in 1858, although desultory movements of a kindred character had previously been started at Peoria, Quincy, Chicago and Springfield, some as early as 1854. From 1858 to 1872, various associations were formed at different points throughout the State, which were entirely independent of each other. The first effort looking to union and mutual aid, was made in 1872, when Robert Weidensall, on behalf of the International Committee, called a convention, to meet at Bloomington, November 6-9. State conventions have been held annually since 1872. In that of 1875, steps were taken looking to the appointment of a State Secretary, and, in 1876, Charles M. Morton assumed the office. Much evangelistic work was done, and new associations formed, the total number reported at the Champaign Convention, in 1877, being sixty-two. After one year's work Mr. Morton resigned the secretaryship, the office remaining vacant for three years. The question of the appointment of a successor was discussed at the Decatur Convention in 1879, and, in April, 1880, I. B. Brown was made State Secretary, and has occupied the position to the present time (1899). At the date of his appointment the official figures showed sixteen associations in Illinois, with a total membership of 2,443, and property valued at $126,500, including building funds, the associations at Chicago and Aurora owning buildings. Thirteen officers were employed, none of them being in Chicago. Since 1880 the work has steadily grown, so that five Assistant State Secretaries are now employed. In 1886, a plan for arranging the State work under departmental administration was devised, but not put in operation until 1890. The present six departments of supervision are: General Supervision, in charge of the State Secretary and his Assistants; railroad and city work; counties and towns; work among students; corresponding membership department, and office work. The two last named are under one executive head, but each of the others in charge of an Assistant Secretary, who is responsible for its development. The entire work is under the supervision of a State Executive Committee of twenty-seven members, one-third of whom are elected annually. Willis H. Herrick of Chicago has been its chairman for several years. This body is appointed by a State convention composed of delegates from the local Associations. Of these there were, in October, 1898, 116, with a membership of 15,888. The value of the property owned was $2,500,000. Twenty-two occupy their own buildings, of which five are for railroad men and one for students. Weekly gatherings for young men numbered 248, and there are now representatives or correspondents in 665 communities where no organization has been effected. Scientific physical culture is made a feature by 40 associations, and educational work has been largely developed. The enrollment in evening classes, during 1898-99, was 978. The building of the Chicago branch (erected in 1893) is the finest of its class in the world. Recently a successful association has been formed among coal miners, and another among the first grade boys of the Illinois State Reformatory, while an extensive work has been conducted at the camps of the Illinois National Guard.

ZANE, Charles S., lawyer and jurist, was born in Cumberland County, N. J., March 2, 1831, of English and New England stock. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Sangamon County, Ill., for a time working on a farm and at brick-making. From 1852 to '55 he attended McKendree College, but did not graduate, and, on leaving college, engaged in teaching, at the same time reading law. In 1857 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice at Springfield. The following year he was elected City Attorney. He had for partners, at different times, William H. Herndon (once a partner of Abraham Lincoln) and Senator Shelby M. Cullom. In 1873 he was elected a Judge of the Circuit Court for the Fifth Judicial Circuit, and was re-elected in 1879. In 1883 President Arthur appointed him Chief Justice of Utah, where he has since resided, though superseded by the appointment of a successor by President Cleveland. At the first State election in Utah, held in November, 1895, he was chosen one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the new Commonwealth, but was defeated for re-election, by his Democratic opponent, in 1898.

SUPPLEMENT.

The following matter, received too late for insertion in the body of this work, is added in the form of a supplement.

COGHLAN, (Capt.) Joseph Bullock, naval officer, was born in Kentucky, and, at the age of 15 years, came to Illinois, living on a farm for a time near Carlyle, in Clinton County. In 1860 he was appointed by his uncle, Hon. Philip B. Fouke—then a Representative in Congress from the Belleville District—to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, graduating in 1863, and being promoted through the successive grades of Ensign, Master, Lieutenant, Lieutenant-Commander, and Commander, and serving upon various vessels until Nov. 18, 1893, when he was commissioned Captain and, in 1897, assigned to the command of the battleship Raleigh, on the Asiatic Station. He was thus connected with Admiral Dewey's squadron at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, and took a conspicuous and brilliant part in the affair in Manila Bay, on May 1, 1898, which resulted in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. Captain Coghlan's connection with subsequent events in the Philippines was in the highest degree creditable to himself and the country. His vessel (the Raleigh) was the first of Admiral Dewey's squadron to return home, coming by way of the Suez Canal, in the summer of 1899, he and his crew receiving an immense ovation on their arrival in New York harbor.

CRANE, (Rev.) James Lyons, clergyman, army chaplain, was born at Mt. Eaton, Wayne County, Ohio, August 30, 1823, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cincinnati in 1841, and, coming to Edgar County, Illinois, in 1843, attended a seminary at Paris some three years. He joined the Illinois Conference in 1846, and was assigned to the Danville circuit, afterwards presiding over charges at Grandview, Hillsboro, Alton, Jacksonville, and Springfield—at the last two points being stationed two or more times, besides serving as Presiding Elder of the Paris, Danville, and Springfield Districts. The importance of the stations which he filled during his itinerant career served as evidence of his recognized ability and popularity as a preacher.

In July, 1861, he was appointed Chaplain of the Twenty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at that time commanded by Ulysses S. Grant as Colonel, and, although he remained with the regiment only a few months, the friendship then established between him and the future commander of the armies of the Union lasted through their lives. This was shown by his appointment by President Grant, in 1869, to the position of Postmaster of the city of Springfield, which came to him as a personal compliment, being re-appointed four years afterwards and continuing in office eight years. After retiring from the Springfield postoffice, he occupied charges at Island Grove and Shelbyville, his death occurring at the latter place, July 29, 1879, as the result of an attack of paralysis some two weeks previous. Mr. Crane was married in 1847 to Miss Elizabeth Mayo, daughter of Col. J. Mayo—a prominent citizen of Edgar County, at an early day—his wife surviving him some twenty years. Rev. Charles A. Crane and Rev. Frank Crane, pastors of prominent Methodist churches in Boston and Chicago, are sons of the subject of this sketch.

DAWES, Charles Gates, Comptroller of the Treasury, was born at Marietta, Ohio, August 27, 1865; graduated from Marietta College in 1884, and from the Cincinnati Law School in 1886; worked at civil engineering during his vacations, finally becoming Chief Engineer of the Toledo & Ohio Railroad. Between 1887 and 1894 he was engaged in the practice of law at Lincoln, Neb., but afterwards became interested in the gas business in various cities, including Evanston, Ill., which became his home. In 1896 he took a leading part in securing instructions by the Republican State Convention at Springfield in favor of the nomination of Mr. McKinley for the Presidency, and during the succeeding campaign served as a member of the National Republican Committee for the State of Illinois. Soon after the accession of President McKinley, he was appointed Comptroller of the Treasury, a position which he now holds. Mr. Dawes is the son of R. B. Dawes, a former Congressman from Ohio, and the great-grandson of Manasseh Cutler, who was an influential factor in the early history of the Northwest Territory, and has been credited with exerting a strong influence in shaping and securing the adoption of the Ordinance of 1787.

DISTIN, (Col.) William L., former Department Commander of Grand Army of the Republic for the State of Illinois, was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 9, 1843, his father being of English descent, while his maternal grandfather was a Colonel of the Polish Lancers in the army of the first Napoleon, who, after the exile of his leader, came to America, settling in Indiana. The father of the subject of this sketch settled at Keokuk, Iowa, where the son grew to manhood and in February, 1863, enlisted as a private in the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry, having been twice rejected previously on account of physical ailment. Soon after enlistment he was detailed for provost-marshal duty, but later took part with his regiment in the campaign in Alabama. He served for a time in the Fifteenth Army Corps, under Gen. John A. Logan, was subsequently detailed for duty on the Staff of General Raum, and participated in the battles of Resaca and Tilton, Ga. Having been captured in the latter, he was imprisoned successively at Jacksonville (Ga.), Montgomery, Savannah, and finally at Andersonville. From the latter he succeeded in effecting his escape, but was recaptured and returned to that famous prison-pen. Having escaped a second time by assuming the name of a dead man and bribing the guard, he was again captured and imprisoned at various points in Mississippi until exchanged about the time of the assassination of President Lincoln. He was then so weakened by his long confinement and scanty fare that he had to be carried on board the steamer on a stretcher. At this time he narrowly escaped being on board the steamer Sultana, which was blown up below Cairo, with 2,100 soldiers on board, a large proportion of whom lost their lives. After being mustered out at Davenport, Iowa, June 28, 1865, he was employed for a time on the Des Moines Valley Railroad, and as a messenger and route agent of the United States Express Company. In 1872 he established himself in business in Quincy, Ill., in which he proved very successful. Here he became prominent in local Grand Army circles, and, in 1890, was unanimously elected Commander of the Department of Illinois. Previous to this he had been an officer of the Illinois National Guard, and served as Aid-de-Camp, with the rank of Colonel, on the staff of Governors Hamilton, Oglesby and Fifer. In 1897 Colonel Distin was appointed by President McKinley Surveyor-General for the Territory of Alaska, a position which (1899) he still holds.

DUMMER, Henry E., lawyer, was born at Hallowell, Maine, April 9, 1808, was educated in Bowdoin College, graduating there in the class of 1827, after which he took a course in law at Cambridge Law School, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Then, having spent some two years in his native State, in 1832 he removed to Illinois, settling first in Springfield, where he remained six years, being for a part of the time a partner of John T. Stuart, who afterwards became the first partner in law of Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Dummer had a brother, Richard William Dummer, who had preceded him to Illinois, living for a time in Jacksonville. In 1838 he removed to Beardstown, Cass County, which continued to be his home for more than a quarter of a century. During his residence there he served as Alderman, City Attorney and Judge of Probate for Cass County; also represented Cass County in the Constitutional Convention of 1847, and, in 1860, was elected State Senator in the Twenty-second General Assembly, serving four years. Mr. Dummer was an earnest Republican, and served that party as a delegate for the State-at-large to the Convention of 1864, at Baltimore, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency a second time. In 1864 he removed to Jacksonville, and for the next year was the law partner of David A. Smith, until the death of the latter in 1865. In the summer of 1878 Mr. Dummer went to Mackinac, Mich., in search of health, but died there August 12 of that year.

ECKELS, James H., ex-Comptroller of the Currency, was born of Scotch-Irish parentage at Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, was educated in the common schools and the high school of his native town, graduated from the Law School at Albany, N. Y., in 1881, and the following year began practice at Ottawa, Ill. Here he continued in active practice until 1893, when he was appointed by President Cleveland Comptroller of the Currency, serving until May 1, 1898, when he resigned to accept the presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago. Mr. Eckels manifested such distinguished ability in the discharge of his duties as Comptroller that he received the notable compliment of being retained in office by a Republican administration more than a year after the retirement of President Cleveland, while his selection for a place at the head of one of the leading banking institutions of Chicago was a no less marked recognition of his abilities as a financier. He was a Delegate from the Eleventh District to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, and represented the same district in the Gold Democratic Convention at Indianapolis in 1896, and assisted in framing the platform there adopted—which indicated his views on the financial questions involved in the campaign of that year.

FIELD, Daniel, early merchant, was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, Nov. 30, 1790, and settled at Golconda, Ill., in 1818, dying there in 1853. He was a man of great enterprise, engaged in merchandising, and became a large landholder, farmer and stock-grower, and an extensive shipper of stock and produce to lower Mississippi markets. He married Elizabeth Dailey of Charleston, Ind., and raised a large family of children, one of whom, Philip D., became Sheriff, while another, John, was County Judge of Pope County. His daughter, Maria, married Gen. Green B. Raum, who became prominent as a soldier during the Civil War and, later, as a member of Congress and Commissioner of Internal Revenue and Pension Commissioner in Washington.

FIELD, Green B., member of a pioneer family, was born within the present limits of the State of Indiana in 1787, served as a Lieutenant in the War of 1812, was married in Bourbon County, Kentucky, to Miss Mary E. Cogswell, the daughter of Dr. Joseph Cogswell, a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and, in 1817, removed to Pope County, Illinois, where he laid off the town of Golconda, which became the county-seat. He served as a Representative from Pope County in the First General Assembly (1818-20), and was the father of Juliet C. Field, who became the wife of John Raum; of Edna Field, the wife of Dr. Tarlton Dunn, and of Green B. Field, who was a Lieutenant in Third Regiment Illinois Volunteers during the Mexican War. Mr. Field was the grandfather of Gen. Green B. Raum, mentioned in the preceding paragraph. He died of yellow fever in Louisiana in 1823.

GALE, Stephen Francis, first Chicago bookseller and a railway promoter, was born at Exeter, N. H., March 8, 1812; at 15 years of age became clerk in a leading book-store in Boston; came to Chicago in 1835, and soon afterwards opened the first book and stationery establishment in that city, which, in after years, gained an extensive trade. In 1842 the firm of S. F.

Gale & Co. was organized, but Mr. Gale, having become head of the Chicago Fire Department, retired from business in 1845. As early as 1846 he was associated with Wm. B. Ogden and John B. Turner in the steps then being taken to revive the Galena & Chicago Union Railroad (now a part of the Chicago & Northwestern), and, in conjunction with these gentlemen, became responsible for the means to purchase the charter and assets of the road from the Eastern bondholders. Later, he engaged in the construction of the branch road from Turner Junction to Aurora, became President of the line and extended it to Mendota to connect with the Illinois Central at that Point. These roads afterwards became a part of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy line. A number of years ago Mr. Gale returned to his old home in New Hampshire, where he has since resided.

HAY, John, early settler, came to the region of Kaskaskia between 1790 and 1800, and became a prominent citizen of St. Clair County. He was selected as a member of the First Legislative Council of Indiana Territory for St. Clair County in 1805. In 1809 he was appointed Clerk of the Common Pleas Court of St. Clair County, and was continued in office after the organization of the State Government, serving until his death at Belleville in 1845.

HAYS, John, pioneer settler of Northwest Territory, was a native of New York, who came to Cahokia, in the "Illinois Country," in 1793, and lived there the remainder of his life. His early life had been spent in the fur-trade about Mackinac, in the Lake of the Woods region and about the sources of the Mississippi. During the War of 1812 he was able to furnish Governor Edwards valuable information in reference to the Indians in the Northwest. He filled the office of Postmaster at Cahokia for a number of years, and was Sheriff of St. Clair County from 1798 to 1818.

MOULTON, (Col.) George M., soldier and building contractor, was born at Readsburg, Vt., March 15, 1851, came early in life to Chicago, and was educated in the schools of that city. By profession he is a contractor and builder, the firm of which he is a member having been connected with the construction of a number of large buildings, including some extensive grain elevators. Colonel Moulton became a member of the Second Regiment Illinois National Guard in June, 1884, being elected to the office of Major, which he retained until January, 1893, when he was appointed Inspector of Rifle Practice on the staff of General Wheeler. A year later he was commissioned Colonel of the regiment, a position which he occupied at the time of the call by the President for troops to serve in the Spanish-American War in April, 1898. He promptly answered the call, and was sworn into the United States service at the head of his regiment early in May. The regiment was almost immediately ordered to Jacksonville, Fla., remaining there and at Savannah, Ga., until early in December, when it was transferred to Havana, Cuba. Here he was soon after appointed Chief of Police for the city of Havana, remaining in office until the middle of January, 1899, when he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Camp Columbia, near the city of Havana. In the latter part of March he returned with his regiment to Augusta, Ga., where it was mustered out, April 26, 1899, one year from the date of its arrival at Springfield. After leaving the service Colonel Moulton resumed his business as a contractor.

SHERMAN, Lawrence Y., legislator and Speaker of the Forty-first General Assembly, was born in Miami County, Ohio, Nov. 6, 1858; at 3 years of age came to Illinois, his parents settling at Industry, McDonough County. When he had reached the age of 10 years he went to Jasper County, where he grew to manhood, received his education in the common schools and in the law department of McKendree College, graduating from the latter, and, in 1881, located at Macomb, McDonough County. Here he began his career by driving a team upon the street in order to accumulate means enabling him to devote his entire attention to his chosen profession of law. He soon took an active interest in politics, was elected County Judge in 1886, and, at the expiration of his term, formed a partnership with George D. Tunncliffe and D. G. Tunncliffe, ex-Justice of the Supreme Court. In 1894 he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for Representative in the General Assembly, but withdrew to prevent a split in the party; was nominated and elected in 1896, and re-elected in 1898, and, at the succeeding session of the Forty-first General Assembly, was nominated by the Republican caucus and elected Speaker, as he was again of the Forty-second in 1901.

VINYARD, Philip, early legislator, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, came to Illinois at an early day, and settled in Pope County, which he represented in the lower branch of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth General Assemblies. He married Miss Matilda McCoy, the daughter of a prominent Illinois pioneer, and served as Sheriff of Pope County for a number of years. Died, at Golconda, in 1862.

SUPPLEMENT NO. II.

BLACK HAWK WAR, THE. The episode known in history under the name of "The Black Hawk War," was the most formidable conflict between the whites and Indians, as well as the most far-reaching in its results, that ever occurred upon the soil of Illinois. It takes its name from the Indian Chief, of the Sac tribe, Black Hawk (Indian name, Makatai Meshekiakia, meaning "Black Sparrow Hawk"), who was the leader of the hostile Indian band and a principal factor in the struggle. Black Hawk had been an ally of the British during the War of 1812-15, served with Tecumseh when the latter fell at the battle of the Thames in 1813, and, after the war, continued to maintain friendly relations with his "British father." The outbreak in Illinois had its origin in the construction put upon the treaty negotiated by Gen. William Henry Harrison with the Sac and Fox Indians on behalf of the United States Government, November 3, 1804, under which the Indians transferred to the Government nearly 15,000,000 acres of land comprising the region lying between the Wisconsin River on the north, Fox River of Illinois on the east and southeast, and the Mississippi on the west, for which the Government agreed to pay to the confederated tribes less than $2,500 in goods and the insignificant sum of $1,000 per annum in perpetuity. While the validity of the treaty was denied on the part of the Indians on the ground that it had originally been entered into by their chiefs under duress, while held as prisoners under a charge of murder at Jefferson Barracks, during which they had been kept in a state of constant intoxication, it had been repeatedly reaffirmed by parts or all of the tribe, especially in 1815, in 1816, in 1822 and in 1823, and finally recognized by Black Hawk himself in 1831. The part of the treaty of 1804 which was the immediate cause of the disagreement was that which stipulated that, so long as the lands ceded under it remained the property of the United States (that is, should not be transferred to private owners), "the Indians belonging to the said tribes shall enjoy the privilege of living or hunting upon them." Although these lands had not been put upon the market, or even surveyed, as "squatters" multiplied in this region little respect was paid to the treaty rights of the Indians, particularly with reference to those localities where, by reason of fertility of the soil or some other natural advantage, the Indians had established something like permanent homes and introduced a sort of crude cultivation. This was especially the case with reference to the Sac village of "Saukenuk" on the north bank of Rock River near its mouth, where the Indians, when not absent on the chase, had lived for over a century, had cultivated fields of corn and vegetables and had buried their dead. In the early part of the last century, it is estimated that some five hundred families had been accustomed to congregate here, making it the largest Indian village in the West. As early as 1823 the encroachments of squatters on the rights claimed by the Indians under the treaty of 1804 began; their fields were taken possession of by the intruders, their lodges burned and their women and children whipped and driven away during the absence of the men on their annual hunts. The dangers resulting from these conflicts led Governor Edwards, as early as 1828, to demand of the General Government the expulsion of the Indians from Illinois, which resulted in an order from President Jackson in 1829 for their removal west of the Mississippi. On application of Col. George Davenport, a trader of much influence with the Indians, the time was extended to April 1, 1830. During the preceding year Colonel Davenport and the firm of Davenport and Farnham bought from the United States Government most of the lands on Rock River occupied by Black Hawk's band, with the intention, as has been claimed, of permitting the Indians to remain. This was not so understood by Black Hawk, who was greatly incensed, although Davenport offered to take other lands from the Government in exchange or cancel the sale—an arrangement to which President Jackson would not consent. On their return in the spring of 1830, the Indians found whites in possession of their village. Prevented from cultivating their fields, and their annual hunt proving unsuccessful, the following winter proved for them one of great hardship. Black Hawk, having made a visit to his "British father" (the British Agent) at Malden, Canada, claimed to have received words of sympathy and encouragement, which induced him to determine to regain possession of their fields. In this he was encouraged by Neapope, his second in command, and by assurance of support from White Cloud, a half Sac and half Winnebago—known also as "The Prophet"—whose village (Prophet's Town) was some forty miles from the mouth of Rock River, and through whom Black Hawk claimed to have received promises of aid in guns, ammunition and provisions from the British. The reappearance of Black Hawk's band in the vicinity of his old haunts, in the spring of 1831, produced a wild panic among the frontier settlers. Messages were hurried to Governor Reynolds, who had succeeded Governor Edwards in December previous, appealing for protection against the savages. The Governor issued a call for 700 volunteers "to remove the band of Sac Indians" at Rock Island beyond the Mississippi. Although Gen. E. P. Gaines of the regular army, commanding the military district, thought the regulars sufficiently strong to cope with the situation, the Governor's proclamation was responded to by more than twice the number called for. The volunteers assembled early in June, 1831, at Beardstown, the place of rendezvous named in the call, and having been organized into two regiments under command of Col. James D. Henry and Col. Daniel Lieb, with a spy battalion under Gen. Joseph Duncan, marched across the country and, after effecting a junction with General Gaines' regulars, appeared before Black Hawk's village on the 25th of June. In the meantime General Gaines, having learned that the Pottawatomes, Winnebagos and Kickapoos had promised to join the Sacs in their uprising, asked the assistance of the battalion of mounted men previously offered by Governor Reynolds. The combined armies amounted to 2,500 men, while the fighting force of the Indians was 300. Finding himself overwhelmingly outnumbered, Black Hawk withdrew under cover of night to the west side of the Mississippi. After burning the village, General Gaines notified Black Hawk of his intention to pursue and attack his band, which had the effect to bring the fugitive chief to the General's headquarters, where, on June 30, a new treaty was entered into by which he bound himself and his people to remain west of the Mississippi unless permitted to return by the United States. This ended the campaign, and the volunteers returned to their homes, although the affair had produced an intense excitement along the whole frontier, and involved a heavy expense.

The next winter was spent by Black Hawk and his band on the site of old Fort Madison, in the present State of Iowa. Dissatisfied and humiliated by his repulse of the previous year, in disregard of his pledge to General Gaines, on April 6, 1832, at the head of 500 warriors and their families, he again crossed the Mississippi at Yellow Banks about the site of the present city of Oquawka, fifty miles below Rock Island, with the intention, as claimed, if not permitted to stop at his old village, to proceed to the Prophet's Town and raise a crop with the Winnebagoes. Here he was met by The Prophet with renewed assurances of aid from the Winnebagoes, which was still further strengthened by promises from the British Agent received through a visit by Neapope to Malden the previous autumn. An incident of this invasion was the effective warning given to the white settlers by Shabona, a friendly Ottawa chief, which probably had the effect to prevent a widespread massacre. Besides the towns of Galena and Chicago, the settlements in Illinois north of Fort Clark (Peoria) were limited to some thirty families on Bureau Creek with a few cabins at Hennepin, Peru, LaSalle, Ottawa, Indian Creek, Dixon, Kellogg's Grove, Apple Creek, and a few other points. Gen. Henry Atkinson, commanding the regulars at Fort Armstrong (Rock Island), having learned of the arrival of Black Hawk a week after he crossed the Mississippi, at once took steps to notify Governor Reynolds of the situation with a requisition for an adequate force of militia to cooperate with the regulars. Under date of April 16, 1832, the Governor issued his call for "a strong detachment of militia," to meet by April 22, Beardstown again being named as a place of rendezvous. The call resulted in the assembling of a force which was organized into four regiments under command of Cols. John DeWitt, Jacob Fry, John Thomas and Samuel M. Thompson, together with a spy battalion under Maj. James D. Henry, an odd battalion under Maj. Thomas James and a foot battalion under Maj. Thomas Long. To these were subsequently added two independent battalions of mounted men, under command of Majors Isaiah Stillman and David Bailey, which were finally consolidated as the Fifth Regiment under command of Col. James Johnson. The organization of the first four regiments at Beardstown was completed by April 27, and the force under command of Brigadier-General Whiteside (but accompanied by Governor Reynolds, who was allowed pay as Major General by the General Government) began its march to Fort Armstrong, arriving there May 7 and being mustered into the United States service. Among others accompanying the expedition who were then, or afterwards became, noted citizens of the State, were Vital Jarrot, Adjutant-General; Cyrus Edwards, Ordnance Officer; Murray McConnell, Staff Officer, and Abraham Lincoln, Captain of a company of volunteers from Sangamon County in the Fourth Regiment. Col. Zachary Taylor, then commander of a regiment of regulars, arrived at Fort Armstrong about the same time with reinforcements from Fort Leavenworth and Fort Crawford. The total force of militia amounted to 1,935 men, and of regulars about 1,000. An interesting story is told concerning a speech delivered to the volunteers by Colonel Taylor about this time. After reminding them of their duty to obey an order promptly, the future hero of the Mexican War added: "The safety of all depends upon the obedience and courage of all. You are citizen soldiers; some of you may fill high offices, or even be Presidents some day—but not if you refuse to do your duty. Forward, march!" A curious commentary upon this speech is furnished in the fact that, while Taylor himself afterwards became President, at least one of his hearers—a volunteer who probably then had no aspiration to that distinction (Abraham Lincoln)—reached the same position during the most dramatic period in the nation's history.

Two days after the arrival at Fort Armstrong, the advance up Rock River began, the main force of the volunteers proceeding by land under General Whiteside, while General Atkinson, with 400 regular and 300 volunteer foot soldiers, proceeded by boat, carrying with him the artillery, provisions and bulk of the baggage. Whiteside, advancing by the east bank of the river, was the first to arrive at the Prophet's Town, which, finding deserted, he pushed on to Dixon's Ferry (now Dixon), where he arrived May 12. Here he found the independent battalions of Stillman and Bailey with ammunition and supplies of which Whiteside stood in need. The mounted battalions under command of Major Stillman, having been sent forward by Whiteside as a scouting party, left Dixon on the 13th and, on the afternoon of the next day, went into camp in a strong position near the mouth of Sycamore Creek. As soon discovered, Black Hawk was in camp at the same time, as he afterwards claimed, with about forty of his braves, on Sycamore Creek, three miles distant, while the greater part of his band were encamped with the more war-like faction of the Pottawatomies some seven miles farther north on the Kishwaukee River. As claimed by Black Hawk in his autobiography, having been disappointed in his expectation of forming an alliance with the Winnebagoes and the Pottawatomies, he had at this juncture determined to return to the west side of the Mississippi. Hearing of the arrival of Stillman's command in the vicinity, and taking it for granted that this was the whole of Atkinson's command, he sent out three of his young men with a white flag, to arrange a parley and convey to Atkinson his offer to meet the latter in council. These were captured by some of Stillman's band regardless of their flag of truce, while a party of five other braves who followed to observe the treatment received by the flagbearers, were attacked and two of their number killed, the other three escaping to their camp. Black Hawk learning the fate of his truce party was aroused to the fiercest indignation. Tearing the flag to pieces with which he had intended to go into council with the whites, and appealing to his followers to avenge the murder of their comrades, he prepared for the attack. The rangers numbered 275 men, while Black Hawk's band has been estimated at less than forty. As the rangers caught sight of the Indians, they rushed forward in pell-mell fashion. Retiring behind a fringe of bushes, the Indians awaited the attack. As the rangers approached, Black Hawk and his party rose up with a war whoop, at the same time opening fire on their assailants. The further history of the affair was as much of a disgrace to Stillman's command as had been their desecration of the flag of truce. Thrown into panic by their reception by Black Hawk's little band, the rangers turned and, without firing a shot, began the retreat, dashing through their own camp and abandoning everything, which fell into the hands of the Indians. An attempt was made by one or two officers and a few of their men to check the retreat, but without success, the bulk of the fugitives continuing their mad rush for safety through the night until they reached Dixon, twenty-five miles distant, while many never stopped until they reached their homes, forty or fifty miles distant. The casualties to the rangers amounted to eleven killed and two wounded, while the Indian loss consisted of two spies and one of the flag-bearers, treacherously killed near Stillman's camp. This ill-starred affair, which has passed into history as "Stillman's defeat," produced a general panic along the frontier by inducing an exaggerated estimate of the strength of the Indian force, while it led Black Hawk to form a poor opinion of the courage of the white troops at the same time that it led to an exalted estimate of the prowess of his own little band—thus becoming an important factor in prolonging the war and in the bloody massacres which followed. Whiteside, with his force of 1,400 men, advanced to the scene of the defeat the next day and buried the dead, while on the 19th, Atkinson, with his force of regulars, proceeded up Rock River, leaving the remnant of Stillman's force to guard the wounded and supplies at Dixon. No sooner had he left than the demoralized fugitives of a few days before deserted their post for their homes, compelling Atkinson to return for the protection of his base of supplies, while Whiteside was ordered to follow the trail of Black Hawk who had started up the Kishwaukee for the swamps about Lake Koshkonong, nearly west of Milwaukee within the present State of Wisconsin.

At this point the really active stage of the campaign began. Black Hawk, leaving the women and children of his band in the fastnesses of the swamps, divided his followers into two bands, retaining about 200 under his own command, while the notorious half-breed, Mike Girty, led a band of one hundred renegade Pottawatomies. Returning to the vicinity of Rock Island, he gathered some recruits from the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes, and the work of rapine and massacre among the frontier settlers began. One of the most notable of these was the Indian Creek Massacre in LaSalle County, about twelve miles north of Ottawa, on May 21, when sixteen persons were killed at the Home of William Davis, and two young girls—Sylvia and Rachel Hall, aged, respectively, 17 and 15 years—were carried away captives. The girls were subsequently released, having been ransomed for $2,000 in horses and trinkets through a Winnebago Chief and surrendered to sub-agent Henry Gratiot. Great as was the emergency at this juncture, the volunteers began to manifest evidence of dissatisfaction and, claiming that they had served out their term of enlistment, refused to follow the Indians into the swamps of Wisconsin. As the result of a council of war, the volunteers were ordered to Ottawa, where they were mustered out on May 28, by Lieut. Robt. Anderson, afterwards General Anderson of Fort Sumter fame. Meanwhile Governor Reynolds had issued his call (with that of 1831 the third,) for 2,000 men to serve during the war. Gen. Winfield Scott was also ordered from the East with 1,000 regulars although, owing to cholera breaking out among the troops, they did not arrive in time to take part in the campaign. The rank and file of volunteers responding under the new call was 3,148, with recruits and regulars then in Illinois making an army of 4,000. Pending the arrival of the troops under the new call, and to meet an immediate emergency, 300 men were enlisted from the disbanded rangers for a period of twenty days, and organized into a regiment under command of Col. Jacob Fry, with James D. Henry as Lieutenant Colonel and John Thomas as Major. Among those who enlisted as privates in this regiment were Brig.-Gen. Whiteside and Capt. Abraham Lincoln. A regiment of five companies, numbering 195 men, from Putnam County under command of Col. John Strawn, and another of eight companies from Vermilion County under Col. Isaac R. Moore, were organized and assigned to guard duty for a period of twenty days.

The new volunteers were rendezvoused at Fort Wilbourn, nearly opposite Peru, June 15, and organized into three brigades, each consisting of three regiments and a spy battalion. The First Brigade (915 strong) was placed under command of Brig.-Gen. Alexander Posey, the Second under Gen. Milton K. Alexander, and the third under Gen. James D. Henry. Others who served as officers in some of these several organizations, and afterwards became prominent in State history, were Lieut.-Col. Gurdon S. Hubbard of the Vermilion County regiment; John A. McClernand, on the staff of General Posey; Maj. John Dement; then State Treasurer; Stinson H. Anderson, afterwards Lieutenant-Governor; Lieut.-Gov. Zadoc Casey; Maj. William McHenry; Sidney Breese (afterwards Judge of the State Supreme Court and United States Senator); W. L. D. Ewing (as Major of a spy battalion, afterwards United States Senator and State Auditor); Alexander W. Jenkins (afterwards Lieutenant-Governor); James W. Semple (afterwards United States Senator); and William Weatherford (afterwards a Colonel in the Mexican War), and many more. Of the Illinois troops, Posey's brigade was assigned to the duty of dispersing the Indians between Galena and Rock River, Alexander's sent to intercept Black Hawk up the Rock River, while Henry's remained with Gen. Atkinson at Dixon. During the next two weeks engagements of a more or less serious character were had on the Pecatonica on the southern border of the present State of Wisconsin; at Apple River Fort fourteen miles east of Galena, which was successfully defended against a force under Black Hawk himself, and at Kellogg's Grove the next day (June 25), when the same band ambushed Maj. Dement's spy battalion, and came near inflicting a defeat, which was prevented by Dement's coolness and the timely arrival of reinforcements. In the latter engagement the whites lost five killed besides 47 horses which had been tethered outside their lines, the loss of the Indians being sixteen killed. Skirmishes also occurred with varying results, at Plum River Fort, Burr Oak Grove, Sinsiniwa and Blue Mounds—the last two within the present State of Wisconsin.

Believing the bulk of the Indians to be camped in the vicinity of Lake Koshkonong, General Atkinson left Dixon June 27 with a combined force of regulars and volunteers numbering 2,600 men—the volunteers being under the command of General Henry. They reached the outlet of the Lake July 2, but found no Indians, being joined two days later by General Alexander's brigade, and on the 6th by Gen. Posey's. From here the commands of Generals Henry and Alexander were sent for supplies to Fort Winnebago, at the Portage of the Wisconsin; Colonel Ewing, with the Second Regiment of Posey's brigade descending Rock River to Dixon, Posey with the remainder, going to Fort Hamilton for the protection of settlers in the lead-mining region, while Atkinson, advancing with the regulars up Lake Koshkonong, began the erection of temporary fortifications on Bark River near the site of the present village of Fort Atkinson. At Fort Winnebago Alexander and Henry obtained evidence of the actual location of Black Hawk's camp through Pierre Poquette, a half-breed scout and trader in the employ of the American Fur Company, whom they employed with a number of Winnebagoes to act as guides. From this point Alexander's command returned to General Atkinson's headquarters, carrying with them twelve day's provisions for the main army, while General Henry's (600 strong), with Major Dodge's battalion numbering 150, with an equal quantity of supplies for themselves, started under the guidance of Poquette and his Winnebago aids to find Black Hawk's camp. Arriving on the 18th at the Winnebago village on Rock River where Black Hawk and his band had been located, their camp was found deserted, the Winnebagoes insisting that they had gone to Cranberry (now Horicon) Lake, a half-day's march up the river. Messengers were immediately dispatched to Atkinson's headquarters, thirty-five miles distant, to apprise him of this fact. When they had proceeded about half the distance, they struck a broad, fresh trail, which proved to be that of Black Hawk's band headed westward toward the Mississippi. The guide having deserted them in order to warn his tribesmen that further dissembling to deceive the whites as to the whereabouts of the Sacs was useless, the messengers were compelled to follow him to General Henry's camp. The discovery produced the wildest enthusiasm among the volunteers, and from this time-events followed in rapid succession. Leaving as far as possible all incumbrances behind, the pursuit of the fugitives was begun without delay, the troops wading through swamps sometimes in water to their armpits. Soon evidence of the character of the flight the Indians were making, in the shape of exhausted horses, blankets, and camp equipage cast aside along the trail, began to appear, and straggling bands of Winnebagoes, who had now begun to desert Black Hawk, gave information that the Indians were only a few miles in advance. On the evening of the 20th of July Henry's forces encamped at "The Four Lakes," the present site of the city of Madison, Wis., Black Hawk's force lying in ambush the same night seven or eight miles distant. During the next afternoon the rear-guard of the Indians under Neapope was overtaken and skirmishing continued until the bluffs of the Wisconsin were reached. Black Hawk's avowed object was to protect the passage of the main body of his people across the stream. The loss of the Indians in these skirmishes has been estimated at 40 to 68, while Black Hawk claimed that it was only six killed, the loss of the whites being one killed and eight wounded. During the night Black Hawk succeeded in placing a considerable number of the women and children and old men on a raft and in canoes obtained from the Winnebagoes, and sent them down the river, believing that, as non-combatants, they would be permitted by the regulars to pass Fort Crawford, at the mouth of the Wisconsin, undisturbed. In this he was mistaken. A force sent from the fort under Colonel Ritner to intercept them, fired mercilessly upon the helpless fugitives, killing fifteen of their number, while about fifty were drowned and thirty-two women and children made prisoners. The remainder, escaping into the woods, with few exceptions died from starvation and exposure, or were massacred by their enemies, the Menominees, acting under white officers. During the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights, a loud, shrill voice of some one speaking in an unknown tongue was heard in the direction where Black Hawk's band was supposed to be. This caused something of a panic in Henry's camp, as it was supposed to come from some one giving orders for an attack. It was afterwards learned that the speaker was Neapope speaking in the Winnebago language in the hope that he might be heard by Poquette and the Winnebago guides. He was describing the helpless condition of his people, claiming that the war had been forced upon them, that their women and children were starving, and that, if permitted peacefully to recross the Mississippi, they would give no further trouble. Unfortunately Poquette and the other guides had left for Fort Winnebago, so that no one was there to translate Neapope's appeal and it failed of its object.

General Henry's force having discovered that the Indians had escaped—Black Hawk heading with the bulk of his warriors towards the Mississippi—spent the next and day night on the field, but on the following day (July 23) started to meet General Atkinson, who had, in the meantime, been notified of the pursuit. The head of their columns met at Blue Mounds, the same evening, a complete junction between the regulars and the volunteers being effected at Helena, a deserted village on the Wisconsin. Here by using the logs of the deserted cabins for rafts, the army crossed the river on the 27th and the 28th and the pursuit of black Hawk's fugitive band was renewed. Evidence of their famishing condition was found in the trees stripped of bark for food, the carcasses of dead ponies, with here and there the dead body of an Indian.

On August 1, Black Hawk's depleted and famishing band reached the Mississippi two miles below the mouth of the Bad Ax, an insignificant stream, and immediately began trying to cross the river; but having only two or three canoes, the work was slow. About the middle of the afternoon the steam transport, "Warrior," appeared on the scene, having on board a score of regulars and volunteers, returning from a visit to the village of the Sioux Chief, Wabasha, to notify him that his old enemies, the Sacs, were headed in that direction. Black Hawk raised the white flag in token of surrender, but the officer in command claiming that he feared treachery or an ambush, demanded that Black Hawk should come on board. This he was unable to do, as he had no canoe. After waiting a few minutes a murderous fire of canister and musketry was opened from the steamer on the few Indians on shore, who made such feeble resistance as they were able. The result was the killing of one white man and twenty-three Indians. After this exploit the "Warrior" proceeded to Prairie du Chien, twelve or fifteen miles distant, for fuel. During the night a few more of the Indians crossed the river, but Black Hawk, seeing the hopelessness of further resistance, accompanied by the Prophet, and taking with him a party of ten warriors and thirty-five squaws and children, fled in the direction of "the dells" of the Wisconsin. On the morning of the 2d General Atkinson arrived within four or five miles of the Sac position. Disposing his forces with the regulars and Colonel Dodge's rangers in the center, the brigades of Posey and Alexander on the right and Henry's on the left, he began the pursuit, but was drawn by the Indian decoys up the river from the place where the main body of the Indians were trying to cross the stream. This had the effect of leaving General Henry in the rear practically without orders, but it became the means of making his command the prime factors in the climax which followed. Some of the spies attached to Henry's command having accidentally discovered the trail of the main body of the fugitives, he began the pursuit without waiting for orders and soon found himself engaged with some 300 savages, a force nearly equal to his own. It was here that the only thing like a regular battle occurred. The savages fought with the fury of despair, while Henry's force was no doubt nerved to greater deeds of courage by the insult which they conceived had been put upon them by General Atkinson. Atkinson, hearing the battle in progress and discovering that he was being led off on a false scent, soon joined Henry's force with his main army, and the steamer "Warrior," arriving from Prairie du Chien, opened a fire of canister upon the pent-up Indians. The battle soon degenerated into a massacre. In the course of the three hours through which it lasted, it is estimated that 150 Indians were killed by fire from the troops, an equal number of both sexes and all ages drowned while attempting to cross the river or by being driven into it, while about 50 (chiefly women and children) were made prisoners. The loss of the whites was 20 killed and 13 wounded. When the "battle" was nearing its close it is said that Black Hawk, having repented the abandonment of his people, returned within sight of the battle-ground, but seeing the slaughter in progress which he was powerless to avert, he turned and, with a howl of rage and horror, fled into the forest. About 300 Indians (mostly non-combatants) succeeded in crossing the river in a condition of exhaustion from hunger and fatigue, but these were set upon by the Sioux under Chief Wabasha, through the suggestion and agency of General Atkinson, and nearly one-half their number exterminated. Of the remainder many died from wounds and exhaustion, while still others perished while attempting to reach Keokuk's band who had refused to join in Black Hawk's desperate venture. Of one thousand who crossed to the east side of the river with Black Hawk in April, it is estimated that not more than 150 survived the tragic events of the next four months.

General Scott, having arrived at Prairie du Chien early in August, assumed command and, on August 15, mustered out the volunteers at Dixon, Ill. After witnessing the bloody climax at the Bad Axe of his ill-starred invasion, Black Hawk fled to the dells of the Wisconsin, where he and the Prophet surrendered themselves to the Winnebagoes, by whom they were delivered to the Indian Agent at Prairie du Chien. Having been taken to Fort Armstrong on September 21, he there signed a treaty of peace. Later he was taken to Jefferson Barracks (near St. Louis) in the custody of Jefferson Davis, then a Lieutenant in the regular army, where he was held a captive during the following winter. The connection of Davis with the Black Hawk War, mentioned by many historians, seems to have been confined to this act. In April, 1833, with the Prophet and Neapope, he was taken to Washington and then to Fortress Monroe, where they were detained as prisoners of war until June 4, when they were released. Black Hawk, after being taken to many principal cities in order to impress him with the strength of the American nation, was brought to Fort Armstrong, and there committed to the guardianship of his rival, Keokuk, but survived this humiliation only a few years, dying on a small reservation set apart for him in Davis County, Iowa, October 3, 1838.

Such is the story of the Black Hawk War, the most notable struggle with the aborigines in Illinois history. At its beginning both the State and national authorities were grossly misled by an exaggerated estimate of the strength of Black Hawk's force as to numbers and his plans for recovering the site of his old village, while

Black Hawk had conceived a low estimate of the numbers and courage of his white enemies, especially after the Stillman defeat. The cost of the war to the State and nation in money has been estimated at $2,000,000, and in sacrifice of life on both sides at not less than 1,200. The loss of life by the troops in irregular skirmishes, and in massacres of settlers by the Indians, aggregated about 250, while an equal number of regulars perished from a visitation of cholera at the various stations within the district affected by the war, especially at Detroit, Chicago, Fort Armstrong and Galena. Yet it is the judgment of later historians that nearly all this sacrifice of life and treasure might have been avoided, but for a series of blunders due to the blind or unscrupulous policy of officials or interloping squatters upon lands which the Indians had occupied under the treaty of 1804. A conspicuous blunder—to call it by no harsher name—was the violation by Stillman's command of the rules of civilized warfare in the attack made upon Black Hawk's messengers, sent under flag of truce to request a conference to settle terms under which he might return to the west side of the Mississippi—an act which resulted in a humiliating and disgraceful defeat for its authors and proved the first step in actual war. Another misfortune was the failure to understand Neapope's appeal for peace and permission for his people to pass beyond the Mississippi the night after the battle of Wisconsin Heights; and the third and most inexcusable blunder of all, was the refusal of the officer in command of the "Warrior" to respect Black Hawk's flag of truce and request for a conference just before the bloody massacre which has gone into history under the name of the "battle of the Bad Axe." Either of these events, properly availed of, would have prevented much of the butchery of that bloody episode which has left a stain upon the page of history, although this statement implies no disposition to detract from the patriotism and courage of some of the leading actors upon whom the responsibility was placed of protecting the frontier settler from outrage and massacre. One of the features of the war was the bitter jealousy engendered by the unwise policy pursued by General Atkinson towards some of the volunteers—especially the treatment of General James D. Henry, who, although subjected to repeated slights and insults, is regarded by Governor Ford and others as the real hero of the war. Too brave a soldier to shirk any responsibility and too modest to exploit his own deeds, he felt deeply the studied purpose of his superior to ignore him in the conduct of the campaign—a purpose which, as in the affair at the Bad Axe, was defeated by accident or by General Henry's soldierly sagacity and attention to duty, although he gave out to the public no utterance of complaint. Broken in health by the hardships and exposures of the campaign, he went South soon after the war and died of consumption, unknown and almost alone, in the city of New Orleans, less two years later.

Aside from contemporaneous newspaper accounts, monographs, and manuscripts on file in public libraries relating to this epoch in State history, the most comprehensive records of the Black Hawk War are to be found in the "Life of Black Hawk," dictated by himself (1834); Wakefield's "History of the War between the United States and the Sac and Fox Nations" (1834); Drake's "Life of Black Hawk" (1854); Ford's "History of Illinois" (1854); Reynolds' "Pioneer History of Illinois; and "My Own Times"; Davidson & Stuve's and Moses' Histories of Illinois; Blanchard's "The Northwest and Chicago"; Armstrong's "The Sauks and the Black Hawk War," and Reuben G. Thwaite's "Story of the Black Hawk War" (1892).

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, a village in the southern part of Cook County, twenty-eight miles south of the central part of Chicago, on the Chicago & Eastern Illinois, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern and the Michigan Central Railroads; is located in an agricultural region, but has some manufactures as well as good schools—also has one newspaper. Population (1900), 5,100.

GRANITE, a city of Madison County, located five miles north of St. Louis on the lines of the Burlington; the Chicago & Alton; Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis; Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis (Illinois), and the Wabash Railways. It is adjacent to the Merchants' Terminal Bridge across the Mississippi and has considerable manufacturing and grain-storage business; has two newspapers. Population (1900), 3,122.

HARLEM, a village of Proviso Township, Cook County, and suburb of Chicago, on the line of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, nine miles west of the terminal station at Chicago. Harlem originally embraced the village of Oak Park, now a part of the city of Chicago, but, in 1884, was set off and incorporated as a village. Considerable manufacturing is done here. Population (1900), 4,085.

HARVEY, a city of Cook County, and an important manufacturing suburb of the city of Chicago, three miles southwest of the southern city limits. It is on the line of the Illinois Central and the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railways, and has extensive manufactures of harvesting, street and steam railway machinery, gasoline stoves, enameled ware, etc.; also has one newspaper and ample school facilities. Population (1900), 5,395.

IOWA CENTRAL RAILWAY, a railway line having its principal termini at Peoria, Ill., and Manly Junction, nine miles north of Mason City, Iowa, with several lateral branches making connections with Centerville, Newton, State Center, Story City, Algona and Northwood in the latter State. The total length of line owned, leased and operated by the Company, officially reported in 1899, was 508.98 miles, of which 89.76 miles—including 3.5 miles trackage facilities on the Peoria & Pekin Union between Iowa Junction and Peoria—were in Illinois. The Illinois division extends from Keithsburg—where it enters the State at the crossing of the Mississippi—to Peoria.—(HISTORY.) The Iowa Central Railway Company was originally chartered as the Central Railroad Company of Iowa and the road completed in October, 1871. In 1873 it passed into the hands of a receiver and, on June 4, 1879, was reorganized under the name of the Central Iowa Railway Company. In May, 1883, this company purchased the Peoria & Farmington Railroad, which was incorporated into the main line, but defaulted and passed into the hands of a receiver December 1, 1886; the line was sold under foreclosure in 1887 and 1888, to the Iowa Central Railway Company, which had effected a new organization on the basis of $11,000,000 common stock, $6,000,000 preferred stock and $1,379,625 temporary debt certificates convertible into preferred stock, and $7,500,000 first mortgage bonds. The transaction was completed, the receiver discharged and the road turned over to the new company, May 15, 1889.—(FINANCIAL.) The total capitalization of the road in 1899 was $21,337,558, of which $14,159,180 was in stock, $6,650,095 in bonds and $528,283 in other forms of indebtedness. The total earnings and income of the line in Illinois for the same year were $532,568, and the expenditures $566,333.

SPARTA, a city of Randolph County, situated on the Centralia & Chester and the Mobile & Ohio Railroads, twenty miles northwest of Chester and fifty miles southeast of St. Louis. It has a number of manufacturing establishments, including plow factories, a woolen mill, a cannery and creameries; also has natural gas. The first settler was James McClurken, from South Carolina, who settled here in 1818. He was joined by James Armour a few years later, who bought land of McClurken, and together they laid out a village, which first received the name of Columbus. About the same time Robert G. Shannon, who had been conducting a mercantile business in the vicinity, located in the town and became the first Postmaster. In 1839 the name of the town was changed to Sparta. Mr. McClurken, its earliest settler, appears to have been a man of considerable enterprise, as he is credited with having built the first cotton gin in this vicinity, besides still later, erecting saw and flour mills and a woolen mill. Sparta was incorporated as a village in 1837 and in 1859 as a city. A colony of members of the Reformed Presbyterian Church (Covenanters or "Seceders") established at Eden, a beautiful site about a mile from Sparta, about 1822, cut an important figure in the history of the latter place, as it became the means of attracting here an industrious and thriving population. At a later period it became one of the most important stations of the "Underground Railroad" (so called) in Illinois (which see). The population of Sparta (1890) was 1,979; (1900), 2,041.

TOLUCA, a city of Marshall County situated on the line of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, 18 miles southwest of Streator. It is in the center of a rich agricultural district; has the usual church and educational facilities of cities of its rank, and two newspapers. Population (1900), 2,629.

WEST HAMMOND, a village situated in the northeast corner of Thornton Township, Cook County, adjacent to Hammond, Ind., from which it is separated by the Indiana State line. It is on the Michigan Central Railroad, one mile south of the Chicago City limits, and has convenient access to several other lines, including the Chicago & Erie; New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and Western Indiana Railroads. Like its Indiana neighbor, it is a manufacturing center of much importance, was incorporated as a village in 1892, and has grown rapidly within the last few years, having a population, according to the census of 1900, of 2,935.

HISTORY OF COLES COUNTY

CHAPTER I.

PRIMITIVE CONDITIONS.

THE COUNTY BEFORE SETTLEMENT—PHYSICAL FEATURES AND CHARACTERISTICS—GEOLOGY—WATER COURSES—FLORA—INDIGENOUS PLANTS AND FRUITS—SOME HISTORIC GROVES—THE PRAIRIE SOIL AND ITS PRODUCTS—WILD ANIMALS, BIRDS AND OTHER GAME—REPTILES AND INSECTS—A PIONEER'S RECREATION AND A BACKWOODS TWILIGHT SCENE—CLIMATE AND EARLY DISEASES—CHANGES PRODUCED BY CULTIVATION AND DRAINAGE.

When the first white men came to the territory now known as Coles County, they found no great mountains or splendid scenery, but a country very level except near water courses, and near them only moderately hilly. They found a country whose rivers and creeks were not generally attractive, with gravelly banks and sandy bottoms, and surrounded by picturesque views, as in many other places, but streams bordered with black soil along the smaller creeks, and generally with clay banks along the larger ones, except in a few places along the Embarras, where there are rocky bluffs and somewhat rugged shores.

Geology.—No systematic and scientific investigation of the formation of the strata below the surface of the land in Coles County has ever been made. Beneath the soil is yellow clay, below that a hard blue clay, and still lower, in many parts, is a layer of gravel and sand, which is full of water, and is the source of the water supply obtained for the City of Mattoon at a depth of sixty to seventy-five feet. Below that is a whitish shale and, at intervals at a greater depth are strata of stone, sand, slate and coal. Salt water is found in abundance at various depths. Coal has not been found in deposits sufficiently thick to be mined profitably.

About 1880, after preliminary borings had been made, a shaft was sunk at Mattoon to a depth of nine hundred feet, and mining operations begun at that depth upon a vein about four or five feet thick. It was found to be a good free burning quality of soft coal, but after several years of effort to mine it at a profit, the mine was closed about 1885 and the project abandoned. A shaft was started in the west part of the city of Charleston about the same time, but before reaching the coal, it also was abandoned. Thin veins of coal cropped out at an early day along the high bluffs upon the Embarras River, and some of it was taken out and used by the early settlers.

At an early day stone was quarried along the Embarras to some extent for building purposes, and for the use of the railroads; but for many years that has been abandoned. The LeBaron History states that the "quality of the stone was poor, and of but little value for building purposes." Since then, however, other beds have been opened up and a stone of light brown color has been found and tested, which has proven of such superior quality that the Court House, the Christian Church and other buildings at Charleston have been constructed of it.

Some thirty or thirty-five years ago gas was found near the north line of the county in Seven Hickory Township, and also in the town of Paradise, at a depth varying from seventy to one hundred feet, which had fairly good illuminating and heating qualities. Several residences in the latter township have, for many years, been lighted and heated by this natural gas. It has also been found recently in the west part of Mattoon at about the same depth. The pressure of the gas so far found is small, and it therefore cannot be made available for general use. Whether this gas is generated at about the depth found, or whether it is a leak through some crevice in the rock far below, which, if penetrated, would produce an abundant supply, is a much mooted question.

Oil has, within the past year or two, been found in Clark County near the southeastern part of Coles and land in that vicinity in this county has been leased for the purpose of putting down test wells. Parties have also executed leases recently in other parts of Coles County for the same purpose.

The stratum of stone known as Trenton Rock, which overlies oil and gas in other States, is estimated to lie from twenty-five hundred to three thousand feet below the surface in this county, and some enterprising individuals or company will sooner or later penetrate that rock and settle the question whether oil or gas can be found here in paying quantities.

Up to this time the "bowels of the earth" in this county have never been penetrated beyond a depth of sixteen to seventeen hundred feet.

Water Courses.—The principal water course in the county is the Embarras River, so named by the early French explorers, and their pronunciation of the name has been corrupted into "Ambraw," which is the spelling now very commonly used. This stream often overflowed its banks in early days, and, for several miles above its mouth, its waters sometimes united with those of the Wabash in high freshets; and, even when the waters of both were within their banks, the country between Fort Vincennes and the Embarras River was swampy. A large tract between those places was then called "Purgatory Swamp," or "Devil's Holes," in which animals, and sometimes men, were lost, so that the services of an experienced guide were required at certain seasons in going over that swampy country by the early travelers, when they desired to journey from or to Kaskaskia over the obscure path known as the "Vincennes Trace," which stretched between those settlements. These troublesome conditions caused the French settlers to give the name "Embarras" to this stream. The French word having a similar meaning to that our word "embarrass."

The Embarras heads in Champaign County and enters Coles County near the northwest corner of East Oakland Township, and continuing west of south, emerges from the county near the southwest corner of Section 23 T. 11 N. R. 9 E., thence it flows south and east to the Wabash.

The principal tributary streams flowing into the Embarras River in Coles County are: Hogue's Branch which, heading in Douglas County, flows down near to the village of Oakland, thence northwest into the Embarras; Donica's Branch, heading in Ashmore Township, flows north, forming a junction with Brush Creek about Section 29; and Brush Creek, heading in Edgar County, flows through the town of East Oakland, emptying into the Embarras at the northwest corner of Ashmore Township.

A small creek, starting near the village of Ashmore, flows northwest and empties into Brush Creek just above its mouth. Another creek, heading in Ashmore Township, which flows north and pours into the Embarras just below the mouth of Brush Creek, is called "Devil's Run." Pole Cat Creek starts in Edgar County, flows through the town of Ashmore into the Embarras about at Section 8 in T. 12 N. R. 10 E.

Whetstone Creek flows west through the north part of Hutton Township and into the Embarras.

Hurricane Creek has several heads in the town of Hutton known as East Branch, West Branch, Lizard Creek, Miller's Branch and Clear Creek. All flow southward, forming junctions at various points until they reach the Embarras in Cumberland County.

Streams on the west side of the Embarras, in Coles County, are: Greasy Creek, which heads in Seven Hickory Township and flows northeast through the north part of Morgan Township into the Embarras, and Dry Branch, which, heading about in the central part of Morgan, flows northeast into the Embarras.

Kickapoo Creek, heading near Mattoon and having two principal branches on the north; Riley Creek, which has heads in LaFayette, Humboldt and Seven Hickory Townships, and Cossell Creek, heading in Seven Hickory Township—all form a junction just before they reach the Kickapoo. The latter empties into the Embarras in the southeast corner of Charleston Township.

Indian Creek, having two branches (North and South), heads in Pleasant Grove Township and flows east into the Embarras.

In the southeast part of Pleasant Grove Township are the headwaters of Cottonwood Creek, which flows south into Cumberland County, forming a junction there with Muddy Creek, which heads still farther north, and Clear Creek, which heads in the extreme northwestern part of the same township, all reaching the Embarras near the south line of Cumberland County.

A smaller river is the Kaskaskia, generally called the "Okaw." The derivation of this shorter name is not quite so obvious as in the case of the Ambraw. The French settlers who gave it the name Kaskaskia, early began to shorten it by referring to it by the first syllable only as the "Kas." Prefixing the article "Au"

(a common practice), it became "Au Kas," which was easily and naturally changed by the later American settlers into "Okaw." This stream heads in Champaign County and enters Coles at the dividing line between the towns of Humboldt and North Okaw, and flowing southwest goes out of the county at Section 19 T. 13 N. R. 7 E. Thence continuing south and west, it empties into the Mississippi near the place where stood the old trading post of Kaskaskia in Randolph County, which was taken from the English, July 4, 1778, by Col. George Rogers Clark.

A coincidence is, that the Embarras enters the Wabash River but a little way below Vincennes, where stood that other fort and trading post, which was captured the following spring from the English and Indians by Colonel Clark.

These victories of George Rogers Clark—the one near the mouth of the Kaskaskia on the western border of Illinois, and the other near the mouth of the Embarras at the eastern border of the State—settled forever the fact that Illinois and all the vast Northwest Territory should, thenceforward, be a part of the United States and not belong to some foreign country.

The tributaries to the Kaskaskia in Coles County are few and rather small creeks.

Flat Branch heads in Seven Hickory, and flows west across Humboldt Township, emptying into the Kaskaskia near the northwest corner of Section 1 T. 14 N. R. 7 E.

Crab Apple Creek starts in the town of Humboldt, and flows west through the south part of North Okaw, reaching the Kaskaskia in Moultrie County.

Whitley's Creek begins in the town of Mattoon and flows west into the Okaw. The streams just mentioned are the most important.

Butter Milk Creek is a small stream starting in the northeast part of the town of Paradise and, flowing south and west into Cumberland County, empties into Muddy Creek.

The Little Wabash, which becomes quite a large stream before it pours its waters into the Wabash River, has one head near the city of Mattoon and another in Shelby County. The Coles County branch runs south through Paradise into Cumberland County, where it joins the Shelby County branch and flows south and east, reaching the Big Wabash at the northeast corner of Gallatin County.

These were the streams which the pioneers found here and along whose borders the first settlements were made. They carried larger quantities of water then than they do now—a condition in those early days, which was due not so much, perhaps, to a greater rainfall (although that was somewhat larger then), as to the vast quantities of water stored and retained in the sloughs and ponds upon the prairies, and which fed their waters gradually and constantly to the streams, thus keeping up the flow during the dry season and augmenting it in times of heavy rains. The Embarras, Kaskaskia and Little Wabash in early days were all navigable streams for small craft for a considerable distance above their mouths, and both state and national appropriations were made for their improvement as such.

These rivers teemed with fish life. Besides those varieties now found in them—such as Black Bass, Rock Bass ("goggle-eye"), Crappie ("Newlight"), Catfish and the little Sunfish—there were many varieties of so-called Sunfish and Red Perch or Bream and the pike, redhorse, buffalo, white sucker, chub, shiner, grindley, carfish and eel. They were also well stocked with the shell fish called mussel. The smaller creeks thronged with minnows and the young of the larger species.

Some years ago the German carp got into these waters and like that other importation from the Old World, the English sparrow, it has become a nuisance. The better game fishes do not like the company of this bottom-feeding, mud-wallowing foreigner, and are gradually becoming more rare in Coles County streams.

Flora.—Timber was abundant in early days, and many splendid forest "monarchs" were found here by the first settlers, measuring from four to six, and some even seven, feet in diameter. This timber bordered all the large streams and followed the smaller creeks back several miles, in many places, away from the main river. Along the Embarras the timber belt varied from two to six miles in width, and a little less along the Kaskaskia.

The kinds of trees found here were: Oak of several varieties, including white, black, red, burr, pin, water, post, scrub, chinquapin and jack-oak; Walnut—black and white (or butternut); Hickory of the kind variously called shag-bark, shell-bark, and scaly-bark, the pignut and swamp hickory; Elm—white and red; Maple—several varieties, including the sugar-trees, which, in some places, were numerous enough for the settlers to have their "sugar camps," converting the sap each spring into delicious syrup and sugar; honey-locust, linden, cottonwood, sycamore, buckeye, pecan, mulberry, wild cherry, box-elder, birch, hackberry, basswood, quaking asp, gum, willow, thorn, beech, sassafras and persimmon.

Interspersed between and among this larger timber, some of these varieties extending farther into the prairie region, were red-bud, dog-wood, paw-paw, sumach, plum (of many varieties and producing its fruit in "wagon loads"), crabapple, spicebush, greenbrier, hazel, black and red haw, prickly ash, wafer ash and ironwood.

There were splendid great grape vines of the fall-grape, winter-grape and fox-grape varieties, which furnished enormous quantities of their fruit, some of which was converted into wine by the early settlers.

Another vine that the pioneer's children early learned to shun, was the poison ivy. Simply coming in contact with it caused an eruption upon the skin, with swelling and a burning and itching sensation often accompanied by pain. Several days, and sometimes weeks, were required to recover from its effects.

In and bordering upon the timber and thickets, were many fruit-bearing small shrubs and vines, as blackberry, raspberry, gooseberry, elderberry, wild currants, dewberry, buckberry and others. These, in their season, all added variety to the pioneer's bill of fare and were made into jams and preserves for winter use.

There were several detached bodies of timber or groves in the county, such as "Dodge Grove," about two miles north of Mattoon in Section 2, which received its name from the fact that one Whitley once hid a horse in that grove, to keep it from being found by parties who claimed to have won it in a bet on a horse-race. The horse thus "dodged" its pursuers.

Dead Man's Grove in LaFayette, northeast of Mattoon, in Sections 3 and 4 T. 12 N. R. 8, was so named because a man was found dead there by some of the first settlers or the Indians, and his body was said to have been taken on a horse by Samuel Kellogg, to the John Parker settlement on the Ambraw and there buried. Blue Grass Grove, near Humboldt, about the southeast part of Section 4 and vicinity, received its name from the extensive growth of blue-grass about it. Dry Grove and Buck Grove, south of Mattoon about four miles (the first named in the northeast part of Paradise Township and the second in northwest part of Pleasant Grove)—the origin of whose names is now only guess work—and Seven Hickory Grove from which the town in which it is located was named, were notable localities at an early day.

The first comers here said that there were only seven hickory trees in Hickory Grove originally, and no other timber of any kind; but it soon spread and developed into a large grove, not alone of hickory but gradually of other species of timber. Those trees were near the northeast corner of Section 20, in T. 13 R. 9.

There was much speculation as to the cause of these detached clumps of timber and many theories were promulgated. The most reasonable one, perhaps, was that, as they were all upon relatively high ground, the wolves had, through previous years, been accustomed to make dens there, and their digging in the ground had given the needed means for the sprouting of nuts and seeds dropped by animals, birds or Indians. There were always wolves' dens in and about these groves, and wolves never made dens in low ground which was liable to be flooded in wet seasons.

Between the tracts of timber and surrounding these groves was the prairie land, not attractive as a place of settlement in those early days, because of the water that covered so much of its surface in some seasons of the year and because wood for fuel and other purposes was needed near at hand. All the lower parts of this comparatively level prairie were covered with water a part of each year, and, in many places, a horse could swim in it after a time of much rain. The writer, when a boy, in the winter of 1860-61 went with a friend some seven miles north of Charleston, starting early in the morning to make the trip on foot. There was thin ice upon the ponds and sloughs, not strong enough to bear one up. Each step was through the thin ice and into slush or water. Upon various stages of the trip we were obliged to go around, or "coon" the occasional fences, over long stretches of water, so that our destination was not reached until in the afternoon. The worst of these "sloughs" we encountered was fully one-fourth of a mile across, and, perhaps, from three to five feet deep in the middle. That slough was in Section 10-13-9, and one visiting that neighborhood now, would never suspect its former "moist" condition.

Prairies and Their Products.—"Prairie" is a French word signifying meadow, and is applied to any land that is destitute of timber and clothed with grass. A large part of the earth's surface (possibly one-half) was, in a state of nature, prairie land. The "steppes" of Tartary, the "pampas" of South America, the "savannas" of our Southern and the prairies of our Western States, all describe similar tracts of country. The patriarchs of Judea, Syria and Mesopotamia fed their flocks upon the ancient prairies of those lands.

The tough sward of the prairie prevents timber from taking root, but when once it is broken by the implements of man, or by the wolves and foxes in digging their dens, or by the tramping and pawing of wild animals in their daily visits to the water courses, the land soon becomes forest.

All that prairie country in Illinois, lying between the waters which flow into the Mississippi and those which fall into the Wabash, was named by the pioneers "The Grand Prairie." Therefore, all the treeless land in Coles County west of the Embarras River was a part of "The Grand Prairie." There was some confusion in early days, growing out of the fact that the citizens of Crawford, Clark and Edgar Counties insisted on calling the tract of prairie land between the Embarras and Wabash Rivers "Grand Prairie."

Upon these prairies grew mainly that coarse verdure known simply as "prairie grass"; interspersed, however, were some other varieties of grasses and many kinds of weeds and flowering plants. The prairie dock grew ten feet high. The compass plant, or "rosinweed," made many spots a blaze of yellow glory in the fall. In ponds and swampy places grew several varieties of water plants, as pond-lilies, cat-tail flags, etc. Upon the drier parts of the prairie were, in many places, acres of wild strawberries which, in their season, furnished another luxury for the pioneer's table.

Animal and Bird Life.—The native animals were such beasts of prey as the panther, wildcat, the black timber wolf, large gray wolf, and, in vastly large numbers, the prairie wolf or coyote. Bears were here, but not numerous, and deer in abundance; also the rabbit, gray and red (or "fox") squirrel, flying squirrel, raccoon, opossum, badger, fox, gopher, ground squirrel, pole-cat, ground-hog, weasel, mink and muskrat.

The buffalo, which had formerly roamed over the Grand Prairie, had gone to the plains beyond the Mississippi before the settlers came. They were still numerous in Illinois for some years after 1800, but gradually disappeared until all were gone. Alert, wary and sagacious as they were, they early learned the deadly power of the white explorers' and hunters' firearms, and migrated beyond the wide expanse of the "Father of Waters" in the hope to evade them. Alas! that, through the pure wantonness of the white man's love of so-called "sport," this noble animal is now practically extinct.

In addition to those species of birds which we now find here (except the English sparrow, which is a recent unpardonable importation), there were wild turkey, wild pigeons (in countless numbers in some seasons during their season of migration), eagles, turkey-buzzards and parakeets. The whippoorwill, then abundant, is now rarely seen. There were the migratory water-fowls, which came each spring and fall in countless thousands, some of them even remaining in the summer to breed, viz.: ducks of several species, wild geese, brantgeese, cranes, swans, storks and others. Snipes, various kinds of plovers, woodcocks and various water or marsh birds of the smaller varieties, were abundant. Of those splendid game birds, at first so numerous here—the prairie chicken, ruffed grouse ("pheasant") and quail—the first two are nearly extinct in this county, and the quail, more hardy and more prolific by reason of its ability to breed and thrive in both timber and prairie, will be saved from extinction only by the most stringent enforcement of the State game laws.

Reptiles and Insects.—Following the instincts of humanity everywhere, the early settlers were called upon to stop in their travels, or pause from their tasks, to "bruise the serpent's head." Snakes innumerable were here. The largest and most numerous and venomous was the rattlesnake. Specimens were found here at first, six inches or more in diameter and six or seven feet long. Other venomous species, in smaller numbers, were the "spreading" vipers and red vipers (or "copperheads"). More harmless species were the blacksnake, blue-racer, garter-snake, water-snake, grass (or green) snake, chicken-snake, house-snake, bull-snake, etc. Lizards were here, and frogs of all kinds and sizes made the nights musical, the long summers through.

Insects of every species indigenous to the central United States, were unpleasantly plentiful. Mosquitoes, in "flying squadrons," attacked the tired and sleeping pioneer by night; small green "horse-flies" from the prairies, and great black ones, an inch long, from the timber regions, pursued the stock upon the commons and tormented the beasts of burden in their daily tasks. It was a common sight to see horses flecked all over with blood-spots caused by those voracious insects. Wild life of all kinds was so abundant and strenuous, that the settlers couldn't become lonesome, though human neighbors were scarce.

A Pioneer's Experience.—The pioneer—after a day's labor at the plow, interspersed, perhaps, with a shot at a fat deer that ventured close, a short chase after a skulking "painter" or wolf, and the destruction of a few snakes that crossed his path—would go to his cabin home in the evening, and while the good wife cooked the venison and johnny-cake, take down from a crack between the logs of his cabin his old clay or cob pipe, crush in his hands a little of the "twist" of home grown tobacco, fill his pipe, and, taking up in his fingers a live coal from the fire-place, drop it upon the tobacco, take a few puffs to start it and go out. Seating himself upon a stump or home-made bench, or reclining upon the ground, as the sun gave its final winks through the foliage over the edge of the western slopes, he would watch the horde of bats as they appeared from mysterious hiding places and darted about on noiseless wings, intent upon their insect supper; hear the whippoorwill's mournful note along the "worm fence"; see the "lightning-bugs" start from the "garden patch" and twinkle higher and higher among the trees; listen to the human-like voices of the owls down the valley—dimly conscious all the time, of those nearer sounds, the tremolo chirp of the crickets and the rhythmic cadence of the katydids, and, over and through it all, the grand diapason of the frogs—while far out upon the prairie the impudent, "rapid fire" yelping of the coyotes answered the deeper toned howls of the timber wolf, and, ever and anon, in startling nearness to his bare head, the "pinching bugs" "boomed" adown the gloom and bumped along the dusk.

Climate and Diseases.—The climate, which has been modified somewhat since that period by drainage and the cultivation of the soil, was, generally speaking, changeable, and harsh in the winter and spring; often extremely cold, with many deep snows and much rain. In the summer the air was heavily charged with moisture; the days were hot and often the nights seemed hotter by reason of the humidity. Vegetation grew rank; the grasses and weeds grew as high, or higher, than a man's head, and when frost came, fell down to go through that process of decay which, continued through countless ages of the past, had made the soil of the prairies as "black as your hat," and as "rich as cream," and two or three feet deep upon thousands of acres.

This process of decay generated a miasma in the atmosphere, and the drinking water (whether of wells, or springs, or running streams) was loaded with disease-breeding germs, so that those sturdy, strong-limbed pioneers, who never quaked at sight of Indians or wild beast, shook until their teeth chattered with "fever and ague."

Whole families were afflicted for months at a time, and everybody stocked up with quinine, "cholagogue" and bitters of various kinds, mostly made by the good mothers from the roots and herbs of the forest and field. But the above must not be taken to indicate that people were sick all the time, or that everybody was sick at the same time. Some were so hardy, indeed, as to be almost immune from these attacks. But nearly every settler and his family had some experience with this baleful malaria.

There were many days, however, when the air was pleasant, balmy and bracing in the summer and fall, and, when the water had partially drained from the land, and the grasses and flowering plants had grown tall and come to their lusty development of shining green and brilliant blossoms, the prairie landscape enlivened, here and there, by the timid deer bounding gracefully away, was indeed pleasant to look upon.

When Columbus discovered land upon his first voyage in 1492, he thought he had reached the Indies. Hence he called the inhabitants Indians. Later, when the truth was learned about those islands, they were called the West Indies to distinguish them from the older known Indies. But the name "Indian" clung to all the native people of this continent, whether upon islands or the main land. And so it came that all those numerous copper-colored savage tribes, found west of the Atlantic Coast, were denominated "Red Indians."

It is related that, when Marquette first saw Illinois Indians, which is supposed to have been somewhere near the mouth of the Des Moines River, he made the inquiry, "Who are you?" They replied, "We are Illini." The term "Illini" has been translated as meaning "men," or "perfect men"—a name which they took to distinguish themselves from the Iroquois nation, whom they designated as "Beasts," on account of their many cruel invasions of the western tribes. Under this general term were grouped various subdivisions or tribes of Indians, either living on what later came to be recognized as Illinois soil or federated with them.

Indian Treaties.—On August 13, 1803, General William Henry Harrison concluded a treaty at Vincennes with the Kaskaskias, who represented the Kaskaskias, Cahokias, Michigamis and Tamaras of the Ancient Confederacy of the Illini. By this treaty these tribes gave up all their claims to nearly nine million acres of land in the southern portion of what is now Illinois. Subsequent treaties were made in 1803 with the Shawnees and Piankashaws; in 1804 with the Piankashaws and Sacs and Foxes; in 1809 with the Kickapoos and Pottawatomies, and in 1818 with the Peorias, Illinois and Kickapoos.

Eastern Illinois Tribes.—Most, if not all, of these tribes had, at various times in the years gone before (owing to the varying fortunes of war among themselves), roamed over and laid claim to the lands of which what is now Coles County was a part. By these various treaties all Indian claims to lands in the greater portion of Illinois were extinguished. Few Indians were here when the first settlers came, and they did not tarry long thereafter. Scattering bands came and went until after the Black Hawk War. A large band came and camped awhile on the Kickapoo Creek just after the Black Hawk War ended, then vanished. For what purpose they came is not known. It may have been to gather up relics which had been previously "cached" by them in the vicinity; or from a sentimental standpoint—for the Indians were possessed of such sentiment in spite of their savagery—it may be conjectured that they came to take a last look at the home of their childhood, or, perhaps, to make a farewell visit to the graves of some distinguished chiefs, or venerated ancestors. The Kickapoo Indians were placed upon a reservation in Kansas after the close of the Black Hawk War.

The Indians found here were all friendly. The worst they did to the white settlers in this region was occasionally to steal and take away a horse. Evidences of the years of their occupation of this land were plainly visible on the Kickapoo and Indian Creeks, and in Morgan Township. They were mostly of the Kickapoo tribe, as the first explorers found numerous villages of that tribe about the Dead Man's Grove, and on the Kickapoo and Indian Creeks. The Winnebagoes and Pottawatomies were, however, also represented in this section at an earlier date.

There undoubtedly were one or more "brushes" in this county with the Indians between 1815 and 1820, by the government surveyors and their attendants, and also by some of the "Illinois Rangers," from Fort La Motte, on the Wabash River. The writer was shown, when a boy, places in large trees from which bullets had been cut, along the hillsides about three-fourths of a mile west of the old Blakeman's Mill, where he was told by old settlers that a battle had been fought between the Indians and "Rangers."

First Settlers.—Coles County, in its beginning, might almost have been called a colony of Kentucky, so many of those first comers being from that State, and most of those who came from Indiana and from Crawford and Edgar Counties were originally from Kentucky. Tennessee was second with a large number of representatives. Their means of transportation hither were necessarily primitive and rude. Oxen were their main stay, and many put their household goods in a wagon with the women and children, while the men and boys plodded along on foot behind the "slow but sure" ox-team.

Some had horses to pull their wagons and some came to the county on horseback, with their goods upon pack horses, and, perhaps after all, they traveled easiest, as there were, so to speak, no good roads—only tracks or "traces" over the prairies and through the forests. Most of those who came early were not burdened with much goods. Some of them led along a family cow; some drove a few sheep to start their flocks for wool, as the family must be clothed. The spinning wheel and the hank-reel were a necessity, and, if possible, they were brought although nearly every man was a mechanic and could turn out such necessities when required. The necessary cooking utensils and the ax, and frow and the auger, made up the bulk of the baggage. On arrival the first duty was to provide shelter—in other words, to establish a home.

Man has three relations in his intercourse with his fellows: First, his family and home life; second, his civil relations as a citizen; third, his religious affiliations and the various forms of purely social intercourse. Let us look briefly at the Coles County pioneer from these standpoints.

Pioneer Homes.—The home was set up in, or upon, the border of timber and near water, because wood and water were daily necessities and because those first homes were "timber" homes. The "raising" of the log cabin may be described as follows:

Trees were selected as straight as could be found, of suitable size and tapering as little as possible, so that the diameter of each end of the log would be nearly the same.

These were cut down, the limbs removed and then measured with the ax-handle; every ax-handle had a two-foot measure on it, and cut the proper length to make the house of the size wanted (which was usually from 16 to 20 feet square), and then they were hauled to the spot selected and unloaded upon four sides of the location, in sufficient number to make each of the four walls. The ends of the logs were notched together when placed in position, and these notches in each log fitting over the log below tied the building, so that it stood strong and firm. The logs were pushed up on poles, or skids, by main strength. When the cabin reached the required height, the four last (or top) logs were often made two or three feet longer than the rest, thus forming a projection. Then the logs were each made shorter at two ends of the building thus carrying up the gables. Upon the top of the gables was placed the "ridge pole." The roof was made of clapboards which had been rived or split out of straight-grained logs, of suitable length with a frow. The clapboards were usually three or four feet long, of such width as the size of the log would make, and would average one-half to three-fourths of an inch thick. They were laid in courses upon small logs or poles, that reached from gable to gable, and were then weighted with other poles to hold them firmly in place. The cracks between the logs were "chinked" with small sticks, and then thoroughly plastered with wet clay, which became dry and hard, thus keeping out the wind.

The chimney was built on the outside of the house, the logs being cut to form the generous fireplace. At the bottom flat pieces of timber were used, and above the fireplace it was built of split lath, the whole thoroughly and generously coated with wet clay to prevent the house catching fire. Stones were used for the hearth and the backs and jambs of the fireplace, if they could be had, and if not, then sod thoroughly covered with clay.

An opening was cut in the logs for the door of the proper size, the upper and lower logs being cut only half through. Jambs were next pinned to the ends of the logs, to hold them in place, and also to form a frame for the door. The door was made of split boards, rived out of suitable straight grained "board trees," in the same manner as clapboards were made.

The boards were fastened with wooden pins to cross pieces, and the whole hung on wooden hinges. A wooden latch was put on the inside of the door, and this was lifted (so as to unfasten the door) from the outside by a string or leather thong, which passed through a hole made above the latch. The door was "locked" by simply pulling in the string. From this device came that poetical form of giving welcome to friends by saying, "You will find my latch-string out." A window was made for this primitive abode by cutting through one log an opening two or three feet long, leaving it open in the summer, and covering it with white cloth or greased paper in the winter. Charles Morton is said to have brought into the county the first glass windows. The floor was made of puncheons laid on small poles. Sometimes the earth alone was considered sufficient for a floor. It became hard and smooth by use, and made, when fully protected from water, a comfortable floor, which rats could not undermine.

I have alluded to the instrument called the "frow" used for splitting out clapboards, puncheons, etc., and, as this is an implement the present generation never sees, it is proper to describe it: It consisted of a long, rather heavy blade—perhaps eighteen or twenty inches long and three or four inches wide—provided with an "eye" for the handle at one end, set so that the handle formed a right-angle with the blade.

This handle was held in one hand and the blade set upon the end of the timber to be split, in the proper position to make a board of such thickness as desired, and the back of the blade was struck with a wooden mallet and driven into the log like a wedge; then, if necessary, the hammering was continued upon the end of the blade that projected beyond the timber until the board was split off.

I have also used the expression "board trees." That was what the pioneers called the trees that were straight-grained, so as to be split easily. They knew when they felled a tree whether it was straight-grained or otherwise, and if it was a walnut or white-oak tree and the grain was straight, it was kept to make clapboards, punch-ions, door-jambs, split "lath," etc.

If the weather was warm the settlers generally camped out until the house was ready. If they arrived late in the fall they often shared a cabin with some previous settler, or planned some such make-shift as did pioneer William Ewing, who came in 1829. He asked permission of James Ashmore, who had settled previously on Section 33 in the Town of LaFayette, to use his pole sheep pen. This pen he cleaned up and occupied with his family until his own house could be raised. It was not a thoroughly comfortable winter home, but it had a roof, and when the cracks were stopped up, it kept out the rain and snow, and that was enough for the time being.

When the house was built it had to be furnished with a bed and a table and some chairs. The bed was made by setting up one post at a proper distance from a corner of the room, and by fastening a pole or split piece of timber to the post and to a log of the wall at the proper height, form a rail for the side of the bed; then, in the same manner attaching the end rail. Upon these supports were placed split boards and on them was laid a straw or prairie grass "tick." If the householder had a feather-bed, it was placed upon the straw tick. If the feather-bed was not at hand the straw bed sufficed, and upon it was spread the bed covers of coarse, home-woven woolen or linsey-woolsey blankets.

A dining table was made in some such simple manner as, by crossing two sticks or small poles and fastening them together with wooden pins for one end of the table, and similarly providing for the other end, place upon them smooth-split clapboards. Stools were made for seats, with three and sometimes four legs. This was the most primitive manner of supplying furniture. Many of the settlers, however, were able to make chairs of small poles and white oak strips or hickory bark bottoms, which had backs to them and were quite comfortable. Carpets were a later luxury, and were woven of rags cut out by the women from worn-out clothing or scraps of goods of any kind.

Dishes were either pewter or such common ware as was to be had in the stores that had been started in the older settlements. Some few, however, had brought along some of the finest porcelain or "china" ware that could be obtained in the larger towns back in Kentucky or Tennessee, and these were cherished with sacred care, and only brought out for use when some distinguished company was to be entertained.

Piggins were used to bring the water from the stream or spring, for drinking purposes, and the long-handled gourd was kept conveniently near from which to drink the refreshing draught. When the well was dug and the sweep, with its "old oaken bucket," put in operation, the gourd was always hung near by, that the thirsty might drink and be satisfied.

The good woman of the home, whose work was never done, prepared the meals at the open fireplace, cooking her "corn pone" in an iron "oven," which was simply a deep skillet, having long legs and a cover made with turned up edges. Hot coals were raked out upon the hearth, the oven set upon them to heat; the corn meal was mixed to the proper consistency with water or milk and seasoned with lard, molded with the hands and dropped into the oven. The cover was put on and live coals placed upon it, the turned up edges preventing the coals from rolling off. If the oven had been broken on the rough journey from the old home, the johnny cake was made in the same manner of the same materials, and cooked upon a "journey board," set up in front of the open fire at such an angle as to catch the radiation of heat to the best advantage. Sometimes in their season pumpkins were stewed and mixed into the corn dough, and the palates of the pioneer family were tickled with delicious pumpkin bread. Then, at "hog killing time," when the sharp air of approaching winter made the appetite keen, the cracklings left after rendering out the lard were judiciously jumbled into the corn pone mixture, and the sturdy youngsters of the household reveled in and fattened upon "crackling bread."

Wheat bread and biscuit were baked in the same manner, but wheat flour was a luxury that was not readily to be had by the earliest settlers. A tin "reflector" was a later invention to take the place of the board for baking johnny cake and biscuit, and when, in about 1838 to 1840 Charles H. Nabb brought into old Richmond a "step stove," all the women for miles around came to view the new-fangled contrivance for use in cooking. The step stove was the first form of stove made. It had the front part above the fire-box lower than the back part which was above the oven, and so received its name from its shape.

"Hog killing time" each fall or winter was a period of activity for all the men, women and children in a neighborhood. Neighbors helped each other in the killing and cleaning, and then the family kept up the work for days afterwards, rendering the lard, making sausage, salting and pickling and smoking the meat. A smoke house in those days was a necessity to every family.

Then the soap-making days added variety to the good housewife's life at least once a year. Every family had an "ash hopper," as well as an "ash house" for storing the ashes to be used in supplying the hopper. Upon this water was poured daily and, after filtering through the ashes, came out good, strong lye. When enough lye had been saved up, it was poured upon the pieces of fat meats, bones, etc., that had been saved, and the mixture boiled for hours in large kettles, until a year's supply of good soft-soap was made. This was the cleansing material for bath, laundry and toilet use, and its natural odor was never spoiled by the addition of violet or lavender or such artificial perfumes.

Work was the constant order of the day for old and young. There was always something to do, and recreation was mainly only a change of labor.

Domestic Life and Industries.—Old Mrs. Monson, of Lerna, formerly a Mrs. Chowning, a daughter of John Gordon, who was an early "Goose Nest" settler, told the writer that she could not remember when she began to do housework; and she said that her experience was no exception to the rule among the children in the settlement. Flax was raised by the early settlers to make their sewing thread, their shoe-thread, and from which to weave their towels, tablecloths and material for clothing. I cannot take the space to explain what a long, laborious task it was then to prepare flax for spinning. Then the spinning! Mrs. Monson says she "held the distaff" when the merest child, and to spin the fine thread for use in sewing, she had to constantly wet her fingers upon her lips in order to hold firmly the thread. She had often continued at that task, she said, until her mouth would become raw and sore from the constant friction upon her lips of her labor-roughened fingers.

Clothing was mostly home-made in every process, from the sheep's back or the flax in the field to the finished garment. The men wore woolen shirts and jeans for outer garments in winter, and either the same but less in quantity, or "tow linen" in summer. Soft wool hats were the rule (and they lasted long) or caps made of the skins of coons, foxes or wolves, for winter wear. It was not uncommon to see a man dressed entirely in deer skins. And, for trousers, the skin of the deer was almost a necessity to the active man. The thickets, briers and undergrowth in the timber soon tore to pieces such garments as were made of woven materials. Buckskin was a constant necessity about the settler's home for a variety of uses.

The women had woolen or linsey and cotton-goods home-dyed, usually in different solid colors, for dresses. Socks and stockings were knit by hand, and shoes and boots for both sexes were home-made, and made for strength and not beauty.

Almost every man had a kit of shoemaker's tools, and every settlement had its tanner of hides, who tanned for his neighbors on shares, or took his pay in return labor of some kind or in produce.

When the family was thus housed, the head of it, with the boys of all ages, began the improvement of the land upon which he had made his claim. If timber land was to be plowed, it must first be cleared. If (as was very often the case) some prairie land was included in the claim, then the prairie must be broken. Ox-teams were usually used for that purpose, hitched to what was called a "barshare" plow, having a wooden moldboard, though an improved plow called the "Cary" soon came into use. One man had to hold the plow handles, while another managed the team. The sod was tough and four (sometimes five) yokes of oxen were required to pull the plow.

Then seed time and harvest time began in Coles County.

In winter all men and the larger boys chopped wood for fuel and made fence posts and rails—not many posts but very many rails, for the "old worm fence" made of rails was the standard fence—and a man was not considered a thoroughly skilled workman in that line, unless he had from one hundred and fifty to two hundred rails "between his shoulders" for every day's labor.

I have barely touched upon the principal features and occupations of the pioneer's home life. Newspapers were seldom seen and libraries were not varied. A few school-books for the children, the old family Bible, and possibly a few of the old classics, or other literary works, were brought along by those families which had previously possessed them in their Eastern or Southern homes.

In his relations to the world and the little community as a citizen, the pioneer was almost invariably hospitable, and had his "latch-string out," at all times, to his neighbor and to the stranger who passed that way. Furthermore, he was possessed of the rugged principles of honor, and the taking of another's property by stealth or otherwise was almost unknown among the early settlers. When such a thing did occur and the thief was found with the goods, these sturdy pioneers made the country too uncomfortable a place for him to remain, and he soon left for parts unknown. It was the unwritten, but almost universal, rule to respect and protect each other's rights in every particular.

Coles County Lands.—In the western part of Coles County some of the land was "Congress land" when the first settlers came, and was not yet subject to entry. The surveyors' field notes had been lost or destroyed, and it was about 1831 before these lands could be entered. F. A. Allison says he heard the older men say that the surveyors got on a drunk up near the Okaw, and accidentally burned their field notes so that they had to resurvey some of the land. Settlers, therefore, made claims to certain tracts for the purpose of entering them under the public land act, as soon as they were placed upon the market. For another to get in ahead of such a squatter and "enter him out," was an offence to those principles of fairness and right which govern the people, and which could not be allowed to pass unnoticed and unpunished. The man who thus entered another out was ostracised. He could get no help from neighbors in time of need. They ceased to visit his family. They "passed by on the other side," if they met him upon the road.

They turned their backs upon him if they saw him at the blacksmith shop or the tanner's, and the blacksmith and tanner were too busy to do his work. Some of the younger pioneer bloods even went farther and tore down the offender's fences, dropped dead dogs in his well and, in other ways, made his life uncomfortable. The result was the same as with the common thief. He soon pulled up stakes and left for regions where his record was not known.

Dealings with each other were mostly in barter. While many of those settlers brought some money with them—some a few hundred and the most opulent of them perhaps one or two thousand dollars—yet, speaking generally, money was a scarce article. The kinds of money were mostly silver pieces, of Mexican smaller coins and the Spanish "milled" dollars. A little paper money (United States bank notes) circulated, and what gold there was consisted almost entirely of English sovereigns.

There was not much in the way of public business to engage the attention of the pioneers. Candidates for office were not "button-holing" them at every turn of the road and invading their homes to solicit votes. There were no offices, and the leader, gifted by natural ability and education, came to the front—not the professional, self-seeking politician, as now.

Any matters of public or neighborhood interest were settled in the "town meeting" way, by a gathering of the settlers at the house of some one most conveniently located, and who usually was a man of influence among them. The fundamental republican principle that the majority should rule was fully respected.

Early Religious Meetings.—Those who came here to make their homes were not adventurers and soldiers of fortune, but most of them had strong religious convictions and beliefs. Some had been under the influence of one creed, and others held to the teaching of another set of doctrines, but at first they made common cause in their church affairs. In warm weather they held meetings in the shady woods by some pleasant stream. In winter, services were held at the home of first one and then another. These services were held as often upon Sunday as a preacher could be had; or, in the absence of a preacher, they were conducted by some settler who could lead.

There were many among them who, if they could not take a text and preach a logical sermon, could "exhort," or "give an experience," or lead in prayer, or "line a hymn" and lead the singing.

There were not song-books to hand around to the congregation, but the leader would arise with his old "Missouri Harmony," containing the music written in "buckwheat" notes, and announce some familiar hymn. He would then read in solemn, monotonous tones the first two lines and lead the congregation in singing them. Then the next two lines would be read followed by singing, and so on until the hymn was finished. And the leader did not announce, as ministers so often do now, that the "first, second and last stanzas" would be sung. But they sung it all, no matter how many stanzas there were.

Services did not close in half an hour, in order that some influential parishioners should not miss their dinners, but lasted anywhere from two to three hours, owing to the zeal of the preacher in charge of the meeting. The congregation stayed through the services. None of them would show such disrespect to the preacher and the cause as to leave, except temporarily, in the midst of a sermon. The babies were not left at home with a nurse or servant. The mother was the nurse, the chambermaid and the cook. When they went to church they closed the cabin door and all of the family, from the least to the greatest, usually went along. The youngsters may occasionally have required a little fresh air and exercise, and the babies needed taking out for a few minutes; but if this going out and coming in disturbed the preacher or the worshipers, they didn't dare to say so.

As the number of settlers increased, they began in the early 'thirties to have camp-meetings in the summer or early fall. To these camp-meetings came people from many miles around, bringing their whole families and camping out for weeks, or as long as the meeting lasted. At first these meetings were usually cold and the proceedings rather quiet, but as the meeting continued and the preachers' vigorous words and pleadings began to take hold of the unregenerated, there would be shouting and other manifestations of emotion by both sexes, although the women were most affected. Often many would be crying aloud for mercy and for pardon from their sins, while at the same time others would be shouting praises and hallelujahs, because they had found peace to their souls. Women would become hysterical. They would scream at the top of their voices, and in the enthusiasm of overflowing emotion, embrace all who came near them, men and women alike, sinking down at last from sheer exhaustion; and, when that occurred, the preacher would request some of the good brethren to carry them to their tents that they might recuperate. At such times the meetings were continuous from early morn until late at night, preachers, exhorters and other leaders relieving one another by taking turns in the conduct of the services.

The young people were not always as deeply affected as appeared to their elders. These gatherings were oases in a desert of monotony and drudgery to them. The boys and girls could mingle freely, go together to the spring or creek for water, wander back and forth about the camp on meaningless errands when the shadows of evening came on, and say to each other those meaningless things which meant so much. In other words, it was one of the few opportunities afforded the young men and maidens to do as they have done since the world began, and will continue to do until time shall be no more.

The old "Sawyer Camp Ground," as it was called, started in the early 'thirties in Wabash Point, had a pulpit made by Uncle Hiram Tremble, a pioneer Methodist preacher. It was made as the houses were built, without nails. Pulpits, even in churches, were made high above the congregation in those days. This was an elevated platform, constructed of six or eight inch trees for posts, mortised to the end and side-pieces which supported the floor of the pulpit. The floor was of puncheons, and it had "walls" about four feet high, of the same material all around, so as to make an inclosure, with a door at one side for the preachers to enter. There was room in it to seat eight people. After this camp-meeting was abandoned, Mr. Frank A. Allison said that his father got the pulpit, and, with several yokes of oxen dragged it to his home, where it served for many years as an oat bin.

As heretofore stated, most recreation for those people was simply a change of labor or a coming together to labor in a social way.

House raisings were frequent, for as each newcomer came, he must have help to raise his cabin. Everybody came to assist in putting the logs in place, and there were opportunities for tests of strength in handling a log. These pioneers loved all feats of strength or agility, and the best lifter, or foot-racer, or wrestler, or rail-splitter, or fighter was each, in his class, a hero. A feast of good things to eat was provided, and generally a jug or so of the old fashioned pure white whiskey "on the side" at these house raisings.

For the women there were quiltings; another opportunity to evade the drudgery of their own homes, and to labor for and with their neighbors. The same liberal supply of eatables was furnished at the quiltings. For the young folks corn-husking or corn-shelling parties were given, when the "red ear" of corn was sought for with diligence.

But not all amusement was of that kind. Dancing was the favorite, then, as it is to-day; and dancing was had whenever a fiddler could be found. The cabins did not make good dancing halls, for even if they had the size, the floors were not as good to dance upon as nature's carpet; and so, under the shadows of the trees with the moon trying to peep through the foliage, they danced until the fiddler was exhausted. It was the fiddler, and not the dancers, who succumbed first. If a fiddler was not to be had, the young folks would have parties and play "weevilly wheat" and "kissing games" of various kinds. Or, if the school-teacher was accessible, they would sometimes have spelling schools (or "bees"), with the teacher to give out words from "Webster's Elementary Spelling Book."

If there was a religious revival on hand, the youngsters would, out of respect to the prevailing sentiment, meet together and sing the songs out of the old "Missouri Harmony."

First Schools.—The first schools were exceedingly primitive in their methods. All schools were private and the teacher charged a tuition or fee for each "scholar" (as they were called), of anywhere from $2.00 to $3.00 per quarter. Public schools, supported by general taxation, were not well established until about 1855. In many cases the schools were held at the teacher's home. Very soon, however, log school houses were here and there erected by the joint labor of the settlement. These houses were built in the same manner as the dwellings, and provided with an extra large fireplace (sometimes one at each end of the room), in order that all the children might get up close to the fire and "thaw out," after a long tramp on foot to school in severe weather. For a child to have no further than a mile or two to go to school was to be greatly favored. Many children went daily four and five miles on foot, taking their noon luncheon with them.

The first school houses had puncheon floors and puncheon benches for seats. The teacher only was provided with the luxury of a desk, and that was simply a puncheon table. He would use it mainly to "set a copy" on each pupil's slate or copy-book, so that the child might endeavor to reproduce the teacher's chirography. It is proper to state that many of these teachers were most excellent penmen, and the few old letters written by these early settlers, which are still preserved, show that penmanship was an art more thought of in those days than it is to-day.

Teaching was mainly personal. Each pupil was in a "grade" by himself. If a teacher had ten or fifteen pupils he was satisfied, and they were of all ages. A few text-books sufficed, and the teacher furnished many of them.

Children were as full of the unregenerated spirit of the "old Adam" then, as they are now, and the teacher kept a good sized switch or two on hand for emergencies. Parents expected him to wield the rod whenever occasion demanded it; and he was not slow in taking advantage of the occasion.

The writer listened to a conversation between F. A. Allison, son of the pioneer William Allison, Ambrose Y. Hart, son of pioneer Silas Hart, and Bluford Sexson, son of pioneer James Sexson, all of them now about eighty years of age (or nearing that point), in which the following incident was related as occurring in the 'thirties at the old school house built about 1830-31, on the north part of Section 11-11-7, in the town of Paradise.

The teacher, named Banker, was a man of ample form, and before school was taken up he was seated at the old puncheon table laboriously "setting a copy," and leaning forward so that his trousers were well stretched over the most muscular part of his anatomy. Ambrose Hart and Daniel H. Tremble, son of pioneer Hiram Tremble, through the open door, caught sight of him in this attitude. There was a whispered "council of war" between the two boys, and then Daniel drew from his pocket a large hickory popgun. He loaded it with a good sized, well chewed paper wad, and stepping up quietly behind the preoccupied teacher, he fired at the most bulging part of his ample figure, and then, with Ambrose, his ally, fled to the woods. But the boys learned fully the truth of the old adage, "He that fights and runs away, may live to fight another day." Another day came, but it was the teacher's inning.

It was a frequent prank of the boys at that school to come quietly up to the school house and, catching the teacher absorbed in some problem or other school-work, throw big stones on the house above his head, whence they would roll with a great clatter down the clap-board roof to the ground. At such times the teacher would come running out, thoroughly angry, but only to find no boys in sight. The trees and thickets around would hide the culprits, who were almost bursting with laughter.

REMINISCENCES OF SCHOOL LIFE.

The following letters, written by I. H. Johnston, son of pioneer Abner Johnston, to J. W. Walker, son of pioneer Samuel Walker, both of whom had seen and been a part of such scenes and doings as have been related, shed further light on the lives of the young people in that time when Coles County was in its infancy:

"CHARLESTON, Ill., April 12th, 1889.

"Jonathan W. Walker, Esq.,

"Lerna, Ill.,

"Dear Wils:

"I had been reading the newspaper and, after getting through with that, my thoughts seemed to turn to the days of my boyhood, particularly to that portion of them which was spent at the old Dryden school-house, and to the pioneers who built it. While that has been over a half century ago, I remember them very distinctly. At that time there were in the settlement called Muddy Point and immediately around the school-house two old men—and, as well as I remember, only two—old Grandfather Gammill and Granddaddy Keller, as they were familiarly called. Then those generally called 'uncles' were: William Jeffries, Thomas Jeffries, Alfred Alexander, Alfred Balch, Abner Johnston, John Gannaway, Isaac Odell, James Glenn, Reuben Williams, Stephen Ferguson, Samuel Walker, Joseph Glenn, John Whetstone, John G. Morrison and William Dryden. Uncle Billy Dryden lived nearer the school-house than any of the others, hence the name Dryden school-house.

"All of these grand old Christian pioneers, with one single exception, John G. Morrison, have passed away. Nearly all of the above-named came to that settlement about 1830. The first thing done after building something to live in was to club together and build that school-house.

"The building was located about the geographical center of the settlement and at the southwest corner of Uncle Billy Dryden's six-acre field. The house was 24x18 feet, 8 feet high to the square, and built of good substantial logs that had been hewed. The logs were about eight inches thick and would face, on an average, about one foot.

"Our teachers were a Mr. Thayer, Mrs. H. A. Tucker and Stephen Bovell, the uncle of the late

Rev. Stephen Bovell of Ashmore, Ill. Mrs. Tucker, the 'Yankee School Marm,' was the favorite of many of the class and particularly so with me. Stephen Bovell probably would have been my favorite had it not been for the licking he gave John J. Gannaway and myself, on account of our breaking the switches at spelling school one night. I say licking, but that word doesn't convey the idea; it was a thrashing. The thing used to thrash us with looked more like a flail, and was of the same kind of timber that our fathers used when they thrashed out a grist of wheat.

"There are a great many incidents recurring to me which awaken pleasant recollections of those boyhood days.

"I believe that you and myself are the two oldest of our class who are still living. Our class of boys were your brothers, James N. and A. A. Walker; John, Isaac and Azariah Jeffries, sons of Thomas Jeffries; William and John G. Jeffries, sons of William R. Jeffries; John H. Whetstone, Benjamin G. Glenn, William Glenn, Joseph and Myron J. Ferguson, John J. Gannaway, George B. Balch, John W. Alexander, George Odell, James F. Johnston (my brother), W. E. Adams, who did not live in the settlement, but boarded with his uncle, Alfred Balch, and Sam Van Meter, who boarded with Uncle Billy Dryden and paid his board by cutting wood and feeding an old gray horse that had a stiff neck, and doing other chores.

"Of this class of boys James N. Walker became one of the leading and most prosperous farmers and stock-raisers in the country. Alexander A. Walker still resides in the old neighborhood and is a successful and intelligent farmer. John Jeffries resides in the settlement yet, not more than a quarter of a mile from where he first saw the light of day. Azariah Jeffries, who, I believe, was the youngest of our class, is still living on the farm where he was born and has represented his county in the State Legislature. Isaac Jeffries died from the effects of an accident received while getting off a train at Mattoon some thirty years ago. William Jeffries left the county about forty years ago. He is still living and is a successful farmer in the State of Wisconsin. John G. Jeffries, who still resides near where he was born, is an excellent citizen and a prosperous farmer. John Henry Whetstone ('Bud,' as we called him) is living in the State of Kansas and has been nearly everything in a business way. While he lived here he was a farmer and merchant; in Kansas he is a town-builder and trader generally, and, whether a financial success or not, the world is better by his living in it. He could make the most wonderful track in a melting snow that I ever saw, unless it was my own. Benjamin B. Glenn also went to Kansas. He is still living and is a hustler. William Glenn went, in an early day, to the State of Texas, and I have lost track of him. Joseph M. Ferguson still resides near the old homestead. He is a quiet, good citizen and a success in life. Myron J. Ferguson, a brother of the former, died several years ago. During his life he became one of the largest farmers and stock-raisers in the county and was connected with two banks in Mattoon. John James Gannaway, more familiarly known among the boys as 'Slab,' is still on this side of the 'River Styx.' He has always been a hard working and successful farmer. George B. Balch, who died recently, needs no comment from me, as he is fresh in the memory of all the class. He was more of a success in the literary line than in the financial and was a poet of no ordinary ability. John W. Alexander's achievements were in the mechanical line. He never learned any trade, but could, and does now, make anything that is wrought out of iron. He is still living and resides in Ottawa, Kan. I have lost track of George Odell, but I think he is alive and probably living in Kansas. Alexander F. Snowden went to Missouri about thirty years ago, and I have lost track of him, too. J. F. Johnston died many years ago. William E. Adams, who died recently in Charleston, was a complete success in all his undertakings except financially. He was among the best of orators, a good lawyer, and was Judge of our County Court. He was also Clerk of the County Court. And last, but not least, of the class that graduated at the old Dryden school-house was the redoubtable Dr. Sam Van Meter. He has attained a national reputation in his profession and is a financial success as well. He is also a theologian, and if he belonged to the Methodist church and was a little younger, I think he could beat Sam Jones on the preach.

"One of the most pleasant recollections of our boyhood days at the old school-house is that of our spelling schools. You will remember we had them every two or three weeks, always at night, and the whole school was sure to be there. We would appoint two of our number captains to choose for the two sides. They would usually pitch a stick or a cane from one to the other.

The one it was pitched to would grip it and then they would each put hand over hand until the end was reached. The last one that could hold the stick got first choice in choosing. I became an expert in gripping the stick, so that I would always get first choice if the other fellow pitched the stick to me. There was always something about the first choice I didn't understand, and that was, if the captains were boys their first choice was always a girl, and if the girls were captains they seemed to think that some boy was the best speller. Now, Wils—honor bright—could you tell why this was so? It didn't take long to make the first choice, but after that they would look carefully all over the room trying to select the best spellers, for you know it humiliated the captain who got defeated.

"Another one of the memories of the old school-house that was not so pleasant as the spelling school was what is now called the 'Illinois mange.' Before we were educated up to the present standard my recollection is that we called it itch. Our mothers were the doctors for this disease, and you will doubtless remember the remedy for it. You will also remember that the seats in the old school room would seat about ten to the seat, and that there was always one or more afflicted with the itch. When all were seated, the door shut, the big fireplace filled with wood and the room got hot—Oh, my!

"Our games were mostly bull-pen and town-ball; the last was the forerunner of our modern baseball. You will remember that none of us cared much about playing bull-pen when Samuel Van Meter was on the opposite side. He wasn't particular where he hit the fellows with a wet ball, and they would generally rather than an ordinary boy should hit them with a club than take the chances of getting hit with a wet ball from Sam. Well, after the thrashing given Gannaway and myself by our teacher Bovell (I believe that is the way we kept time and dates that particular winter), Sam became our sympathizer, and when we went into a game of bull-pen, Sam always managed to get on the opposite side to the one the teacher was on, and made a specialty of throwing wet balls at him and his bull's-eye watch until he smashed it—accidentally, of course.

"You know that we were always taught to never tell tales out of school. I still adhere to that injunction; therefore, will not say anything about John Gannaway taking his father's old rifle gun about half way to the school-house every morning for about a week after 'the thrashing,' with the avowed purpose of shooting Bovell; but he always managed to leave the gun about a quarter of a mile away from the school-house under a log by the side of the path and would take it home at night. Your old friend,

 "ISAIAH H. JOHNSTON."

"CHARLESTON, Ill., April 22, 1889.

"J. W. Walker, Esq.:

"In my letter to you of April 12th I did not say all I wanted to about our class at the old Dryden school-house. I wanted to say something about our books and the manner of teaching. The books we used were the New Testament, Webster's Elementary Spelling Book, Pike's Arithmetic, and most of us had copy books. The first thing in the morning after the master called 'books' (we had no bell to ring) was prayer by the master; then all who could read were put in a long row to read from the Testament. Each one read a verse, beginning at the head of the row, until the lesson or chapter was read. Then all went to the spelling book and each one would, during the forenoon, recite a lesson from that. You will remember there were short reading lessons interspersed throughout the book. Then some one would try to write a few lines in his copy book with a pen made out of a goose or gander quill, and finally we would wind up the half day by everybody getting in a long row and standing as straight as we could by the benches to spell. This would be repeated in the afternoon, and whoever left off head at night went foot next day. Every head-mark was tallied in favor of the one getting it until the end of school (which was never more than three months), and the one who had the most head-marks got some kind of a prize.

"I want to refresh your memory a little about that old spelling book. In the back part of it was what we called grammar. It had, I think, all the words that were pronounced alike, but spelled differently and had different meanings. The master would give us a lesson in grammar, and when time came to recite he would pronounce (we called it 'giving out') thus: 'Air, a fluid; 'are, plural of am'; 'write, to make letters with a goose quill'; 'right, not wrong'; 'wright, a fellow that made our spinning wheels'; 'rite, what a squire would say when he married somebody.'

"As I said before, the master would give out one of these words at a time and give the definition of it. If you missed, some little girl below you would be sure to spell it correctly, and down you would go.

"Then, again, there were words spelled alike, but which had different meanings, such as 'ear, the organ of hearing'; 'ear, an ear of corn', etc. This last one was called a hard one, for we would forget about the ear that made the souse and the ear that made the hominy being spelled the same way.

"You and I didn't know there was any other grammar at that time, and so far as studying it, I don't now know. But if anyone would ask us if we were grammarians we would tell them yes, of course. Sometimes some smart Aleck would ask us the question, 'What is grammar?' and we would answer promptly: 'Air, a fluid; are, plural of am; sight, to see; site, the place where the old school-house was built; and cite, to call us in'; and, with a somewhat haughty air, would say: 'This, sir, is grammar as taught by Uncle Noah himself.'

"The ciphering didn't amount to much, as I have stated. The arithmetic used was Pike's. I never knew Mr. Pike and don't care now to make his acquaintance, for he was a blarsted Englishman, and his book was filled with pounds, shillings and pence. Some of us had slates and others pieces of slates. One good-sized slate properly cut in pieces would make four slates for some. You will notice that I have but little to say about ciphering, and the reason is I know but little.

"About the time our education was completed a fellow came into the settlement to teach geography. His mode of teaching was to write on a large piece of paper the names of all the States and their capitals, as Maine, Augusta; New Hampshire, Concord; Vermont, Montpelier; Massachusetts, Boston, etc.; then the rivers, lakes and territories, and then we would sing them off to the tune of 'Whang Doodle,' with variations.

"There were no store clothes in the country then except occasionally a blue calico dress. Our mothers and sisters made all the clothing for the family. The clothes for winter were made of home-made jeans, all wool and a yard and a quarter wide. The breeches (now called trousers) and 'wammus' were colored in the ooze boiled out of the bark of oak or walnut trees. The shirt was very often left white. The breeches were made similar to what they now are, with the exception of the front part. Instead of being buttoned up the front as now, there was a flap; it covered an opening about four by seven inches in front with two large metal buttons sewed on the breeches in a place that would meet and faster to the upper corners of the flap. The 'wammus' was made similar to the way the shirt is made now, except that it was opened in front all the way down. It was made large enough to go once and a half around the body, and a large brass button fastened the collar tight around the neck. There was a belt about two inches broad made the size of the body and sewed fast behind; there were also two brass buttons sewed to the belt in front. Our hats were common home-made wool hats; our caps were of 'coon, fox or wolf skins. The girls' clothing—well, I thought I could describe them, but I don't think I can do them justice, as I never examined them very minutely. Our shoes (when we had any) were all made alike and looked like they had been made over the same straight stick, no rights nor lefts. The shoe worn on the right foot one day we would have to put on the left foot the next day to keep it from running down. The only way we could tell a boy's shoes from a girl's shoe was by the size, and very often then be mistaken.

"About the time we were getting to be called big boys, some fellow came into the settlement and began talking about science and astronomy and several other outlandish things. He told us the sun was ninety-five million miles from Muddy Point, and all sorts of infidel stories. He also told us that this very old earth we are now living in, was round like a ball and went whizzing around and over and over in the 'air' (a fluid), without anything to rest on once every twenty-four hours, but nobody ever fell off. You will doubtless remember it didn't take long to shut up that kind of a sacrilegious fellow, for our daddies would quote a sentence or two from Father Joshua, and that settled it. Here is the quotation: 'Then spake Joshua to the Lord in the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon. And the moon stayed until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven and hastened not to go down about a whole day.' This was a clincher and Mr. Infidel had to close up. Of course, we were all for Joshua at that time, but I fear some of us, at least, have become skeptical on this point.

"You will remember that we were of the second class of boys. I don't mean that we were second-class boys by any means, but that there was an older class, among whom were Samuel K. Gammill, James and David Jeffries, Albert and Nat Dryden, J. F. Snowden and Tom Fancher. One of this older class of boys, David Jeffries, fell in with the scientific astronomy idea. He believed that the earth revolved on its axis and rolled over every twenty-four hours. He pretended to have no patience with those who believed differently. The other boys quoted Joshua and told him they guessed Joshua knew more about the status of the sun, moon and earth than he did, and about the only reply that he made to them was that 'Joshua was an old fogy.' Oh, but it made my blood boil to hear him speak so sacrilegiously.

"By and by, Dave got so smart—or thought he was—that he began teaching school. He claimed that anybody had a right to be a school-master if he could get the pupils. I went to school to him a while, and if there was anything wrong in my getting off the Joshua track on to the scientific astronomy track, Dave was to blame.

"About this time there was an event in the history of the settlement. One of the older class girls married, and I believe it was the first wedding in the settlement—at any rate, it was the first I ever attended. The high contracting parties were Samuel K. Gammill and Betsy Dryden. Everybody in the settlement was invited, and, of course, all were there.

"Uncle Billy's house was double—one log cabin built about eight feet from the other, end to end, with poles placed from one to the other after it was built up the proper height, and all covered under one roof with clapboards. There was a door in the south side of each house, one in the west end of the east room and one in the east end of the west room; there was a fireplace in the extreme end of each, the space between being open, with a puncheon floor. You will remember that was rather a small place to entertain so many guests.

"Well, everybody was nearly crazy to see the bride, but she was not to be seen by the public until the time arrived for the ceremony to take place. In one corner a room four or five feet square was partitioned off with quilts and sheets for the bride to dress in. When the groom came he was admitted, and they both remained there until time for the ceremony to take place.

"The ceremony over, congratulations were in order, and everybody who could get near enough kissed the bride. Refreshments were then served, and Oh, my! I thought the older folks would eat for a week. Think of a boy of about twelve years of age, who was reasonably hearty and at that time very hungry, having to wait two hours, late in the day, with so many good things in sight; light wheat bread, salt-rising bread, corn pone bread, pumpkin pies, pumpkin butter, ginger cake, sweet cake, crullers, ham, spring chicken (not spring chicken, but chicken in the spring, as this was the 28th of April, 1840), and everything else good to eat that could be had in the country. When it came my time I can assure you that I did all that was expected of me in the eating line—and a great deal was expected by those who knew me.

"I would like to describe the bride's trousseau, but she is still living and I might get myself into trouble. I am not so bold about this as about the master who thrashed John J. Gannaway and myself, for he has been dead almost a quarter of a century. But I will say that she was neatly attired in a robe of white muslin or 'Jaconette,' trimmed with the same material, and looked awfully sweet.

"At that time of the year the flowers that were obtainable were sweet-williams, violets and red-buds, but later in the season there were all kinds of wild blossoms. I think the bride had a few of these pinned to her dress somewhere between her waist and collar.

"And, speaking about blossoms and things, reminds me of the love-letters the other boys would write to the little girls—I believe they called them love-letters. I will refresh your memory with a sample of a boy's letter, if written in the winter—and they were mostly written in the winter months, as we had no school at any other time.

A BOY'S LETTER.

"MUDDY POINT.

"My Dear Lucy Abigail:—When this you see remember me. I am going to spelling school next Friday night. Our folks are going to kill hogs Saturday and are going to meetin' Sunday at Uncle Joe Glenn's. I wish you would come to our house for dinner. We are going to have soda biscuits, fresh sausage and coffee. Maybe I'll go home with you.

"Jane is about well of the whooping cough.

"The rose is red, the violet's blue;

Sugar's sweet and so are you.'

"Yours truly,

"SLAB."

THE REPLY.

"MUDDY POINT.

"My Dear Slab:—When this you see remember me. I got your letter. I am afraid you are soft soping me, but I sorter like it anyhow. I'll be at spelling school. Our folks killed hogs last Saturday. We had some awful good sausage and crackling corn bread and sassafras tea, sweetened. One of our old ewes has got twin lambs and one of them is black with a white face. Ain't that funny? Can't tell about going to your house for dinner. Would like to, but will have to ask Mammy. Your letter was awful sweet and "If you love me as I love you

No knife can cut our love in two.'

"Yours,

"LUCY ABIGAIL."

"The body of these letters would vary according to time and circumstances, but the beginning and ending were the same.

"Fond memory paints the scenes of other years,

Green be their memory still,

And bright amid those joyous scenes appears,

The school-house on the hill.

And on the playgrounds happy children still

Shout as in days of yore.

But, Oh, those days! Alas for us, dear friend,

Are gone forevermore."

"I. H. JOHNSTON."

Of those named in the letters who were still living when the letters were written (in 1889) nearly all are now gone. Mr. Johnston is still enjoying a hale old age and has at his command a large fund of stories of those days of "Auld Lang Syne."

David Jeffries, one of that "older class of boys" who so readily yielded to the scientific arguments, is living still at the age of eighty-five years in Janesville, Wis., one of its most prominent and honored citizens.

Hunting.—Hunting was, to those hardy pioneers, not only a diversion but a business. Meat must be had, and the best meat, and that most easily obtained "without money and without price," was that of the deer and turkey and other wild game. Every settler had his rifle, powder-horn and bullet-molds, and most of them were "dead shots." Moreover, the rifle was taken along wherever they went. Deer were so plentiful that one had not far to go before bringing down a fine fat buck or doe, and small game was everywhere about. In the spring and fall, as the water-fowl went north or south, they lingered long on the sloughs and ponds and many a fine bird came upon the table of the expert marksman. A favorite manner of getting quails and rabbits was by setting traps. Prairie chickens were very numerous and were considered fine for the table.

Another social diversion for men and boys—organized not only for sport but to rid the county of, perhaps, its worst pest—was the wolf-hunt. Word would be passed around that on an appointed day all who desired might meet at some settler's home and organize a hunt for that animal, which annoyed and damaged the settlers more than all others combined—the prairie wolf or coyote.

At the time and place agreed upon came all who could (young men and old) on horseback, and each provided with his gun or a long, stout stick and his dogs. They would then scatter out into a wide circle and gradually ride toward a common center, which was usually a prominent grove or high piece of ground, driving the wolves before them. As the circle grew smaller the wolves would try to break out and escape, when they were shot or chased until cornered or exhausted and clubbed to death or killed by the dogs. These affairs were highly exciting and, year by year, the wolves grew less in numbers.

In another manner business was combined with pleasure. Wild honey was one of the luxuries that the pioneers found here in abundance, and, to find it, required some practice and skill on the part of the bee-hunter in search for the trees that contained it.

A good "bee-day" was a nice, clear day in the summer or early fall, when the bees were out. The bee-hunter wandered among the wild blossoms where the bees were at work gathering the material for their delicious food, or set a bait of something sweet to attract them.

He would then watch them until one of the little workers had accumulated his load, when it would rise in the air, and after completing two or three circles above the head of the watcher, would suddenly shoot off in a "bee-line" for its hive. The hunter would then start in the direction taken by the bee, and, following, look carefully at the trees as he proceeded, scanning their trunks for a hole or crevice, and when he saw such a place in a tree would observe carefully to see if bees were going in or out. When the right tree was found it was marked with the hunter's private mark, and, at the proper time, he would return, chop down the tree and despoil the bees of their winter's food.

CHAPTER III.

EARLY SETTLEMENTS.

LAND SYSTEM AND GOVERNMENT SURVEYS—NAMES AND LOCATION OF EARLY SETTLERS—DATE OF ARRIVAL AND WHENCE THEY CAME—THE PARKER FAMILY CAME IN 1824—OTHER EARLY COMERS—THE BATES, DOTY, BURR, DUDLEY AND OTHER FAMILIES ARRIVE IN 1825-26—QUOTATIONS FROM PECK'S GAZETTEER REGARDING EARLY SETTLEMENTS—THE WABASH POINT, GOOSE NEST PRAIRIE, DRY GROVE, INDIAN CREEK, DUDLEY, MUDDY POINT, ASHMORE, CUTLER, DEAD MAN'S GROVE, HICKORY CREEK, EMBARRAS AND WHITLEY SETTLEMENTS—DR. JOHN CARRICO FIRST REPRESENTATIVE IN THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

All the lands of Coles County at the time of its settlement, except Section No. 16 in each township, which was set apart for schools, were a part of the public domain, subject to purchase or to entry under the Public Land Act. These lands had been surveyed. The surveyor is the true pioneer. He is the path-finder; he blazes the way; he must come before any rights to the land can be established by the citizen. George Washington was a surveyor. Daniel Boone, George Rogers Clark and others known to fame in those colonial days as pioneers of the West, were either skilled surveyors or assisted in that work.

After much and long discussion, the statesmen of our national infancy days decided that a congressional township should be six miles square, containing an area of thirty-six sections. Each full section should be a mile square and consist of 640 acres. The thirty-six sections composing a congressional township are numbered from 1 to 36, beginning at the upper right hand (northeast) corner of the township and numbering west to No. 6; then dropping to the next tier of sections below (south) and numbering east to No. 12; then down to 13 and west to 18, and so on. These townships are described with reference to a base-line and a meridian-line. The base-line for Coles County "Commences at Diamond Island in the Ohio, opposite Indiana, and runs due west till it strikes the Mississippi a few miles below St. Louis." The "Third Principal Meridian," from which are numbered the ranges in the greater part of Coles County, is a line running due north from the mouth of the Ohio. The "Second Principal Meridian" is a line extended due north from the mouth of the Little Blue River in Indiana.

In describing Mattoon, for instance, we may say it covers Sections 13 and 14, Town 12 North, Range 7 East of the Third Principal Meridian—meaning that those sections are in the Twelfth Congressional Township North of the Base Line referred to, and in the Seventh Range of townships east of the line called the Third Principal Meridian.

List of Early Settlers.—The following is a list which, though not complete, is, perhaps, as nearly so as can be made, of those settlers (heads of families) who came here previous to 1840. The localities where they settled are given in a general way, as within the territory now included in certain townships or as in the neighborhood of some "point" of timber. Many names are given without stating when or whence they came, because authentic information on those points could not be had; but in all such cases the parties came at some time in the 'thirties.

There are doubtless errors and omissions in the list given, but it is believed to be in the main substantially correct. Many of the men named came, remained a short time and then left, hence but little is known about them. But the reader will recognize many names of progenitors of men and women now living among us, and a great deal of history is given in the mere making of this list:

I have stated that locations of settlements were not exact in all cases.

In the North Okaw list are Julius Dugger, John Poorman, John Matthews and Jas. Walker, who settled just over the line in what is now the town of Humboldt, and in the same list are Ebenezer Noyes and Wm. Corder whose place of settlement was in the northwestern part of what is now Mattoon Township. Very many of the Wabash Point settlers located in the present limits of the town of Mattoon also.

The following came in the 'thirties, but just what part of the county they settled in I have not learned definitely:

Names.	Whence Emigrated.	Year of Arrival.
John B. Daugherty	Indiana	1833
Jacob Linder	W. Virginia	1830
James Law		1830-31
Thomas Sconce

There are a few instances—as in the case of the McAllisters of Morgan and the Evingers and Irvings of Hutton Township—where, being unable to learn the first name of the head of a family, I have put down the names of the sons.*

*While I have accepted the statement of the history published in 1879 as to the number of sons of John Parker,

It has been claimed for Levi Doty that he came up here from Crawford County, Ill., about 1822-23, and, after living here a while with the Indians, went back, to remove here later with his family; hence that he antedated John Parker, who came in the spring of 1824. But even if that be true (and the writer has no reason to doubt its truth), still his first trip here came merely to simply as an exploration. He came merely to "spy out the land," and the claim made for John Parker and his little party that they were the first actual settlers remains unshaken. This party consisted of John Parker and five sons, whose names have been given as Daniel, Benjamin, Silas, George and James, and their families, and Samuel Kellogg and his wife Mary, known to the writer, long after her husband had passed away, as "Aunt Polly Kellogg." There were fourteen adults in the party and how many children is not known.

An old trace by which travelers from the country along the Wabash River came through Coles County, crossed the Embarras at the old ford long used by Indians before the white man's advent, and which is just below the present iron bridge, about three-fourths of a mile down the river from the present dam of the Charleston Water Works, in Section 23-12-9.

The Parkers seem to have stopped on the east bank of the Embarras, and there, just east of the road that runs over the bridge mentioned and within the limits of the present town of Hutton, was the first actual settlement with the raising of a log cabin by Benjamin Parker, one of the sons of John.

Thereafter settlements came on pretty rapidly. Another numerous family of Parkers came in and settled on the east side of Hutton in 1825-26, and for them was named the "Parker's Prairie" in that locality.

The Bates and Doty families came about 1825-26 and settled on the Kickapoo Creek about Section 22-12-8, and were followed soon after by Samuel Henry and John Robinson.

Also, about 1825-26, Laban Burr and the Dudleys settled on or about Section 12-12-11, within the limits of the present town of Ashmore.

The Wabash Point settlement was started by Daniel Drake and James Nash about 1826, followed soon after by the Harts and the Sawyers. Charles Sawyer built his cabin in the northwestern part of Section 33-12-7, and his brother John put his up near the southeast corner of Section 34-12-7.

The "Goose Nest Prairie," in Pleasant Grove, was settled upon by Rev. Daniel Barham about 1828-29, followed about 1829-30 by the Gordons and others.

Settlers came into Dry Grove about 1828, notably the Radleys and Bales and the Slopers.

The head of Indian Creek was opened up by the numerous families of the Balches and the Campbells in 1829.

Muddy Point settlement was started by the Fanchers and Houchins in 1827. This soon developed into the most populous of the county's early settlements.

In the timber west of Charleston was a very early family named Lester, who probably came about 1825-26, and, later, moved up on the Okaw and then disappeared from view. One of them was said to have been in the Black Hawk War from this county. William Janes was another very early inhabitant of that timber, who left just as the more permanent settlers were coming in.

South of the Kickapoo and further down the stream than the Bates and Doty settlements, John and William Phipps started a settlement in 1827-28 in the vicinity of Section 33-11-8.

James Riley settled, about 1827, on the creek which bears his name west of Charleston.

James Y. Brown came from Tennessee and started a settlement just north of the city of Charleston about 1831.

Enoch Glasco was said to have settled there about 1826 or 1827, but his descendants say he came about 1829 and settled west of Charleston.

The numerous Whitley family, the Fullers and William Bridgman settled along the Okaw in 1833, and, in the same year, Baily Riddle settled on one of the creeks near the Humboldt Township line.

Along the west side of the Ambraw, in what is now Morgan Township, Collins, Caldwell, Clark and Kennedy located about 1830-31.

There was a settlement started by Samuel H. Ashmore, above Oakland in the present limits of Douglas County, in 1829. That settlement grad-

Coles County's first settler had, because of the greater facilities for information its authors possessed twenty-five years ago, yet I desire to record the statement of Mrs. Abner Brown, who was a daughter of Enoch Glasco and who was twelve years old when her father came to Coles County, that she distinctly remembers that John Parker had seven sons instead of five, and that their names were Daniel, Benjamin, Silas, James, Nathaniel, Isaac and Joseph.

ually spread southward into what is now Coles County, and what was known for years afterward as "Ashmore's Settlement," included territory now in both Coles and Douglas Counties. Alexander Laughlin, Eli Sargent, the Reddens, the Widow Berry and her son, John L., coming in 1830, became the first settlers of that vicinity in the present limits of Coles County.

This general summary of the location of first settlements will suffice. I have aimed to refer to those localities only which were most important.

These little communities were referred to by the pioneers as "settlements" and distinguished from each other either by locality or by the name of some prominent early settler in the neighborhood, as "Wabash Point Settlement," "Muddy Point Settlement," "Kickapoo Point Settlement," "Whitley's Settlement," "Ashmore's Settlement," "Dudley's Settlement," etc. It was common to use the word "point" in referring to a timber tract bordering upon a small stream, and usually coming to a point near its source in the prairie.

After the close of the Black Hawk War in 1832—that last despairing struggle of the red man to retain a hold upon territory in Illinois—the various settlements grew with increasing rapidity; houses were made more comfortable and improvements became more substantial. The pioneers, at first somewhat in doubt whether they had not ventured too far into the wilds, now realized that their tenure of the land was secure. The majority of the population at that time, and for some years afterward, was in the southern half of the county. Wabash, Muddy and Kickapoo Points, including Dry Grove, Goose Nest and Indian, had, perhaps, two hundred, and possibly two hundred and fifty, families. The seat of government, so to speak, had been at the house of James Ashmore, which was in what is now the town of Lafayette on the east half of northwest quarter of Section 33-11-8, inasmuch as that was the voting place, until the county seat was established at Charleston.

J. M. Peck's "Gazetteer of Illinois," published in 1834, mentioned some of the settlements in the following language:

"Ashmore's settlement, fifteen miles north of Charleston on the east side of the Embarras, has about fifty families."

As before stated, this settlement was only partly in what is now Coles County.

"Charleston is the seat of justice for Coles County. It has three stores, three groceries and about twenty-five families," evidently meaning that there were three general stores and three that were exclusively groceries.

"Cutler's settlement, eight miles northeast from Charleston, on the east side of the Embarras. The soil both of timbered land and prairie is good, and the settlement contains forty to fifty families."

This settlement, which those now living seem unable to tell anything about, was evidently started by John Cutler, who came from Ohio about 1829, and settled in the timber near the location afterward called St. Omer, north of Ashmore, at, or in the vicinity of, Section 24-13-10. Peck's "Gazetteer" continues:

"Dead Man's Grove, six miles west of Charleston. It is almost circular, about two miles in diameter and contains three or four sections of indifferent timber, surrounded with a rich and undulating prairie and is monopolized by two or three families. The old Kickapoo Indian villages were adjoining this grove

"Dudley's settlement, in Coles County, seven or eight miles east of Charleston.

"Indian Creek, in Coles County, and a branch of the Embarras. The land is good, both timber and prairie, and the population forty to fifty families.

"Muddy Point, in the southwestern part of Coles County, and one of the heads of the Little Wabash. The timber is excellent, prairie adjoining is rolling and rich, and the settlement consists of eighty or one hundred families."

Except that Muddy Creek does not flow into the Little Wabash, this description may be accepted as given.

"Wabash Point, in the southwestern part of Coles County, is the principal head of the Little Wabash. The timber and adjoining prairie are good and the settlement is large.

"Hickory Creek, in Coles County (this name is evidently an error on the part of the author or printer, as it is plain that Kickapoo Creek is referred to) rises in the Grand Prairie, runs southeast and enters the Embarras five miles below Charleston. It is a good millstream, and the land through which it passes is undulating and rich; the settlements contain 120 families.

"Embarras Settlement, in Coles County. I have given this name to an extensive tract of country thinly populated, extending along the west side of the Embarras and north of Charleston. The quality of the land is on a medium with the rest of Coles County. South of Charleston and on the same side the county is thinly settled.

"Polecat Creek, a stream in Coles County that rises in the prairies toward Edgar County, runs southwest and enters the Embarras east of Charleston. Near its head is a very fertile region, well timbered; further down the surface is broken. The settlement has thirty families."

Whitley's Settlement is also mentioned, but it was mostly in what is now Moultrie County, although it probably extended over the line into Coles, and no estimate of the number of its settlers is given.

The author stated in his preface to the "Gazetteer" that, in the winter of 1832-33, he spent several weeks at Vandalia, then the State Capital, during the session of the Legislature. Personal intercourse was had with members of the Legislature and other gentlemen from each county, and from that source he obtained such facts as have been given. He said that he spent two or three hours each evening with some prominent man from some county in the State, and obtained the facts given in referring to that particular county, finishing with one county before taking up another. While, therefore, the "Gazetteer" was published in 1834, the author gave the facts as they were said to be at the time he received his information, which was in the winter of 1832-33. It would be interesting to know with whom the author consulted relative to Coles County. Dr. John Carrico was the first Representative from this county in the Legislature, and he probably was at Vandalia during that winter.

Dr. Carrico came to the county sometime about the beginning of 1831 and settled at Charleston. His knowledge of the western part of the county must have been somewhat limited, particularly as to the number of settlers.

It will be noted that no estimate is given of the number of families in the Wabash Point Settlement, and that indicates that the author's information came from someone who did not live in the western part of the county, otherwise he would have been willing to make a guess as to the population there. I believe that in all the west side settlements the number of families was overestimated in that "Gazetteer." It is very hard to believe that at the beginning of 1833 there were 120 families along the Kickapoo Creek. With the kind of families the pioneers had, that would have indicated a population of fully six hundred and possibly more. This was manifestly an error. And unless Muddy Point, in those days, extended far down in what is Cumberland County, the number of families in that settlement must have been somewhat less than eighty at that early date. The population of the whole county (which then included the territory of Douglas and Cumberland) was, in 1830, about 4,500, and five years later was only 642 more than that number, so that it would be fair to say that the whole number of families within the present limits of Coles County, in 1832-33, did not exceed four hundred and fifty, and, perhaps, was even less than that, making the total population from 2,000 to 2,500. Dr. Carrico (or whoever supplied the information to Dr. Peck, the author of the "Gazetteer") was evidently more familiar with the east side of the county than with the west side.

A second edition of that "Gazetteer" was published in 1837, but the author did not revise his work, so far as his descriptions of settlements were concerned, because the above locations and settlements were referred to in the later edition in precisely the same language as in the edition of 1834. He did, however, bring in some later names of places, which will be referred to hereafter.

CHAPTER IV.

COLES COUNTY IN DEVELOPMENT.

PROMINENT PIONEERS AND EARLY PREACHERS—THE PARKERS, HUTTON AND HANSON—DRS. APPERSON AND ALLISON—COMING OF THE LINCOLN FAMILY—OTHER NOTABLE HISTORIC CHARACTERS—ORLANDO B. FICKLIN, USHER F. LINDER AND COL. THOMAS A. MARSHALL—EARLY POSTOFFICES, POSTMASTERS AND STAGE LINES—FIRST SCHOOLS AND SOME OF THEIR TEACHERS—EARLY INDUSTRIES AND MANUFACTURING—PRIMITIVE METHODS IN MANUFACTURE OF BREAD STUFFS—SAW AND GRIST MILLS—AGRICULTURE—THE BROOM-CORN INDUSTRY—FRUIT-GROWING AND STOCK-BREEDING.

A brief allusion will be made to some of the most prominent of those first settlers, and I regret that the space allowed in this work will not permit more extended reference to those mentioned, and necessitates leaving out many others who really deserve some notice.

Prominent Pioneers—Early Preachers.—John Parker, the head of the little party which made the first settlement here, was a preacher of the Predestinarian Baptist faith, commonly called "Hard-Shell Baptists," and he and his son Daniel were the first preachers in the county. They were earnest, determined men in all the pioneer walks of life, and thoroughly practical. Daniel, it was said, would go out upon an occasional Sunday, if his family were short of meat, and lay in a supply of deer and other game to last for some time. His weekdays were devoted to strenuous physical labor. He represented Crawford County as State Senator (1822-26) before the organization of Coles County, and for a part of the time before settling within the limits of what is now Coles County. He was a man of strong character and above the average in general intelligence. John Parker, the father, had the same practical ways and recognized the stern necessity to care for the physical well-being of the wife and children. He had, by some means, received the sobriquet of "High Johnny"—probably not, however, because of any "High Church" proclivities—and during the season when bee-trees could best be found (for honey was one of the food necessities to give variety to their simple bill of fare), he is said to have occasionally announced after a sermon that there would be preaching upon some specified following Sunday, "if it was not a good bee-day." In this announcement he showed his shrewd recognition of the fact that, even if he were willing, himself, to allow a good day for finding honey to pass in order to preach, the probabilities were that, on such a day, he would be without a congregation.

John Hutton, another pioneer, has said that he was present at the first sermon preached in Coles County; that all the population of the county were in the little log cabin where the meeting was held, and that there was abundant room; that Daniel Parker preached the sermon, and his father, "High Johnny," in a few remarks at the close of the service, made the impressive statement, "Brethren, we have wandered far into the wilderness, but even here death will find us." John Parker was a soldier of the Revolutionary War and applied for and received a pension as such under the Act of Congress passed in 1832.

John Hutton, for whom the town of Hutton was named, assisted the Parkers, already named, to move to this county in 1824, and spent some time here with them then, removing here later (in 1834) from Crawford County. He was a volunteer in the Black Hawk War from that county and was a prominent, enterprising and public-spirited man. He kept a pack of hounds, as did many others of the pioneers, for fox-hunting, and was a skilled hunter.

The other family of Parkers who settled Parker's Prairie, were a numerous and thrifty family who came from Ohio to Crawford County, and thence here.

Rev. John Adams, John C. Davis, the Evingers, the Ingrams, George Goodman, the Johns, the Rennels, Cottinghams, William Beavers, Joel Connolly, John Waltrip, Stephen Stone, Anthony Cox and others named in the preceding list as settlers of the southeastern part of Coles County, and their descendants, have all been prominent, some of them holding important public offices, and in many ways leaving their impress upon the community.

The earliest preachers in this part of the county were: Stanley B. Walker, a United Baptist; Matthew Baker, a Free-Will Baptist; Charles Pennington, a Baptist, and Samuel Peppers, a preacher of the Disciples or Christian Church.

In the southwestern part of the county there were, at Wabash Point and vicinity (including Dry Grove), many men of high intelligence and fine character whose lives were devoted to making Coles County a worthy place of abode. George M. Hanson, a Methodist preacher, was a man of much public spirit, and displayed great energy and intelligence in his efforts in behalf of the young community. He drafted and, with Joseph Harvey and Andrew Caldwell, circulated the petition for the new county of Coles, and was made the bearer of the petition to the State Capital, then Vandalia. While there, with the assistance of Colonel William B. Archer, a member of the Legislature from Clark County, he obtained the passage of the bill and returned home inside of two weeks, bringing with him a copy of the bill as passed. He also circulated a petition for, and obtained the establishment of the first postoffice in Coles County, which he named Paradise, and became its first Postmaster. He was a member of the first Board of County Commissioners and later served in the Legislature, from 1842 to 1846 as Representative and 1846-48 as Senator. He was a preacher of much power and force and, in every sense, a leader.

Dr. John Apperson, one of the first physicians in the county, was born in Virginia in 1794 and died in the town of Paradise in 1877. He became prominent at once after his arrival in 1829, and practiced his profession within a circuit of twenty-five or thirty miles, often being called to visit a patient twenty-five miles from his home, and never failing to answer such a call, when possible to do so. He continued his practice until old age compelled his retirement, and even then his old friends would send for him when sick, and would suffer no new doctor to prescribe for them.

An Example of Pioneer Sympathy.—As an instance of the straits to which the first settlers were sometimes reduced for the actual necessities of life, and in illustration of the helpful good fellowship among the pioneers, the following is related: Silas Hart, one of the numerous family of Harts, who had preceded Dr. Apperson here, rode by soon after the Doctor had moved into his cabin and stopped to make his acquaintance. He found Mrs. Apperson in tears. Upon inquiring, he learned from the Doctor that his wife was fearful that they would starve, as they had no meat and only a little meal left. Mr. Hart looked thoughtful and turned his horse and rode away. In speaking of it afterwards the Doctor said he thought, as Hart left, that he was rather an unsympathetic man. But they soon heard the shot of a rifle in the woods, and then, a little later, Mr. Hart appeared bearing upon his horse a fat doe, which he tumbled off at the Doctor's cabin door and rode away. Thus began a friendship that lasted unbroken through many years, and only death at last had the power to step between them.

James T. Cunningham was a man of much intelligence and force. He was active in all matters pertaining to the improvement and advancement of the community, was elected to various local offices, served in the Legislature as Representative four terms (1834-42) and ran as the Whig candidate for Congress at one time, but, as the district was Democratic, he was defeated by Hon. J. C. Robinson, of Clark County.

Rev. Hiram Tremble, a pioneer preacher of the Methodist faith, was another man of prominence, universally respected and looked upon as a leader in matters pertaining to the public welfare.

Wabash Point was settled by a high class of pioneers, in fact, and it is hardly fair to make special mention of a few and leave out others. Among the early settlers here were the Currys, Grahams, Elisha Linder, Charles W. Nabb, Richard Champion, the Sawyers, Yocums, Harts, Dr. William Allison, Jefferson Coleman, the Radleys, Slovers, H. B. Worley, Clemmie Goar and the preachers, besides those named in the preceding paragraphs, who were numerous in that locality (and nearly all of them Methodists, as this was a Methodist settlement), such as Barton Randall, Daniel Thompson, Thomas E. Morris, Daniel Bryant and Thomas B. Ross. Samuel Pullen was the first Baptist preacher and Reuben Coy was an early Christian preacher there. Dr. Apperson and Dr. William Allison were also Methodist preachers, as well as physicians. These all left their impress upon the young community, and many of them and others have descendants still living here who are among the best people in the county.

In the Muddy Point settlement, which, for the purposes of this history must include the contiguous localities of Indian Creek and Goose Nest Prairie, had a large settlement at a very early day of men of high average in character. Just let the reader look over the list of those early settlers in what is now the town of Pleasant Grove, and he will find few names which do not remind him of some descendants here who are the best of Coles County's citizens.

William R. Jeffries was an early Sheriff and a man who had the confidence of his neighbors to the utmost—a solid, reliable and charitable man. Thomas Jeffries, his brother, was a Justice of the Peace for many years, and his decisions and acts, as such, stamped him as a man of judgment and good sense.

Joseph Allison was from Tennessee. His wife had been born in North Carolina. After their arrival here, by the death of her father she inherited some money from the sale of her father's slaves. She and her husband consulted about it. They were in full accord as to the wickedness of slavery. She called her inheritance "blood money," and it was agreed between them that she should receive the money, but every dollar of it was to be devoted to the furtherance of the "underground railroad." It was so done. Mr. Allison, besides being a strong Abolitionist, was a leader in the cause of temperance and all measures that tended to the elevation of the morals of the young community. He was sincere, earnest and practiced what he preached.

But space forbids further personal mention of those in that locality, as the limit placed upon me by the extent of this work will not allow me to dwell upon the lives and qualities of such pioneer men and families as the Balches, Campbells, Drydens, Gammills, Glens, Nicholson, Faris, the Rodgers, Brewsters, Gordons and many others.

not be right, however, to leave this settlement without a short statement in regard to pioneer Thomas Lincoln. He came from Kentucky to Indiana, thence to Macon County, Ill., and thence to Coles County in 1831. His son Abraham, a well grown boy, drove the wagon for them in their removal to Macon County, and John J. Hall says he also drove for them in their removal to this county, and then immediately left to care for himself. The family first settled near Buck Grove, then, a few months later, removed to Goose Nest Prairie, where they lived until death took Mr. Lincoln in 1851. Mrs. Lincoln, who was a second wife and the stepmother of Abraham, lived some years after her husband's death, and at her death she was buried by his side in the Gordon Graveyard, on the Goose Nest Prairie.

Thomas Lincoln was always poor; his cabin was of the most primitive sort, his wants few, his life simple, his disposition peaceable; he was a peace-maker among his neighbors; he had no education—could barely read and write—but the son, born into his humble home, made the name Lincoln second to none in the world's history, and Coles County is proud to be the shrine of the mortal remains of Thomas Lincoln.

Other Notable Citizens.—Among early preachers in this locality, the first one here was Rev. Daniel Barham, a Primitive Baptist. Rev. John McDonald and Rev. Isaac Bennett were pioneer preachers here of the Presbyterian faith, whose efforts in building up the early churches were earnest and successful. Mark W. Campbell was an early preacher of the Christian Church. The Reverend Bennett was born in the East, and had received a college education. He was soft-voiced with a refined manner, and was the only one of those early preachers who manifested annoyance at improper noises in church. He at first couldn't bear the presence of crying babies. He soon, however, met his affinity in the person of a daughter of Amos Ashmore in the northeast part of the county. She was a fine looking girl with a strong voice and abundant vitality and animal spirit. "After he had lived with her a few years and several young Bennetts had gathered about his feet, he could preach right along in the stiffest kind of a squall."

Among the early settlers of Kickapoo Point and vicinity, in what is now the town of LaFayette, we find names of many who were always active and earnest supporters of good government and examples of good citizenship. This vicinity was a Baptist settlement at first, and Rev. Thomas Threlkeld was its first exponent in that part of the county. He was a man of many sterling qualities of mind and heart, worked on his farm through the week and preached on Sunday.

William Ewing, William L. Williams, Katherine VanMeter (widow), Richard Gray, William R. Jones, David Hancock, Stephen Ferguson, I. J. Monfort, Joseph Vanderen, the Woods, and John True, the progenitor of all those Trues who developed into such excellent citizens, were among the earliest of that fine neighborhood.

William Ewing, son of pioneer William Ewing, just named, tells of the coming of Mrs. Katherine VanMeter from Kentucky, with her family (among whom was the boy Samuel, who later became Dr. S. VanMeter), and says that the neighbors gathered soon after to raise a cabin for her to live in, somewhere near that of William L. Williams.

Mr. Williams was a widower with considerable family and, when they all gathered for the house raising (among them the widow Van Meter), he took an early opportunity to have a few words with her in private. The result of that private conversation Mr. Williams then announced to the company, stating that no special cabin was needed for Mrs. Van Meter, as she had just consented to occupy his own with him, and the raising might be adjourned, sine die. The announcement was received with shouts of approval and congratulations; but there was no adjournment until the good things provided to eat and drink had been abundantly sampled.

The locality in and about Charleston has, among its first settlers, many names still very familiar to the younger generation, by reason of the number of their descendants who live in the county. A name that is not so generally familiar now, was that of Dr. John Carrico, one of the first doctors in that locality, and who must have been a man of intelligence and character, as he was Coles County's first Representative in the State Legislature. The pioneers were more particular to send men of good character and good personal habits to represent them, than is always manifested in these latter days. No suspicion of corruption and "boodleism" was attached to the names of Coles County's first State Senators and Representatives.

Alexander P. Dunbar, Charleston's first lawyer, was prominent early. He was in the Legislature in the later 'thirties ('36-'38) and afterwards in 1845-47. During the former session he was a desk-mate of Abraham Lincoln in the House. He was commissioned a Colonel in the Black Hawk War and rendered valuable service in recruiting and forwarding troops.

Orlando B. Ficklin was a man of unusual parts, and was often honored by election to high offices. He was engaged in the Black Hawk War, and became prominent before his removal to Coles County in 1837. He was a Democrat in politics and served in several sessions of Congress from the district of which Coles County was a part, and also in the Legislature. He was intimately associated with Lincoln, Douglas and other men of national reputation while in Congress, and also as a lawyer in the practice of his profession over the circuit in which Coles County was located. He was a member of the convention which nominated James Buchanan for President; was a member of the convention at Charleston, S. C., in 1860, which split into two factions, and later attended the convention at Baltimore and assisted in the nomination of Stephen A. Douglas. He helped as a delegate, to nominate McClellan in 1864, and was a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1862. Many stories of his ability and shrewdness are told, which the writer regrets that he cannot embody in this brief history.

Dr. Aaron Ferguson, who, with Dr. Carrico, was one of the first physicians at Charleston, practiced his profession through many years and died there at a good old age. He was a man of education and ability. His wife was a daughter of Charles S. Morton. His life was retiring and quiet, and he sought no public office. His practice extended for many miles around.

Usher F. Linder was an early lawyer at Charleston, a man of considerable ability and one who, if he had possessed more stability of character, might have become a statesman. He was large, fine looking, quick at repartee and full of resources as a lawyer. He was in the State Legislature from Coles County several terms, was Attorney General of Illinois, rode the same circuit with Lincoln and others prominent in the practice of law, and, when at his best, was an orator of no mean ability. But he could not always be depended on, and had traits that injured his reputation as a citizen.

Charles S. Morton, for whom Charleston was named, was a man of character. He had the first store there, built a horse-mill, and otherwise assisted greatly in building up the young community. He is said to have erected a row of pole cabins just west of where the court house now stands, and they were let to new comers until they could provide houses of their own. This row of cabins was designated by the settlers by various euphonious names. Some called it the "Penitentiary," others "Smoky Row."

Mrs. Munson, of Lerna, now an aged woman and a daughter of John Gordon, a "Goose Nest" settler, told the writer that she went to Charleston when a child about 1834, to the first and only show she ever attended in her life. It was called an "animal show." She did not hear it spoken of as a "circus." They had an elephant and some monkeys, and various other animals in cages, such as the menageries now exhibit. Aside from the show, the only other impression she retains of the looks of things there, was that "Smoky Row" of eighteen or twenty pole cabins, each of which contained one family and some of them two.

Thomas A. Marshall came from a prominent Kentucky family. When he came to Coles County in 1839, he purchased about 800 acres of land in the Dead Man's Grove, lived there two years and then resumed the practice of law at Charleston. He naturally (as lawyers often do) drifted into politics, and was one of the organizers of the Republican party in 1856. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1847-8, served one term (four years) as State Senator, and in 1861, in consequence of the accession of Lieutenant Governor John Wood to the governorship after the death of Governor Bissell, was elected President pro. tem. of the Senate, serving for a short time as Acting Lieutenant Governor. He was the cashier and manager of the first bank in the county. During the Civil War he assisted in the organization of the First Regiment Illinois Cavalry, in which he served as Colonel. He held other prominent official positions, and was a man who, by reason of his tall, portly figure and striking countenance, attracted attention wherever he went.

Dr. Thomas B. Trower studied medicine in Kentucky, came to Coles County in 1836, and, after trying the mercantile business awhile in Charleston, resumed the practice of medicine. He was later in the field than Drs. Ferguson and Carrico, but built up a large practice and was popular personally. He was a colleague of Col. Thomas A. Marshall as delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1847. He became wealthy and lived to a good old age. His widow, "Aunt Polly" Trower, took up the management of the estate, displaying much business acumen, and died recently.

Dr. Byrd Monroe and his brother, Dr. John Monroe, both from Kentucky, were men of great prominence. They were both physicians but did not practice in this county. Byrd Monroe served one term as State Senator (1838-42). John Monroe lived many years after his brother's death, was a merchant of great enterprise, and a man whose opinions on public matters were much sought for and highly respected. He accumulated quite a fortune and died at the age of sixty-six years.

I have referred briefly to those early settlers of Charleston who were, in a sense, public men—that is, men who were for various reasons in the public eye, or who filled some more important than mere local offices—and I am compelled to stop there. I could fill a large space in this book with stories of the lives and services of many others, whose names are in the list of first settlers of Charleston.

Among settlers upon the east side of the Embarras, in what is now the town of Ashmore, no names stand out more prominently than those of the very first comers there—Laban Burr, James, Guilford and Moses Dudley. Mr. Burr was said to have been originally from New York and the Dudleys from New Hampshire. They were men of exceptional intelligence, and took hold of the business of building up the new settlement with characteristic Yankee energy. They were bachelors for some time after they came, and, before taking to themselves wives, kept "bach" in their cabins; so that the settlement was often referred to as the "bachelors' settlement."

It is related that they brought with them many "down east" customs. One of these was the old usage, mentioned in "McClellan's History of Gorham, Maine," of christening a newly built house in the same manner as the naming of a ship when it is launched, by simultaneously breaking a bottle of wine on the prow. This old eastern custom of "naming the frame," as it was called, was carried out by climbing upon the ridge-pole and breaking the bottle, at the same time repeating some rhyme, or sentiment suitable to the occasion.

The first frame barn in the county was erected by the Dudleys, and a neighbor from Edgar County, named McCracken, performed the ceremony upon the ridge-pole, with all due solemnity, pronouncing the words, "The bachelor's delight, and the pride of the fair," as he struck the frame with the bottle—a sentiment that doesn't seem entirely relevant, for while the barn might have been the "bachelor's delight," it is hard to comprehend how it could have been the "pride of the fair."

In looking over the names of other early settlers in that part of the county, there are few who might not be referred to at length as splendid citizens, and almost all of them still have descendants who are among the best people in the county.

Of the settlers prior to 1840 in the northeastern part of the county were Samuel Ashmore, the Berrys, Martin Zimmerman and others; in what is now Morgan Township, the Adkins, Kennedy, McAllister, the Winkleblack families and others; and in the North Okaw settlement, the Ellis, Fuller and Hoots families and others.

All deserve special mention and more extended notice than can be given them in these pages.

Early Postoffices and Mail Routes.—Mail facilities were very meager here in those early days. The mails were carried on horseback through this county from Paris to Vandalia. Samuel Frost is said to have been the name of the first mail carrier. Postage was at first twenty-five cents on each letter payable at the office of delivery.

Letter paper was unruled, pens were made of goose-quills, and ink was usually home made, by boiling some bark of the jack oak or maple tree in a little water, and then dropping some copperas in the decoction. This is said to have made a good, durable, nearly black ink. The ink was dried by scattering over the sheet very fine sand. Blotting paper was unknown. The letter, when written, was folded and the edges sealed together with sealing wax or "wafers." These latter were small, flat and circular shaped things, which, when moistened with the lips, became adhesive. They were considered quite a luxurious addition to a pioneer's "writing desk," when they were invented. The address was then written upon the outside of the folded sheet, envelopes being a later luxury.

The first postoffice in Coles County was called Paradise. The first Postmaster was George M. Hanson, who was appointed February 18, 1830, and kept the office at his own house in the northeast part of what is now Paradise Township. Later it was kept at Slover's store and there were probably other changes as to location before the village of Paradise was started, and the office finally located there. The second postoffice was Bachelorsville, located in the "Dudley Settlement," and its first Postmaster, Laban Burr, was appointed May 14, 1830. The third postoffice, of which Charles S. Morton was appointed Postmaster on March 31, 1831, was "Coles Court House." This was located at what later became the village of Charleston, but the postoffice retained the name first given to it until April 29, 1843, when it was changed to Charleston. Edmund Roach was, on the day last mentioned, made the first Postmaster at this office under its new name. The fourth postoffice was Oakland, and on July 26, 1833, Whitfield W. Morrison was made the first postmaster. About the time stages began running through Coles County, Hitesville was started by James Hite, and he was made the first postmaster for that place on August 24, 1835. On March 15, 1836, John True was made the Postmaster of another postoffice called Bethsaida.

The names Bachelorsville and Bethsaida seem to have passed from the memory of most people now living, although both of them are mentioned in Peck's "Gazetteer of Illinois" of 1837, and are shown on maps of Illinois, published by J. H. Colton & Co., of New York, and others as late as 1856—which was their last appearance, the railroads then having caused the discontinuance of both these offices, as well as the one at Hitesville.

Bachelorsville was described (and shown on maps) as about eight miles east of Charleston, and was therefore, as stated, in the settlement of "bachelors" known as "Dudley's Settlement," at or in the vicinity of Section 12-12-10. The Postmaster had a little store in connection with the postoffice and Guilford Dudley later kept a store there. At these stores were sold cakes and pies that became famous, and the name "Pietown," given to that neighborhood then, clings to it to this day.

Bethsaida was described as a "postoffice eight miles west of Charleston." It was located in Section 21-12-8 on the north side of the State Road, just across from the church now there, about where is now the residence of A. G. Hildreth, being the location at that time of the residence of John True, Bethsaida's first Postmaster.

The postoffice of Campbell was started in what is now the town of Pleasant Grove, by the appointment of Eugenia Campbell, Postmaster, on December 22, 1838. This completed the list of what I call "early postoffices," and the dates of later postoffices will be given in another chapter.

It is not certain what the east and west termini of the first stage routes were, which were started through Coles County about 1835. But, for several years prior to the coming of the railroads, there was a regular line carrying passengers and mail from Indianapolis to Springfield. At different dates in those years the locations of the stops, or "stands," for the stages varied. Upon the east side of the county, we learn of no other stands than Hitesville and Bachelorsville. But upon the west side those stands were located at different times as follows: At John Fudge's, on the State road in the northwest part of Section 18-13-9 (Fudge also kept a tavern there); at John True's (Bethsaida), at Richmond, and at Langston's west of the Little Wabash, about where the state road strikes the middle of Section 32-12-7. Coming west through central Coles County on the stages, up to 1855 the stops were at Hitesville, Bachelorsville, Charleston, Bethsaida and Richmond or Langston, in the order named. When the railroads came, Kansas, in Edgar County, swallowed up Hitesville, Ashmore abolished Bachelorsville, and Mattoon did away with Bethsaida. A postoffice by the name of Doty was established, in 1855, on the "Clover Leaf" Railroad, near the southwest corner of Section 29 in Charleston Township with James S. Doty as Postmaster. Fare on the stages was usually six cents per mile, and meals at the stage stands were three "bits" or 37½ cents.

School History.—As has been stated heretofore, the first schools in the county were private, a small tuition being charged by the teacher. The first school houses were built by the contributions of the settlers in a neighborhood, in the form of labor. One settler would donate a site for the building. Others would come with the ax, the frow and the auger—those implements of necessity and the only ones actually necessary, in the building and furnishing of a pioneer house of any kind. When the school-house was built with an extra wide fireplace to enable all to get warm, it was provided with windows made by sawing openings through the logs and covering them with white cotton goods or oiled paper. The first regular log school house in the Wabash Point or Dry Grove settlements, must have been the one built about 1829-30, on land that belonged to Van Nort and was located on the north part of Section 11-11-7. The first teachers there were the man Banker, heretofore referred to, David Campbell, William Moffett, Eli Thayer, O. H. Perry and later T. D. P. Henley, father of Judge L. C. Henley.

Mrs. Lurana Graham, who recently died at the age of ninety-two years, and who was a daughter of pioneer Charles Sawyer, said that some woman named Green had a school of six "scholars" in a cabin that had a dirt floor, about 1828-29 in Wabash Point. Her sister, Mrs. Spencer, who recently died at about ninety years of age, said the first school teacher there of whom she had any recollection was John Graham. A man named Drake is said to have taught awhile at an early date. James Waddill taught there in the early 'thirties. Nathaniel Killim, who was the victim of the first murder in the county, taught a short time very early at the "Point." One George Kellar taught in various parts of the southwestern corner of the county. Ebenezer Alexander also taught there at an early day.

In Muddy Point and vicinity I find no one who has recollection of the first school house. A man named McClellan, perhaps, taught the first school there, and later teachers there were Hull Tower, Theron J. Balch and Hezekiah Balch. The two Balches are heard of as early teachers in Kickapoo Point also, and Daniel Barham, the preacher who settled on Goose Nest Prairie, also taught there.

Mr. James Phipps, whose father came about 1827, tells of a log school-house at a place known as the Sulphur Springs in the Kickapoo Point, where a man named Watson and others afterwards taught, beginning about 1830 to 1832.

Little can be learned of early schools in the southeastern part of the county. The LeBaron History of 1879 tells of a log school-house being built about 1832-33, "on the hill near the Pole Cat Bridge." The location is given with the usual indefiniteness of that work. We, who are living a quarter of a century later, can easily find several bridges on the Pole Cat which might fill that description. Old settlers say, however, that the school-house referred to, was probably that on the south side of Pole Cat Creek near the bridge south of Ashmore and between that village and the "Pietown" neighborhood. William Crocker is believed to have been the first teacher there.

In what is now Hutton Township, a log school-house was built about 1833-34, on Section 5. In that, Hezekiah Mason, John Tincher and Thomas Fowler taught. James Rennels was also an early teacher there.

It seems well-nigh impossible to get any reliable information about early schools in what are now Morgan and East Oakland Townships. Also very little can be learned in that respect in reference to the northwestern part of the county.

School-houses, so far as can be learned, were not built in the north central part of the county until sometime after 1840, and those matters will be covered in the separate histories of the townships.

Early Industries.—As to early industries, aside from farming, as well as stores and manufacturing, definite and absolutely reliable information is hard to obtain. The first settlers had to go a long way to stores and to mills. They generally went south to Darwin, in Clark County, or Palestine, in Crawford County, or east to Paris, in Edgar County—whichever was nearest to them or easiest of access—and, when unable to go to mill, they resorted to several of the world-old methods of grinding, one of which was, when sheet iron or tin was obtainable, to punch the sheet full of nail holes, thus forming a "grater," and fastening this upon a board, take an ear of corn, which had been softened by soaking in water, and rub it up and down upon the grater, reducing it to a coarse meal. Another was grinding the grain by hand with stones, where suitable stones could be obtained for that purpose. Still another method was that which James Phipps says was practiced in his father's family and by other early settlers. This was to cut out or burn a bowl-shaped hollow in a good sound stump, then rig up over it a small pole-sweep similar to that used in raising a bucket from a well; in place of the bucket was attached a large stone hung directly above the stump. The shelled corn was placed in the stump, and, by manipulating the pole up and down, the stone was made to pound the corn until reduced to various degrees of fineness, which was then sifted, the finer being used for bread, and the coarser part made into hominy.

Indian corn was the staple production of the first settlers. Very little wheat was planted until several years after the pioneers came, and it was not an easy matter to grind wheat by these primitive methods on account of the smallness of the grain and its adhesive character; so that wheat bread was a rare luxury until the establishment of good mills.

In the southwestern part of the county Jacob Slover started a store about 1830, near the south part of Section 2-12-7, and soon thereafter Isaac Slover built a horse-mill nearby, and just north of the store Tobias Speck located a blacksmith shop. One Baldwin had, a little earlier, a blacksmith shop near by. These were the earliest industries of the kind in that section. John Radley was skilled in making wool hats. In the early 'thirties Charles W. Nabb started a store at Richmond, and one Eckles started one on the State road just west of the easternmost bridge over the Kickapoo Creek. Richmond (so named by pioneer Houchins, who owned the land, because he came from near Richmond, Va.) was located about the junction of the State road with the south line of Section 27-12-7.

The Parkers had previously started a mill on the east side of the Embarras near where their first settlement was made. This mill was sold to a Mr. Shaw and, later, to Norfolk & Baker; and then, after being moved to the west side of the river and rebuilt and enlarged in the later 'fifties became the property of a Mr. Eben Blake-man who made it one of the best mills in the country. It was run for a large part of the time both day and night until the early 'eighties. Mr. Blakeman also had a saw-mill nearby his grist mill, which turned out the lumber for many a Coles County building.

As heretofore stated, Charles S. Morton started the first store and first horse-mill, at or near Charleston, about 1830-31.

John Robinson started a mill on the Kickapoo, in LaFayette, but it did not run long.

John True later (about 1836) built a horse-mill in that vicinity, and James Gobin had a mill at an early day on Kickapoo Creek.

John Tully started a water-mill at the south edge of the county near Johnstown, about 1831-32. It was then converted into a horse-mill, and still later into a tread-mill. There was a distillery attached which Tully bought from Robert Dixon, who started it, and the two industries made it a popular grinding place for the settlers in that section. Thomas Faris had an early horse-mill a mile northeast of Lerna. William R. Jeffries had a horse-mill, and, being a public-spirited man, besides his mill, had a distillery and a tan-yard.

George Tiff and Gideon Satterlee had mills on the Pole Cat in the early 'thirties. Mr. Tiff's mill was not far above the mouth of the Pole Cat, and in connection with it he had a distillery. This mill did the grinding for many settlers in Hutton and Ashmore Townships.

James Nees started a horse-mill about 1832, near "Dogtown" (now Diona), in Hutton.

Enoch Sears started a horse-mill three miles southeast of Oakland, about 1833, and James Redden had one quite early. Several early attempts were made to erect water-mills on the Ambraw west of Oakland, but the floods swept them away. One started by Mr. Chadd, however, ran for several years.

The first settlers along the Okaw patronized a mill at Old Nelson, in what was then Shelby, but is now Moultrie County. Hawkins Fuller, however, started a horse-mill in the 'thirties on Whitley Creek.

The first lumber manufactured here was by means of "whip-saws" operated by two men, one above and one below the log. This was a slow process, and frame houses were not built until some years after the first settlements were started, or in the later 'thirties, when a few horse-power saw-mills were started. A whip-saw mill was run in the early 'thirties on the north part of Section 2-11-7.

David Weaver and George Oliver started a water-power saw-mill on the west side of the Ambraw early, and one of their industries was to send lumber and hoop poles down the river on flat boats, to the larger settlements.

The use of steam in operating mills began with the one erected by Miles W. Hart and Clemme Goar, at Paradise, about 1837-38. The boiler and engine, and the burr-stones for this mill, were brought from Cincinnati on wagons by James Sexson, Hugh Cowan and H. B. Worley.

To show how rapidly Coles County was progressing, it may be stated that, in 1831 (six years previous), there were only ten mills in Illinois operated by steam. Some of them were for grinding and some for sawing, and most of them located along the Mississippi River. The nearest one to us was a saw-mill in Clark County.

A few attempts were made to burn brick in the 'thirties. The first, perhaps, was by "Jack" Houchin, in 1831, at a point just a little south of the present old "Camp Ground" cemetery, on the east bank of the Little Wabash. This first attempt was a failure, as the fires were made too hot and the brick melted and ran together. Later more successful attempts were made and, by 1840, several brick chimneys were built and even some houses of brick, in various parts of the county.

Alexander Perkins had a brick-kiln south of Charleston before 1840, and from it were built the two old brick houses, just south of the Clover Leaf depot on Fifth street in Charleston.

About 1840 Martin Gilbert made brick in Hutton.

Joseph Allison made wool hats and L. Dow Goodwin made chairs in Pleasant Grove in the early 'thirties. These chairs were made of sugar-tree frames with bottoms of strips of split hickory. Some St. Louis parties came into the timber south of Lerna and established a wooden bowl factory, about 1838. They worked up all the best sycamore trees in that vicinity into bowls of various sizes, continuing in operation several years.

"A Frenchman and an Irishman," whose names are lost to us, are said to have started an earthenware pottery in the 'thirties, southeast of Charleston, in the timber. It was located about the southeast part of Section 14-13-9, and was carried on for some time, making jars and crocks, etc.

John Kennedy started a carding machine in the 'thirties in Charleston, which was the beginning of the woolen mill which was run there for many years.

A carding machine was started, probably just in the edge of Clark County, on the Parker Prairie, before 1830.

Mark W. Campbell had a carding machine in the 'thirties run by oxen (a tread-mill), in what is now Pleasant Grove.

Blacksmiths, tanners and shoemakers, as well as coopers (makers of "piggins," etc.), were numerous. In fact, every settler had to be a sort of "Jack of all trades," and be able, in an emergency, to shoe a horse, or kill a cow, tan the hide and with it "shoe" his family.

"Owens and Harman" are mentioned in the Le Baron History of 1879 as the first blacksmiths in Charleston. What Owens and what Harman, and when and whence they came, we know not.

Tobias Speck in Paradise, Calistus Campbell and Andrew Gray in Pleasant Grove, Jacob Zinn in LaFayette, John Ashby in Hutton, John Carter in Ashmore, William Chadd and Newton McCord in East Oakland were the blacksmiths who opened shops just before or soon after 1830. Others followed rapidly.

David Eastin started a tannery on the "Town

Branch," at Charleston, soon after the village was started. The Stodderts (Richard and Thomas) became its proprietors afterwards, and it was run a long time. Robert Lightfoot started one close by prior to 1840 and ran it for many years after the Stoddert tannery had closed up.

William Wayne started a tannery south of Campbell, in Pleasant Grove, about 1831. The William Jefferies tannery has been mentioned. John Sawyer started an early tannery near his house in Wabash Point.

These brief references to early general industries must suffice.

Agriculture and Horticulture.—Agriculture was conducted along the same primitive lines as other early industries. The principal productions of the early farms were Indian corn and oats. Some wheat was grown and some barley, rye and buckwheat. Some flax and tobacco were raised, while potatoes, turnips and other vegetables were produced in sufficient quantities for home consumption. The first crop upon newly broken prairie land was usually corn, which generally made a fair crop; the second season, if the land was well broken and properly worked, and the weather proved favorable, the yield was enormous; and corn, upon such land, would often produce ears eighteen inches in length, with a yield of seventy-five to 100 bushels of corn per acre. Cabbages two to three feet in diameter (including the leaves), common beets over a foot in circumference, turnips ten to twelve inches in diameter, and parsnips two to two and a half feet in length, were not uncommon—such was the richness of the soil at first.

Breaking plows were the old bar-share type, with the single-shovel for cultivating; harrows had wooden teeth, and an old tree-top was often used as a brush harrow.

Orchards of apple and other fruit-trees were started in the early 'thirties in many localities. John Gordon planted apple-trees on his place in the Goose Nest Prairie, the next morning after the meteoric shower in the fall of 1833. In those days the fall was considered by some a more favorable season for planting fruit-trees than the spring.

David Weaver of Hutton planted many orchards. He moved frequently, and his first task was always to put out fruit-trees. Every settler who got hold of the seed of a peach or an apricot, planted it. And peach trees seemed to thrive better then than now. I remember many trees in my boyhood days that bore the great red Indian (clingstone) peaches, and also several varieties of yellow free-stone peaches, all large and full of juice. The most common kinds of apples were those called the "jenneting" and "milam." But many splendid apples in the early orchards were produced upon trees that were grown from seed, and were of unnamed varieties.

Young trees had to be carefully wrapped with straw, or cloth, or heavy paper, to a height of about two feet each winter, to protect them from rabbits, which loved the taste of the tender bark.

Red clover was introduced pretty early and timothy, Hungarian and other grasses experimented with. The value of blue grass was early recognized. At first, however, some of the pioneers looked upon it with suspicion. One Muddy Point settler, noticing its facility to spread, became uneasy lest it should take the place, so at odd times he went about with a spade digging up and turning over every clump of blue grass.

For many years, Indian corn was the principal product, but oats, clover and timothy for hay, as well as pastureage, were largely produced, and Hungarian rye, wheat, barley and buckwheat were extensively planted. Sorghum cane came in the 'fifties, and many farmers raised it largely from about 1860 on for many years, and manufactured from it a species of molasses that was universally consumed here. With the cheapening in price of Southern cane syrups, its growth and manufacture were gradually discontinued.

Domestic Industries.—The women took the wool after the shearing, and it was picked, cleaned, carded, spun and woven into the garments and bedding right at home. The women made pickles and preserves, and kept them in jars and crocks through the winter. They had no cans for sealing up fruits. They made cheese also, and no such cheese is ever tasted in these latter days.

As late as in the early 'sixties cheese was brought weekly to the store of my father, T. J. Wilson, at Ashmore, by the good women in the country thereabout, and I remember nothing that appealed more strongly to my boyhood taste than that cheese.

The Broom Corn Boom.—In the early 'seventies broom-corn came in as an extensive crop, although it had been planted in a small way from about 1865. R. A. Traver, of Charleston, may be said to have been the pioneer in its production on a large scale. He started a broom factory in Charleston, and rented a large body of land which he planted in broom-corn, and from year to year, its production increased, until a few years ago it reached the culmination as probably second only to Indian corn in the value of its annual production.

At one time over three-fourths of all the broom-corn produced in the United States was raised in Coles and three or four adjoining counties, and Mattoon, Charleston and Humboldt were large markets for its sale and shipment.

Considerable quantities are still handled at those points, but, for the past three or four years, its production has been gradually declining owing to the competition caused by its extensive planting in the cheap new lands of Kansas and Oklahoma, and the difficulty in getting the large number of hands required to harvest and care for it.

Thomas Faris early began to ship in fruit-trees for his neighbors, and had a nursery of his own just northeast of Lerna for many years.

James Dudley, in Ashmore, started a nursery in the early 'thirties, which was afterwards sold to John T. Olmsted by whom it was continued until 1864. People came a distance of fifty miles to obtain trees, shrubs and small fruits from that nursery. James Rennels, in Hutton, was skilled in grafting and budding trees, and started a small nursery there in the 'thirties.

Live Stock.—Thomas Faris probably brought into the county the first lot of Berkshire hogs. He also early began the improvement of other stock, by importing better blood. Cunningham, Nabb and DeJarnett, of the Wabash Point settlement, all brought in Durham bulls from Kentucky in the later 'thirties. John T. Olmsted, of Ashmore, brought in improved breeds of hogs and cattle. So also did John Hutton of Hutton. These men, by their example and their talk, encouraged others in their desire for better breeds of all stock, and the later stimulus given by the County Fair soon began to have a gratifying effect in the general improvement of breeds. One of the first importations from Europe, of the draft horses that were to do so much for us in building up the quality of Coles County horse-flesh, was Richard Stoddert's purchase of the iron gray Percheron stallion, "Prince," in the early 'seventies. This animal became the sire of many superior colts, and was the forerunner of very many other most excellent importations.

MATERIAL PROGRESS.

The first tracks across the county were made by Indians, and these "traces" of the aborigines existed in several parts of the county. One of the longest and plainest ones, easily followed by the growth of blue grass along its course, started near the head of Indian Creek, which was a famous camping ground for the red men, and extended in a generally northwest direction, following the highest ground, until it ran into the Okaw timber.

The earliest "white man's" road in the county was the old "Kaskaskia and Detroit Trace," which ran southwest from Detroit through the present location of Danville, Ill.; thence, coming southwest, it entered Coles County just above Oakland, continued to near the present site of Charleston, then extending south and west, emerged from the county nearly due south of Lerna, thence leading southwesterly to Kaskaskia. This was the overland route for the early French explorers and travelers, between Detroit and Kaskaskia and vicinity.

The National Road.—When Coles County was first organized and, for some years before, the main artery of travel from the East was over the Cumberland Road, sometimes called the "Great National Pike," and generally referred to as the "National Road." It passed through what is now Cumberland County, Ill., (then part of Coles County), and from that circumstance the new county received its name. That road, extending west from Fort Cumberland, and constructed under Federal supervision, did for the Central West, in the early years, what the construction of the Pacific Railroads did for the region west of the Missouri River in the 'seventies and later. It was begun in 1806 and completed as far as Vandalia about 1840; and, for many years, those who lived near the road were entertained by the constantly unrolling panorama of covered wagons drawn by horses or oxen, of men and women on horseback and on foot, with droves of cattle and flocks of sheep, and, at rarer intervals, the old swaying and rocking stage-coach drawn by four or six horses, going by at break-neck speed, bearing passengers with their horse-hide trunks lashed on behind, and conveying the United States mails. Occasionally travelers would be seen facing eastward, but a great endless procession was moving ever, ever westward.

George B. Balch, son of the pioneer Alfred M. Balch, the bard of Pleasant Grove Township, in one of his poems entitled "The Pioneers," pictured it in this wise:

"Then looking eastward o'er the plain,
I saw a slowly moving train
Of objects coming far away,
Like schooners floating on the bay.

"Their whitened sails were neatly spread,
And slowly on their course they sped,
As, westward still they kept their way,
Toward the setting orb of day.

"Hundreds of miles behind them lay
Their native land—so far away—
Their childhood's home, their place of birth,
Their father's and their mother's hearth.

"Before them stretched the boundless West,
In all its native grandeur dressed;
Where, fresh from the Almighty's hand,
There lay a second Promised Land."

The quotation is not remarkable for poetic thought, but gives a vivid glimpse of the surging tide of migration westward in the years before the railroads came.

As most of the early emigrants to Coles County came from southern localities—Kentucky, Tennessee and other Southern States—they usually crossed the Ohio River near Louisville and journeyed north through Indiana, crossing the Wabash River at Vincennes, Palestine, York, Darwin or Terre Haute. Some of them, however, came up the Wabash by boat and landed at the point most convenient to reach their destinations.

Early Roads and Road Laws.—The first permanent road within the present limits of the county, was the one located under special act of the Legislature, approved January 28, 1831. John Flemming, Thomas Sconce and Thomas Rhoades were made Commissioners to survey and locate a road from Shelbyville through Charleston to Paris. The act provided that, "when said road shall be located, it shall be, to all intents and purposes, a State road, four poles wide, and shall be opened and kept in repair as other roads are in this State."

The Commissioners discharged their duties promptly and staked out the road during that year. It is the only early road in the county which still retains its identity, and is known simply as the "State Road." Early settlers east of Charleston usually called it the "Paris and Shelbyville Road," while those living in the west part of the county referred to it as the "Charleston and Shelbyville Road." It was for many years the main line of travel east and west through the county, and the one over which the principal stage line ran.

Another early road was called the "Springfield Trace." It came from Edgar County into the northeast corner of Coles, through the village of Oakland, and thence through the southern part of what is now Douglas County, west to Springfield. Another started in the 'thirties was the "Archer Road," which came up from Marshall, Ill., to Charleston, extending thence west, passed just south of the Dead Man's Grove and on to Dodge Grove; thence proceeding west of north, crossed the Okaw River about where the Iron Bridge is, near the northwest corner of Section 20-13-7, and continued on through Old Nelson, in Moultrie County, to Springfield. This road was the project of Hon. William B. Archer, a pioneer resident of Clark County, a member of the Legislature, and one of the most prominent men in this section of Illinois. This was the same Mr. Archer, who, as a member of the Legislature, rendered such valuable assistance in the passage of the act for the organization of Coles County.

Mr. Archer was appointed one of the first Commissioners of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, and that was the means of giving his name to Archer Avenue, one of the principal streets of Chicago.

The Archer Road was marked by mile posts, and was, for years, the line of travel from Clark County and vicinity to Springfield. The old "Atlas of Coles County," published in 1869 by Warner & Higgins, of Philadelphia, shows a remnant of another road that ran straight as an arrow from Charleston southwest through Hutton Township, and through Martinsville to York on the Wabash River.

Another early road was called the Palestine and Shelbyville Road, which ran from Palestine, in Crawford County, northwestward through the extreme southwestern part of this county, passing through the village of Paradise to Shelbyville.

These early roads were all located along the easiest routes to travel, avoiding steep hills and seeking the most available fording places on streams, and keeping to the high ground on the prairies without regard to section lines. The settlement of the county, and the consequent fencing in of farms, has destroyed all trace of those early lines of travel, except the State Road. Some work was done by the early settlers on bad places in the roads, such as constructing side-ditches to drain off the water, grading by plowing up and piling dirt in the middle of the roads, etc. The primitive wooden scrapers were used for this purpose, but the methods were desultory and the results merely temporary in character.

The act passed by the Legislature in 1831, requiring able-bodied men between twenty-one and fifty years of age to perform three days' labor on the highways, was the beginning of systematic attempts to benefit the roads; but that labor was often wasted by ill-advised methods, owing to the ignorance and indifference of those having such matters in charge. The same may also be said of the expenditure of the poll-tax. There is no doubt that enough labor and money have been thrown away on makeshift methods of road-building in Illinois, without any definite plan looking to permanency in results, to have made good, permanent hard-roads, upon every section line.

A Plank Road Enterprise.—About 1868-69 the wide-awake business men of Charleston discussed the road question thoroughly, and cast about for some method to benefit their business, and also to help the farmers move their produce to market in the seasons of rain and mud. Out of that agitation grew an organization to construct a plank road from Charleston north to the Douglas County line. The "Charleston and Hickory Plank Road Company" was incorporated with an authorized capital of $25,000. Certificate number one in that company was issued to W. E. McCrory for two shares of the stock, of $50 each, dated April 4, 1870, and signed A. H. Prevo, President, and Charles Clary, Secretary, and the other stock was taken by business men and farmers. The road was constructed, beginning at the north side of the Big Four Railroad right of way, on Fifth Street, and extended north on that road about seven or eight miles.

The manner of making the road was by laying heavy wooden stringers lengthwise of the road, sunk in the ground sufficiently to bring their top surfaces flush with the general level, so that the plank would lie upon and not be elevated above the road bed. Very thick planks, ten or twelve feet long, were laid crosswise on the stringers and spiked down. When it was new, and before the seasons of floods and snows came, it was considered quite a luxury to ride out on this novel road, and the farmers along its line were jubilant for awhile. Of course, when teams met, the lightest vehicle had to get off the plank on to the dirt, and let the other fellow pass. That was all right when the roads were dry, but there came a time when, if two loaded teams met, it was a hardship for somebody to get off in the mud and try to get back again.

After a year or so parts of the road began to sink in the ooze during a wet time. This trouble increased from year to year and in some places one side would sink, while the other side would rise. Then, after while, a plank here and there would become loosened and disappear. When that disintegration began it became easier for other planks to vanish from view, and ere long the whole road was but a memory.

Gravelled Roads.—Charleston Township has, within the past six or seven years, built several miles of excellent gravelled roads leading out in different directions from the city of Charleston, and Hutton and some other townships have done something along that line. But the county, generally, is behind many of its neighbors in the matter of hard-road construction. It is a remarkable thing that the farmers and land owners who, as a class, would be most benefitted by good roads, are generally the strongest opponents of all public measures for their improvement. That was fully demonstrated in the defeat of the measure for permanent roads presented at the last session of the Legislature (1905). But, though delayed, the building of hard-roads will come, and the farmers will be benefitted thereby in spite of themselves.

Railway Progress.—The history of railroads in Illinois begins with the Internal Improvement Act of 1836-37, and out of that act grew much financial grief for the people of the state. The north and south line (Illinois Central) and the east and west line (then called the Terre Haute & Alton) began to be built about the same time. The Illinois Central was a "land grant" railroad, and that grant of land induced the following eastern capitalists to take hold of the enterprise; Franklin Haven, Robert Rantoul, Jr., and David A. Neal, of Boston; and Robert Schuyler, George Griswold, Gouverneur Morris, Jonathan Sturgis, Thomas W. Ludlow, John F. A. Sanford, Henry Grinnell, Joseph W. Alsop and Leroy M. Wiley, of New York. These men began and finished the work. The Act of incorporation was passed in 1851. Roswell B. Mason, of Bridgeport, Conn., was made Engineer-in-Chief. L. W. Ackley was made Division Engineer of the line from Rantoul to Mattoon, and C. Floyd Jones from Mattoon to the junction with the main line.

Mr. E. Jennings, of Mattoon, was a civil engineer employed on the line in 1853, but resigned his position and, in partnership with Hiram Tremble, took the contract to make the "bank" and bridges for the rails from the north line of the county into and through Mattoon. This work they began June 25, 1853, and finished November 29th of that year, and then they sold their scrapers and other tools and outfit to James M. and Edmund W. True, who had the contract for the same kind of work on the Terre Haute & Alton Railroad, from Charleston to Mattoon.

The Trues finished their contract sometime in the following year, and the roads having been made ready for the rails by 1855, the rail-laying through Coles County was done in that year by the Illinois Central, and, as far as Mattoon, by the Terre Haute & Alton. As the law provided that, in the construction of a railroad, the line which laid its rails last over a crossing should, thereafter, be required to maintain the crossing in repair, there was a strong rivalry between the two sets of track-layers as to which should reach the crossing first at Mattoon. The Terre Haute & Alton people got there first and were followed soon after by those of the Illinois Central.

Mattoon was the western terminus for the Terre Haute & Alton tracks for about a year before the company began to lay rails west of that point. The Chicago branch of the Illinois Central Railroad was completed ready for traffic from Chicago to the junction with the main line near Centralia, on September 26, 1856, and soon thereafter regular trains began running from Chicago to Cairo.

Michael Maloney, of Mattoon, who worked under Mr. Harrison Messer, foreman of a gang for the contractors of the Terre Haute & Alton (Messrs. Phelps, Mattoon & Barnes), says that they had one steam shovel for deep cuts, but no other machinery. Everything else was done by means of hand-stools. There were three regular locomotive engineers on the line, at the time it was completed to Mattoon, and Mr. Messer got one of them to test the first bridge over the Am-braw by running his engine across and back. At the conclusion of the test Mr. Messer handed the engineer $10.00.

Coles County in the fall of 1855, being in touch by rail with Chicago and the far Eastern States, was at the beginning of a new era. The pulses of her people beat faster; their steps quickened; their horizon was enlarged; their hopes expanded, and the building of cities and of factories of various sorts, within its borders began to take form in the thoughts and plans of its citizens. New faces were seen more often on the streets of our villages. Inquiries from the East and elsewhere, as to the sort of field for business here afforded, reached the people more frequently. Very soon the "Yankee School Marm"—that civilizing and polishing influence from "way down East"—began to take hold of the sons and daughters of our Kentucky, Virginia and Tennessee-born pioneers, and turn their faces about, so that they might catch new views of life.

Change in Transportation Methods.—It took some time, however, for the people to adjust themselves to the new order of things. They had before this hauled their corn and other produce to the markets of Chicago, Terre Haute, St. Louis or elsewhere by wagon. They had driven their hogs and cattle to market, taking many days for the journey. This was now to be changed, but not all at once. Some continued to follow the old way for several years, and the new railroads, at the start, were not over-burdened with freight out of Coles County.

The city people of the old-settled Eastern States enjoyed then—as they do now—the taste of venison and other game, and it became profitable to kill game for the market. This was a new industry for a short time. In the winter of 1855-56 very many car-loads of deer, turkey, prairie chickens, ducks, quails and rabbits went east from Coles County, and the following winter the shipments averaged a car-load a day for awhile from the station of Mattoon alone. The sad result, as to the larger game, could have been foreseen. Within a year or so, only an occasional deer or wild turkey could be found within the borders of the county.

In writing upon the subject of these two railroads, it may be told that David A. Neal and some others, connected with the construction of the Illinois Central, formed a company and obtained the southwest quarter of Section 31-13-8, about 1853-54. They platted some of this land, adjoining the Illinois Central right of way, into lots, and named their prospective town "Arno." They planned the construction of a switch-track and other conveniences of a station, and there the matter ended. No lots were sold or houses built, and some time later the land was sold and again became farm land, but the plat was not formally vacated until 1861. The proprietors advertised their "paper" town to the extent that, on maps of the State published in 1855 and 1856, the name "Arno" was printed in as large type as that of any other city or village in that section.

Other Railroad Enterprises.—As the other railroads which came into the county afterward will be touched upon somewhat definitely in the history of the various townships through which they run, I will only allude briefly to them here. Away back in the 'sixties agitation for a road southeast from Mattoon, and another northwest from the same place, developed into definite plans for their construction. The one projected toward the southeast was called the Grayville & Mattoon, and the other the Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon. After various starts and delays, and much agitation all along the proposed lines, and the granting of bonds and other aid by towns through which they were to pass, they were built. The Decatur, Sullivan & Mattoon Road was built to Hervey City, near Decatur, by the year 1873. It passed into a receiver's hands in 1874, and the name was changed to the Decatur, Mattoon & Southern.

The Grayville & Mattoon Road was not fully completed until July 4, 1878, and, on that date, a grand excursion was organized and, under the care of J. D. Herkimer, the receiver of the line, it was carried out amid rejoicing all along the line.

The two roads were later consolidated (about 1879-80) under the name of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville, and, after several years of management under that name, the Illinois Central purchased control of the line and it became a part of that great corporation. The Illinois Central took control of the north end (from Mattoon to Peoria) in August, 1902, and of the south end (from Mattoon to Evansville) in September of the same year.

The history of the road known as the "Clover Leaf" is given in detail in the history of the town of Charleston, and the Terre Haute & Indianapolis Road, which runs through Oakland, will be treated of in the history of that town.

The extreme southeast corner of Ashmore is entered by the Cincinnati, Indianapolis & Western, which may be mentioned in connection with the history of that locality.

The advent of the trolley line came in 1902. On June 3d of that year a franchise was granted by the Council of Mattoon to the "Mattoon City Railway Company," and, later, the same parties who were behind the Mattoon enterprise, obtained a franchise for a street-railway in Charleston. The work of building the road between the two cities over right of way purchased from the farmers along the line, was pushed rapidly forward and, on June 5, 1904, the first passengers were carried on this first Inter-Urban Electric line in Coles County. Cars were also placed in operation within the city of Mattoon between its eastern and western limits, on Broadway and Prairie Avenue, within a few days thereafter.

The capital stock of the company is $500,000 and the President and General Manager is E. A. Potter. It is believed that this line will eventually be extended both east and west, and lines are also projected to run northward from both Mattoon and Charleston.

Telegraph Lines.—The building of the telegraph lines along the two railroads referred to, did not keep full pace with the laying of rails, but they followed almost immediately thereafter. The first telegraph lines in Illinois were strung along the wagon roads. One of these was a line constructed along the State Road, which ran from Terre Haute westward prior to the building of the railroads. Just as these railroads were coming into Coles County, other railroads were making alliances with the telegraph lines to their mutual advantage. The first contract in Illinois consummating such an alliance was made in 1856 by the Chicago, Alton & St. Louis Railroad, with the Telegraph Company of which Judge Caton, Chief Justice of Illinois, was the leading spirit, by the terms of which the railroad gave the right of way for stringing wires, and the Telegraph Company was to assist in the movement of trains. R. B. Mason, Chief Engineer of the Illinois Central, pronounced the dictum, that he "in-initely preferred a single track with a telegraph, to a double track without it." Railroads thenceforward arranged with existing telegraph companies, or built and equipped their own lines for the better management of their trains.

Transportation was now getting to be a matter of hours or days, where it used to be of days or weeks. Communication was becoming a matter of moments, where it had formerly been of days or months. Coles County was no longer isolated. The world was growing rapidly smaller, and strangers of yesterday were becoming our neighbors and friends.

That other marvelous invention for rapid communication—the telephone—will be touched upon in the sketches of the several townships.

Drainage.—The settlers had learned by experience that the prairie soil was richer and more easily cultivated than the timber land, and it became a pressing question as to the best and cheapest means of removing the surplus water which covered so much of the land during the crop season. Hasty and temporizing methods had been used by many farmers, from their first coming, to drain their fields, but with poor results.

Mr. F. A. Allison says that he saw pioneer James T. Cunningham, one hot day in the summer of 1835 or '36, out in his corn field wearing nothing but his shirt, and diligently directing an old horse attached to a shovel plow, trying to cut furrows deep enough to drain the water from his corn. Later there was sometimes more concerted action, and several adjoining farmers would come together and agree upon a plan for an open ditch, and proceed, by their joint labor, to construct it. The results of this plan were more satisfactory, but all neighbors could not agree upon a plan and a time for such work; besides, the weeds and the rains partially filled these ditches in a short time, and the work had to be done over again. So the objection to open ditches, on the ground that they "were expensive, not permanent, occupied too much land and obstructed good husbandry," became constantly more pronounced, and the question as to the best manner of underground drainage became paramount.

Many experiments were tried. Mole ditches were put in, made with a "gopher plow," worked by a capstan or pulled by oxen. These were partially successful when the land to be drained lay with a regular slope towards the outlet. But sometimes they became obstructed by caving, or by the work of the numerous gophers and ground squirrels. Then, if the surface of the ground was uneven and "ridgy," the drain would follow the surface irregularities. So it became necessary to find a drain that could be laid in the bottom of a properly constructed trench.

Various expedients were tried in Coles County, as well as elsewhere in Illinois. Ditches were made and filled with brush; small stones were placed in the bottom of trenches through which water might percolate after the dirt was put in above them.

One method tried by several farmers here was to cut short pieces of poles, or boards, of regular length, and place them side by side closely in the ditch, one end resting on the bottom at one side of the ditch and the other end leaning against the opposite side, and then filling the ditch above them with dirt.

All such plans were unsatisfactory. Earthenware or clay-tile was invented and, in the later 'sixties and early 'seventies, many were shipped in and used. They were at first expensive, easily broken and made in various shapes to suit the notion of each manufacturer of a tile machine. Some were octagonal; some horse-shoe shaped; some had a wide, flat bottom; some were oval, etc. It was a long time before everybody was ready to concede that the cylindrical tile was the best form for all purposes. Besides these experimental stages in their manufacture, they had to be experimented with by the farmer.

As an illustration of an early experiment, Michael Maloney, of Mattoon, a noted digger of ditches, tells that Mr. Samuel Smith shipped into Mattoon, from Indianapolis, the first full consignment of tile on a large enough scale to drain a farm; that the Mr. Cunningham previously alluded to, bought a supply to drain a large field, and as he had been told that these tile would "draw," or attract, water to them from surrounding soil, he thought, in order to do a good job of "drawing," they should be laid near the surface, as the water which interfered with his growing corn seemed to him to be that which was on top of the ground. So he laid the tile on an average of three to six inches below the surface. The following spring his men went out to plow, and when Mr. Cunningham looked at his field the next day the tile were scattered far and wide among the clods.

But the people learned; and, when the manufacture of the drain-tile began here at home, they soon underlaid thousands of acres, and the effect, year by year, became more noticeable in the elimination of those great "sloughs," the gradual reduction in the number of ponds, the earlier date in spring when the ground could be plowed and planted without "mudding" in the crops, and the effectiveness of its cultivation.

When tile factories started here, they came, so to speak, "all at once." About 1876 G. V. Millar started his tile factory in the Dead Man's Grove. J. W. Hogue began in 1877 at the corner of Eleventh and LaFayette Streets in Mattoon, and, after running there about ten years, removed to his present location just west of the water-works pumping station.

The factory at Charleston, now owned by S. H. Record, started about 1877; about 1878 factories were started by John D. Faris east of Lerna, by Baker & Rennels in Hutton, by Joseph Carter southeast of Ashmore, and the one at Oakland. A little later one was located at Cook's Mills and others elsewhere in the county. The factory now run by Theodore Joute, in Mattoon, was started about 1883.

There were thousands of acres, however, in the county so situated that there was no adequate outlet for the water. Tile may be laid, but to be permanently effective, it must lead to a point within some reasonable distance, where it can find a stream or ditch of sufficient size to form an outlet and carry off the water all the year around. These outlets are easy of access from land lying along the regular water-courses, but back upon the prairies, at the very beginnings of these creeks, something had to be done to make artificial outlets. Growing out of this necessity, at the general election held in 1878, an amendment of the State Constitution was adopted authorizing the organization of drainage districts and empowering the Legislature to impose a tax upon lands to be benefitted by the construction of a proposed ditch; and, in 1885, a law was enacted by the Legislature carrying these constitutional provisions into effect. In the operation of all new taxing laws there must first be a contest and the court of last resort must say whether the law is valid. The first District organized under this act in Coles County, was "Union Drainage District No. One, of the Towns of Seven Hickory and Humbolt." It was organized in 1886.

The people who opposed the act, organized themselves into a body to fight it, and the feeling was so high that it looked, for a while, as though it would degenerate into a bloody feud. It was proposed to seek the indictment of the Commissioners by the Grand Jury. The case finally got into the Circuit Court; then into the Appellate, and then into the Supreme Court of the State. During the progress of the litigation, the opponents of the act allowed their lands to be sold for drainage taxes.

The action of the Commissioners on organization of the district was sustained by the courts, and the owners of the land sold for taxes redeemed the same. The ditch was cut out, deep and wide; and, today, you can hardly find a man who will say he opposed the ditch, for the benefits have been far beyond the dream of its promoters. It has brought into cultivation hundreds of acres of land that could not be cultivated otherwise, and has improved thousands of acres of other lands. This practically ended the drainage litigation of the county and settled the law for the whole State on the questions involved.

There have been organized in the County of Coles the following Drainage Districts:

Town of Seven Hickory.—There are five Drainage Districts in this township, comprising lands wholly within the township. All of them, except Drainage District Number Five, were organized on the petition of the land-owners. Number Five was organized under the "User Act." (See the Drainage Act for the meaning of the term "User.")

There are three Union Drainage Districts, part of which lie in this township. They are respectively: Union Drainage District Number One, of the Towns of Seven Hickory and Humboldt; Union Drainage District Number Two, of the Towns of Seven Hickory and Humboldt; and Union Drainage District Number Three, of the Towns of Seven Hickory and Humboldt. The last named was organized under the User Act.

Town of Humboldt.—There are five Drainage Districts, comprising land wholly in Humboldt Township. Number Five is a User Drainage District. There are three Union Drainage Districts, of which a part of the land is in Seven Hickory Township. There are two Drainage Districts in Humboldt, of which a part of the land is in North Okaw, being respectively Union Drainage Districts Number One and Number Two of North Okaw and Humboldt.

Town of North Okaw.—There are nine Drainage Districts which are wholly embraced in North Okaw. Drainage Districts Number Five, Six, Seven, Eight and Nine are User Drainage Districts. There are two Union Drainage Districts heretofore spoken of in connection with Humboldt Township, and one is in connection with Mattoon Township. The Union Special Drainage District of the Counties of Coles and Moultrie is partly in North Okaw Township, and partly in Moultrie County.

Town of Mattoon.—There have been organized in Mattoon two Drainage Districts under the Township Law, comprising land wholly situated in the Town of Mattoon. There is the Union Drainage District organized under the User Act, part of the land in which is in North Okaw. This district is known as Union Drainage District Number One, by user, of the Towns of North Okaw and Mattoon. There is a Union Drainage District, part of the land of which is in Lafayette. This is organized under the User Act and is Union Drainage District Number One, by user, of the Towns of Mattoon and Lafayette. There are two Drainage Districts in Mattoon organized under the Levee Act in the County Court; one is the Little Wabash Drainage District, and the other is the Kickapoo Drainage District.

Town of Paradise.—There are two Drainage Districts in Paradise. Drainage District Number One originally comprised land wholly in Paradise Township, but has since been enlarged to comprise some land in Neoga Township in the County of Cumberland. Drainage District Number Two is a Drainage District organized under the User Act.

Town of Charleston.—There is a Union Drainage District, comprising land in Charleston and Seven Hickory.

Town of Ashmore.—A large district, organized in 1903 and called the "Pole Cat Drainage District," is now in litigation caused by the objection of the "Big Four" Railroad to having the ditch constructed across its right of way. The ditches made in these Drainage Districts were usually cut by a dredge boat, and were made wide and deep so that, but for the large amount of dirt piled by the dredger on either side, they look like natural creeks.

I have thus carefully, but briefly, gone over the general history of drainage in the county, because to this system is due largely the wonderful progress and development of the county. The best land was that which originally had the most water on it; and a man who was familiar with the county thirty years ago, and who has been absent since, would, on going over it now, marvel at the change.

The system has cost our people a great deal of money. The thirty-five drainage ditches enumerated have, perhaps, cost an average of seven to eight thousand dollars each, and it would be impossible to estimate the cost to the individual land-owner of the several hundred miles of tiling of various sizes, which have been laid, and the cost to the various towns and cities, of the many more miles laid along highways for their improvement.

It would seem that we have now about reached the limit of the making of drainage ditches in Coles County. At least, it is time to pause and consider whether further burdens upon land-owners in that direction might not exceed the probable advantages resulting. The problem now before the land-owners is that of keeping these ditches open and clean, and preventing the outlets of tiling from becoming obstructed in order that the drains may not become filled up, thereby necessitating large expense in cleaning and re-laying, or otherwise repairing them.

Agricultural Associations and Fairs.—On May 24, 1841, an association called the "Coles County Agricultural Society" was organized at Charleston. It held fairs in the fall of 1841, '42 and '43. Its first officers were James Hite, President; B. F. Jones, H. J. Ashmore and M. Ruffner, Vice-Presidents; J. F. Whitney, Secretary; and Thomas A. Marshall, Treasurer. In 1842, Thomas Monson was President; D. J. Vanderen, Secretary; and L. R. Hutchison, Treasurer. In 1843, James T. Cunningham was President, with the same Secretary and Treasurer as the previous year.

These first fairs were held in the northeast part of Charleston, in what was then "The Woods"—a space of ground being enclosed by stretching ropes from tree to tree.

After 1843, no more fairs were held until 1854 or 1855. Some old settlers say the first fair was held in 1854, and it is said that this first fair in the 'fifties was held in what used to be called "Ellington's pasture," a fine wooded piece of land in the southern part of Charleston. After that, the present location (adjoining Charleston on the west in Section 10) was obtained, which has been enlarged from time to time. Since 1855 the Society has held fairs each fall, uninterruptedly to this time.

The first premium lists were very simple. A premium was offered for the best horse, best bull, best mule, etc. There was no classification of kinds and breeds. But for many years the Coles County Fair was an incentive to farmers to improve their stock, and its annual exhibitions were attended by everybody who could get away from home. There were not so many other attractions in the earlier years of our history, and these annual fairs were looked forward to, and preparations made to attend them, long in advance of their date.

An examination of the records of exhibitors would disclose the names of the best farmers and best stock-breeders who have lived in the county for the past fifty years.

An organization called the "Mattoon Union Agricultural Association" was formed at Mattoon in 1859. I have been unable to find its old records, but James T. Cunningham, S. D. Dole & Bros., H. C. Wortham, J. L. and J. M. True, R. H. McFadden and other old-time citizens signed the call for the first meeting to organize the association. This meeting was held on February 19, 1859, and at that meeting it was decided that this should be not simply a County Fair, but a "Union" Fair, taking in all the counties contiguous to Coles.

The ground in the town of La Fayette, now subdivided as an addition to Mattoon, and known as "Grant Park Place," was obtained, and the first fair held there in the fall of 1859. Fairs were held there each fall, up to and including 1862, when the use of the grounds having been turned over to the Government as a camp or barracks for army recruits, the fairs were discontinued and never afterwards resumed.

The name "Grant Park" was given to this tract of land by its owner, who platted it, because the name "Camp Grant" had been given to it in May, 1861. In that month U. S. Grant, as a Government officer, administered the oath of allegiance to the Twenty-first Infantry in camp there, and the following month took command of it, as its Colonel, by order of Governor Yates.

In 1880 books were opened for subscriptions to the stock of a company to be organized for the purpose of obtaining the land in the south part of Mattoon, to be used as a Fair Ground. The organization was effected and Mark Kahn was elected President; I. N. Gibbs, Vice-President; Harrison Joseph, Secretary, and W. B. Dunlap, Treasurer. Fairs were held there a few times, but, not proving very successful financially, they were abandoned, and, in 1888, the Company was organized under the name of the "Mattoon Driving Park." Harrison Joseph was made President; H. S. Clark, Vice-President; H. E. Holmes, Secretary, and James H. Cunningham, Superintendent of the new organization. Several racing meetings were held thereafter and gradually discontinued. Mr. Joseph bought out the other stockholders, and became the sole owner of the ground. The "Mattoon Free Street Fair" will be taken up in the history of Mattoon.

The first election in Coles County after its organization was held at the house of James Ashmore (alluded to elsewhere), in what is now the town of La Fayette. Sixty votes were polled at this election.

Coles County has always been fighting ground between the leading political parties. In the days of the Whigs and Democrats, the Whigs had a slight advantage and it was called a Whig county. In those days voting was by viva voce, and it was said that when James G. Birney, in 1844, ran as the candidate for President of the "Liberal Party" (the original Abolitionist party in the United States), he received twelve votes in what is now Coles County, and the names of most of those so voting are given as follows: Joseph Allison, G. M. Ashmore, Theron E. Balch, William Balch, Wallace Balch, Zeno and Eugene Campbell, John and Isaac Rodgers and Hiram Rutherford. The names of the other two have escaped the memory of the old settlers who furnished this information. All of them were of southern origin except Rutherford, who came from Pennsylvania.

Early Abolitionists—Defeat of a Projected Kidnapping Case.—Hon. O. B. Ficklin is authority for the statement that, in 1837, there were thirty-three pronounced Abolitionists in the County (then including what is now Douglas County), and he mentioned the Rodgers, Balch, Campbell and Dryden families, in Pleasant Grove, and the Ashmores and Dr. Hiram Rutherford, at Oakland, as among them, and added that nine-tenths of them were from slave States. I quote from what he said further: "They were men of pluck and of the Cromwellian mold, sober, quiet, industrious and thrifty. They were lampooned and derided for being neither Clay Whigs nor Jackson Democrats. But they traveled on the even tenor of their way, voting their convictions and accepting defeat from a sense of duty."

During these years and up to the period of the Civil War thereafter, a system was in vogue in the North of assisting the negroes from the South to escape from slavery by coming north, known as the "Underground Railroad," and some of these men were ever ready to lend a helping hand to assist in such escape. Notable among those named in that connection were Hiram Rutherford, Gideon M. Ashmore and Joseph Allison, the latter of Pleasant Grove.

About 1847, one of the most important court cases that ever came up in Illinois, affecting slavery, was tried. Robert Matson came up from Kentucky and bought land in the northeast corner of Coles, but now embraced in Douglas County. He brought along several of his slaves. He made a public statement that they were here temporarily and would soon be sent back to his Kentucky plantation. Among them was a slave woman who had married a freedman, Anthony Bryant. He came along also. Matson's housekeeper lost her temper one day while he had gone to Kentucky, and told the negroes that they should all be sent to the far South (including the freedman) and sold. Thoroughly alarmed, they sought advice and, after being turned away by many, finally applied to G. M. Ashmore and Hiram Rutherford. These men heeded the appeal, took them in, and gave them shelter. Matson returned home, and, learning what had happened, his Kentucky blood warmed up to fever-heat. He employed Usher F. Linder and, later, Abraham Lincoln, and had the negroes arrested as fugitive slaves. Ashmore and Rutherford were not "bluffed." They at once employed O. B. Ficklin and Charles H. Constable (later a Circuit Judge), both Democrats of the deepest dye, in behalf of the negroes. A writ of habeas corpus was served, the question to be decided being: Were the negroes "held in transitu, while passing over the State," or were they "located for a time, by consent of their master." If they were simply held in transitu, that did not free them. If they were located, even temporarily, by consent of their owner, that would set them free.

The case came before Chief Justice William Wilson, who, on account of its importance, called in Supreme Judge Samuel H. Treat to assist in the hearing.

Never was a case fought with more vigor and earnestness than this, by those four famous lawyers, remarkable in the fact that the side of the negroes was taken by Democrats with natural sympathies for the South and its institutions, and that upon the other side was the man who later issued the fiat that emancipated the race. I wish I had space to dwell further upon the details, but must not. All the attorneys had the fullest confidence in the ability and fairness of the Judges, and, after the long arguments were ended, and due consideration given to the testimony by the Court, the painful suspense was ended by the announcement that the prisoners would be discharged and go free.

It was a glorious day for the Matson slaves, and the emotions felt by those "Cromwellian" characters who opened their pocket books, and defied public sentiment in behalf of the poor, frightened negroes, will have to be left to the reader's imagination.

Memorable Political Campaigns.—There were no very spectacular campaigns in the county until that of 1860. One of those famous debates of 1858 between Lincoln and Douglas had been held on the Fair Ground near Charleston, and it was attended by almost all the male population of the county. So that those burning issues which stirred the people of this country at that time, as they never had been stirred in any previous election, were brought close to the minds and hearts of the people of our county. That debate was one of the notable events in the county's history, and old settlers relate many interesting personal reminiscences connected with it.

The debate was held on the Fair Ground near Charleston on September 18th of that year, in the presence of a great throng of the partisans of both speakers; and, when later, these two leaders were nominated for the Presidency, the campaign began at once with great earnestness. Lincoln

"Wide Awakes" were organized in every township, provided with oil-cloth capes and caps, and with torches for night meetings. The Douglas partisans were fully as active, and had their uniformed marching companies, each side vying with the other in the matter of noise and display of numbers in the processions. Speakers of national reputation came into the county to deliver addresses, and upon such occasions the whole day and evening were devoted to the meeting. Demonstrations began early in the morning by the firing of anvils and other noises. The speakers, on arrival, were escorted about the streets by a gorgeous procession of floats and decorated wagons. Young girls were arrayed in white or the national colors and represented the States of the Union. They were seated upon a great pyramid shaped float, which was drawn by six or eight white horses. The most beautiful young woman was arrayed as the "Goddess of Liberty," seated upon a spirited charger and attended by numerous liveried footmen, while the uniformed companies brought up the rear. The speech itself was punctuated by the most tumultuous demonstrations of enthusiasm on the part of the speaker's partisans, and often interrupted by loud hurrahs for the "other fellow" on the part of the opponents.

After dark the meeting was continued by a torch-light procession, with much noise, firing of anvils, red lights, etc., followed by speaking and the singing of campaign songs, the whole usually concluding with a display of home-made fireworks, consisting of the throwing of turpentine balls. Balls of cotton or candle wicking were made about five or six inches in diameter. They were thoroughly saturated with turpentine and ignited. The young men then stood out in the middle of the street and, taking them in their bare hands, threw them as far as possible. They would hardly touch the ground before some muscular youngsters would send them back whence they came. Sometimes four or five of these blazing balls would be seen hissing through the air at once, making a very effective and inexpensive display of fireworks.

The above—with variations—may answer for a general description of a campaign meeting in 1860. In that campaign the Lincoln candidates for Presidential Electors carried the County by twenty-eight plurality.

In 1863 the Republicans temporarily abandoned that name, and nominated candidates for county offices on what was called the "Unconditional Union Ticket," and it was elected over the Democratic ticket by about 170 majority. By the summer of 1864 the leading Democrats of the county, who had before that date advocated compromise and peace with the South on almost any terms, had, almost to a man, come out openly for the preservation of the Union, and for the prosecution of the war until the integrity of the Union was fully assured. The so-called "Charleston Riot" occurred in the spring of 1864, which was a violent political outbreak, described elsewhere in these pages as one of the "events" in our local history.

The campaign of 1864, though fervent, was not so spectacular as that of 1860. The Lincoln (or Republican) Presidential Electors carried the County by six hundred and fifty-five plurality.

In subsequent campaigns nothing notable calls for our attention, unless I might allude to the preliminary contest in 1880 within the ranks of the Republican party, between those who favored and those who opposed a third term for General Grant as a candidate for President. The party in Coles County shared in the general "warmth" which prevailed all over the State during that struggle.

For the past ten years the county has, as a rule, gone Republican at general elections by a plurality of five to eight hundred votes. In the election of 1904 the popularity of President Roosevelt, and the dissatisfaction of the Democrats with their candidate, had the same effect in Coles County as elsewhere, and the Republicans carried the county by a plurality of fourteen hundred and sixty-five for the Presidential Electors. In another chapter the full vote for President, from 1832 to 1904, is given.

Marriages, Births and Deaths.—The first births, deaths and weddings, and other events, in the county, are matters of interest; but it is difficult to get thoroughly reliable and accurate information about them. It is said that the wife of Daniel Drake, in Wabash Point, gave birth, at the age of 54 years, to a child, about 1826-27, and that a son was born to James Nees, of Hutton, in March, 1827.

A Mrs. Whitten, wife of a mill-wright on the Parker mill, is said to have died there about 1824-25. The date is uncertain and not fully authenticated. The following "first death" in Wabash Point is more circumstantial: James Nash injured himself, carrying a log with which to make a bee-gum, in 1829, and died. His neighbors split out walnut puncheons, made them as smooth as they could with an old drawing knife, and made his coffin. The women "varnished" it by melting and pouring bees-wax over it, and then, by running hot irons over it, giving it a polished surface. In the presence of all the population of that vicinity Nash was buried on the brow of the hill upon the east bank of the Little Wabash, in the northwest part of Section 4-11-7.

Soon thereafter a boy, "Adi," son of Charles Sawyer, died, and he, too, was buried upon that hill. Their bones now rest there alone and unmarked, while above them, each spring, the husbandman stirs the soil and each summer there nods and waves the growing grain.

James Jeems is said, by the Le Baron History of 1879, to have married a Miss Bates in 1827. That Bates family lived in La Fayette, and my best information is that a James James moved into La Fayette not earlier than 1828. I find no evidence that any one who spelled his name "Jeems" ever came into the county. Therefore, I prefer to dismiss that wedding and take the marriage of Levi Doty, who wedded Miss Phipps about that time, as the first authenticated wedding.

First Courts.—The first Circuit Court in the county was held before the log court house at Charleston had been completed. It was held in the woods near the residence of Charles Eastin, on land of Levi Flenner's, west of the State road on the south part of Section 7-12-9.

William Wilson, afterwards Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court, was presiding Judge. James P. Jones, of Clark County, was appointed by Judge Wilson at that session of the court to the office of Circuit Clerk, and his appointment was not liked by Coles County people. They believed that Coles County citizens should fill local offices. Jones must have been a man with a "pull." He was appointed our first Recorder, and was also appointed, by the Governor, Coles County's first Probate Judge. It was not until later that these officers were elected by the people.

The records of these first courts have been lost, so that little is known of them, but the first Circuit Court already referred to as having been held in the shade of the trees in the western edge of Charleston Township, has been thus picturesquely described. "The Judge sat on a log, the lawyers on rotten chunks, and the litigants and witnesses swung to the bushes round about."

Criminal History.—The first murder within the county was the killing of Nathaniel Killim by Todd Waltrip, in Charleston, about 1836. It was the result of a trivial quarrel in which whisky was the inciting cause, Waltrip stabbing Killim in the neck with a pocket knife. A short penitentiary term was the punishment awarded for the offense.

In October, 1855, Adolph Monroe shot and killed his father-in-law, Nathan Ellington, as the result of a little family disagreement, greatly augmented and stimulated by the fires of the whisky consumed by Monroe. It was a most lamentable occurrence. Ellington was a man of exceptional qualities, held high in the esteem of the people. Monroe was a man of splendid appearance, of fine address and born of one of the best families that Kentucky ever sent to our county. Monroe was tried, found guilty and sentenced to be hung. The Governor granted a thirty days' respite, and the sullen spirit of the mob arose. It was the old story. Men who, as individuals, respected the law and loved order, became under the malign influence of that spirit, the agents of a merciless vengeance. The jail where Monroe was confined was the brick building which yet stands in Charleston, on the west side of Sixth between Madison and Jefferson streets. It was surrounded, its guards overpowered and Monroe was hustled, carried, dragged through the streets, to a point south of the Western School building, where stood a tree about two hundred feet north of the bridge that crosses the "Town Branch" on Jackson Street. To a limb of that tree he was suspended until life was extinct, and the insanity of intemperance and the insanity of the mob had once more jointly accomplished their perfect work.

The county was again disgraced and its law-abiding citizens humiliated in 1888 by the lynching of a negro charged with assault upon a white woman. The assault was said to have occurred in Mattoon, and the only evidence furnished was the story of the woman herself, who was a stranger passing through the city and who had stopped between trains at night in the waiting room of the station. She charged that the negro, William Moore, inveigled her outside and into a vacant lot, where the assault was committed. The negro was arrested and confined in jail at Charleston, and at night a mob took him out of the jail and hung him on the water-tank of the Clover Leaf Railroad. Word came afterwards that the woman was of bad character and unreliable in her statements, but it was too late. The negro had been a man of good reputation, and his executioners have escaped punishment, except such as their consciences could inflict. Coles County has had its share of murders and trials for murder, but I hope I shall be pardoned by the reader if I drop the subject here.

The Charleston "Riot."—On March 28, 1864, occurred that most unfortunate affair in our county history—the so-called "riot" at Charleston. The Fifty-fourth Illinois Infantry (Col. G. M. Mitchell) had, a short time before, arrived home from the South on veteran furlough, and had gone into camp at the barracks near Mattoon. Many of its members had gone from this county and some of them lived in and near Charleston. These soldiers had leave to visit their families, and so, for several days prior to the above date, they were upon the streets of Charleston. At first their minds were full of the visits with relatives and the joys of home-coming. After a few days they longed for more excitement. They passed upon the streets men from the country round about, who, they were told, were sympathisers with the South—"Butternuts" or "Copperheads." It occurred to the soldier boys that it would be great fun to halt these men, question them as to their loyalty, and then take them before a Justice of the Peace and have them take the oath of allegiance to the Government. This was done with several of them and so, day by day, they watched for more "Butternuts" to make take the oath. Many of the men charged with entertaining this Southern sympathy were discreet enough to remain out of the town during this time. Others, however, felt that their personal liberty and rights were being trampled upon wantonly by these young soldiers; and, possessed of a spirit of bravado, they armed themselves and came into the town several different days prior to the date of the riot, and bloodshed was only avoided by the narrowest of margins several times before it did occur. On that day, two boys about the same age—of whom the writer of these lines was one—having been privileged as boys to hear talk from both sides which indicated trouble, determined to remain away from school and see what would happen.

The Circuit Court was in session, Judge Charles H. Constable presiding, with Sheriff John H. O'Hair in charge. The Fifty-fourth Regiment had been ordered to return to camp at Mattoon on that day, but some of the soldiers were still upon the streets at Charleston. It had been announced that John R. Eden would speak, and the country people were in town in great numbers. Eden, however, left town early and did not speak.

Among the people upon the streets were many who had been hustled about and forced to take the oath, together with their younger and more active friends. The Wells boys (Nelson and David) were among them. They were evidently prepared for trouble. Many had come in wagons, which, later developments showed, carried concealed guns. Such soldiers as were there were mostly unarmed and not expecting any serious concerted attack. On the east and west sides of the Court House were small brick buildings used as offices, the one on the west side being used as the Clerk's office. About that office were gathered scores of country people, court attendants and others standing around. Among them were the two boys who stayed away from school. About three o'clock in the afternoon Oliver Sallee and some other soldiers came into the west gate of the yard and sauntered up to the little building, and Sallee leaned against the south wall. Nelson Wells and some of his friends separated from the crowd and started as if going out of the west gate. As they got opposite the little brick house, something was said. What it was, or by whom, cannot now be told; whether a casual remark or a challenge by Sallee or some one about him is uncertain, but Wells stopped, faced Sallee and leveled his revolver. So instantaneously that it is doubtful which drew first, Sallee's revolver was leveled at Wells. Two shots rang out and both men fell. There was a scattering fusillade of fire-arms thereafter lasting several moments. The two boys alluded to ran east around the south side of the Court House, and glancing back, they saw the soldier, Alfred Swim, fall and roll over in his death-struggle. The boys ran east into the front door of Felix Landis' tailor shop, which was in the middle of the block directly across the street east of the Court House. Continuing through the shop and out of its back-door, they saw Judge Constable, white and trembling, in an angle of the wall in the alley to their right, evidently uncertain what to do or where to go next. How a man of his portly form could have vacated the Judge's bench, come down from the court room, and got there so soon after the firing began never ceased to be a wonder to those boys. Having thus been circumstantial as to the beginnings and culmination of this sanguinary little encounter (miscalled a "riot"), I shall be as brief as I can with the remainder of the story.

Those killed outright, or who died later from their wounds, were: Maj. Shubal York, James Goodrich, Alfred Swim, William C. Hart, John Neer, and Oliver Sallee, soldiers, and Nelson Wells, Copperhead.

The following were wounded, most of them slightly: Col. G. M. Mitchell, Thomas Jeffries, William Gilman, William Decker, John Tremble, George Ross, Sanford Noyes, Young E. Winkler and John Henderson.

Colonel Mitchell telegraphed to Mattoon and a squad of thirty or forty, composed partly of soldiers of the Fifty-fourth Regiment and partly of members of the Mattoon Rifle Company (a local military organization) was hurriedly gathered into a box car and taken with all the speed of the locomotive to Charleston. This squad was in charge of Mustering Officer Robert Mann Woods, now (1904-5) the Department Commander of the Illinois G. A. R. They were placed in charge of the Court House and directed to guard there any prisoners who might be brought in. Other soldiers of that regiment came over later, and they remained in Charleston for several days.

The city and country were scoured by soldiers and citizens in the search for those who were seen to have used weapons in the melee, or were suspected of having done so. John Cooper of Hutton Township, who had been in the city, was followed, overtaken and brought back. A part of the Mattoon Rifle Company and some of the soldiers were lined up on the south side of the Court House yard. Cooper was brought up the street from the east, and as his captors started with him toward the south gate of the yard, he must have become panic-stricken at the sight of so many men with shining guns, for he hesitated and then started to run. A volley was fired and Cooper fell dead. Two or three of the bullets hit the man aimed at, but most of them went wide of the mark. Some struck the sidewalk and some the tops of the brick buildings. One of these wild bullets pierced the front door of the Jenkins dry-goods store, then located about three doors east of the middle of the block on the south side of the square, and killed John Jenkins, a younger brother of W. M. and E. A. Jenkins, who had gone to close the door, thus making two more deaths in addition to the list heretofore given.

The following is probably as complete a list as can now be made of those who were arrested. Some of them, after being taken to Springfield, were sent to Fort Delaware, and after remaining there awhile, were released. One of the Murphys died while at Springfield. Several were indicted for murder and tried at Effingham and acquitted —among them, John Redmon, James O'Hair and G. W. Rardin. The list consists of several Rardins—G. W. and B. F. and some others; Michael and Miles and J. W. Murphy; James O'Hair, Jr.; W. P. Hardwick, and perhaps another one or two Hardwicks; H. P. Tichnor; B. E. Brooks, W. C. Beatty; Y. E. Winkler; Aaron Bryant; John T. Taylor; John Redmond; G. J. Collins; John Rennels; John Herndon; Minor Shelbourn, a Mr. Houk and a Mr. Thornhill. The principal offenders succeeded in escaping and were never arrested.

Unfortunate as this affair was, it cleared the atmosphere in many respects. There was no more evidence thereafter in Coles County of any organized disloyalty to the Government.

A Fake Duel.—Going back thirty years prior to the affair just described, the following "sanguinary" affair is vouched for by old settlers as having occurred near Charleston in 1834: A difficulty had arisen between one Peter Glassco and one John Gately, which blood alone could settle. So a challenge to a duel was sent by one and accepted by the other. Seconds were selected and "hoss-pistols" chosen as weapons. In gloomy silence the hostile parties met at the appointed time and place. The seconds conferred in low tones. The ten paces were stepped off by them, the pistols loaded with powder only—but Glassco, who had been the most belligerent and determined that blood alone could atone for the insult given him, was not apprised of the fact that bullets had been left out. Gately had been instructed to fall at the first fire. This he did, and one of his seconds deftly and lavishly splattered his face and clothing with "blood" from a bottle of pokeberry juice provided for that purpose. Glassco came up and gave one look at his victim, and, terrified at the sight of so much blood, exclaimed, "My God, I have killed him!" threw down his pistol and fled. Some time afterward word reached him that Gately still lived, and that the horrible blood he had seen was only the life fluid of the pokeberry, and he returned to the county cured of all desire to fight duels.

Notable Phenomena.—Three natural events occurred in the 'thirties that were so much out of the usual course of natural things that they were subjects for conversation for many years afterwards. The first was the deep snow of the winter of 1830-31. Snow began falling in November and continued at frequent intervals until late in January, a large part of the time being from two to three feet deep, and drifted in many places to a depth of six feet. Besides, the winter was cold and those first settlers, poorly provided with houses and other things that make for comfort, suffered intensely. The melting of the snow in February caused a flood of water, and a sudden reversal of temperature covered the earth with a glare of ice. Horses and oxen both had to be shod to be able to travel, and few had the facilities to shoe them at home. Food supplies ran low and stock suffered for both food and water. People ventured out only for absolute necessities such as food and fuel. It was a bad time for the pioneers, but as all things have an end, spring came at last to their relief.

The next in order was the meteoric shower, the phenomenon called by the settlers the "Falling Stars," on the night of November 12, 1833. This occurred all over the country, and scientists have explained it to us, over and over to their own satisfaction at least. Mr. Hiram Tremble has left the following description of this event: "The air was full of falling drops of fire that immediately expired as they neared the ground. Sometimes they would alight on a leaf of a bush or a tree, and go out with a peculiar noise difficult to describe. It sounded something like 'tchuck,' given with the shortest possible sound of the vowel." Early in the morning before day-break, Mr. Tremble was out with his ox-team; the air was cool, with a light frost. "At the start," said he, "I had nearly a mile of timber to pass through. The meteors were falling about me as thick as hail or as rain-drops in an ordinary shower. Some were so large as to cast shadows on the trees. Many of them came in contact with trees in falling, and burst, throwing off a myriad of sparks, illuminating the forest all about me. Emerging into the prairie, the sight was even more grand. All about and above me the air was full of the falling sparks, none of which touched me or my oxen. They did not seem to reach the ground, but expired as they neared it." Many of the people believed it was the beginning of the end of all things, and it was some time before the fear wore away sufficiently to enable people to resume their normal manner of living.

The next event in that memorable decade was the "Sudden Freeze" of December 20, 1836. It had been rather warm, and a slight rain had fallen in the forenoon upon a few inches of snow that lay upon the ground, turning it into slush. About the middle of the afternoon, a heavy cloud was noticed coming rapidly from the northwest. It came with a wind blowing at the rate of sixty or seventy miles an hour and was accompanied by a terrific roaring noise. As it passed over the country everything was frozen instantly. Water in little streams and gullies was thrown into waves by the wind and then frozen before it could subside. Chickens running through the slush and mud for shelter were caught, held fast and frozen to death.

Animals, both domestic and wild, that were out in exposed positions, were chilled through and many were frozen standing in their tracks. Men attending to work out of doors and wading about in the water and slush walked upon ice before they could reach a house for shelter, even though it were near by. Many human lives were lost. In this county, three men were said to have perished near the Seven Hickories. The wave passed over Central Illinois, a strip of country in the southern half of Indiana, and was last heard from just below Cincinnati.

The dates of many family happenings and neighborhood events were fixed upon the memory of these early settlers by remembering that they occurred just before or just after the "Deep Snow," the night of the "Falling Stars," or the time of the "Sudden Freeze."

January 1, 1864, was remembered as the Cold New Year's Day. There was a great snow storm on the day and night before, the snow drifting so much that it covered fences out of sight in many places, stopped traffic on the railroads and "snowed in" the people so that it was difficult for them to go about. The snow was followed at once by a great drop in the temperature, which caused intense suffering, and the death of large numbers of stock and poultry. Three children of the Hendricks family, near Whitley's Point, were frozen on their way from school, and one man was frozen east of Charleston.

A Sham Wedding That Proved a Reality.—

An incident is told in the Le Baron History, upon the authority of Captain Adams, that is worth repeating, particularly as it refers to one of the county's most popular pioneers and his estimable wife—Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stoddert—both of whom have long since passed away. It seems that Henry Clay Dunbar was a Justice of the Peace in Charleston, and that he and Mr. Stoddert were both fond of perpetrating practical jokes, and "one bleak, dreary day, in the month of March—as disagreeable as March days can sometimes be—Mr. Stoddert told 'Squire Dunbar that a friend of his in the north part of the county, some eighteen or twenty miles from town, was to be married on that day, and had requested him (Stoddert) to send Dunbar to perform the ceremony. Dunbar, nothing doubting, mounted his horse and rode up to the designated place to tie the knot; but upon arriving, discovered that it was one of Stoddert's jokes. He said nothing but indulged internally, perhaps, in a few pages of profane history. Returning home through the March blasts, taking it all good-naturedly, and biding his time to pay off Stoddert in his own coin, an opportunity was soon presented. It was a custom at that day, at parties and gatherings of young people, by way of giving zest to the evening's entertainment, to get up a sham wedding of some couple who had been 'keeping company' or were particularly sweet on each other, and have a sham ceremony performed with all due solemnity by some sham official or sham clergyman. Soon after Dunbar's 'fruitless trip' above mentioned, one of those social parties came off in Charleston, and, with the design of retaliating upon Stoddert, Dunbar went to the County Clerk's office and procured a marriage license for Stoddert and a certain young lady with whom he had been keeping company for some time. Armed with this document, he repaired to the party, and so engineered matters as to get up the usual sham wedding between Stoddert and his sweetheart. As Justice of the Peace, he was, of course, called upon to perform the (supposed) sham ceremony. Confronting the pair with all the solemnity he would have used had it been a pre-arranged wedding 'for keeps,' he asked the usual questions required by law, and was answered satisfactorily, winding up by informing them that, as they were aware, he was an officer authorized by law to perform the marriage ceremony, and asked if it was their desire to be united in holy wedlock. They answered in the affirmative, and holding the license in his hand (which they supposed was but a piece of blank paper, used for the sake of appearance), he went through the marriage ceremony in full, receiving the responses, and solemnly pronounced them 'man and wife,' turned away and made out the certificate with the usual witnesses, and went over to the Clerk's office, and made a return of the license and had the certificate recorded that night, without a hint to the pair of the genuineness of the proceedings. The next day, however, the matter leaked out; and so many of Stoddert's friends joked him about being married in the novel manner described, that he went to the Clerk's office to investigate, and found it true—the papers in the case returned and recorded in due form. He then went to the girl and told her what had occurred, when quite a little excitement arose. She cried and Stoddert swore (perhaps), not that they objected to each other, but to the way they had been inveigled into it. At last Stoddert told her that they had better make the best of a 'horrid joke' and call it genuine. She responded that, perhaps, she would never be able to do any better in the selection of a husband, and so the sham wedding was turned into a genuine affair. Before leaving the subject we will add that, if all reports be true, Charleston never knew a happier couple than the one united in this romantic manner."

Old Settlers' Association.—In the fall of 1878 an "Old Settlers' Association" was organized at Charleston. O. B. Ficklin called the meeting to order, A. P. Dunbar was made Chairman and W. E. Adams, Secretary; I. J. Monfort, Isaac N. Craig and Thomas G. Chambers were appointed a committee to report on a plan of organization. O. B. Ficklin, Richard Stoddert and Dr. S. Van Meter were constituted a committee to define an "old settler," and their report was to the effect that thirty years residence in the county made one eligible to become a member of the Association.

T. G. Chambers was made President and W. E. Adams, Secretary for the ensuing year, and the following chosen Vice-Presidents: Albert Compton, Thomas E. Woods, Adam W. Hart, Jesse K. Ellis, James Shoemaker, James McCrory, I. J. Monfort, E. R. Adams, Peter K. Honn, J. J. Pemberton, Y. E. Winkler and Isaac Perisho. An executive committee was chosen as follows: J. W. Frazier, Abram Highland, Dr. S. Van Meter, Col. A. P. Dunbar and George Birch. Talks on old times were made by J. J. Adams, William Rigsbey, Uncle John Bates, Aunt Polly Kellogg and others, and Job W. Brown, Jeptha Parker, Isaac N. Craig and Michael Hall were others in attendance. Very soon thereafter these venerable men began passing away from earth, and I cannot learn of any subsequent meeting. Today, of all those named above, only J. W. Frazier is still alive.

Financial Panics.—Coles County people have shared in the demoralizing effects of the several financial panics that have occurred in the country. Times were hard and produce cheap in that depressing period before and after 1840. But our people at that early date lived so much within themselves, and their relations with the outside world were so few and unimportant, that they were not seriously affected. From 1857 to about the beginning of the second year of the Civil War was a period of stagnation and extremely low prices for the things produced by our people. From 1859 to 1862 corn sold as high in local markets as 30 cents and as low as 8 cents per bushel; rye from 20 to 30 cents; oats from 10 to 15 cents; potatoes from 30 to 40 cents; eggs from 5 to 10 cents per dozen. These figures will give a general idea of prices. State banks failed all over the country (including the one at Charleston), because their circulation was based on bonds of Southern States, which soon proved worthless. Such paper money as circulated was below par and fluctuated in value from day to day, generally on a declining scale, causing great loss to the people. Bank notes were variously designated as "Stump Tail," "Red Dog" and "Wild Cat" currency. The effect of the war after 1862, was rapidly to advance prices of all commodities.

When the panic of 1873 came, the county had become large enough and its interests were sufficiently diversified to make it a most serious affair to many of our people, and resulted in hardship to all. There were many failures of business men, prices of our products were low, and even that thing which lies at the bottom of our prosperity—our black soil—became so cheap that some of the best of it, even near Mattoon and Charleston, and pretty well improved, changed hands during several years following 1873 at $20 to $30 per acre.

Several years were required to recover from the effects of that panic, but at the time of the election of Grover Cleveland to the office of President in 1892, the whole country seemed to be again in the full tide of prosperity with the promise of many years of continuance. The following year, however, all was again changed; panic had again seized the hearts of the managers of the country's great business interests, and the people were entering upon another period of depression. Its effects were not so severe, nor so prolonged, however, as those of the panic of 1873. For several years past our farmers have been getting 35 to 50 cents per bushel for corn; $75.00 to $100.00 per ton for broom-corn; 20 to 35 cents for oats; remunerative prices for cattle, hogs and horses and the resulting prosperity of farmers has naturally extended to all classes of people. Prairie farms have been selling readily for three or four years past at $100 to $150 per acre.

Epidemics.—Coles County, in common with most of the interior regions of the country, has been comparatively free from violent scourges of epidemic and contagious diseases. About 1851 the Asiatic Cholera carried away many of our people, but the alarm was out of proportion to the actual number affected. Hundreds left the county without stopping to pack their trunks, and the excitement was great for a time. There is said to have been a previous visitation of the cholera here (about 1832) and, though the population then was small, the number of deaths was probably as large in proportion as in 1851.

Our cities and villages have had occasional visits of the small-pox, and have had to exercise great vigilance to keep it from spreading. But in recent years that disease, though recognized as one of the most loathsome that afflicts humanity, has not alarmed people as it did many years ago. Its nature and treatment are now better understood.

County Buildings.—In the year 1831 the first Court House was built north of the "Town Branch," on about where Sixth Street now runs in Charleston. It was the usual primitive building, somewhat more embellished by having its logs hewed instead of being covered with the bark, but otherwise finished in the same manner and furnished with wooden benches for seats. In 1835 this building was abandoned and a new brick structure erected on the site of the present Court House. It was probably the first brick building erected in Charleston. The contract for its construction was let to Leander Munsell, of Edgar County, who sent over James Wiley (the father of Eli, Leroy and the others of that name) to do the brick work. It was a square building with a hip roof, and surmounted by a wooden cupola for the bell. The contract price was $5,000. The foundation was constructed of Ambraw River stone. About 1858-60 this building was enlarged by an addition on the north side, with wide porticoes supported by great round brick pillars. Between 1864 and '66 the same design as that on the north side was carried out all around the building on the three other sides. The court room was removed to the second story, offices for county officials and jury rooms were put in, and part of the lower story fitted up for the jail.

This building stood until 1898, when the present building was erected, which is described in the local history of Charleston, elsewhere in this work. The County Board of Supervisors passed an order to "repair" the Court House, and, under that order, proceeded to tear the building completely down and to build anew. This was considered by a great majority of the people of the county as a gross act of usurpation and a violation, not only of law, but of that principle of reasonable fairness, which all representative bodies are supposed to be governed by, and which would have prompted a preliminary expression of the people before contracting to expend such an enormous sum of the people's money. Several votes have since been taken to ratify this act of the County Board, and provide the funds to pay the debt, but so far the proposition has been defeated by large majorities.

The first jail was also a log building near the first Court House. It was built in 1832-33. About 1842 a brick jail was built on Sixth Street between Madison and Jefferson. This building still stands there and remained the jail until the Court House was remodeled in 1864 to 1866, and the jail was placed in the first story of the Court House. In 1891-92 the present commodious jail building was erected on Seventh Street at a cost of about $25,000.

As to the care of the poor in early county history, the records indicate that it was done in a very desultory fashion. Some kind of a poor farm seems to have been provided near the south line of the county in early years. In 1855 the county purchased of George Halbrook about a hundred acres in Sections 15 and 16-11-9, near Farmington, at a cost of $1,100. This was used as a "Poor Farm," until 1867, when it was sold and land in Section 7-12-9, in LaFayette Township, was purchased by the County for a poor farm at a cost of about $5,000. This was sold in 1870, and in the same year about 260 acres purchased of A. N. Graham, on the east side of Section 35-13-10, in the town of Ashmore, a part of which has been sold since, but the most of it is still retained. A large brick building has been erected on it, which is the home of the indigent wards of the county. The Superintendent lives in a house near by.

WAR HISTORY.

Some of Coles County's people have participated in every war in which this country has ever been engaged. Pioneers George Cottingham, John Parker, Joseph Painter, Griffin Tipsoward and Elisha Hadden were in the Revolutionary War, and some of them applied for and obtained pensions after their removal to this county.

Samuel Ashmore commanded a company under General Jackson at New Orleans, and George Cottingham, William Collom, Thomas Threlkeld, John Apperson and others were engaged in the War of 1812. Samuel Ashmore was a Captain and Dr. John Apperson a Sergeant-Major in that war.

Black Hawk War.—In the Black Hawk War Coles County, including the present counties of Cumberland and Douglas, had a company in the First Regiment of the Second Brigade, which was commanded by Capt. Thomas B. Ross.

The names of those in that company who probably went from the territory now embraced in Coles County, were: Isaac Lewis and Thomas Sconce, Second Lieutenants; Silas Parker and Samuel Doty, Sergeants; Van S. Eastin and James James, Corporals; and the following privates: Nathan Austin, John J. Adams, Thomas Barker, John Carrico, Reuben Canterbury, Harman Eastin, Samuel Frost, Patrick Gordon, Gibson Gastin, John J. Gately, Jonathan Hart, Samuel Kellogg, S. H. Lester, Isaac Odell, Charles D. Phelps; Nathaniel, Benjamin, Jr., and Jonathan Parker; Obadiah Vincent, and John Young. There may have been others whose names are not remembered. Besides those in the above named company, Hiram M. Tremble went as a Second Lieutenant in a company from Shelby County, and G. B. Fancher and John D. Johnston were privates in still another company.

Pioneer Isaac N. Craig was a soldier in the Black Hawk War from Clark County, and other prominent citizens served in that war and removed here later.

Mexican War.—In the Mexican War, Captain William W. Bishop commanded Company D in the Third Regiment, made up of Coles County men, which, at that time, included Douglas. This company rendezvoused near the old spring on the land known afterwards as the Mooney farm, north of the State road in the northwest corner of Section 34-12-7. The night before they started away, they were cheered up and entertained by Samuel Van Meter (later the Doctor), who came to the camp and in his characteristic way, gave them imitations of Dick Newport, a famous early preacher in the county, and otherwise caused them to forget their sadness at parting from home and friends.

The names of those sufficiently familiar to indicate that they went from what is now Coles County, besides that of Capt. Bishop, are: John J.

Adams, First Lieutenant; H. C. Dunbar, Second Lieutenant; Darius and Leroy Wiley, Sergeants; Arick A. Sutherland and Austin Wiley, Musicians; and G. W. Cartmell, Thomas Dowling, Alex Griffin, Joseph Goode, Samuel Harmon, Wesley Hoge, Henry W. Louthan, George W. Miller, Samuel Miller, Francis Marion, Thomas Mitchell, Nathaniel Parker, Thomas Turner, Jackson Sublett, James Wiley, Reason Wiley, William C. Ashmore, Joseph Carter, Thomas Fancher, William C. Harmon, Moses Hart, James P. Owings, John D. Poulter, William Sublett, Bennett Cornwell, Harmon Eastin, Thomas Hart, and Joseph L. Winkler, privates. The company suffered much from sickness. The last four named died in the field and the preceding eight were discharged on account of disability. The company took part in the siege of Vera Cruz and the battle of Cerro Gordo. Of the whole company, there remain at this writing upon earth only four: Leroy Wiley, living in Paris, Ill.; Austin, his brother, in California; Joseph Goode, near Mattoon; and George W. Miller, in the Soldiers' Home, at Danville, Ill.

Civil War.—In the Civil War Coles County did her part nobly. Her sons were on many bloody battle-fields and hundreds of them never returned from the scenes of that terrible fratricidal strife. The first volunteers enlisted at Charleston and were mustered in Company C of the Eighth Regiment for three months, under the command of Col. Richard J. Oglesby. James M. Ashmore was its Captain; James B. Hill, First Lieutenant, and Daniel Sayer, Second Lieutenant. William S. Marshall, of Charleston, was the Second Captain of Company D in the same regiment.

Many Coles County boys were in Company E of the Twenty-fifth Illinois Volunteers (a three years' regiment), and that company had for its Captains Westford Taggart and William J. Sallee, both of Charleston. Taggart later became Lieutenant Colonel of this regiment.

U. S. Grant was appointed Colonel of the Twenty-first Illinois Infantry, by Governor Yates, in June, 1861, and assumed command of the regiment on the 16th day of that month, at its rendezvous near Mattoon; and from that, as a starting point, began the brilliant career of this great soldier which has made his name immortal.

Judge A. M. Peterson, long an honored citizen of our county, commanded a company from Jasper County in that regiment.

Company D, of the Forty-first Regiment, commanded first by Edmund W. True, who was killed at Fort Donelson, then by R. H. McFadden, and then by Joseph Withington, was made up largely of Coles County volunteers. R. H. McFadden was later promoted to be Major of the regiment.

The Forty-ninth Regiment was without any privates from Coles County, but William W. Bishop, who commanded a company in the Mexican War, was its Lieutenant Colonel.

The Fifty-fourth Regiment, which had for its Second Colonel, G. M. Mitchell, of Charleston, who later was promoted to Brevet Brigadier General, included very many Coles County soldiers. Company C of that regiment, commanded first by Byrd Monroe, then by M. W. Robbins, and then by Henry M. McCrory, all of Charleston, was made up almost entirely of men from our county. Robbins later became a Major, and McCrory became Sergeant Major (non-commissioned staff) in the same regiment. William W. Purinton and Russell W. Williams, of Mattoon, were Captains of Company A, and James T. Smith, of Mattoon, was Captain of Company F in the Fifty-fourth.

The Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Infantry was commanded by Col. James M. True. It had some privates from here and several officers. Lewis C. True was First Adjutant, then Major and finally Lieutenant Colonel, and in command of the regiment at the date of its muster-out, March 6, 1866. The late Dr. V. R. Bridges was a surgeon of the same regiment. Col. James M. True, while still a Colonel, was for a time in command of a brigade. This continued for a year or more, and just before the close of the war, he was promoted to Brigadier General by brevet.

The Sixty-eighth Illinois (a three months' regiment) had Houston L. Taylor, of Mattoon, for its Lieutenant Colonel, and Company C of this regiment was made up of Coles County men. The Captain of Company C was John P. St. John, of Charleston.

The One Hundred and Twenty-third Regiment had as its first commander Col. James Monroe, a most gallant and popular officer, who was killed at the battle of Farmington, Tenn., October 7, 1863. Jonathan Biggs, of Mattoon, succeeded Monroe as Colonel. James A. Connolly, then of Charleston, now of Springfield, was Major of the regiment. That regiment had in its ranks many Coles County soldiers, and Company A, commanded first by James B. Hill and then by Oscar F. Bane, both of Charleston, was made up entirely of volunteers from this county. Company D, commanded by James L. Hart, of Etna; Company H, commanded by A. C. Van Buskirk, John W. Champ and Thomas E. Woods, all of Mattoon; Company I, commanded by William E. Adams, then of Mattoon, and Company K, commanded by Owen Wiley, of this county, were all composed mainly of men from this county.

The One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment embraced few privates from Coles County, but its first commander was Jonathan Richmond, of Mattoon. It was organized and mustered in at Alton, September 4, 1862, and mustered out July 12, 1865.

The One Hundred and Forty-third Regiment had for its Lieutenant-Colonel John P. St. John, of Charleston, who afterwards became Governor of Kansas. This regiment contained a large number of privates who entered the service from Coles County. Company A of this regiment, made up entirely of Coles County volunteers, was commanded by Capt. Richard S. Curd.

The regiments just named were all infantry regiments.

Thomas A. Marshall, of Charleston, was the first commander of the First Regiment Illinois Cavalry, and Company C, made up mainly of Coles County volunteers, had for its first Captain, G. M. Mitchell, who was later made Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Infantry.

The Fifth Cavalry was largely recruited from Coles County. Thomas McKee, of Mattoon, was the first Captain of Company B; George W. McConkey, of Oakland, was the first Captain of Company E, followed by Francis M. Webb, of Coles County; and Benjamin G. Glenn, of Mattoon, was the Second Captain of Company I, of this regiment.

The True family was well represented, as the record shows. The following members of the family went from this county, and all of them were officers: James M., Edmund W., Lewis C., John W., James F., and Theodore E. True.

The Hart family, in the southern part of the county, probably had the distinction of sending a larger number of its members to the war than any other family in the county. The following is a list of the members of this family who enlisted and saw service: Aaron Hart, A. Y. Hart, Joseph Hart, J. D. Hart, W. P. Hart, D. S. Hart, W. H. Hart, E. B. Hart, A. Y. Hart, Jr., Samuel Hart, John Hart, Miles W. Hart, J. L.

Hart, J. M. Hart and C. F. Hart; also the following, whose mothers were of the Hart family; J. F. Goar, Robert Floyd, Edward Floyd, John Remels and Joseph Remels.

As an indication of the fidelity of the county to the cause of the Union in that memorable war, it may be stated that, by August 1, 1862, Coles County had sent to the front thirteen companies and had three more nearly full, making about sixteen companies in all. This would have been Coles County's quota for one hundred and sixty-three regiments—nearly twice as many as the State had furnished up to that time.

The Adjutant-General's report, issued early in 1864, showed that Coles County had then furnished to the Union Army more than her quota. Her quota, under the various calls up to that time, was about 1,339, but up to October 1, 1863, she had actually furnished volunteers to the number of 1,870—an excess of 531 above her quota—and this did not include those who had enlisted in regiments from Missouri and some other States. Not more than three, or possibly four, counties in the State furnished as many volunteers in proportion to actual population as did Coles County.

In July, 1863, about twenty men from Mattoon and vicinity, under the command of one Lane, a brother of T. P. C. Lane, went to Indiana to help drive out John Morgan, who was reported to be about to ravage that whole State. On their return, not having gotten sight of the famous guerrilla, but having shown their good intentions at least, they were tendered a complimentary dinner at the Pennsylvania House, in Mattoon, by its proprietor, Thomas McKee.

In August, 1863, a regiment of State militia was organized at Charleston, under a call of the Governor. McHenry Brooks was made its Colonel, James M. Ashmore, its Lieutenant-Colonel, and John P. St. John, its Major.

Many citizens who have been prominent in county affairs, enlisted elsewhere and moved to Coles County after the close of their term of service. In this category stand the names of Hon. H. A. Neal, of Charleston, and Hon. H. S. Clark, Col. J. F. Drish, Hon. L. Lehman, Capt. W. E. Robinson, of Mattoon, and others.

I feel that, in this brief review, I have not done justice to Coles County's share in the great war for the preservation of the Union. There are scores whose names deserve to be recorded here, but this is rendered impossible by lack of space in this publication. To the remnant of that great army still lingering on earth's shores, let us be tolerant and tender. For those who so freely laid down their lives that this Union might not perish, we can only scatter the flowers of each recurring spring upon the earth in which they sleep, and utter, with sorrowful lips, the universal benediction, Requiescat in Pace!

Spanish-American War.—In that short and sharp little difficulty with Spain in 1898, Coles County again was there with her share of volunteers. Company E, in the Fourth Regiment, Illinois Infantry, commanded by Charles E. Rudy, was made up—with only two or three exceptions—of Coles County boys, and quite a number of volunteers from this county were in other companies of that regiment.

The regiment went to Cuba early in January and remained there about three months, performing guard duty in the vicinity of Havana. It was not the fault of its members that they failed to do much fighting. The destruction of Spain's war vessels upon the sea by our great captains of the navy put Spain out of the war business so early, that the land forces had little opportunity to give evidence of their prowess.

CHAPTER VII.

POLITICAL AND STATISTICAL.

COLES COUNTY CREATED—NAMED FOR GOVERNOR COLES—EARLIER AND LATER COUNTY ORGANIZATIONS—COUNTY DIMENSIONS—COUNTY SEAT ESTABLISHED AT CHARLESTON—FIRST COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION ADOPTED IN 1859—LIST OF COUNTY OFFICERS—MEMBERS OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY—REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS—MEMBERS OF CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS—CIRCUIT JUDGES—OTHER PUBLIC OFFICIALS—PRESIDENTIAL VOTE, 1852-1904—CONGRESSIONAL AND LEGISLATIVE APPORTIONMENTS—JUDICIAL DISTRICTS—VILLAGE ORGANIZATIONS—POSTOFFICES AND FIRST POSTMASTERS—POPULATION AND SCHOOL STATISTICS—COUNTY INDEBTEDNESS.

The history of Coles County, as a distinct political entity, begins with Christmas Day, 1830, when the act creating the new county was approved by Governor Reynolds. It took its name from Edward Coles, the second Governor of the State.

Under the Territorial Government, Illinois was divided into two counties—St. Clair and Randolph. St. Clair was successively divided by the creation of new counties, so that the territory which now constitutes Coles County has been at different times a part of St. Clair, Madison, Crawford and Clark Counties, and after the creation of Edgar, the area lying west of the latter, including a part of what is now Coles County, was attached to Edgar for governmental purposes.

County Organization.—The limits of the county, as defined by the act creating it, approved December 23, 1830, were as follows: "Beginning at the northeast corner of Section 4 in Township 16 North, in Range 14 West of the Second Principal Meridian, thence west on the line dividing Townships 16 and 17, to the eastern boundary of Range 6 East of the Third Principal Meridian; thence south on said line dividing Ranges 6 and 7, the eastern boundary of Macon (as then constituted) and Shelby Counties, to the southwest corner of Clark County, Township 9 North, Range 6; thence east on the line dividing Townships 8 and 9 to the southeast corner of Section 31, the east boundary of fractional Range 11 East; thence north on said line, which is the division between fractional Range 11 and Range 14 (W. of the Second P. M.), to the northeast corner of Section 19 in said Range 11 in Township 12 North; thence to the northeast corner of Section 21 in Township 12 and Range 14; thence north on the sectional lines, the center of said range, to the place of beginning."

By the provisions of the same act William Bowen, of Vermilion County, Jesse Essarey, of Clark County, and Joshua Barber, of Crawford County, were appointed commissioners to meet at the house of Charles Eastin on the fourth Monday of January following (1831), or within five days thereafter, to determine the location of the county-seat for the new county, and the first election for the choice of county officers—one Sheriff, one Coroner and three County Commissioners—was to be held on the first Monday in February, 1831. Said first election was to be held at the places within the new county at which elections were held while it constituted a part of Clark County, and all courts were required to be held at the home of Charles Eastin until county buildings were erected or change of location was made by the County Commissioners' Court.

The boundaries thus established by the act of 1830 were identical with those now embracing the counties of Douglas, Coles and Cumberland, extending 48 miles from north to south and 28 miles from east to west, except a strip three miles wide off the east side of the south 21 miles, which remained attached to Clark County, from which Coles was taken. In 1843, Cumberland County was created by detaching 14 tiers of sections from the southern part of Coles; and in 1859, the county was again divided by the creation of the County of Douglas out of two and a half northern tiers of townships (a strip fifteen miles wide) except twelve sections north (and at the eastern end) of the main south line of Douglas County, and which constitutes the northeast part of Coles County. In this tract, which would have fallen into Douglas County had the line between Coles and Douglas extended unbroken from west to east, is situated the village of Oakland.

In 1857 an act was passed by the Legislature authorizing a vote to be taken by the counties of Coles and Champaign on the proposition to create a new county to be called Douglas, consisting of a tract three miles wide off the southern portion of Champaign and another fifteen miles wide from the north end of Coles. This proposition failed of adoption and, at its next session, the Legislature changed the boundaries of the proposed new county so as to take nothing from Champaign and leave Oakland to Coles, and in this form the proposition prevailed. As a consequence of these changes Coles County was shorn of three-fifths of its original dimensions, its western border (which was unchanged) being on the line between Towns 6 and 7 East of the Third P. M., its main northern border on the middle of Town 14 N. and its southern border two miles north of the south line of Town 11, while the eastern border is irregular, about one-third in the southern portion being on the eastern line of fractional Township 11 East, and the northern two-thirds in the middle of Town 14 West of the Second P. M. The area embraced within these boundaries amounts to 19 miles from north to south, by about 28 miles from east to west on the northern border and 25 miles on the southern border—making, with the irregularities or projections described, about 520 square miles.

County Seat Located.—The Commissioners appointed for that purpose by the enabling act creating the county of Coles in 1830, fixed the county-seat of the new county on the west half of the southwest quarter of Section 11, Town 12 North, Range 9 East of the Third Principal Meridian. This tract was purchased from the Government by Charles S. Morton and Benjamin Parker, and by them given and conveyed to the County Commissioners. In April, 1831, the Commissioners laid out the original town of Charleston on a part of this tract. The land was subsequently re-surveyed, the plat of the town extended to cover the whole tract, and the lots sold by the Commissioners from time to time and the proceeds paid into the county treasury.

County Government.—Isaac Lewis, George M. Hanson and Andrew Caldwell were elected County Commissioners at the first special election, held in February, 1831, the voting place being at the house of James Ashmore, in what is now Lafayette Township, and they held their offices until the regular election in August of the next year, when Isaac Lewis, Andrew Clark and James S. Martin were chosen. Biennially thereafter three Commissioners were elected until, by a change in the law, it was provided that the Commissioners should hold office for three years and one be elected annually. The Commissioners so elected constituted the County Commissioners' Court, which had jurisdiction in all matters concerning the county revenue, regulating and imposing the county tax in all cases of public roads and bridges, the auditing of accounts and, in general, the control and management of the county's property and business. They held four sessions each year—in March, June, September and December—and were authorized to hold special (or called) sessions when deemed necessary on account of urgent business, upon five days' notice.

This continued to be the form of government until the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, which provided for a County Court consisting of a County Judge and two Associates. W. W. Bishop became the first County Judge elected under this Constitution, and the first Associate Justices were John M. Logan and Hezekiah J. Ashmore.

Township Organization.—The affairs of the county continued to be managed by the County Court, as thus constituted, for twelve years. But in 1859 the form of county government was again changed by the adoption of the system known as township organization. This was done by vote of the people of the county at the general election, and John Monroe, James T. Cunningham and John Hutton were appointed Commissioners to divide the county into townships. Twelve townships were formed, which continue to exist with the same boundaries originally established. The town now known as Humbolt was originally called Milton, and it and the first postoffice here, called Milton Station, received their names from James Milton True, who had a store there and was known over the county as Milton True. Otherwise the names here given have remained unchanged.

Under the system of township organization the control of the business and affairs of the county is vested in a Board of Supervisors, composed of one Supervisor from each of the twelve townships, and Assistant Supervisors from such townships as are authorized by the general law to elect them. At present the Board consists of seventeen members—one Supervisor from each township, with three Assistant Supervisors from Mattoon and two from Charleston. James Monroe was the first Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, which held its first meeting under the new organization on May 7, 1860.

The change in the form of county government involved the organization of the townships as distinct municipalities. The assessment of property and collection of taxes, and the establishment and care of highways, which had before been under the control of the county, came under the jurisdiction of the Township Supervisors. The change was made from the county system, which prevailed generally in the Southern States, to that of the town-meeting plan of New England. The affairs of each township are under the immediate direction of the voters at the town meeting held in the spring of each year. At this meeting the Supervisor is elected who acts as a member of the County Board. He is also the Overseer of the Poor for his township and the custodian of its funds. There are also elected a Town Clerk, an Assessor and Collector of taxes, and Commissioners of Highways, who have charge of the establishment and maintenance of the public roads and bridges of their respective townships.

County Officers.—The following is a list of the persons who have held the different county offices, together with the years of their official incumbency:

Circuit Clerk.—James P. Jones, 1831-1836; Nathan Ellington, previous to 1855; James D. Ellington, 1855-1856; George W. Teel, 1856-1864; H. C. Wortham, 1864-1877; W. N. McDonald, 1872; A. H. Chapman, 1872-1873; E. E. Clark, 1873-1876; W. E. Robinson, 1876-1880; James H. McClelland, 1880-1884; Julian J. Beall, 1884-1888; John R. Hamilton, 1888-1892; W. F. Purtill, 1892-1899; R. R. Mitchell, 1899-1900; C. C. Ingram, 1900-1904. Mr. Ingram resigned in January, 1904, and Fred More, the present incumbent, was appointed to fill out the remainder of his unexpired term, and, at the November election, was elected for the full term of four years.

County Judges.—James P. Jones, 1831-34; John F. Smyth, 1834; S. M. Dunbar, 1834-1835; William Collom, 1835-1837; Reuben Canterbury, 1837-1841; John W. Trower, 1841-1843; Robert S. State's Attorney.—Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, Prosecuting Attorneys were elected in circuits consisting of several counties, and James R. Cunningham was the first Coles County man to hold the office. He defeated Joseph G. Cannon, the present Speaker of the National House of Representatives, who was then a resident of Douglas County. Cunningham served until 1864, when Joseph G. Cannon was elected. In 1868 General Boyle, of Paris, was elected, and it was provided by law that such Attorneys should remain in office for the full term of four years, even though the new Constitution of 1870 provided for a State's Attorney to be elected by the people of each county. The first election, therefore, under the new order of things, was in 1872, and James W. Craig was then elected. The list in full from that time is as follows: James W. Craig, 1872-1876; Robert M. Gray, 1876-1880; Samuel M. Leitch, 1880-1888; John H. Marshall, 1888-1896; Emery Andrews, 1896-1900; John F. Voigt, 1900-1904; John McNutt, 1904—.

School Commissioner.—Charles S. Morton was the first School Commissioner and held office until 1841, when he was followed by James Alexander, who held office until 1845. Other incumbents were: James B. Harris, 1845-1849; H. Mann, 1849-1851; Gideon Edwards, 1851-1853; James A. Mitchell, 1853-1855; Gideon Edwards, 1855-1861; W. H. K. Pile, 1861-1863; Perry Matthews, 1863-1865. The Legislature then changed the law so that, from that time on, the County School official was called County Superintendent of Schools, instead of Commissioner, and his term of office was four years. The list of Superintendents follows: Elzy Blake, 1865-1869; S. J. Bovell, 1869-1873; Allen Hill, 1873-1877; T. J. Lee, 1877-1886; A. J. Funkhouser, 1886-1890; Charles T. Feagan, 1890-1894; J. L. Whisnand, 1894-1898; John Sawyer, 1898-1902; W. E. Miller, 1902—.

In all of its history Coles County has furnished only two Congressmen. O. B. Ficklin, whose biography has been briefly given heretofore in these papers, was first a Whig and later a Democrat. H. P. H. Bromwell was a Republican. He was a tall, straight, fine looking man, of pleasing address, an excellent public speaker, and a creditable Representative. He lived in Charleston. In the early 'seventies he moved to Denver, Colo., where he died within the last two years.

Coles has been allowed by the other counties of its judicial circuit to have only three Judges of the Circuit Court during its history, notwithstanding the excellent material among its members of the legal profession. The first was James F. Hughes, of Mattoon, who served faithfully and well, so much so that he was afterwards made the first Judge of the City Court of Mattoon. The second was Frank K. Dunn, of Charleston, who, though comparatively a young man, proved himself to be a man of judicial temper and well qualified legally. His record upon the bench is most excellent. The third, James W. Craig, of Mattoon, is at present upon the bench. He is making a reputation as a Judge of ability and of judicial fairness second to none who have been upon the bench in this circuit, and is noted for the promptness with which he dispatches the business of his court without curtailing any of the rights of the litigants.

Presidential Vote.—In its earlier years Coles was a Whig county in National campaigns. The last Presidential election in which the Whigs had a candidate was in 1852, and, commencing with that year, the following table gives the vote of Coles County at Presidential elections up to 1904:

1852—Scott (Whig), 997; Pierce (Dem.), 733; Hale (F. S.), 2.
1856—Fremont (Rep.), 783; Buchanan (Dem.), 1,178; Fillmore (Am.), 796.
1860—Lincoln (Rep.), 1,495; Douglas (Dem.), 1,467; Bell (Un.), 79; Breckenridge (Dem.), 0.
1864—Lincoln (Rep.), 2,210; McClellan (Dem.), 1,555.

1868—Grant (Rep.), 2,658; Seymour (Dem.), 2,247.

1872—Grant (Rep.), 2,647; Greeley (Lib.), 2,411.

1876—Hayes (Rep.), 2,957; Tilden (Dem.), 2,822; Cooper (Gr'n'b'k), 102.

1880—Garfield (Rep.), 2,991; Hancock (Dem.), 2,905; Weaver (Gr'n'b'k), 141.

1884—Blaine (Rep.), 3,193; Cleveland (Dem.), 3,234; Butler (Peo.), 69; St. John (Pro.), 73.

1892—Harrison (Rep.), 3,693; Cleveland (Dem.), 3,611; Bidwell (Pro.), 203; Weaver (Peo.), 97.

Congressional Districts.—Under the first congressional apportionment after Coles County was organized, made in 1831, Coles County was placed in the Second Congressional District with White, Hamilton, Jefferson, Wayne, Edwards, Wabash, Lawrence, Clay, Marion, Fayette, Montgomery, Shelby, Vermilion, Edgar, Clark and Crawford counties.

The next apportionment was in 1843, when Coles was placed in the Third District, with Lawrence, Richland, Crawford, Jasper, Effingham, Fayette, Montgomery, Christian, Shelby, Moultrie, Clark, Clay, Edgar, Macon, Dewitt and Piatt counties.

In 1852 Coles was assigned to the Seventh District, with Logan, Macon, Piatt, Moultrie, Edgar, Clark, Cumberland, Effingham, Jasper, Clay, Crawford, Lawrence, Richland and Fayette.

In 1861 (still remaining in the Seventh District) Coles was associated with Macon, Piatt, Champaign, Douglas, Moultrie, Cumberland, Edgar, Vermilion, Iroquois and Ford.

In 1872 it became a part of the Fourteenth

District with Macon, Piatt, Champaign, Douglas and Vermilion.

In 1882 the Fifteenth District consisted of Coles, Edgar, Douglas, Vermilion and Champaign.

In 1893 the Nineteenth District was composed of Coles, Edgar, Cumberland, Clark, Effingham, Jasper, Crawford, Richland and Lawrence.

In 1901 Coles County was again placed in the Nineteenth District, with Douglas, Champaign, Piatt, Dewitt, Macon, Moultrie and Shelby Counties.

Legislative Districts.—Prior to 1848 the number of Senators and Representatives elected from the whole State underwent many changes, on account of the rapid changes in population in the different counties of the State. The Constitution of 1818 made it the duty of the Legislature, at its first session, to apportion the Senators and Representatives among the several counties or districts, to be established by law, according to the number of white inhabitants in the same. The only restriction as to numbers prescribed that the Representatives should not be less than 27, nor more than 36, until the population of the State should amount to 100,000, and that the number of Senators should never be less than one-third nor more than one-half the number of Representatives. Under this provision the first Senate consisted of 14 members—one from each county except Franklin, which was united with Johnson—and 28 Representatives, or in the proportion of one Senator to two Representatives.

Upon the adoption of the Constitution of 1848, the State was divided into twenty-five Senatorial and fifty-four Representative Districts. Each Senatorial District was allowed one Senator, and each Representative District was allowed one or more Representatives, according to population, the total representation of the latter being 75 members each. Senatorial and Representative Districts were not identical as now, but each underwent changes after each decennial census. Coles County was then placed in the Tenth Senatorial District with Vermilion, Piatt, Champaign, Moultrie and Cumberland Counties, and as the Eleventh Representative District, it was allowed one member of the House. In 1854 the State was again apportioned, and Coles was made a part of the Eighteenth Senatorial District with Vermilion, Edgar and Cumberland Counties, and was associated with Moultrie as the Twenty-fifth Representative District, which was given one member of the House.

In 1861, Coles with Douglas, Champaign, Ford, Vermilion and Iroquois Counties, constituted the Ninth Senatorial District, and with Douglas, Vermilion, and Edgar Counties, was made the Thirty-ninth Representative District, which was allowed three members of the House. That arrangement continued until the adoption of the Constitution of 1870, which provided for the division of the State into Senatorial Districts, each to have one Senator, whose term is four years, and three Representatives, whose term is two years. It provided further for the plan of "minority representation," by which one party could not elect more than two out of the three members of the House in each district unless the minority party was able to poll less than one-fourth of the total vote, and also that Senators should be elected every two years, in odd and even numbered districts, alternately, beginning with the even numbered districts in 1872. It further provided that the State should be re-apportioned every ten years.

The Governor and Secretary of State were instructed and empowered to make the apportionment for the First General Assembly (the Twenty-seventh) after the adoption of the Constitution. They organized the Ninth Senatorial District with the counties of Coles, Douglas, Champaign, Ford, Vermilion, and Iroquois, with two Senators, and made of Coles County the Forty-sixth Representative District, giving it two Representatives. This arrangement was merely temporary, continuing in force only one term.

The first regular apportionment made by the Legislature to conform to the requirements of the new Constitution was in 1872, and Coles, Douglas and Moultrie Counties were placed in the Thirty-second District, with power to elect one Senator and three Representatives.

In 1882 the Thirty-second District was made to consist of Coles, Douglas and Cumberland Counties.

In 1901 (the last apportionment), Coles, Douglas, and Clark Counties were placed together in the Thirty-fourth District.

Judicial Circuits.—In 1831 the Second Judicial Circuit consisted of Coles, Wabash, White, Edwards, Lawrence, Wayne, Clark, Crawford, Edgar, Vermilion and Clay.

In 1833 the same counties were kept together constituting the Fourth Circuit.

In 1841 Jasper County was added to the list, which was continued as the Fourth Circuit.

In 1851 there was a rearrangement and Coles, with Crawford, Lawrence, Richland, Clay, Effingham, Jasper, Cumberland and Clark Counties constituted the Fourth Circuit.

In 1853 the Fourth Circuit was changed by taking out Effingham and substituting Edgar County.

In 1857 Coles, with Macon, Piatt, Fayette, Effingham, Shelby and Moultrie, was organized into the Seventeenth Circuit.

In 1859 Coles County was again assigned to the Fourth Circuit, in association with Edgar, Clark, and Cumberland.

In 1873 the Fifth Circuit was organized, consisting of Coles, Vermilion, Edgar, Clark and Douglas Counties.

In 1877, again as the Fourth Circuit, Coles was associated with Champaign, Piatt, Moultrie, Macon, Vermilion, Edgar, Clark and Douglas Counties.

The last apportionment, in 1897, organized the Fifth Circuit, with Coles, Vermilion, Edgar, Clark and Cumberland Counties.

The following offices are still (1905) in operation: Ashmore, Bushton, Charleston, Cooks Mills, Doran, Etna, Fair Grange, Humboldt, Lerna, Loxa, McPherson, Magnet, Mattoon, Oakland, Rardin and Trilla.

It is interesting to note the rate of growth of the county in population in the different decades of its history. In 1830, just at its beginning, the population of the territory which became Coles County (including the present Cumberland and Douglas Counties) was stated to be 4,500. In 1835 it had increased to 5,142. In 1840 it had grown to 9,615. In 1850 (Cumberland County having, in the meantime, been cut off) it had 9,335 people, of which 36 were colored. In 1860 (Douglas County having been detached in 1859) its population was 14,203, of which 29 were colored. The census of 1870 showed a population of 25,235, of which 1,053 were stated to be foreign born, and no enumeration of colored people seems to have been made, as the war was over and all colors were alike to the census enumerators in Illinois. By 1880, the authorities ceased to make distinctions of any kind, and the total is given as 27,042. In 1890 the number was 30,093, and in 1900, 34,146.

The greatest relative growth, it will be noted, was in the two decades from 1850 to 1870. The coming in of the two railroads in 1855 gave it that impetus. The opening up of the Far West in the 'seventies, and the expansion of railroad facilities in every direction since, has made the growth slower. Many have come in, but many have also gone out, and natives, or former residents, of this county are scattered all over the United States. The county is quite largely represented in all of the newer States and the Territories of the West.

The following table shows the population of the county by townships, according to the census of 1900:

Ashmore Township	2,081
Charleston Township	6,760
East Oakland Township	2,403
Humboldt Township	1,761
Hutton Township	1,984
Lafayette Township	1,246
Mattoon Township	10,583
Morgan Township	1,165
North Okaw Township	1,848
Paradise Township	900
Pleasant Grove Township	1,914
Seven Hickory Township	1,501

Total 34,146

School Statistics.

County Indebtedness.

Until recent years Coles County has never been very deeply involved in debt. During most of the county's history its warrants were readily convertible into cash and were taken up promptly by the County Treasurer.

The building of the new jail and court house brought about a different condition in the finances of the county. The construction of the jail made a small debt which was never paid entirely, and the cost of the court house and heating apparatus and furnishings made a total which, according to an official statement of the Board of Supervisors issued in January, 1905, approximates $195,000.

The following figures are taken from the statement referred to:

The judgments rendered against the county amount to $98,795.62, less interest, while the claims not in judgment amount to $14,661.32. The above are on account of court house construction and furnishing. The money borrowed by the County Board from banks and individuals aggregates $57,540, less interest.

The above makes a total of $170,996.94, which constitutes the net debt of the county for the court house and money borrowed for the jail and sundry uses. Adding interest on the judgments and on money borrowed, figured to January 1, 1905, carries the total approximately to $195,000.

Besides this regular debt, the statement referred to mentions arrearages for 1904 of something over $50,000.

The City of Charleston has a bonded debt of $30,000. Charleston Township's bonded debt is $67,000, and the Charleston School District has a bonded debt of $16,600.

Mattoon (City) has outstanding bonds aggregating $70,000. The Township bonds outstanding amount to $96,000 and the Mattoon School District bonded debt is $54,000.

Citizens of Mattoon and Charleston have, during the past ten years, spent large sums in public improvements, such as paving, permanent sidewalks and drainage, and a considerable amount is still owing in deferred payments for such work. But as these improvements are paid for by special assessment against individual property owners, they are not classed as public debts.

The Oakland School District has a bonded debt of $9,000. The Township of East Oakland issued bonds to the amount of $75,000 in aid of the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad. About 1877 the courts decided the issue invalid and the debts of both township and village are now merely nominal.

The same is true of Ashmore, which has no bonded debt.

Several School Districts in the County have small debts for the construction of buildings.

CHAPTER VIII.

TOWNSHIP HISTORY.

LOCATION, AREA AND BOUNDARIES OF INDIVIDUAL TOWNSHIPS—LOCAL CHARACTERISTICS AS TO STREAMS, SOIL, ETC.—EARLY SETTLERS AND FIRST EVENTS—PRIMITIVE CONDITIONS AND REMINISCENCES OF PIONEER LIFE—CITIES AND VILLAGES—SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES—LIBRARIES—SOCIAL AND SECRET ORGANIZATIONS—EARLY STATE ROADS AND MODES OF TRANSPORTATION—THE COMING OF THE RAILROAD—ELECTRIC LIGHTING, TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES—MANUFACTURES AND OTHER INDUSTRIES—MERCANTILE AND BANKING ENTERPRISES—BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—NEWSPAPERS—PUBLIC OFFICERS—POSTOFFICES AND FIRST POSTMASTERS—STATISTICS OF POPULATION, WEALTH, ETC.

In the following pages the individual history of Coles County townships is presented somewhat in detail and under separate headings. Besides description of local characteristics, location, area and boundaries of the several townships, it will be found to contain extended lists of early settlers and description of life in pioneer days; history of churches and schools; the growth of manufactures and other industries; the development which has followed the introduction of railroads and of electricity for purposes of lighting and communication; banks and other financial enterprises; newspaper and post office history; municipal organization and development—in other words, a general summary of the most important facts of local history not embraced in the general history of the county:

ASHMORE TOWNSHIP.

The town of Ashmore extends from the Embarras River to the Edgar County line east and west, and from East Oakland on the north to Hutton on the south. It contains approximately fifty land sections, or square miles.

The stream with the classical name of Pole Cat, flows from Edgar County across the southern half of the township to the Embarras, and smaller tributaries of the Embarras water the northern and western parts. The northeastern one-fourth of the township, with several sections in the central portion and a tract about Hitesville, were originally prairie, but a wide timber-belt bordered the Ambraw and extended far up the Pole Cat and its tributaries when the first settlers came.

Some one of those first comers there is said to have learned, near the banks of that stream, that a kind of cat lived in those parts which was "powerful" strong for its size, and the impression was so adherent and so lasting that he gave the stream the name it still bears.

Early Settlers and Villages.—The township was named from the village, which received its appellation from its founder, Hezekiah J. Ashmore. Milton J. Barnes was its first representative on the County Board. As in other parts of the county, its early settlers were mainly from Kentucky and other parts of the South.

Besides those named in the general county history, as coming prior to 1840, there were several influential citizens who came in soon after that time, including Job W. Brown, Coleman L. Duncan and others.

Pioneer Peter K. Honn was a preacher of the Christian denomination, and had a fund of stories illustrative of life in a primitive community. One of these related in the Le Baron History was substantially as follows:

Mr. Honn was called to perform a marriage ceremony at the house of one of the early settlers. Arriving at the cabin, he found the bride and groom waiting, dressed in the height of backwoods style. Two large, ungainly curs were mingling freely among the assembled guests, and after the ceremony all (including the dogs) gathered around the table, upon which was placed a sumptuous "wedding breakfast" of corn-pone, venison, wild honey and such primitive dishes. During the repast some one dropped a bone to the waiting dogs, and immediately they clinched in a battle. They rolled under the table, growling and fighting, whereupon the fair bride jumped upon a chair and yelled at the top of her voice, "Sic 'em! sic 'em! sic 'em!" She evidently felt that the occasion called for some kind of lively "doins''," and was grateful to the dogs for furnishing the necessary excitement.

First Things.—The first school in the township is said to have been taught by a man named Foster, whose antecedents are at present unknown as well as the location of his school.

Rev. Isaac Hill is said to have preached the first sermon.

The first death there is thought to have been that of the child of Adam Cox, which occurred about 1831, and for it was dug the first grave in the cemetery near by, which later became so thickly populated with old and young.

The first voting place was at Bachelorsville in "Pietown," and there also was the first post-office.

The earliest village in Ashmore (and the second one platted in the county) was Hitesville. It was surveyed just two days less than a month prior to that of Oakland, on April 14, 1835, and was named for the owner of the land on which it was located, pioneer James Hite. It soon grew to be quite a village, with promise of becoming a town of considerable size. But, alas! the railroad passed it by in later years, and to-day a church is the only remnant of its former village life and promise.

The next plats for villages in the township (and the next in order also in the county) were those of Middleton, surveyed in July, 1836, and Liberty, surveyed in August of the same year. The first named was located upon land belonging to Christian Sousely and Christopher Grove, about the middle of Section 35-13-10. Liberty was founded and named by G. M. Ashmore, of Oakland, and was upon the west line, and at the junction of Sections 18 and 19-13-11. Both attempts, however, were failures. The people didn't buy the lots, and the lands upon which they were located have continued to yield their harvest of farm products, instead of becoming the centers of trade and commerce as their owners intended.

No further attempts were made to build towns in Ashmore until St. Omer was started, in 1852, on Section 24-13-10. It soon had the facilities then necessary for an infantile city, a postoffice, store, blacksmith shop, church, etc., but the railroad went by "on the other side," as in the case of Hitesville, and only the church had the vigor to withstand the slight of that modern power to build and to destroy.

The last village to be started, and the only one still remaining in the township, was Ashmore, in 1855. The railroad killed the others. It created Ashmore and continues to give it life. It was located in Section 31, on the line of road which is now called the "Big Four."

The first store at Ashmore was opened by John Hogue. McAllister and Ashmore, owners of a store, half a mile southwest on the main wagon road, at once moved into the village.

Van Dyke & Hogue put up the first dwelling, and William English started a blacksmith shop. Some of the numerous family of Waters also started a wagon shop at an early day, and J. A. Brown built a mill. William Brown became the first agent of the railroad. The first tavern was started by H. J. Ashmore. The first Postmaster was James M. Ashmore. The first school house, built in 1857-58, was used for both school and church purposes at the start. From these beginnings grew the present prosperous and vigorous little town and center of trade.

Business Enterprises.—About 1896 John G. Hermann came from East St. Louis and built an elevator, with a mill, extensive corn-cribs, an oat-bin of large capacity and a warehouse 190 feet long, all of which were destroyed by fire in September, 1902. The warehouse contained about 200 tons of broom-corn. C. R. Mitchell put up a new elevator in 1902 on the site of the one burned, and Bartlett, Kuhn & Co. erected one in 1900, then in 1904 tore it down and built a larger one in its place. Both these elevators are well equipped and running at this time.

The Corn Exchange Bank was started as a private bank in December, 1900, by John G. Hermann. After one year he sold it to a company of Ashmore citizens consisting of G. A. Brown, A. J. Waters, W. S. Hohn, S. A. Wright, C. R. Mitchell, W. S. Childress, R. V. Galbreath, T. J. Bull, J. D. Roberts, E. E. Boyer and G. B. Nay. They organized and elected W. S. Hohn President and S. A. Wright Cashier. The present officers are the same, with the addition of E. R. Hawkins, Assistant Cashier. The bank conducts a prosperous business and is an important addition to the village.

The Ashmore Building and Loan Association was organized in June, 1887, with H. B. Ashmore as President and W. C. Kimball Secretary. Its first Directors were: G. A. Brown, William Hawkins, J. R. Hobart, M. T. Shoot, Richard Waters, George A. Vandyke, Dr. A. T. Robertson and the President and Secretary just named. The Association has paid good profits and has helped build up the town. Its present officers are: Dr. A. T. Robertson, President; C. C. Woodrum, Secretary, and C. R. Mitchell, Treasurer. The additional Directors are: Jacob Zimmermann, Eli Dudley, R. V. Galbreath, J. R. Guthrie, Job W. Brown, T. L. Reed, J. C. Reed and S. A. Wright.

The first attempt to start a newspaper in Ashmore was when William Rose, in the early 'eighties, began publishing a small sheet, which was discontinued after a year or so of precarious existence. In 1886 Oscar J. Ricketts, now connected with the Bureau of Public Printing at Washington, started the "Ashmore Republican," a weekly newspaper, which has continued until the present time. It has always been Republican in politics. Ricketts sold to J. G. Pepper, now in the Agricultural Department at Washington. Pepper sold to H. H. Waters and Waters to the present proprietor, S. D. Makepeace, in 1889.

Ashmore has now, besides the enterprises already named, three general stores, kept by A. J. Waters, C. A. Wright and E. G. Pollard; three groceries, by Carson Cutter, Allemang Brothers and R. V. Galbreath & Son, the latter also conducting a butcher shop; two restaurants, one stock of general hardware, stoves, lumber, etc., kept by G. A. Brown & Son; a hotel, one milliner, two blacksmith shops, two barber shops, two active physicians (Drs. H. A. Kimrey and P. O. Carrico) and has a population of about six hundred.

Social Organizations.—Ashmore Lodge, No. 390, A. F. & A. M., was chartered October 8, 1863. Its charter members were: A. N. Graham, W. P. Ferris, Caleb Reed, R. Boyer, Hamilton Bennett, J. A. Brown, M. W. Barnes, John Campbell, O. D. Hawkins, W. S. Van Meter and W. N. Young. The records of the early meetings have not been preserved, but it is known that among its first officers were A. N. Graham, W. M.; W. P. Ferris, S. W., and Caleb Reed, J. W. The present officers are: Lincoln Moore, W. M.; G. V. Wright, S. W.; B. L. Moody, J. W.; S. B. Jones, Treasurer and Jos. Lane, Secretary. The Lodge owns its hall (a brick building) and has money in the treasury. There are at present about sixty members.

I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 792, in Ashmore, was organized October 24, 1890. Its first officers were: A. J. Steward, N. G.; G. M. Kincaid, V. G.; J. R. Guttine, R. S.; T. A. Walter, Treasurer. Its present N. G. is J. T. Wright. The Lodge has a membership of ninety-two, owns its lodge room (a brick building), is out of debt and has money in the treasury.

Omega District Court of Honor, No. 348, in the village of Ashmore, was organized May 14, 1897, with twenty charter members. Its first Chancellor was E. G. Pollard and the present one is Sarah Pollard. The present membership is thirty-five, who simply pay their dues and keep in good standing, but have practically ceased to hold meetings.

The Modern Woodman Camp, No. 891, was organized in Ashmore Village on February 4, 1892, with twenty-four charter members. Its present membership has been increased to ninety-seven. Its first V. C. was J. E. Dudley, and the present one is W. R. Comstock.

The Van Valkenburg Lodge, No. 267, K. of P., was organized in Ashmore in January, 1891, and after an early prosperity began to decline and at the end of about five years surrendered its charter.

A Good Templars Lodge was organized in 1869 and was maintained until about 1875, when it disbanded. Its first officers were: H. M. Ashmore, W. C. T.; Mrs. J. Zimmerman, M. V. T.; William Hawkins, W. Sec'y.; Mrs. W. P. Ferris, W. Treas. The last officers were: F. P. Campbell, W. C. T.; Mrs. Dr. J. Van Dyke, W. V. T.; J. C. Colson, W. Sec'y.; R. B. Brown, W. Treas.

The "Nonpareil Reading Circle," a ladies' reading club, was organized in 1902 with nineteen members. The first officers were: Mrs. Kate Sage, President; Miss Cinda Woodrum, Vice-President; Miss Emily Parker, Secretary; Miss Leone King, Treasurer. The present officers are: Miss Sue Brown, President; Mrs. D. P. Belden, Vice-President; Miss Blanche Ford, Secretary; Miss Lena Brown, Treasurer. The Society continues in a flourishing condition.

Manufactures, Railroads, Etc.—The tile factory, started about 1878 by J. B. Carter, is mentioned in the general county history. It was located about half a mile from the village and was operated until 1904, when it was torn down. About 1888 A. Ogle & Co. built another one, which is still in operation.

A railroad called the "Danville & Olney" (at first a narrow-gauge road) was built about 1878, across the southeast corner of the township. The road has a flag station for passengers on its lines in Section 16, and a postoffice was started there by Leonard Hite in 1898. The name of the station and postoffice is Hites. There is no store or other business enterprise there.

The railroad now constitutes a part of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton Line.

A postoffice was established in 1869, called

McPherson, on the railroad in the north part of Section 4-12-10, about midway of the section east and west. It is believed that the postoffice called "Modrell's Point," started in 1849 by William J. Keigley, was in Ashmore Township, as W. W. Hoge says that where James Halleck now lives was in an early day called Modrell's Point, and a man named Keigley lived there.

These, however, like most of the other early country postoffices, have now been discontinued.

Churches.--The Methodist Episcopal Church in the village was started in the early 'thirties, west of the present village, by Rev. Joseph Henry, a local preacher. Christopher Souseley and wife, Matthew McLain and wife, James Hubanks and wife and Robert and J. H. Modrell and their wives were among its early members. This church and the Hebron Presbyterian Church had a union log building put up in the later 'thirties west of the village. In 1869 a frame building was erected in Ashmore, which became the permanent home of the church and where, through storm and sunshine, it has kept up its organization and its services continuously. Its present minister is Reverend Dundass.

An Ashmore United Brethren Church was organized some time prior to 1866, but the date cannot be ascertained. Rev. Samuel Bussard was, perhaps, the first preacher for this church. Sometime about 1866 the organization was discontinued and from that time until March 26, 1893, there was no regular church of that name in Ashmore village. On the date mentioned Rev. Z. H. Byard organized the present U. B. Church and was its first pastor. Its first Board of Trustees were the pastor, William Miner and John Bradston. The present pastor is Rev. L. E. Miller.

Hebron Presbyterian Church was organized as an Old School church on June 19, 1841, in a union log church building, located in Section 35-13-10, by a committee of Palestine Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Isaac Bennett, Rev. James Reasoner and Ruling Elders James Balch and William Collom. It had a membership of about eighteen at the start, consisting of the Brooks, Moffett and Mitchell families, and James H. and Jane Bovell and Samuel and Letitia Hogue. Its first elders were Thomas C. Mitchell and Robert Brooks. Rev. Isaac Bennett and Rev. John McDonald were the first preachers.

About 1844 this organization built a frame church edifice near the southwest corner of Section 26-13-10 on two acres donated by Thomas Harding. Rev. John Steele preached there for several years and, later, such well known ministers as Revs. Cameron, Robt. A. Mitchell, James A. Allison, H. I. Venable and Nathaniel Williams. In 1867 a large frame building was erected in the village of Ashmore, and into that the church moved and there, for many years, Rev. Stephen J. Bovell ministered to the congregation. The church still maintains its organization there, having at present eighty-five members. Rev. B. H. Fields is its present pastor.

Prairie Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church was the outgrowth of an organization of Methodists in the early 'thirties at the residence of pioneer "Uncle Jimmie" Clark, in Section 13-13-10, where meetings were held in charge of the circuit rider until about 1850. Then a frame building was put up near the northwest corner of Section 17-13-14 west, and in that meetings were held with more or less regularity until about 1874, at which time the organization ceased to exist. The building was subsequently torn down, and the ground owned by the church was sold to B. F. Childress. John Kerans and John Milburn were among its early preachers.

The Enon Missionary Baptist Church was organized February 22, 1868, at the Dudley School House, by Rev. R. M. Jackson. Its first five members were Hamilton and Miranda Bennett, James and Eliza Rouse and H. C. T. Newman. About 1875 the society built a nice brick building on the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 12-12-10, where it continues to exist, a flourishing church, with a membership of one hundred and thirty-five. Its present pastor is Rev. F. M. Tate.

The Providence Separate Baptist Church, located in the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 16-12-10, was organized in 1880 by Rev. Alexander Black, with ten members. It held services in the little brick school house until 1886, when a comfortable frame building was erected, in which regular services were held until the close of 1904. The church has about ninety communicants, and its last pastor was Rev. Mr. Jarvis.

New Hope United Brethren Church was organized in August, 1901, at the Lafferty School House, with a membership of sixty, by Rev. Z.

H. Byard, who was its first pastor. In 1903 they erected a good-sized frame church near the northwest corner of Section 4-12-10. The minister in charge of the church at present is Rev. L. E. Miller, and the church now has about seventy members.

The Christian Church located at Hitesville was organized about 1835, and about the same time a Presbyterian Church was organized there by Rev. John Steele. This latter organization put up a building which was done mainly at the expense of James Hite. As the church did not thrive, it was soon abandoned and the building converted into a dwelling.

The Christian Church, however, had more adherents there and, about 1840, erected a building and began to grow. An early Elder was Edward Pinnell, and C. L. Duncan, Aden Wiley and Nicholas Wiley were deacons. Edward Pinnell and Thomas Hess preached at first, and later came P. K. Honn and C. L. Duncan as ministers. The church had grown to a membership of 227 by 1856 and then the village began to decline and, although a new building was put up in 1865, the church had grown smaller and the decline continued until the building is now seldom occupied and no regular pastor has been there for some years.

A church, which probably in its day had as wide an influence as any in the township, was what was known as the New Salem Cumberland Presbyterian. A paper, dated May 30, 1842, was circulated and signed by thirty-eight residents of the central portion of what is now Ashmore Township, which read as follows:

"We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, being well pleased with the doctrines and discipline of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, do hereby agree to associate as members in the capacity of a society to be known by the name of the New Salem Society of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of the United States of America."

An organization was effected at the residence of pioneer William Austin, who lived upon the site of the present village of Ashmore, and a school house near there was used as a meeting place. William Austin, John Mitchell and Alexander Montgomery were the first elders. The records do not mention the names of its ministers until 1852, when, in speaking of a meeting held in April of that year, Revs. Isaac Hill, Robert Hill and John W. Woods are mentioned as being present.

It is said that a log building was erected at what was known as the "Gum Spring," one mile south of the present village, where meetings were held until about 1857-58, when a frame building was erected at St. Omer and the church moved to that place. This Gum Spring meeting house was put up by settlers of various beliefs and was open to all denominations.

At St. Omer many successful meetings were held and the church for a time was very prosperous. In 1885, after a long period of quiescence, a revival occurred, and it appeared as though the society would take on a new lease of life, but it was not to be. The church continued in name but without activity until May 1, 1888, when the last elders who had been elected—viz.: J. W. Bitner, M. W. Barnes and P. R. Barnes—resigned, as did also Deacons W. E. Prather and W. E. Barnes. At the same time all were again elected to the same offices, except that J. O. Thomas was made Deacon in place of W. E. Barnes. From that date the name New Salem was abandoned and the church was known thereafter as the St. Omer Cumberland Presbyterian Church. Rev. L. D. Hendricks was employed as pastor, and the records from that time were kept up with regularity. In 1904 the building was repaired and put in good condition and the church seems active and prosperous. The present pastor is Rev. Jonathan Williams.

Schools.—The first regular public school in the village of Ashmore was taught in the frame building erected in the later 'fifties and used for both school and church purposes. In 1869 the present Ashmore school district was organized and there are six members of the School Board, two of whom are elected every three years. The first teacher in the new district was W. C. Kimball. There are now four teachers employed, those for the last term being W. P. Flaherty, Principal; Miss Lou Lafferty, Grammar, grade; Miss Ethel Marlowe, Intermediate grade, and Miss Carrie Weatherly, Junior grade. The district owns a commodious brick building of four rooms, erected in 1873, and has a school library. The present Board consists of R. V. Galbreath, President; G. M. Kincaid, Clerk; E. G. Pollard, A. N. Hogue, J. C. Colson and William Prather.

In the later 'thirties a hewed log school building was put up near the present St. Omer School, and in that James Wiggins taught a subscription school, at $2.50 per quarter for each pupil. He was followed by Pleasant Combs. Out of that grew the present public school known as St. Omer, No. 15. A frame building was erected there and used until it burned down about 1889-90, when the present brick structure was erected close to the northeast corner of Section 24-13-10. The teacher there for the last session was Miss Blanche Ford.

The Graham School (No. 19) has a frame building on the northwest part of the southeast quarter of Section 35-13-10, in which the last term was taught by C. M. Heinline.

The Miller School (No. 20) has a frame building, put up about 1892, in the northwest part of Section 33-13-10. The last teacher there was Finis Gammill.

Boneste School (No. 14) has a frame house in the southeast part of Section 23-13-10, in which Mrs. May Flagerty taught the last session.

Dudley School (No. 24) has a frame structure put up about 1880, in the northwest part of Section 12-13-10, and the last term there was taught by Miss Emma Wilson.

The Olmsted School (No. 23) has a frame building erected about 1880. It is located near the southeast corner of Section 11-12-10, and its last teacher was Alice L. James.

The Little Brick School (No. 22) is located in the southeast part of the southwest quarter of Section 16-12-10.

About 1857 a very small brick school house was put up there, which later was made somewhat larger and served until 1894, when it was torn down and the present brick building erected in its place. This is one of the largest districts, in territory, in the county. The last teacher was T. R. Reed.

The Lafferty School (No. 21) has a frame building in the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of Section 4-12-10. Its last teacher was John Winkleblack.

Greenwood School (No. 25) is in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 8-12-14, and C. C. Woodrum taught its last term.

The Childress School (No. 16) is near the northeast corner of Section 19-13-14, and has a good frame building. Its last term was taught by Carl Lane.

The Liberty School (No. 147) has a frame building near the southeast corner of Section 16-13-14, where the last term was taught by J. B. Lane.

The College School (No. 17) has a frame building near the northwest corner of Section 33-13-14. Its last session was taught by James E. Neal.

About 1900 a tragedy occurred there which saddened the whole community. Some of the small boys were playing "Indian" and built a wigwam of fence rails, covered with long grass. The grass became dry and, while a number of children were inside, it caught fire by some means and many of them were badly burned. One of the boys died as the result of the injuries there received.

CHARLESTON TOWNSHIP.

The territory comprising Charleston Township lies a little southeast of the center of the county, and is bounded on the north by Seven Hickory and Morgan Townships; on the east by the Embarras River; on the south by Pleasant Grove, and on the west by La Fayette. It contains a few sections more than the regular congressional township. The surface is generally undulating, with portions rather level except along the banks of the Embarras River, where it is broken and hilly. The Embarras River, Kickapoo, Riley and Cossell creeks and tributaries afford excellent drainage. The soil is of the very best quality, especially in the valleys and on the northern tier of sections, which are upon the eastern boundary of the Grand Prairie. There can be no better farming country anywhere.

Early Settlements.—The early history of Charleston Township, like that of Coles County in general, if properly written, would form a picture upon which the youth of to-day might gaze with profit, and turn to again and again for inspiration and strength to enable them to perform well the apparently less arduous duty devolving upon them. We say less arduous; but of that we are not so certain, for with increased facilities and increased privileges come increased responsibilities. The fierce competition in the business world of to-day calls for strong men. The struggle may not involve an equal expenditure of muscle; may not require as much exposure to heat and cold as confronted those early pioneers who felled the forests, drained the prairies and made possible the more comfortable life we now live. But the story of how well they did their work, if properly studied, should strengthen the nerve and serve as an incentive to patient effort and prove a source of stronger faith. If so studied there would be fewer failures, and certainly a less number of suicides; but we have not the space in which to draw that picture, much less the skill to paint it in words. Those early pioneers were grand old men and well deserve a place in our history. The names of settlers prior to the year 1840, and the references to those early settlements made in the general County History, must in the main suffice, as allusion to them all here would be largely a repetition.

One of the earliest permanent settlements in the township was what is still known as the "Doty Settlement." Seth H. Bates, who had made a transient stop in what is now the town of Charleston, then took up his permanent abode on the Kickapoo in La Fayette. The Dotys went to La Fayette temporarily, and then later started the settlement referred to. Samuel Doty early moved to Texas, and Levi and James died at their homes in that settlement, after living to an advanced age, leaving behind them numerous descendants who still reside among us. Levi lived to be nearly ninety-one years old. His grandson, C. R. Doty, says that the removal from Crawford County here was made in a "home-made" wagon, the wheels of which consisted of sections of a large tree, into which holes were made for the axle.

The Le Baron History says that Enoch Glasco settled just north of Charleston in the fall of 1826. That statement has been disputed by some, who claim that he came two or three years later and settled west of town. Mr. Glasco's daughter, Mrs. Abner Brown, says her father came to that vicinity about 1829-30, which is no doubt correct. James Y. Brown undoubtedly settled north of town in (or about) 1831.

Some of the Parker family, who had settled on the Ambraw River, took up land and moved to this township probably a little earlier. They settled northeast of Charleston in or near what is now Jacob Anderson's Addition, and some of the land north of the railroad still belongs to Parker descendants. James Riley started one of the earliest settlements in the west part of the township, and for him was named Riley Creek. The settlement was made permanent by his successor there, John Veach. The Cossells were a little later in the west part of the township and for them Cossell Creek was named. Arick A. Sutherland located very early upon the east side of the township where the Olivers later lived, and he helped clear the land which is the present business center of Charleston. He was the father of A. H. Sutherland, now of Mattoon, and one of his daughters married Laban Burr, one of the early bachelor settlers of Ashmore Township, while another married John T. Olmsted, a prominent early settler of the same town. The Eastins were early settlers in the west part. John M. Eastin was a man of considerable ability mentally, and if it had not been for an ineradicable disposition to gamble, he would have been a useful citizen and a leader in the community. He is said to have won and lost several fortunes before he died, well along in years, at Charleston.

So much for some of the first settlements. They were all in the timber, and there cabins were erected, fences built, land cleared, and other settlers came to the same neighborhood, and soon there were several growing settlements in the township.

First Events.—The first apple orchard is said to have been set out about 1830 by Benjamin Parker. The first school house was built about a mile north of Charleston, perhaps about 1828 to 1830, and one John McCombs is named as the first teacher. No other information about him besides his name remains to us. Pioneer William Collom had a brother who was also an early teacher in the township. We have been unable to get any further information concerning him.

Pioneer Isaac Odell, who was on his way to the Muddy Point neighborhood in 1830 to make his settlement there, had a son, George W., born while he was in the limits of this township, who is thought to have been the first white child born here.

Old settlers remember no earlier wedding in the town than that of Dr. Aaron Ferguson to a daughter of Charles Morton, which was in the early 'thirties.

The first church building in the town was erected inside the village of Charleston, and will be spoken of in that connection. There are now four religious societies which assemble regularly for worship in houses of their own outside the limits of the city of Charleston. The Salem Methodist Episcopal Church, about four miles northwest of the city, was organized about 1857, by Conrad Burgner, John W. Reat and others. It is a strong country congregation, and for many years held services in a neat frame building which it had erected, but in 1855 put up the present substantial brick building. Rev. Frank Harry is now the pastor. A branch of the Baptist Church, known as "The Church of God," or "Winebrethrenians," was organized in the home of John P. Hall, May 9, 1874, by Rev. George Sands. In 1876, the society built a nice frame church on the corner of R. P. Hackett's farm on ground donated by him, about a mile east of the Charleston city limits. The Separate Baptists have a church located about three miles southeast of Charleston. It was organized in the early 'sixties Rev. Murry Stone is pastor at this time. The "United Brethren in Christ" have a church about three miles southeast of the city. This society was organized about thirty-five years ago.

Stock Growing—Horticulture.—Charleston Township has kept pace with the rest of the county in the matter of improving the quality of its live stock. Richard Stoddert was probably the pioneer in bringing in imported draft horses. W. A. Whittemore, in the seventies and eighties, kept several stallions of improved breeds, and later Dr. Andrew Moore was a breeder of improved stock. Robert L. Reat, in the western part of the township, raised thoroughbred Hereford cattle for several years. John M. Doty, son of the pioneer, Levi Doty, has taken several premiums for fine cattle, hogs and sheep, not only at the county fairs, but at the State Fair also. R. A. Alexander and S. M. Shepard started the breeding of Poland-China hogs upon a farm south of the city of Charleston in the early 'seventies, and for several years the firm of Shepard & Alexander shipped the product of their breeding farm to every part of the United States, receiving often very high prices for especially superior specimens of that famous breed.

A fruit and plant nursery was started in the 'sixties in the southwest part of the city of Charleston, and carried on for several years through successive changes of ownership, which furnished the stock for many orchards in the county and vicinity.

Railroads.—Two trunk line railroads traverse the township—the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, or "Big Four," extending from east to west, and the Toledo, St. Louis & Western, or "Clover Leaf," from northeast to southwest. The history of the first named road has been given in the general county history and the latter will be spoken of in connection with the city of Charleston.

Town Supervisors.—The first Supervisor of Charleston Township was Richard Stoddert, and the town has been represented since upon the County Board by the following members: Jacob K. Decker, 1865; James A. Connolly, 1866; C. C. Starkweather, 1867; James R. Cunningham, 1868-70; E. B. Buck, 1871-76; John Monroe, 1877; E. B. Buck, 1888-89; W. R. Patton, 1880-82; A. J. Fryer, 1883-84; J. K. Rardin, 1885-86; Thomas Stoddert, 1888; H. H. Fuller, 1889; I. J. Monfort, 1890-91; J. B. Briscoe, 1892; Jas. H. McClelland, 1894-96; J. K. Rardin, 1897-99; T. T. Shoemaker, 1901-02; Robert Wilton, 1903-05.

THE CITY OF CHARLESTON.

Charleston, the only city or village in the township, embraces within its corporate limits an area equal to three sections, being two miles long from east to west and one and one-half miles wide from north to south, although a considerable portion of this territory is still used as farm land. The original town (or village corporation) embraced the west half of the southwest quarter of Section 11-12-9 east, and on this tract is located the court house, public square and business district. It was originally surveyed by Thomas Sconce, the first County Surveyor. It was resurveyed in June, 1839, by Joseph Fowler, and in this survey is noted the addition of Nathaniel Parker, consisting of the east half of the southwest quarter of Section ten (10). Since that time there have been between fifty and seventy-five additions and sub-divisions. It was laid out by William Bowen, of Vermilion County; Jesse Essarey, of Clark County, and Joshua Barber, of Crawford County, who were appointed by the State Legislature for the purpose of establishing the seat of justice of the county. In naming the place they added the last syllable to Charles, making the name "Charleston." This was done in honor of Charles Morton, who had donated twenty acres for town purposes.

The first house within the corporate limits of Charleston was a log cabin built by William Collom, and this served the purpose of a tavern in those days, though it consisted of but one room. The first brick residence was put up by Col. H. R. Norfolk. It was a two-story structure and stood on the northwest corner of Sixth and Van Buren streets. James Wiley was the contractor and superintended the construction. This building was torn down a few years ago to give place to a large stone-front brick building, which is occupied now in part as a steam laundry and in part by the Charleston Monument Company. Charles Morton kept the first store in the village, and he was also the first Postmaster, the postoffice being established in 1831. The second store was opened by Baker & Norfolk. In addition to these evidences of a future metropolis, Charleston had at this time a blacksmith shop, kept by Owens & Harmon; a tan-yard, by David Easton; later came a carding mill, by John Kennedy; two shoe shops, by Albert Compton and a man named Hanks, respectively. Charles Morton's horse-mill for grinding grain was in the village limits. Byrd Monroe built a steam flour-mill at an early date and ran it for a number of years, when it burned down. This was rebuilt, changed hands several times, again burned down and again rebuilt much larger, and later still further enlarged and again burned to the ground.

Coles County Court House.—Previous court houses having been mentioned fully in the county history, I will allude only to the present court house. This structure is one of the finest in the State outside of the city of Chicago. It is built of brown stone from the Oliver quarries on the Embarras River. (The stone from these quarries was awarded the first premium, at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, in 1904.) That used for trimming is known as the Bedford (Ind.) stone. The dimensions of the building are 132 by 128 feet. It is as nearly fire-proof as it is possible for such a building to be made. It is three stories in height, with a well lighted basement under the whole structure. The floors in the corridors are of tile, and those in court rooms and offices are of hardwood laid in concrete. The wainscoting in the corridors are of polished granite. It is steam-heated and wired for electric lighting throughout every apartment. Standing out by itself in the center of the public square, surrounded with a beautiful green lawn—and between this and the paved streets a nice concrete sidewalk—the whole presents a splendid appearance and attracts the attention of strangers who visit the city.

The jail and Sheriff's residence are distant about one block, and are connected by a tunnel. The heating plant for both these buildings and the court house is on the northeast corner of the lot on which the latter stands.

Manufactures.—Charleston cannot be said, at present, to be a manufacturing city, though, from time to time, it has done its full share in that line as compared with neighboring cities. The principal manufacturing establishment at present in the city is the Merkle-Wiley Broom Company's plant for the wholesale manufacture of brooms. This establishment, owned principally by its present manager, Clifford Wiley, began its career with the firm name of Wiley & Traver in 1868, in the rear of their grocery, then located on the south side of the public square. This firm consisted of Leroy Wiley and R. A. Traver. The business passed from time to time into other hands and under other management, until finally the "Charleston Broom Company" was organized, when it passed into the hands of the present owners. This is a steam-power plant and furnishes its own heat, power and electric light. It has a capacity of four thousand brooms a day, and gives employment to from sixty to ninety people when running with full force. Its goods are sold throughout the Union. As Charleston is in the greatest broom-corn growing section of the country, this establishment will probably grow still more rapidly in importance and the amount of its product in the future.

The tile factory, owned by S. H. Record, has been in operation for the past twenty-eight years, has always done a good business, and has furnished tile to drain out the rich prairie land to the north of the city. It has been recently equipped with new and improved machinery preparatory for an increased business.

A creamery and a canning factory were started a few years ago by the enterprise of the business men of the city, and, not proving as profitable as was hoped, has been discontinued and the buildings turned to other uses.

The pork-packing business in the early 'seventies reached large proportions, but years ago succumbed to the larger establishments at Chicago and other commercial centers. Plover manufactories arose and flourished for a time and followed in the same wake.

Charleston at one time had two of the largest and finest equipped flour-mills in Central Illinois, but the farmers of Coles and adjoining counties, having discovered that wheat growing was less profitable than that of other crops, ceased to furnish sufficient grain to enable the owners to carry on their business successfully. These have both ceased operations. The larger mill was burned down about 1885, and the other has more recently been dismantled and the machinery shipped to other points.

The woolen mills, so long conducted by Henry and Guenther Weiss and other proprietors, after being three times almost entirely destroyed by fire, ceased to be operated, and the buildings were afterwards put in repair for use as the mounting department for the Charleston Stove Works. The stove foundry started by William and Alexander Bain, as early as 1857, was quite a successful venture and grew into extensive proportions. Both of the Bains are now dead. This establishment passed into the hands of a corporation, and was managed for about three years by Messrs. Wilcox, Craig and Woods, but was burned down in 1891. New brick buildings, well adapted for the purpose, were soon after erected, and the business again rapidly grew. The financial panic of 1893 caused the company to fail. The business was later resumed by J. W. Ramsey, who prosecuted it successfully for a few years under the name of the "Charleston Foundry Company," but recently removed the machinery to Mattoon, where the business is still carried on under the same name.

The Charleston Monument Company was organized in 1893. It has a finely equipped plant, with its own power and the latest and most approved machinery for sawing, dressing and polishing marble and granite. The company ship their material in the rough and manufacture it from the start. They employ about twenty hands. The proprietors are Alexander Briggs and Robert Wilton.

Village and City Organization.—Charleston was organized as a village in 1853, Nathan Elington becoming the first President of the Village Board. In 1865 the town was incorporated as a city, with L. P. Tomlin as its first Mayor, and the old Board of Trustees acting as Aldermen. The present city officers are: C. C. Digby, Mayor; — James, Clerk; Otis Goodman, Treasurer; Harry Cofer, City Attorney, and Warren Pigg, Chief of Police. The city is divided into five wards, and the legislative department is vested in its ten aldermen, two from each ward.

The city owns its water works, which were built in 1875. The water is pumped from the Embarras River. This improvement involved an expenditure at the outset of $20,000, but the additions and repairs have probably doubled the first cost. The water-works, with a thoroughly equipped paid fire department, afford excellent fire protection. Two well trained horses and a competent driver are always in readiness to carry the hose and fire-ladders to any part of the city when needed.

Law and Medical Professions.—The lawyers of Charleston have always stood high in their profession. Usher F. Linder, Thomas A. Marshall, O. B. Ficklin and J. A. Connolly, in the past, and H. A. Neal, J. H. Marshall and F. K. Dunn, of the present, are named without disparagement to others, all of whom have filled responsible positions in the gift of their fellow citizens.

The medical profession has always been well represented. The earliest physicians have been named heretofore, and from about 1867 to 1872, Dr. H. R. Allen had a surgical institute here which brought the afflicted and deformed patients from all over the United States for treatment. Dr. Samuel Van Meter conducted an infirmary from about 1868 to 1880, which also brought here thousands of patients from abroad. The "Montgomery Sanatorium," located on the hill at 637 Division Street, south of the Town Branch, was opened in February, 1900, and is conducted under the proprietorship of Drs. J. T. Montgomery and R. H. Craig.

Railroads.—Charleston, at the time of its change of organization from a village to a city, was still a very small place, but about this time the Terre Haute & Alton Railroad was finished as far west as Mattoon. The growth in wealth and commercial importance may be said to have had its commencement with that important event. Soon after this the enterprising citizens of the city began to see the importance of competition in railroad transportation, but this did not result in an actual move in that direction until 1871, when by a vote of the people the Supervisor was authorized to issue bonds in the amount of one hundred thousand dollars, the proceeds thereof to be used in the aid of the Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes Railroad Company. These were issued in denominations of $1,000 each, and eight bonds were sold and consumed without accomplishing more than some grading northward, when it was concluded by the Charleston interest that a road to Danville would be more desirable, and operations ceased for a time. In the winter of 1879 and 1880, the agitation assumed a still more definite form. The Tuscola, Charleston & Vincennes Railroad Company had been kept alive, and although the remaining bonds had been burned by E. B. Buck, then Supervisor of the township, the people resolved to reissue them. It became known to those most interested that a narrow-gauge railroad was being constructed southwestward from Toledo, Ohio, through Delphos, Ohio; Decatur, Bluffton and Marion, Indiana, and it was proposed eventually to go through Illinois to St. Louis, Mo. Meetings were therefore held, and Hon. James A. Connolly and Eli Wiley were sent to Delphos and Toledo to confer with the promoters of this enterprise, and induce them to build by way of Charleston. Other meetings followed at which W. J. Craig, of Bluffton, Ind., the President of the new road, was present, and talked up the movement. The result was (W. R. Patton having been elected Supervisor the following April) that new bonds were printed and signed by him, a construction company was formed, with James A. Connolly President, Eli Wiley and James Skidmore Vice-Presidents, and R. S. Hodgen Secretary and Superintendent of Construction. Work was immediately commenced and a road was built during the summer as far north as Oakland. This was paid for with the proceeds of the $92,000 worth of bonds and the money of the construction company. This piece of road afterwards passed into the hands of the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City (now the Toledo, St. Louis & Western) Railroad Company, and the work was pushed forward until it reached the Mississippi River. The road changed hands and underwent reorganization in 1885, soon after was reconstructed throughout its entire length as a standard gauge line. Other changes in ownership and management have since taken place. Charleston is a division center and has a repair shop giving employment to a large number of men. Both the "Big Four" (as the old Terre Haute & Alton is now called) and the "Clover Leaf," as the new road is familiarly named, have splendid station houses here with concrete platforms and paved streets surrounding them, making a very fine appearance, with every convenience for the accommodation of the traveling public. Since the building of the railroad through from Toledo, Ohio, to St. Louis, the shipment of grain, live stock and broom-corn has grown to vastly greater importance. Alexander Richter and G. B. Griffin have each large grain elevators, and large broom-corn warehouses now border the side-tracks of these roads.

Electric Lighting, Railroads and Telephones.—In the spring of 1889 the City Council contracted with the Thompson-Houston Electric Company, of Chicago, to furnish lights to the streets of the city, and work was at once commenced in building a power-house, erecting poles, stretching wires and placing lamps in position. By October 17th of the same year, the light was turned on and forty arc-lights beamed out with all their brightness upon the streets that had hitherto been very dark during the night, except when the moon came to our aid. This plant passed into the possession of a joint stock company in 1891, and under the management of A. M. Searles, F. A. Brooks and J. C. Brooks, who pushed the business successfully and soon began giving day service, was not only furnishing light to the business houses and dwellings in all parts of the city, but was furnishing power for running machinery, the latter in 1895. In 1902 the company bought out the Charleston Gas Company's plant, which had been established a short time previous, and in the following year also bought the ice-plant which had been in operation for a number of years. The company has now substantial brick buildings for all three purposes, with a fine office building in close proximity, and is enjoying a prosperous business. They also furnish steam heat for many of the business houses and dwellings of the city. The present officers are N. Elsey, President; G. C. Campbell, Secretary and Treasurer, and E. C. Jenks, Manager. The corporation is styled the "Charleston Gas & Electric Company."

The Charleston Telephone & Electric Company, under the management of Frank Brooks, commenced business in August, 1896. Its wires extend to every part of the city. It gives service both night and day, and is extensively used by all classes. The company is at the present time establishing a line through Hut-ton Township as far as Salisbury. The company owns its office building, which is centrally located. The long-distance lines have a central office in the same building, and there are also a number of other lines permeating the whole country, so that a large portion of the farmers of the county can transact business or converse with their friends in the city.

Mercantile and Financial.—Charleston being surrounded by a prosperous farming community, has always been a good field for the retail merchant in all departments of trade, and has many very fine business houses. In this respect it compares well with many larger cities.

The city has three strong and well managed banking houses. The first institution of this kind (and the first in the county) was established in 1853 by F. P. James & Co., of Wall street, New York, and did business under the name of "Farmers' and Traders' Bank." Thomas A. Marshall was made its cashier and manager. It issued circulating notes based on bonds of Virginia and Missouri. Mr. Marshall later bought out the New York parties and became President, with John W. True Cashier, who was soon succeeded in that office by W. E. McCrory. The bank suspended about 1860, as did the State banks generally. Depositors were all paid, Mr. Marshall and Mr. McCrory pledging some of their own property to accomplish that result. Marshall and McCrory then started a private bank, which continued a short time. During the Civil War the dry goods firm of Wilson Brothers and the firm of Morton & Clement accepted deposits and transacted, in a small way, a banking business.

The First National Bank of Charleston was organized and commenced doing business as early as January 19, 1865, with Charles Morton as President, and has continued a prosperous institution ever since. In November, 1868, Thomas G. Chambers, John Monroe, Robert Parcels and Thomas B. Trower, who had, for a year or so, been doing a banking business under the name of the Coles County Bank, purchased enough of the stock of the First National to give them a controlling interest. This practically made one bank instead of two, for Mr. Chambers was at once made President and W. E. McCrory Cashier, and the Coles County Bank went out of business. The present officers are: W. E. McCrory, President; William Kenny, Cashier; George Heistand, Assistant Cashier, and Thomas G. Chambers, bookkeeper.

About 1868, or immediately after the Coles

County Bank discontinued business, I. H. Johnston, T. A. Marshall and J. W. True organized the City Bank, a private bank, which did a good business and continued until the organization of the Second National Bank, when it transferred its business to the latter.

The Second National Bank of Charleston was organized July 15, 1871, with a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. The first Board of Directors consisted of the following persons: Thomas A. Marshall, I. H. Johnston, John W. True, J. W. Ogden, George W. Parker, Samuel Van Meter, I. N. Craig, Thomas Stoddert, A. H. Prevo, William Chilton, A. N. Bain, H. M. Ashmore and Richard Roberts. John W. True was made President and Charles Clary was chosen Cashier. This institution has done a prosperous business from the start and has added largely to its working capital. The present officers are: I. H. Johnston, President; Felix Johnston, Cashier; E. H. Wiley, Vice-President, and I. H. Johnston, Jr., Teller and bookkeeper.

The Charleston State Bank was organized in June, 1892, with A. N. Bain President and Lucian Wheatley Cashier. This institution, springing into life just on the eve of the wild financial panic of 1893, when so many financial institutions were forced to close their doors to depositors, kept right on growing stronger from year to year. It is now one of the strong financial institutions of the county. The present officers are: Lucian Wheatley, President; John Glassco, Cashier; Frank Popham, Assistant Cashier, and George Davis, bookkeeper.

Charleston has three flourishing building and loan associations. The first to organize was the Homestead Loan, which sprang into existence in December, 1882. It has matured seventeen series and has helped establish industries as well as furnish homes to working men. The present officers are: W. E. McCrory, President; I. B. Mitchell, Vice-President; A. W. Sherer, Secretary; F. K. Dunn, Treasurer.

The Coles County Building and Loan Association was organized in 1884. It has matured twenty-five series. The stockholders are carrying 4,300 shares. The present officers are G. B. Griffin, President; H. H. Fuller, Vice-President; I. H. Johnston, Jr., Treasurer, and C. L. Lee, Secretary.

The Columbian Loan Association was organized in November, 1892. It has present assets of $134,378.52, and has matured seven series.

The present officers are: A. R. Abbott, President; Alexander Briggs, Vice-President; John Glasco, Secretary, and Lucian Wheatley, Treasurer.

Newspapers.—The first newspaper which got a permanent foothold in Charleston was issued in 1840 by William Harr and William Workman. Harr bought Workman's interest a short time afterward and continued with the paper until a short time after President Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, when he sold out to Eli Chittenden, who changed its name to the "Charleston Plaindealer." For a short time during this period George Harding was associated with Mr. Harr. Chittenden sold out after a short time to John S. Theaker, who in turn sold to Dunbar Brothers. Albert Dunbar died in 1875, when his brother, Lucian, became sole proprietor. Dunbar sold out in 1878 to M. A. McConnell & Co. The paper was again sold in 1888 to H. B. Glasco. "The Plaindealer," after a number of changes, passed into the hands of a joint stock company, was first merged with "The Scimitar," which was published for a short time by Uhler Brothers, and still later with the "Charleston Herald" in 1903, when the name was changed to "The Plaindealer-Herald." "The Plaindealer" has a finely equipped office, with a job department attached. The paper has been issued both daily and weekly for the past ten years. It is Republican in politics.

The present "Courier" also has a well-equipped office and is issued both daily and weekly. Its history dates back to 1857, when its publication was begun by George Harding under the name of the "Charleston Ledger." Harding sold to John M. Eastin in 1859. Eastin sold out later on to McHenry Brooks. Brooks sold to Shoaff & Underwood in 1867. The latter proprietors changed the name from "The Ledger" to "The Courier." Several changes in the proprietorship have taken place since that time. Major Miller, Buck & Underwood, E. B. Buck, Dunbar & Brown, Dunbar & Mason, G. E. Mason, Mason & Strode, C. D. Strode, Strode & Lee, and finally passing into the hands of C. L. Lee as sole proprietor, who has a well established business and a large patronage both as the publisher of a daily and weekly newspaper and job printer. "The Courier" is Democratic in politics.

"The Herald," which was successfully conducted for fifteen years under the management of John A. McConnell as a Republican newspaper, passed into the hands of a joint stock company, and was afterwards merged with "The Plaindealer" in May, 1903. "The Herald" was started by James K. Rardin in 1880, under the name of the "Saturday Evening Herald." Rardin sold to Joseph Perkins in 1887, who sold out to J. A. McConnell in February, 1888.

"The Daily News," started March 12, 1892, by J. K. Rardin and Joseph Perkins, is a later venture, and is now owned and managed by J. K. Rardin, and has a distinctive character of its own. It is Democratic, though decidedly independent in tone, its publisher being entirely untrammelled by party leaders. The office is equipped with a Mergenthaler type-setting machine and a very good job outfit. Altogether, Charleston is well represented by its newspapers.

Schools and Libraries.—Charleston has always taken high rank as a patronizer of schools. The public schools of this city have done a good work in keeping alive this spirit. In the Le Baron History of 1879 the public school buildings were described as presenting a fine and imposing appearance at that time. These have all been replaced by very much larger and finer structures, and one has been added to the number. The Eastern School was erected in 1889, the Western two years later. On the night of December 23, 1898, the Central, or "College" Building, as it was called, was burned down. This was replaced by a very much larger and finer building at a cost of about $40,000. Two years previous to the burning of the Central building, by a vote of the people, an additional building was authorized, and the Southern was erected.

The enrollment for 1904 is as follows: Central School, 184; Eastern, 240; Western, 248; Southern, 96; High School, 134—total, 908. The present corps of teachers is composed as follows: Dewitt Elwood, Superintendent; Hattie H. Dowyer, Supervisor of drawing and music. High School, Central Building—Fred J. Jeffrey, Principal, Chemistry and Algebra; Helena A. Miller, Grammar and Latin; Belle Gillespie, English; Grace Kummer, Mathematics; W. H. Cunningham, History; Edward C. Converse, Physics and Biology. Grades, Central Building—May Patton, Principal; Orra E. Neal, Jennie Popham, Ella Miles, Mrs. Sarah

Eastern Illinois Normal School.—The Legislature of Illinois made appropriations for the establishment of State Normal Schools, one in the northern part of the State and one in the east central, to be located as afterwards determined by the Trustees to be appointed by the Governor. The statute provided that the city or town securing the location of either of these schools had to donate forty acres of ground for that purpose. A further consideration was named. Other conditions being equal, it should go to the city contributing the greatest financial aid toward the erection of the necessary buildings. Several cities contested for the prize. Soon after the Legislature took action upon the subject, nearly every city within the limits of the district in which this school was to be established, commenced raising money and doing all else in their power to have the school come their way. Meetings were held in Charleston to awaken an interest in our people, and it was soon discovered that, if the city should not prove successful, it would not be the fault of its citizens. The forty-acre tract could be secured at several eligible points within the corporation limits or immediately adjoining. Almost any necessary amount of money could easily enough be raised, but still the location was in doubt. It all depended upon the decision of the five Trustees—F. M. Youngblood, of Carbondale; M. J. Walsh, of East St. Louis; A. J. Barr, of Bloomington; C. L. Pleasants, of El Paso; M. P. Rice, of Lewistown, and S. M. Inglis, State Superintendent of Schools. After visits by these officers to the several cities, they finally met in September in Springfield to determine the question by vote. On the afternoon of September 7, 1895, the matter was ended by the selection of Charleston for the location. This was the signal for a general rejoicing in the city, and every tin horn and other machine for making a noise was brought into requisition and pandemonium reigned until a late hour that night.

After some delay the forty-acre lot just south of the central portion of the city was selected for the grounds and buildings. After considerable delay in securing plans and specifications for the building, a contract was entered into, with Angus & Gindele, of Chicago, for putting up the walls and enclosing them with a roof for $89,700. The main building is 330 feet from east to west, with a large assembly room extending southward from the center of the building. The Chicago firm failed before their contract was completed, and Alexander Briggs, of Charleston, was employed, bringing the work to a conclusion. The entire cost of the building, as it now stands, was $225,000. The grounds surrounding the building have been greatly beautified, having been nicely graded and set in blue grass, with smooth driveways and concrete walks interspersed with flower gardens extending almost all over the forty acres. In addition to these, a fine green house or conservatory has been built, which adds to the attractions of the naturally beautiful surroundings.

The first term of school was opened September 11, 1899, under the direction of the following Board of Trustees: L. P. Wolf, President; H. A. Neal, Secretary; Hon. Alfred Bayless, Superintendent of Public Instruction (ex-officio); W. H. Hamline, W. L. Kester and F. M. Youngblood. The faculty was as follows: Livingston C. Lord, President, Physiology and School Management; W. M. Evans, English; John Paul Goode, History and Geography; Henry Johnson, Sociology and Political Economy; Louisa B. Inglis, History; Otis W. Caldwell, Biological Science; E. H. Taylor, Mathematics; Anna Piper, Drawing; James Henry Brownlee, Reading; Luther E. Baird, Assistant in English; Francis G. Blair, Supervisor of Training Department; Frederick Koch, Music; Ellen A. Ford, Latin and Grammar; Bertha L. Hamlin, Critic Teacher in Grammar School; Edna T. Cook, Critic Teacher in Grammar School; Alice B. Cunningham, Critic Teacher in Primary School; Charlotte May Slocum, Critic Teacher in Primary School.

The school has been growing in influence, as shown by the steady increase of the enrollment from year to year. The enrollment at the close of the first year was 397. At the close of 1903 it had grown to 709. The graduating class of 1900 numbered four. There were eleven graduates in 1901, thirteen in 1902, twenty-five in 1903 and twenty-six in 1904.

The library occupies two spacious, well-lighted rooms in the southwest corner of the ground-floor of the building. The reading room contains the reference books and is supplied with a large number of periodicals, in which is found the best current thought in science, geography, history, sociology, general and educational literature.

The faculty is as follows: Livingston C. Lord, President; W. M. Evans, Henry Johnson, Otis W. Caldwell, E. H. Taylor, Anna Piper, Francis G. Blair, Frederick Koch, Ellen A. Ford, Katherine Gill, Thomas H. Briggs, Eva M. Russell, Thomas L. Hankinson, Caroline A. Forbes, Annie L. Waller, Beatrice Pickett, Albert B. Crowe, Alice L. Pratt, Charlotte Kinge, Edna J. Cook, Sadie Harmon, Clara M. Snell, Charlotte M. Slocum. Miss Wetmore died December 30, 1903, and Prof. Evans in December, 1904.

City and Rural Free Delivery.—City free delivery was established at the Charleston Post-office November 15, 1898, and rural free delivery was started from this office October 1, 1900, and since then some four additional rural routes have been established to accommodate the country round about. The total pay roll of the Charleston office is nearly $15,000 per annum.

Charleston Public Library.—Several attempts have been made to maintain public libraries in Charleston dependent upon voluntary contributions and not supported by taxation. In each of these quite good libraries upon a small scale were secured, but experience has demonstrated that such libraries cannot be maintained unless supported by a regular income.

On June 11, 1896, an ordinance was passed creating the Charleston Public Library, and Mayor Neal appointed the following named persons Directors of said Library: Dr. J. T. Montgomery, F. K. Dunn, W. M. Briggs, John Van Meter, Mrs. W. K. Highland, Mrs. Aline Moore and Charles L. Lee. Three hundred dollars was appropriated in aid of the enterprise. In the spring of 1897, three hundred dollars more was appropriated, but the Board deemed it unwise to attempt to purchase books or employ a librarian until larger appropriations were made. The Council in 1898 omitted to make any appropriation, but on May 18, 1899, an ordinance was passed to annually levy the two-mill tax to support the public library and under this an appropriation of one thousand dollars was made, and Miss Ella Guiney, John Van Meter and H. A. Neal were appointed Directors in place of Mrs. W. R. Highland, John Van Meter and Dr. J. T. Montgomery, whose terms expired. Six hundred dollars was invested in books, and Mrs. Lizzie Purtilt was elected Librarian. The library was opened to the public, November 4, 1899.

On October 30, 1901, the news came that Andrew Carnegie would donate $15,000 toward the erection of a suitable library building, on the usual conditions for such donations. These terms were accepted, grounds were purchased, a fine stone building was erected, furniture provided, and on January 15, 1904, the new building was thrown open to the public.

Church History.—The first religious services held in Charleston were by the Primitive Baptists. They pre-empted the field, and for a while outnumbered all other denominations. They had a church and were served, as pastors and preachers, by the Parkers and Rev. Richard Newport. They have had no church for many years, and the old adherents of that particular denomination are about all deceased.

A society of the Old School Presbyterians was organized in Charleston, June 13, 1835, by Rev. John McDonald and John Montgomery with thirteen members. Rev. John McDonald served as pastor until 1843. The society has grown steadily until the present time. Rev. C. L. Overstreet, the present pastor, reports four hundred and forty-five communicants. The first church edifice was commenced in 1842 and finished in 1845. This was a frame structure and cost $1,000. The present building was commenced in 1857 and finished in the following summer. It is a substantial brick building and cost originally $9,000. Additions and improvements at various times have been made, and the building as it now stands could not be erected and finished in present style at double the original cost. The Sunday School and Young Peoples' Christian Endeavor Society, connected with the church, are both strong and flourishing.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1837. Mrs. Parthena Lightfoot and James Y. Brown were among the first Methodists in the village. They united with the remnant of a society which had been organized east of the new village and gave a start to the present Methodist Church of Charleston. The first house of worship was erected on the corner of Tenth and Van Buren Streets. It was a frame structure but very frail. After having been used two years it was torn down to give place for a more permanent building. In 1857 the congregation had grown to such an extent that a still more commodious building became a necessity, and a large two-story brick building was erected on the corner of Monroe and Ninth streets. The lot was donated for this purpose by Dr. and Mrs. Trower. This served the purpose of the congregation until the spring of 1895, when it, in turn, was torn down and in its stead a fine, large stone building was erected at a cost of twenty-five thousand dollars. The dedication services took place on December 22 of the same year, conducted by Bishop Joice. The building is well arranged for large audiences on special occasions, as the partition separating the main audience room and Sunday School apartment can be removed and the whole made to appear as one room. The membership has reached five hundred and fifty. Rev. Theodore Kemp is the present pastor.

The Christian Church, though a very strong organization, was not organized until 1842, when this was done through the labors of Elder Samuel Peppers. The first house of worship was a brick structure built in 1846-47. This was sold a few years later to the Catholic congregation, and a larger building was erected on the corner of Sixth and Van Buren streets. This in turn was sold to the Episcopal Church in 1895, when, under the leadership of Rev. J. W. Vawter, the congregation began the erection of their present very fine stone edifice on the corner of Jackson and Fifth streets. The walls are built of brown sandstone from the Oliver quarries on the banks of the Embarras River, and trimmed with a white stone from the Bedford (Ind.) quarries. The church today, under the leadership of the present pastor, Rev. W. F. Shaw, reports a membership of eight hundred.

The Missionary Baptists have a good organization and a very neat frame church on the corner of Monroe and Fourth streets. The first church was erected here about 1859. The congregation is without a pastor at the present time, though it has been served by a number of able ministers, the last of whom was Rev. C. E.

Larue. The Sunday School is maintained regularly and is doing a good work.

The Universalists organized here in 1868 under the leadership of a Rev. Mr. Curry, and built a nice brick church in 1870. The society grew for a time, but death and removals so reduced their numbers that, in 1884, they ceased to hold religious services in their building, which has since been put to other uses.

Through the labors of four young women, known as the "Pentecost Band," a religious organization was formed here in 1889 and 1890, which resulted in the building of a small frame church at the junction of Madison, Third and State streets. This was dedicated to the worship of God by the Free Methodists. The organization is still kept up, though it has not gained much in numbers in recent years.

The South Charleston Christian Church has a small congregation and a small frame building of their own in the southwest quarter of the city, in which services are held regularly, though they do not maintain a regular pastorate.

The history of the St. Charles Catholic Church of Charleston dates back to the year 1854, when Rev. Thomas Ryan, then of North Arm, Edgar County, ministered to the spiritual wants of the Catholics of Charleston. Rev. Dennis Tierney became the first resident rector in 1865. About that time the congregation purchased an edifice, which had been in use by the Christian Church. This was destroyed by a severe storm in 1868. Another building was erected on the same lot and dedicated by Bishop Baltis in 1872. A fine brick church was erected in 1898 on the northeast corner of the same block, which was dedicated on October 19 of the same year by Bishop Ryan. In the spring of 1900 the old parsonage was moved and a commodious two-story pressed brick building, with slate roof and all modern conveniences, took its place. The old church was remodeled and converted into a neat hall. The new church and parsonage, occupying nearly one-half block on Tenth street, between Madison and Jefferson streets, is as fine a church property as there is in the city. Rev. William Costello is the present pastor.

The Episcopal Church has had a few adherents in Charleston from an early date, and occasionally they have had religious services in private houses and public halls, but they had no church edifice of their own until 1896, when they purchased the brick building on Sixth street which was vacated by the Christian congregation. Since then they have met regularly on alternate Sundays for the purpose of divine worship. Rev. Dr. Andrew Gray is their present pastor.

The Cumberland Presbyterians have had organizations in different parts of Coles County for a great many years, but not until recent years have they gained any strength in Charleston. Since the opening of the Eastern Illinois Normal, several families have moved into the city and they soon began to think of arranging a society of their own. By the courtesy of the Missionary Baptist congregation, meetings were held in their building, and shortly after an organization was formed and a pastor, Rev. Mr. Ferguson, was called. Since then they have been holding services regularly in the County Court room in the Court House, but their new church, a very fine pressed brick structure on the corner of Harrison and Seventh streets, will soon be ready for occupancy. Rev. Samuel Taylor is the present pastor.

Secret Orders and Benevolent Societies.—Charleston has a very large number of brotherhood organizations, benevolent and social. A full history of these would fill a large volume. The first to organize was the Free Masons. Charleston Lodge, No. 35, was organized October 9, 1845. The charter members were William D. Gage, Edmond Roach, Adam Mitchell, Green G. Guthrie, Thomas C. Moore, James Watson and Jacob Linder, of whom William D. Gage was Worshipful Master; Edmond Roach Senior Warden, and Adam Mitchell Junior Warden. The present officers are: F. G. Hutchason, Worshipful Master; R. A. Mitchell, Senior Warden; Frank Mealey, Junior Warden; George Steigman, Treasurer, and J. B. Stone, Secretary. They own their lodge rooms, which are furnished in the very best style.

Keystone Chapter, No. 54, Royal Arch Masons, was organized August 4, 1859, by virtue of a dispensation issued by the Excellent Grand High Priest of the State. The first officers were: H. P. H. Bromwell, High Priest; G. W. Teel, King, and N. W. Chapman, Scribe. The present officers are: T. T. Shoemaker, High Priest; George Rosebraugh, King; F. G. Hodson, Scribe; Henry H. Fuller, Treasurer; John Favorite, Secretary.

Kickapoo Lodge, I. O. O. F., was organized

October 7, 1851, by Grand Master H. S. Rucker, the charter members being B. M. Hutchason, Elijah C. Banks, A. D. Walker, D. D. Gales and A. M. Henry, of whom B. M. Hutchason was Noble Grand and E. G. Banks Vice Grand. The present officers are: W. E. Dawson, N. G.; Ezra Mock, V. G.; Frank Moffett, Corresponding Secretary; Andrew Burke, F. S.; J. K. Kern, Treasurer.

Charleston Lodge, No. 609, was organized March 8, 1876, by Grand Master John H. Oberly. Ten members were embraced in the charter, and Dr. Denman, of Kickapoo Lodge, was appointed Special Deputy by the Grand Master and installed the new lodge. The present officers are: J. U. Ferbrache, N. G.; Mike Miller, Vice Grand; C. O. Tucker, Corresponding Secretary; A. C. Bagley, Financial Secretary; P. W. Grove, Treasurer.

Both of these lodges own their buildings and furniture and are strong in membership.

The Tribe of Ben Hur was organized on June 14, 1896, and started with twenty members. They now number one hundred and seventy. The present officers are: Post Chief, Mrs. George Daniels; Chief, C. C. Digby; Judge, Mrs. E. S. Brown; Teacher, Mrs. Emma Johnson; Scribe, Loren Digby; Guide, Ed Burket; Inside Guard, E. Gilman; Outside Guard, Mrs. George Waible; Keeper of Tribute, Ed Burket.

The Syracuse Lodge, No. 140, Knights of Pythias, was organized November 11, 1889. The present officers are: Chancellor Commander, A. C. Shriver; Vice Chancellor, G. W. Pennington; Prelate, M. P. House; Master of Arms, John A. Hall; K. of R. and S., C. W. Roberts; M. of F., Clare Brooks; M. of E., W. O. Glasco. The officers of the Uniform Rank, No. 52, Second Regiment, are: Captain, G. W. Gray; First Lieutenant, Frank Ricketts; Second Lieutenant, Arthur Shriver. Both lodges have a strong and growing membership.

Charleston Post, No. 271, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, was chartered June 9, 1883, with A. C. Mitchell as Commander and J. H. McClelland, Adjutant. The present officers are: Moses Sanders, Commander; A. C. Mitchell, Senior Vice Commander; R. P. Hackett, Junior Vice Commander; J. H. McClelland, Adjutant; John W. Reynolds, Quartermaster. There are one hundred members in good standing.

There have been three attempts at organizing a Young Men's Christian Association in Charleston, but each resulted in failure prior to that of 1902, when a strong association was formed. This started with over one hundred active members. M. Sivers was chosen Secretary, and under his leadership the association, starting April 14, 1902, was enabled to provide large and thoroughly well equipped rooms, which were dedicated on the 1st of October following. Their present efficient Secretary is George Cottingham, and their number one hundred and forty-five.

* Charleston Lodge, No. 623, B. P. O. Elks, was organized October 22, 1900, with the following officers: E. R., J. W. Kenny; E. Leading Kt., J. B. Stone; E. Loyal Kt., R. R. Mitchell; E. Lecturing Kt., C. W. Kemp; Sec., A. W. Shera; Treasurer, I. H. Johnston, Jr.; Esquire, Frank Johnston; Tyler, C. E. Williams; Chaplain, Henly Anderson; Inside Guard, W. H. McCarty. There were seventy-three members at the start. The present officers are: E. Leading Kt., W. K. Shoemaker; E. Loyal Kt., D. C. McCarty; E. Lecturing Kt., B. F. McClara; Secretary, Charles Edman; Treasurer, G. H. Dovie; Esquire, Walter Moore; Tyler, J. W. Sublet; Chaplain, G. J. Hibbard; Inner Guard, W. H. Dowling.

A Broommakers' Union was organized in 1900 with Harry Crowder President, and eight charter members. There are twelve members at the present time. Frank Avery is President and C. E. Stotts Secretary.

The Charleston Carpenters' and Joiners' Union was organized June 19, 1901, with ten charter members. The lodge now numbers fifty.

The local Printers' Union was organized in 1903 with eight charter members, and, with fluctuation in numbers, remains the same to-day.

The local lodge National Stationary Engineers was organized in 1891, with seven members and George Westnire President. They number now nine members.

A lodge of the American Federation of Labor was organized in Charleston in June, 1889. Jackson Walker, John Shonard, Ben Matthewman, Joseph Davis and John Davis were charter members. There are forty members in good standing now. The present officers are: Ben Matthewman, President; John Doty, Corresponding Secretary, and Jackson Walker, District Organizer.

A lodge of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers was organized in Charleston on March 26, 1884, commencing with seven members. It has grown in numbers since then until it now numbers fifty-six. Besides its social and protective features, it is also a life insurance institution, and every member is compelled to take out a life policy. The present officers are: George Daniels, Chief Engineer, and D. A. Dougherty, Secretary. Fred Schuler is insurance agent.

The Clover Leaf Lodge, No. 469, of Railroad Trainmen, was organized January 2, 1889, with fourteen charter members. It has grown until it now has seventy-five members. The present officers are: J. B. Callahan, Master; J. G. Gross, Financier; J. M. Lemmons, Secretary.

The Little Giant Lodge, No. 187, was organized in Charleston in 1883, with a small membership. It now numbers forty-eight in 1905. The following are the present officers: T. J. Martin, Master; E. E. Rosebraugh, V. M.; J. H. Mason, Secretary and Treasurer; Leroy Anderson, Collector; E. E. Martin, Chaplain.

The local Lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America was instituted in March, 1887, with A. T. Steel, principal officer and Joseph McCrory Clerk, and seventeen charter members. The present membership numbers 280.

The Knights of Honor have had an organization in Charleston since 1879, but they have been very greatly reduced by death and removals within the last few years.

Charleston Eyrie of Eagles, No. 784, was instituted in June, 1904, with a list of 102 charter members. In January, 1905, they reported 132 members in good standing.

In addition to the foregoing list of secret societies, Charleston has a number of auxiliaries, such as the Golden Star, the Rebekahs, the Women's Relief Corps, etc. There are also a number of Reading Circles, so that the township and city have progressed in the social and intellectual world as well as the financial.

Population.—A work called "Illinois in 1837" gave the population of Charleston at that time as 200. The population in 1880, the year the second railroad was built, was 2,867; in 1890, 4,135; in 1900, 5,445, and a very conservative estimate for the present year (1905) would make it over 6,000. This is not rapid growth, but it is substantial and healthy in character. The growth in wealth and culture of its people, as well as the style and architecture of its buildings, both public and private, have kept pace with that of population.

EAST OAKLAND TOWNSHIP.

The town of East Oakland is in the northeast corner of Coles County, bounded on the north and east by Douglas and Edgar Counties, on the south by Ashmore Township and the west line is the Embarras River. The town was named for the village, and "East" was prefixed to the name Oakland because some geographer present said there was an Oakland Township in some other county to the west of us.

It embraces a larger area than a congressional township, being seven miles in length from north to south and varies from six to seven miles in width from east to west.

The jog in the county line made by the town of East Oakland, extending two miles further north than the remainder of the county, was caused by the determination on the part of Coles County people to retain the village of Oakland, at the time Douglas County was set off from Coles. It was thought then that the village would eventually become an important place.

The town is well watered and drained by the natural water courses—Hoge's Branch in the north part (named for Samuel Hoge, a pioneer who first settled on its headwaters in Douglas County, but later removed near to St. Omer), and through its central portion by Brush Creek and its tributaries. Brush Creek was given its name by the early settlers of Edgar County, on account of the fact that the stream along its headwaters in Edgar was in early days heavily bordered with thickets of willows of small growth, briers, etc. The timber belt, once so heavy and broad along the western border of the township and on Brush Creek, has been reduced to small dimensions.

Notable Characters and Events.—Samuel Ashmore was the pioneer settler of the township, although he first located just over the line in what is now Douglas County.

Noted early characters were William Nokes and William Chadd. The first was called "Old Bag o' Shot," because of the story he told that he once carried a half-bushel bag of shot along the streets of Louisville, in the spring of the year, while the ground was so soft that he sunk in mud up to his knees at every step, and the bricks of the pavement piled up around his feet. The second was called "Old Shad," and his ability as a purveyor of marvelous stories was no less than that of "Uncle Billy" Nokes. Chadd was a "blacksmith, millwright and jack of all trades," and he started one of the earliest mills here for grinding corn. Asked by a friend one day whether his mill would grind wheat he said it would, if he had a bolting cloth. He then told that he had just tried it by grinding a bushel of nice, clean wheat and then taking it over to Redden's mill and bolting it, found he "had a hundred pounds of flour and two and one-half bushels of bran."

Talking to some friends about music one day, Chadd remarked that the jews-harp, if properly made, was the best instrument known. He said he once made one for a boy in his blacksmith shop that was the largest on record. The frame he made of tire-iron and the tongue was an inch bar of fine steel. "Why, you could hear it three miles," he said. When one of the listeners inquired how the boy got it in his mouth he treated the inquiry with contemptuous silence.

In his large repertory of similar stories was one he related to Dr. H. Rutherford (to whose published reminiscences I am indebted for the above and other facts and incidents), wherein, after showing the Doctor his lancet and "pulikins" (the latter for pulling teeth), he said that those instruments had seen marvelous service. The number of teeth drawn by the "pulikins" he estimated at several barrels, and the amount of blood shed by that lancet could have been measured by the hog'shead.

Thomas Affleck was another noted early character, who came here from Scotland. He wore a number nine hat, and was a musician as well as a mechanical genius. He described (long before the jetties were constructed at the mouth of the Mississippi) how he had invented and applied on the river Clyde a method very similar to that later adopted by Captain Eads, and when he presented his project and plans to the Board of Admiralty he was treated with little courtesy, whereupon he turned his back in disgust upon the Old World to find a home and a grave in Illinois.

The first carpenter in the township was one Robert Bell, a superior workman.

One of the first wagon-makers was named Alpheus Jacques.

The first store was kept by William Sheriff, on the road that led to Paris, just east of where Oakland was located. J. J. Pemberton hauled his stock of goods down from Chicago by wagon. But let it be remembered that at that time Chicago was not so large as Oakland is now.

The first representative of the township upon the County Board was George W. McConkey.

Rural Churches.—There are five churches outside the village of Oakland. The Fairview Methodist Church, located a little west of the middle of Section 6-13-14 West, was organized November 10, 1889, by Rev. Turner, who was then in charge of the Oakland Methodist Episcopal Church. Its present pastor is Rev. Dundas of the Westfield Circuit. The Fairview church is the successor of a small church started in quite an early day called Prairie Chapel, located in the southwestern part of the township.

The Prairie Union Christian Church had its beginnings in the 'sixties, and was organized in a school house near its present location on March 1, 1871, with thirty-two members. Its first elders were A. J. Shulse, S. D. Honn and D. W. Honn. The building, costing about $1,800, was erected and dedicated the same year. It is located about the middle of Section 8-13-14 west.

Elders Harmon Gregg and Z. Sweeny were active preachers in the promotion and development of the church. It has at present no regular pastor.

Antioch Separate Baptist Church is near the county line, about one and one-half miles north of Oakland. Meetings were held as far back as 1884 in the Antioch school house near by in Douglas County, and in 1889 a Rev. Moore organized the church, and the present frame building was put up about that time.

Rev. Ira Blythe is the minister now in charge of the church.

Bethel Separate Baptist Church is located on the Annin lane, about three miles southwest of Oakland, in Section 27-14-10.

Elder Stansberry organized the church in 1883.

The congregation is housed in a comfortable frame building and the last regularly employed pastor was Rev. J. W. Johns, of Toledo, Ill.

Oak Grove United Brethren Church was organized about 1885, by Rev. Z. J. Byard, of Ashmore. It is located in the northwest corner of Section 1-13-10.

It has a frame building located about four miles south and west of Oakland. No regular pastor is now employed.

Village Organization.—The village of Oakland was started in 1835. It was first called Independence. A postoffice had been started in 1833 near by on the east in a grove of oak trees, which was named Oakland. When the village was organized the postoffice was removed to it, and on February 9, 1855, the village was given the same name, by special act of the Legislature. This first postoffice was on the mail line from Paris to Decatur, and a weekly mail was carried on horseback.

The land on which Oakland was built was entered by David McCord in 1834, and he built a log cabin on it about 14x16 feet, near the Dr. Rutherford residence. This first house on the site of the village later became the property of Dr. Rutherford, and he sold it for $5.00, to be moved off and used for a stable.

Gideon M. Ashmore was the owner of the land at the time the original plat was made, and he named the village Independence. He was a son of pioneer Samuel Ashmore, and was a man of much public spirit and strength of character, though of very limited education. His full name was Gideon Madison and he was called "Matt" for short. He got the fever for town-site speculation after starting Independence, and the following year caused the platting of "Liberty," a proposed village about two miles north of Ashmore, on land owned by others at the time. Liberty never materialized into even a village, but the names Independence and Liberty showed the patriotic trend of their author's mind.

The early settlers were doubtless fully alive to the impulse of patriotism, but they did not take kindly to so high sounding a title for the new town as Independence, and declined to adopt it. So some settler, in a facetious or malicious mood, dubbed it "Pinhook," and the name stuck. For many years thereafter (even long after the name was officially changed to Oakland) the village was generally called by this ridiculous name.

The old "Springfield Trace" passed through the village down Main street for some distance. The late Dr. H. Rutherford's residence stood on the old Trace, and the Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad followed the old road for some distance. A part of the old Trace has now become a street and is called the "Springfield Road."

Some First Things.—The first store in the new village was established by one McClelland, followed soon after by another kept by a man named Trembly. The men and their stores were transient and soon passed away, and for four years thereafter all goods had to be bought at Charleston or Paris.

Those were the hard times growing out of the financial troubles of 1837-40, and people had little to buy with. Corn ruled at ten cents a bushel and four-year-old steers at $10 per head.

In 1844 Robert Mosely opened a stock of goods. Later came John Mills and R. F. Hackett as merchants.

The first physician was a Dr. Montague, who came in 1837, followed in 1838 by a Dr. William Patton. About them little is known. Dr. Hiram Rutherford came in 1840, and was thereafter for many years the principal physician of all that country. He was a man of much force of character, strong, sturdy, helpful to the people of the young community, enterprising, public-spirited, and fearless in the discharge of what he considered duty, he won the respect of all the people. He died at his home in Oakland at a ripe old age.

Business Enterprises.—In 1847 J. J. Pemberton went into partnership with Mosely, and the firm of Mosely & Pemberton continued until they sold to L. S. & S. M. Cash in 1855.

Clement and Clark built a steam-mill in 1854. Several attempts to operate water-mills were made in an early day near the present location of the Vandalia Railroad bridge. David McConkey started one about three-fourths of a mile down the river from the bridge.

William Chadd and Alexander Laughlin each had a mill near where the bridge is now, the former upon the east side and the latter on the west side of the river. Henry McCumbers succeeded Laughlin and one Whitlock succeeded McCumbers. They all helped the early settlers to get their "daily bread," but none of these enterprises were profitable to their owners. The McConkey and Whitlock mills were carried away by floods.

The Chadd mill plant was later moved to Oakland and set up on North Walnut Street. William West ran it awhile, followed by B. S. Smith. The Kincaid brothers later removed it to the Vandalia Railroad at the crossing of Oak Street. The mill there now is owned by Thornton, Gwinn & Son, who bought it from the estate of the late O. M. Gwinn. Other primitive mills were started early, but they are so long gone by that dates cannot be relied upon.

A large grain elevator was built in 1872 by Frank R. and Thomas Coffin, which was burned in a year or two and the Coffins were charged with setting it on fire. The trial was one of the most sensational and stubbornly fought cases in the county's history. The elevator was rebuilt and, some years ago, was again destroyed by fire. Its site is now occupied by Robert Larimer's warehouse.

The elevator now operating was built by Paddock, Hodge & Co., of Toledo, Ohio, in 1892. Shortly after the building was erected John Green took over the property and later Paddock-Hodge again assumed control, with W. L. McLean as manager. After two years Thomas and Crane, of Veedersburg, bought the property, and that firm managed the elevator for a year, when Mr. Thomas assumed control as sole owner. The elevator stands on the Clover Leaf track north of the depot.

The tile factory started about 1877-78, was burned some time after and never was rebuilt. Lee Brothers had a brick-kiln northwest of the city for some time, but it has not been operated for perhaps twelve years.

Two distilleries were started here years ago. One was on what is now the J. B. Henry farm, northwest of the village, and was carried on by Messrs. Spears and Williams. This was probably in the early 'fifties. The other was on the old Springfield Road, just east of Dr. Rutherford's old residence, and was run by a man named Davis.

On West Main Street, on the lot now owned by Samuel Zarley, there was started a saloon by a man whose name is forgotten; this was at a time when the village was young. It was a notorious drinking resort, and was a "tough" place, both in the character of some of its habitués and the quality of the "booze" sold. It was called the "Swamp Land Saloon," because some wags made the owner believe that it was located on swamp land controlled by the Government. It changed hands later and was known as the Mose Hunter saloon.

The Terre Haute & Peoria Railroad, which passes east and west through Oakland, was built in 1872-73. It was first called the Paris & Decatur Railroad. Later it was extended from Decatur to Peoria, and the name was then changed. It is a part of the Vandalia Railroad system, and is known as the Terre Haute & Peoria Division of that line.

The Toledo, St. Louis & Western Railroad, built in 1880-81, enters the township from the north about the center of the north line of Section 9, and passing southwest through Oakland, emerges from the township near the southeast corner of Section 27.

The village was incorporated some years after it was started, but the names of its first officers cannot be learned.

Newspapers.—"The Oakland Herald" was established May 13, 1875, and the first copy was issued under the management of J. W. Crane. Associated with him were Hiram Rutherford, M. B. Valodin and J. J. Pemberton as the publishers. The firm name was the "Herald Printing Company." "The Herald" was well received, but some of the business men would not advertise, believing that "The people know where we are, and if they want anything in our line they will come to us." The last issue of "The Herald" under its first management was on May 4, 1877, when Mr. A. Forsyth took charge and conducted the business with one C. Dicks as editor. Later the material was sold and we are informed was removed to Arcola.

"The Ambraw Pilot" was started by Oscar Ricketts, at present foreman of the Public Printing Office in Washington. This was during the 'eighties, and Ricketts was succeeded by the Uhler Brothers, who in turn were succeeded by Samuel Childress. The latter changed the name to "The Oakland Eagle," and this name was used until the purchase of the plant by Rev. W. W. McIntosh, in 1896, when it was changed to "The Oakland Messenger." In 1900 A. C. McKinsey was taken into the firm, and later O. L. Minter purchased the interests of both proprietors and now has full control of the paper. In politics the paper is, and always has been, Republican.

The first copy of "The Oakland Ledger" was issued from a small frame building south of the present location of the Oakland National Bank, in the year 1877. The proprietors were James S. and Lyman T. Yeargin, father and son. The paper met with good favor and prospered. It is at present owned and published by the same family, the management and publication interests being in the hands of L. T. ("Nixie") Yeargin. The above were all weekly papers.

The proprietors started "The Daily Ledger" in 1896. "The Ledger" has been both Republican and Democratic, its policy at the present time being Republican.

Financial Enterprises.—In the year 1873 a private banking firm, known as L. D. Carter & Co., bankers, was organized. In August, 1874, a stock company was formed and the bank was called the Oakland Bank. October 6, 1874, a charter was secured, and the Oakland National Bank came into existence, with L. S. Cash President and John Rutherford Cashier. The capital stock has remained as originally established at $53,000. The charter was renewed October 6, 1894. The present President is John Rutherford, son of pioneer Dr. H. Rutherford, and one of the staunch and reliable citizens of the community. The other officers are: Vice President, L. J. Norton; Cashier, John F. Menaugh; bookkeepers, O. B. Widdows and Crawford Cash; Directors, Albert Wyeth, John Rutherford, S. C. Pemberton, W. M. Zimmerman, L. J. Norton, Crawford Cash, Miss Anna Rutherford.

The Citizens' Bank was organized and opened its doors on the 15th day of October, 1900. The first officers and owners were: W. G. Gregory, President; George Kirkpatrick, Vice-President; John H. Moffett, Cashier. On the death of W. G. Gregory his widow continued to own and control his stock until 1903, when Mr. Kirkpatrick bought her interest. A little later John H. Moffett sold his stock to Silas Moffett, of Kansas, and he in turn sold to James W. Reeds. The bank is prosperous and the present officers are: George Kirkpatrick, President; James W. Reeds, Vice-President; George Buckler, Cashier.

The Oakland Building and Loan Association was chartered May 10, 1887. Its first officers were S. P. Curtis, President; J. F. Menaugh, Secretary, and D. W. Crainford, Treasurer. The Association seemed to thrive for awhile and thirteen stock series were issued, but as there seemed to be more borrowing than investing, it was thought best to discontinue, and in 1902 its affairs were wound up by mutual agreement of the stockholders.

Other Business Organizations.—A creamery was organized here about 1885, but the stockholders failed to realize and the company disbanded, after disposing of the building which is now occupied by G. M. D. Legg as a poultry house.

A Business Men's Association, composed of most of the business men of the town, was organized in 1899. The officers remain the same as at the organization, viz: B. F. Burns, President; E. N. Carter, Secretary; C. C. Cash, Treasurer.

A Mutual Improvement Club was organized among the ladies of the town in 1896. Their purpose was to study the works of Shakespeare. They have maintained their organization to the present time. The first President was Mrs. O. L. Minter. The present President is Mrs. C. J. Taber.

The Old Settlers' meetings, begun in 1894, were held for five years, and the barbecue connected with them gave the city a name for hospitality it still maintains. They were organized by J. E. Tibbs, now of Tibbs, Miss.

The poultry fanciers of the city and community maintain the Oakland Poultry and Pet Stock Association, an organization for the encouragement of the raising of better breeds of poultry. The organization was brought about in 1901. The first officers were: C. J. Parker, President; V. W. Annin, Treasurer; C. S. Hall, Secretary. The first show was held in the winter of 1901. The present officers are: H. E. Mattocks, President; W. W. Taylor, Treasurer; O. L. Minter, Secretary.

The Oakland Horse and Colt Show Association was organized in 1903 and the first show was held that year. B. F. Burns was the first and is the present executive.

The Oakland Electric Light Plant was built in 1896 by James C. Taber, now of Los Angeles, Cal. In 1902 he sold out to J. W. Hardin, who still owns and operates the plant.

The Oakland Telephone plant is owned by Messrs. W. S. Ashmore, O. K. Burton and F. P. Moffett. These gentlemen organized the system in 1897, and at present there are almost 400 'phones on their boards.

The first President of the East Oakland Township Sunday School Association was Mrs. Clara Carter. The organization was brought about by J. M. Hopkins, of Mattoon, about the year 1887. The present officers are: O. L. Minter, President, and Mame Waters, Secretary and Treasurer.

There are practically two cemeteries near the city—the old and the new. The old cemetery was started many years ago, some of the stones showing dates of deaths as far back as 1833. The old burying ground is cared for by the city. The new one is owned by a stock company and the officers are: B. F. Burns, President, and W. M. Bowman, Secretary. The two grounds lie at the north end of Cemetery Street, which would be a continuation of the Ashmore road through the city to the northern limits.

Oakland has had two very disastrous fires. The first occurred in 1883, when the east side of the public square was burned and the south side of Main Street almost to Oak Street. The second big fire was in the summer of 1902, on July 4th, when the north half of the east side of the square was burned to the ground. These fires, though disastrous to individuals, were really of benefit to the town, for the burned buildings were old and were soon replaced by modern buildings of brick.

Oakland now has the following business houses: Two hotels, two banks, three restaurants, two newspapers, two hardware stores, six grocery stores, one furniture store, two drug stores, two butcher shops, four blacksmith shops, three machine shops, one steam laundry, three livery stables, two railroads, two express companies, one light plant, a telephone exchange, four dry goods stores, opera house, six churches, one bakery, one law office, seven doctors, one photographer, one nursery, one oculist, one wall paper and paint store, one dentist, one lumber firm, one flour mill, one elevator, two coal dealers, two harness shops, two implement and carriage dealers, three saloons, one pool room, a beautiful park, several miles of concrete walk and many beautiful residences.

The population of the township, according to the census of 1900, was 2,403, and that of the city of Oakland 1,198. The latter is now believed to approximate 1,400.

City Churches.—The first religious body to form an organization in what is now the city of Oakland was the Presbyterian. They started here about 1831, and the earliest preachers called to mind were Rev. Isaac Bennett and Rev. John McDonald, both of whom had recently settled at Muddy Point. The people first worshipped in a small log church, which was built on the present site of the old cemetery. Later a frame building was erected about where the public square now is, and in 1844 another structure was erected, which is now used as a barn for the undertaking establishment of H. A. Sudduth, located just south of the Methodist Episcopal Church on Washington Street. The present frame edifice was erected during the fifties. Revs. Venable and Montgomery came later, and still later came Rev. S. J. Bovell, as pastor. The present Elders are: V. W. Annin, C. N. Black, J. N. Anthony and O. L. Minter, and the present pastor is Rev. William W. Wilson.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in Oakland was organized in 1856. Progress was slow for awhile and Rev. Arthur Bradshaw took up the work in 1858. In 1859 the church, which had been in the Camargo circuit, came into the Oakland circuit. The latter was made up of four churches, the Oakland, Bradshaw Chapel, Mt. Pleasant and McReynolds Chapel. Rev. Joseph Lane was the first circuit rider in the Oakland circuit. The first quarterly meeting was held in Oakland in October, 1859. The church did not have a building of its own until 1860. In that year a frame building was erected on the site of the present church building (on East Washington, one block east of Pike Street) and the Rev. L. C. Pitner, Presiding Elder, preached the dedicatory sermon. Enough subscriptions were secured at this meeting to pay the building debt in full. In 1861 Rev. J. C. Baker, the pastor, preached a strong Union sermon. His language was so vigorous as to offend a number of members and they withdrew from the church. A new and imposing edifice of brick, with stone trimmings, was built on the old site in 1891, during the pastorate of Rev. M. C. Palmer. A parsonage was built in 1864 at a cost of $800, and later the present parsonage, valued at $2,500, was erected just east of the church. The present pastor is Rev. C. W. Jacobs.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Oakland was organized October 26, 1852, by Rev. James Ashmore. In 1867 the congregation purchased the building which had been erected by the Universalists about 1853-54, and in which they had been holding their meetings prior to the purchase. The building stands on Lot 6 of Block 6 of Coffin's Addition. Following is the verbatim report of the contract between the Cumberland Presbyterian people and the Universalists:

"On the 25th day of February, 1867, I. F. R. Coffin, sold to the Cumberland Presbyterians, of Oakland, Coles County, Ill., lot number 6, in Block 6, in town of Oakland, for eleven hundred and eighty dollars, with the following reservation:

"That the undersigned, as trustees, and all future successors in office, do grant unto any and all Universalist preachers the privilege to preach in and occupy said property above described (meaning the Cumberland Presbyterian church), any and all times when it is not occupied by said Cumberland Presbyterians or others, by previous appointment.

"The above grant or privilege is in consideration of the said F. R. Coffin selling to them property for eleven hundred and eighty dollars, that is well worth two thousand dollars.

"To above we, as trustees, affix our names and seals, this 20th day of May, 1867.

"J. J. PEMBERTON,

"G. W. McCONKEY,

"THOS. R. O'DELL,

"Trustees."

The congregation still uses the same building, on which improvements have been made from time to time. The present pastor is Rev. W. L. Lawrence.

The Church of Christ (Christian) was organized in Oakland on May 7, 1887. Elder H. C. Cassell was the organizer. Amasa Gilbert and Isaac Williams were the first Elders, D. H. Peppers and J. H. Blevins were the first Deacons, and Sarah Gilbert the first treasurer. Elder Cottman, of Arcola, was the first pastor, and preached for the congregation until January 1, 1888. The Adventist Church was secured, in 1888, for Sunday School and church purposes, at a rental of $25 per annum.

The Sunday School was soon removed to the room over the postoffice, in the building where the Carter Banking Company first had its place of business. On September 9, 1889, the Trustees of the church purchased five shares in the Oakland Building and Loan of series three. A building was erected in 1889 and dedicated by Elder F. M. Raines on April 27, 1890. The same building is still occupied, located on Montgomery Street, one block east of the northeast corner of the public square. Rev. Melnotte Miller is the present pastor.

The Seventh Day Adventist Church was organized in Oakland during the summer of 1875. The organization grew out of a course of lectures delivered by Elder C. H. Bliss, who held meetings in a tent. There were twenty-three charter members. A "Praying Band" was maintained until June 11, 1876, when the church was formally organized by Rev. G. W. Colcord. H. P. Richey, the present janitor of the Eastern Illinois Normal, was ordained Elder. The present building, located on Second and South Pike streets, was erected in 1876. The present pastoral work is done by such preachers and helpers as come along occasionally, no regular pastor being employed.

The Pentecost Church was organized in Oakland in the Adventist Church building on February 26, 1900. Rev. T. H. Nelson, Superintendent of the Pentecost Bands of the World, was the organizer. Charles D. Freeman, now deceased, was elected class-leader at the time of the organization. Miss Martha Parry, assisted by Miss Tillie Meckenstock, had come to Oakland a few months before February, 1900, and worked up an interest among the classes not usually reached by the regular organizations. Miss Katherine Klein was one of the early workers. In 1901 a new frame edifice was erected on East Washington street. The present leaders of the band are Rev. and Mrs. Moses Jossart.

There is no organization of the Roman Catholic Church in this city, though there are a good many adherents of the faith in and near the city. Pastors from Arcola and Hume used to come to the city and hold mass at the homes of prominent members. At present most of the Catholics here attend service at Brocton, in Edgar County, where there is a strong church and a regular pastor.

A body of Universalists existed here at an early day, and they built the church edifice now belonging to the Cumberland Presbyterians about 1853-54. There is no congregation of this denomination at present here.

A Baptist Church was organized here years ago, but the congregation was small and after awhile it disbanded. Until recently a lot on West Main Street was held in the name of the Baptist Church. It was on this lot that the celebrated "Swamp Land Saloon" was kept, in very early days, which had such an odoriferous career.

Fraternal Organizations.—Oakland Lodge, A. F. and A. M., No. 219, was organized on the 7th day of October, A. M. 5856, A. D. 1856. The charter membership consisted of the following and a few others, whose names are not now remembered: Thomas E. Don Carlos, William D. Martin, Alfred D. Pemberton, John N. Kurtz, Robert Mosely, Peter Taylor and John Allen. Peter Taylor, now of Rardin, is the only charter member still surviving. The Lodge worked under dispensation, possibly a year, before the actual organization. The building in which the meetings were held, and where the first Master Masons were raised, was an old frame structure which stood on what is now the Wigginton corner. The building was burned in 1886, since which time the lodge has met above store rooms. For three years it has had the room above Brown's hardware store, on the south side of the square. The first officers were as follows: Master, Thomas E. Don Carlos; Senior Warden, William D. Martin; Junior Warden, Alfred D. Pemberton. Other charter members were placed in the appointive offices, but the records do not show their names. The present officers are as follows: Master, F. C. Winkler; Senior Warden, R. W. Brown; Junior Warden, Hugh Gregory; Treasurer, W. Bowman; Secretary, M. J. Naphew; Senior Deacon, W. M. Zimmerman; Junior Deacon, C. N. Black; Chaplain, J. F. Menaugh; Tyler, J. M. Briggs.

In 1898 the Order of Eastern Star was organized in Oakland, with a charter membership of twenty members. The work of organizing was mainly in the hands of Worthy Grand Secretary Sophia C. Scott, of Mattoon. The first officers were: Worthy Matron, Ida M. Martin; Worthy Patron, Walter S. Ashmore; Associate Matron, Rosa Ashmore. The present officers are: Worthy Matron, Susan Pierson; Worthy Patron, John F. Menaugh; Associate Matron, Mrs. S. C. Pemberton; Secretary, Mrs. Rose Winkler; Treasurer, Mrs. A. M. Shaffer; Conductress, Mrs. H. P. Martin; Associate Conductress, Mrs. Link McCall.

An Odd Fellows' Lodge was organized in Oakland in October, 1872. There were ten charter members, of whom the only one now living is John Lawson. Fire destroyed its records a few years ago. The meeting place of this lodge is now in the Ashmore building, on the southwest corner of the square. The present officers are: J. Wes. McCart, N. G.; Lewis Buirley, V. G.; L. P. Whanger, Secretary. The present number of members is 100.

Welcome Encampment, No. 24, I. O. O. F., was organized January 5, 1876, and it retains the old number of the Charleston Encampment, which disbanded during the Civil War. The charter members were: M. P. Smith, J. G. Crawford, J. R. Lawson, J. C. Bandy, J. A. Johnson, Robt. Rutherford, Stanley Cash, A. M. Martin. The property of the Encampment has been twice burned, so that it is impossible to get more than the facts furnished from memory and the names of the first officers cannot be learned. The first meeting place was in the old frame store building which stood on the corner where the Conaghan Opera House is now located. The frame structure was burned in the fire of 1883. The lodge suffered another disaster in 1902, when all the records and paraphernalia were again destroyed by fire. The meeting place was then in the hall above the Black store, on the northeast corner of the public square. The present meeting place is the room over the postoffice, in the Ashmore building, on the southwest corner of the square. The present officers are as follows: L. S. Cash, C. P.; C. F. Wright, H. P.; Sam Zarley, Scribe; Ed McGregor, S. W.; J. R. Lawson, Treas.; Chas. Kincaid, J. W. The lodge now numbers seventy-eight members.

Two lodges of Knights of Pythias have existed in Oakland. Orion Lodge, No. 76, was the first organized, and it disbanded about 1888 or '89. Coriola Lodge, No. 367, was organized in 1892, and the instituting lodge was the Syracuse Lodge of Charleston, assisted by Palestine Lodge, of Mattoon. The first officers were: S. C. Pemberton, P. C.; L. T. Yeargin, C. C.; E. J. McIntire, V. C.; Ed Applegate, Prel.; W. E. Ashmore, K. R. S.; J. H. Scott, M. E.; C. S. Ringland, M. F.; "Pat" Richardson, M. A.; Ed Gant, O. G.; Dr. Peak, I. G. The present officers are: P. Hackett, P. C.; O. C. Pepper, C. C.; John Ashmore, V. C.; George Skelton, K. R. S.; John Wallace, Prel.; Ferd Hackett, M. A.; O. C. Pepper, M. F.; R. E. Moore, M. Exc.; John McAllister, M. W.; R. E. Moore, Rep. Gr. Lodge.

A lodge of Modern Woodmen of America was organized in Oakland January 28, 1889, with a charter membership of nineteen. The first meeting was held in the old G. A. R. Hall, and District Deputy William Dyke, of Effingham, presided as organizer. Sixteen of the charter members were present and the following officers were duly elected and installed: Venerable Consul, Jos. H. Busby; Worthy Adviser, O. J. Richardson; Excellent Banker, Geo. A. Shoemaker; Clerk, James A. Small; Escort, W. T. Moore; Watchman, Harry Scott; Sentry, Ed. Felger. The lodge has made excellent growth and the membership at present is 210. The following are the present officers: Venerable Consul, Luther P. Whanger; Worthy Adviser, John Wallace; Excellent Banker, M. J. Naphew; Clerk, W. J. Morgan; Escort, George Waters; Watchman, Lewis M. Buirley; Sentry, E. D. Ashmore.

A Ben Hur Lodge was organized April 3,

1901, by State Organizer Bailey. The present officers are: Logan Pemberton, Chief; E. L. Riggs, Judge; Anna Martin, Teacher; C. M. Martin, Scribe; Dr. W. N. Linn, K. of F.; John Harmon, K. of I. G.; Mrs. John Harmon, K. of O. G.; Chas. Winkler, Lodge Deputy.

A Rebecca Lodge once existed here, but after the fire of 1902, when all the records were destroyed, the lodge was not revived.

Some time, perhaps in the early 'eighties, a lodge of Knights of Honor was started, but most of the members have passed away and no one remembers who the officers were or the exact time of organization.

Oakland Post, No. 188, Grand Army of the Republic, was organized February 20, 1883. There were nineteen charter members, and the following were the officers at time of organization: G. W. McConkey, Commander; L. D. Carter, Senior Vice Commander; Firman James, Junior Vice Commander; E. H. Warden, Adjutant; H. D. Williams, Quartermaster. The present officers are: J. M. Briggs, Commander; R. F. Larimer, Senior Vice Commander; J. C. Pearce, Junior Vice Commander; Samuel Zarley, Adjutant; John Ball, Quartermaster.

A chapter of Royal Arch Masons once existed in Oakland. It was organized as Oakland Chapter, No. 153, about 1872, with A. P. Forsyth as King. John Rutherford was the second King. The chapter was organized and the meetings were held in the Clark building that stood on the east side of the public square, but the building was burned in 1883. The second hall occupied by the chapter was the upper room of what is now the postoffice building. The chapter disbanded about 1884 and the members were most of them demitted. Some joined the Paris and the Kansas lodges.

At one time in the 'seventies a lodge of Grangers was organized in the township. Meetings were held in the school houses and much interest was manifested.

Some years ago the Farmers' Alliance had a lodge that met in the room over the postoffice, on the southwest corner of the square. The members met at Lake Union School House and a few meetings were held in the Berry School building. No one seems to remember the date of the organization nor the names of the leaders of the movement.

Two lodges of Red Men have been organized in the city, but at present neither one is in existence.

City Schools.—Formerly, what is now Oakland Union District No. 2, was two districts. This was prior to 1865, when the two districts were merged. The original districts were District No. —, T. 14, R. 11, and District No. 1, T. 14, R. 10. J. N. Rohr, M. B. Valodin and J. O. Black were Directors of the first named district and J. J. Pemberton, W. D. Busbey and D. W. Mitchell were Directors of the district in Range 10 in 1865. When the districts were merged the members of the Board for the new Union district were selected from those six men, and J. J. Pemberton, J. N. Rohr and M. B. Valodin were named. Dr. Hiram Rutherford was appointed Treasurer and the office has always been kept in the Rutherford family, the present Treasurer, John F. Menaugh, being a son-in-law of the late Dr. Rutherford.

In 1865 a four-room structure was erected for the Union District, which was District 1, T. 14, R. 10. This building was on Pike Street, in Crawford's Addition to the city of Oakland. The first teachers employed in 1865 were G. W. Williams, Miss Mahala Clement and N. R. Duer. The present number of the District is No. 2, and the splendid new $30,000 ten-room building is located northwest of the public square one block. G. J. Koons is the present Superintendent and Ed Honn is Principal of the High School, which has a four-year course and is in the list of accredited schools of the Illinois State University.

There are ten country schools in the township. In Township 14, Range 14 West, are the following: Lake Union (No. 128), in the northwest quarter of Section 9, named from a small lake near by. The building was erected in the 'seventies and a Mr. Skidmore now teaches there.

Berry School (No. 127), named for a prominent family living near, is in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 7. The building was put up in the early seventies. Miss Clara Luce was the last teacher.

Enode School (No. 1) building was erected about 1869. It is in the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 20. Its last session was taught by Ed. Gobert.

West Donica (No. 5), located near the southwest corner of Section 29, received its name from pioneer Hiram Donica. Its building was put up about 1869, and its first teacher (or one of the first) was Jackson Sutton. Its last teacher was Miss Nora Slater.

In Town 14, Range 10 East, are two schools.

Egypt (No. 4), in the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 25, had a building put up about 1853, which served its day, and was succeeded by the present building, erected about 1885. George Folger taught there early and Miss Kate Carroll was the last teacher.

Canaan (No. 3) School building, erected about 1877, is near the southeast corner of Section 27. An early school was taught there by Cortes O'Hair and the last by Harlan White.

In Town 13, Range 10, is the Ward School (No. 8), sometimes called the "Yaller Hammer," because a former lady teacher there taught singing and the boys evidently considered her a "bird." The school was started and the house built about 1871-72. It is in the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 11. Its first teacher was Miss Ellen Cox, and its last Albert Harvey.

In Town 13, Range 11, in the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 7, is Shady Grove School (No. 7), which was started in the early 'fifties. Susan Glass was an early teacher there, and the last teacher was Edward Smith.

There are two schools in Town 13, Range 14 West. The Bell School (No. 6), near the southwest corner of Section 5, named for a settler near by, was another very early school. About 1853-54 it was started and a house built. One W. C. Parrish was an early teacher and Miss Lizzie Currens taught there last.

Near the northeast corner of Section 9 is the Shively School (No. 146). The building was erected about 1870. The district includes a small area of Edgar County. Lola Eckard is the latest teacher.

HUMBOLT TOWNSHIP.

Note.—In explanation of the lack of uniformity in spelling the name "Humbolt," or "Humboldt," it is proper to state that, on the organization of the township which now bears that name, it was called "Milton," but in 1860, was given the name "Humbolt," spelled in the county records without the "d." In 1875 this name was applied to "Milton Station," the principal village and postoffice in the township, but about 1892 the Government, in its official publications, changed the name of both the township and the village to Humboldt. The original spelling, however, seems to be largely retained locally, as well as on Railway Guides, County Maps, etc.

Humbolt Township (spelled in Government publications "Humboldt") is one of the prettiest, the wealthiest and most productive townships of the county. It lies on the northern tier of townships and is the second township from the west. It is bounded on the north by Douglas County, on the east, south and west by Seven Hickory, Lafayette and North Okaw Townships, respectively. It contains fifty-four square miles and comprises all of Township 13, and the south half of Township 14 North, Range 8 East. It has, perhaps, more fine country homes, well kept farms and up-to-date improvements than any other township in the county. It is somewhat undulating without being broken, and has only a slight bit of native woodland, that being a skirt of the North Okaw timber about one mile long and one-half mile wide.

The township is traversed by the Illinois Central Railroad, which enters Section 21 on the north and leaves on Section 31 at the south. Its only water-way is Flat Branch, a tributary of the Okaw River, which courses its way east and west, entering at Section 36, Township 14, and leaving at Section 6, Township 13. This stream is the principal drainage outlet of the township, four large drainage ditches emptying into it. Eight iron bridges cross it, and, throughout the township, iron bridges span every water-way whether in the field or on the highway.

Experiment Farm—Soil—Improvements.—

Through the south half of the township is a portion of a fifteen-mile water-shed, the crest of which is thought to be the highest point in the county. It was on this ridge that the University of Illinois selected a 13-acre tract, on the Charles Westrup farm, for experimental farming in 1904. Here thirteen varieties of corn were cultivated, the Boone County white corn being the standard. Fine results were obtained. In 1905, in order to be nearer to the railroad, a similar tract was rented on the Joseph Farrar farm, near Doran's Station. Here, also, thirteen varieties of corn were planted and cultivated during the summer, this station, also, being on the water-shed.

The soil of the township is deep and black, and that reclaimed by drainage is extremely rich and productive. It has the distinction of being the home of the largest land-owner and wealthiest man in the county, John Moore, who settled where he now lives in 1857. He, Jefferson Harry, Mrs. William Stevens and Mrs. Nancy Hawkins, are the only pioneers of the township yet living. The first child born in the township was the late William A. Poorman, on March 7, 1842.

The first broom-corn in the township was grown by Col. John Cofer in 1865. His first planting was two bushels of Tennessee evergreen, in the extreme northeast portion of the township. The industry increased annually, and from 1870 to 1890 about 10,000 acres were grown yearly. Since then the acreage has gradually shrunk, and in 1904 about 2,500 acres were planted.

There never was known to be a log house in the township, and outside of the village of Humboldt, there is to-day neither a brick nor a stone building except what was formerly the Evangelical Lutheran church in the southwest corner of Section 15.

Walter Dunn, the turfman, had a half-mile track on his farm just west of the village of Humboldt on Section 5, from 1887 to 1890. There he raised and trained several fine track horses, among them being Argot Wilkes, the famous pacer, (time 2:14 $\frac{1}{4}$), for which Mr. Dunn was offered \$14,000.

In Section 19, on the Illinois Central Railroad is Doran's Crossing. It was established in 1856 and, in 1865 an elevator was built by F. and I. Jennings, of Mattoon. It came into possession of the Mattoon Elevator Company in 1899, and in 1900 it gave place to a 40,000 bushel elevator. In 1903 another elevator was built by the company, having a capacity of 10,000 bushels. The annual output of both elevators is estimated at 350,000 bushels.

Doran's also has a small park and a reservoir, the latter being excavated 100 feet long, 65 feet wide and 8 feet deep by the Illinois Central Railroad in 1880 at a cost of $2,500. It supplies the locomotives at that point with water.

A postoffice is also maintained at Doran's, the present Postmaster being George Ricketts.

Humbolt Village.—In 1853, A. A. Sutherland settled on the present site of Humbolt, and in the same year built a two-story house, the finest in the township. In 1859 he donated ten acres of ground to the railroad for a town-site and platted a twenty-acre tract just east of it, which is now known as the original town. The first name given to it was Milton Station, under which it was incorporated February 20, 1866, the first Village Board being W. B. Hawkins, President; H. L. Stewart, Clerk; W. A. Wood, Treasurer; J. P. Westby, J. C. B. Wharton, H. L. Stewart, W. B. Hawkins and W. A. Wood, Trustees. The original town was enlarged by Wampler's first and second additions to the west and Hays' addition to the north.

Shortly after the railroad was built a depot and freight office were erected by the company, Dr. Wesley Wampler being the first ticket and freight agent, in which capacity he served until 1870. He and T. K. Flening, in 1859, erected the first houses built in the village. Wampler also built and conducted the first store. In 1860, John Payne, from Paris, Ill., opened a second store.

Business Establishments.—In 1868, Dr. C. M. Odell established a drug store and later another was opened by Hawkins & Stewart.

A postoffice called Milton Station was established in 1858 with Aric A. Sutherland as Postmaster. In 1861 he was succeeded by Silas Wood, and he, in turn, by G. W. Gray. Other changes were made with the changes of administration. In 1875 the name of the postoffice was changed to Humbolt, later, by Government authority, to Humboldt. In 1888 the office was separated from the stores and given a building to itself. Clark Elkins was Postmaster at the time. He was succeeded by W. A. Combs and S. C. Ashbrook, each of whom served four years. In 1901 Mr. Elkins was reappointed and is still serving the public. The postoffice has a lobby, well stocked with stationery and notions. It also has a 25-mile rural route to the west, which serves 600 people. J. S. McGee is carrier.

There are two grain elevators in Humbolt and four broom-corn warehouses. One elevator, owned by Cuppy Brothers, has a capacity of 35,000 bushels. It was built in 1902 to take the place of one burned in 1901. The latter was bought of Moore Brothers in 1900, and was built on the site where, in 1872, and also in 1865, a mill belonging to Mr. Watkins burned.

The other elevator, having a capacity of 40,000 bushels, is owned by J. M. Ernst, and was built in 1903, at a cost of $7,000. It is on the site where three previous elevators burned, the first being erected in 1859. The average shipments of grain from these two elevators, annually amount to 300,000 bushels.

Two of the broom-corn warehouses are owned by J. Danner, and have a combined capacity of 225 tons; another, of 75 tons capacity, is owned by S. W. Phillips, of Mattoon; and the fourth, of 50 tons capacity, is owned by J. M. Ernst.

Schools and Churches.—The first school in Humbolt was the result of a divided district. In 1861 a small school house was built in Section 4 on the John McNutt land, a short distance east of Humbolt. The first directors of this school were John McNutt and Richard

Brown, and among the early teachers were Nana Humiston, John H. Moore and M. G. Stevenson. In 1870 the district was divided, the little school was abandoned and the same year the Humbolt school, a two-story building, was erected. Among the early teachers were: R. T. Barr, John H. Moore and M. G. Stevenson. In 1893 it was burned and another was erected in its stead. The building is one story, with two rooms, and still serves the needs of District No. 70. The present Board is composed of J. M. Ernst, E. M. Mulliken and J. A. Hogan, and the teachers for the winter of 1904-05 were Douglas Moore and Olive Coon.

At present there are two churches in Humbolt. The Methodist Episcopal Church was erected in 1859, one mile west of Humbolt, in Section 6. In 1868 it was moved to Humbolt. In 1870 the building was torn down and the materials shipped to Larned, Kans., and used in the building boom of that city. In the same year another church was erected on the site, which still stands, having been improved with additions, including a Sunday School room and vestibule. A prosperous Sunday School is maintained. Among the early trustees were John Poorman, John Lowden and Judge Walker, the first pastors being Revs. William Mitchell and Hookstep.

The other is the Disciples' Church, known as the "Church of Christ." It was built about 1870 at a cost of $1,000, an early elder being W. B. Hawkins. It was reorganized in 1897, and since that time a fine Sunday School has been maintained, E. M. Mulliken being the continuous Superintendent. He was also an early trustee and an elder of the church, which offices he still holds. Among the other officers of the church are S. B. Moore, James Daugherty and J. S. Grant. The present pastor is Rev. Louis M. Mulliken.

Two churches have been abandoned. A Presbyterian was built in 1882, but the congregation disbanded in 1890, and the building is now being used as a broom-corn warehouse.

The Catholic Church, known as the Holy Angels, was built in 1870 under the direction of Father Mangin. In 1898, during the pastorate of Rev. Father Martin, it was abandoned. It was torn down in 1902 and used in the building of a double house by Thomas Cowton.

Business Enterprises.—A telephone exchange was established in August, 1901, and is yet maintained, the officers being James McDougle, President; J. O. Toland, Vice President; S. C. Ashbrook, Secretary. It has eleven rural lines and two clear lines. It serves 187 families in the country and has twenty-five local phones.

The village also has three general merchandise stores, one drugstore, two barber shops, two blacksmith shops, one meat market, one entertainment hall, two hardware stores, two furniture stores, one undertaking establishment, one harness shop, one feed stable. In addition, it has an enterprising newspaper, "The Humbolt News," established by J. S. Grant in 1898, who is still editor and proprietor.

In 1900 a township hall was built, and it is there that the township elections and political meetings are held. The village has nearly one mile of concrete walks, built during the last two years.

The only brick business building in the town is the bank building. It is one story and has a burglar and fire-proof safe and a steel vault for private boxes. It is known as the First National Bank of Humbolt, and was opened for business July 1, 1904. The officers are E. M. Mulliken, President; S. B. Moore, Vice-President; John W. Poorman, Cashier.

Fraternal Organizations.—On March 21, 1877, Prospect Lodge, No. 636, I. O. O. F., was organized under dispensation by Deputy Grand Master James Hamilton, new of Mattoon. On October 10th a charter was granted, the first principal officers being: W. B. Kennedy, N. G.; J. D. Denning, V. G.; Hugh Maxey, Secretary; O. M. McNutt, Treasurer. For several months after the organization of the lodge meetings were held in a wagon shop. In September a building was purchased for $600. Here meetings were held until 1887 when the present Odd Fellows' building was erected at a cost of $4,000. The upper story is used for a lodge room, which is handsomely furnished and fully equipped. Three storerooms occupy the lower floor. Prospect Lodge is one of the wealthiest in the county, having real estate and personal property valued at more than $20,000, while the aggregate wealth of the members is $2,000,000 or more. A cemetery is also maintained by the lodge. In 1880 John Moore donated to the lodge five acres and twenty rods one mile west of Humbolt for cemetery purposes. In 1902 the lodge purchased fifteen acres adjoining, which was also platted. The cemetery is the pride of the township, being one of the best kept in the county. A six-room cottage in the cemetery serves as a house for the sexton, L. J. Oliver, who is employed by the lodge. The cemetery has many fine monuments, is set with four hundred evergreens and is indeed picturesque.

May 1, 1890, Agamemnon Lodge, No. 237, Knights of Pythias, was organized with twenty-eight charter members. Meetings are held in the hall of Prospect Lodge on Thursday night of each week. The principal officers are: J. W. Poorman, P. C.; V. L. Reed, C. C.; C. R. Holmes, V. C.

In June, 1897, Humbolt Court of Honor, No. 591, was organized with eleven charter members. The first officers were: Rev. H. L. Murray, Chancellor; Miss Lessie Major, Vice Chancellor; Miss Cora Mizelle, Recording Secretary. At present it has a membership of thirty-eight, the officers being W. P. Brown, Chancellor; C. A. Stewart, Vice-President; E. M. Mulliken, Recording Secretary.

In December, 1894, Humbolt Camp, No. 2604, M. W. A., was organized with nineteen charter members. Among the first officers were: A. F. Moore, V. C., and E. M. Mulliken, Clerk. The present principal officers are: J. S. Grant, V. C.; D. S. Bryant, Advisor; E. M. Mulliken, Clerk.

On March 3, 1905, Humbolt Lodge, M. A. F. O., was organized with 101 members, the three highest officers being: Frank Shirley, President; Edward Poorman, Vice-President, and Frank Trimble, Secretary.

Country Schools.—Outside of the village of Humbolt, there are thirteen schools in the township. South of Humbolt, in Town 13, there are eight schools.

The oldest is the Bond School, in District No. 78, located in the northeast corner of Section 35. It was originally near the north line of Section 36, an early Board being: Lane Lofen, Rev. Robert Hill and Jacob Harry. Early teachers were a Mr. Huntington and an Englishman named Cresswick. In 1869 the school was moved to its present location.

In 1859 a small school house was built in what was known as "Blue Grass Grove," in Section 4, one-half mile southeast of Humbolt. An early board was composed of James Kelly and Ira Steele, and among the early teachers were Maggie Edgar and Lottie Johnson. The building was 16x24 feet, and often as many as sixty-five children attended the school. It was moved about 1868 two miles east of the W. K. Watson farm, in Section 2, and a year later one-half mile south to the Richard Brown farm, in the same section. For ten years longer it served the community, among the teachers being Noble Danner, James Danner and Daniel H. Robertson. James Kelly, B. E. Hillgoss and Daniel H. Robertson constituted an early Board. In 1879 a new building was erected in Section 11, on the Tinch land, for which the school was named. It is in District No. 73 and the present Board consists of W. R. Wampler, J. W. Ashbrook and Wesley Hood. It also has a library of fifty-one volumes, established in 1903.

In 1865 the school now known as the "Black" was built at a cost of $500 in the northern part of Section 8 on the Black farm. An early Board was composed of Alfred Grooms, J. W. Seaman and George Moore, and among the early teachers were M. G. Stevenson, R. P. Barr and E. P. Walters. Three years later the school was moved about three-quarters of a mile south to the John Moore farm, in the southern part, where it now stands in District No. 72. The present Directors are: James Grooms, J. C. Moore and A. F. Moore.

The Poorman School, District No. 71, was originally built in 1868, three-quarters of a mile south of where it now stands. An early Board was made up of W. A. Poorman and S. H. Gasaway, and among the early teachers were M. G. Stevenson and R. P. Barr. In 1876 it was moved to the southwest part of Section 3, where it is now located.

In 1869 the Doran or Bean School, District No. 76, was erected in Section 29. The first Board embraced the names of Z. J. Baird, S. C. Doran and J. W. Farrar, and among the early teachers were: Maggie Donelson, Erastus Kinzel and John Moore. In 1882 it was abandoned and the present school was built at the west boundary of Section 9. The present Board is composed of Henry Wilhelm, H. H. Tatkenhost and J. F. Farrar.

In the early 'seventies the Brewster, or "Pleasant View" School, in District No. 77, was built on the Brewster land, on the east boundary of Section 28. An early Board consisted of J. Brewster, C. J. Bishop and H. Mohlenhoff, and among the early teachers were S. M. Leitch, G. R. Hamman and Charles Kincaid. In 1890 a larger and better school took the place of the old one and Miss Katrine Morgan, of Mattoon, wielded the birch in the following year. The name "Pleasant View" was suggested by the fact that the school is on the crest of the water-shed. The present Board consists of H. Furste, B. Horsey and E. C. Homann.

In 1872 Union No. 8, now known as Zion School, in District No. 75, was built in the southwest corner of Section 18 by M. S. Ashworth and William Thornton. Among the early teachers were John H. Moore, M. G. Stevenson and Frank Harry. The present structure was built in 1899 at a cost of $700. Miss Nellie Camery was the first teacher.

In 1869 Wesley School was built in the southwest corner of Section 13, where it still serves the needs of District No. 74. An early Board was composed of Jacob Ernst, Allen Whitsehl and J. Gideon, and among the early teachers were Wm. Webster and R. P. Barr and Thornton Ashbrook. The present Board consists of Robert Watkins, Clarence Ernst and C. O. Handley.

At the north, in Town 14, are five schools. In the early sixties a school was built in the southeast corner of Section 28. It was long and narrow and its weak construction caused its roof to sag in the center, which peculiarity gave it the name of the "Sway-back." Among its earliest teachers were Mrs. Clint Hutchinson, M. G. Stevenson, W. D. Hanna and C. G. Chrisman. In 1875 it was torn down and a new school house was erected, which still stands in District No. 68.

About 1865 a school house was built in what is now District No. 122. It was near the line between Sections 23 and 24, and the district included parts of both sections. Naturally, the directors were divided in their choice of location, and when a majority belonged to the opposite section the school house would be pulled across the road, until it had been moved four times. Thus it got its name of "Pulltight."

Another union school is the Hartford, located in the northwest part of Section 20, on the Douglas County line near the border of North Okaw. It was built in the early 'sixties. It is in District No. 121.

The Floyd School, in District No. 69, is the nicest and best kept rural school in the county. The first building was erected in 1860 on the south line of Section 30. It was very small and the early teachers were Mr. Walters (also a teacher of instrumental and vocal music) and

Mr. Young. An early Board was composed of Hugh McKane and Dudley Louthan. In 1869 the school was moved across the line to the present site in Section 31. In 1898 a large and commodious building took its place. It has a belfry and bell, is nicely, papered and the walls are ornamented with pictures.

In 1863 the Antioch School was built in the northeast corner of Section 35. An early Board consisted of John W. Beavers, Samuel W. Orcutt and James Beggs, and among the early teachers were A. G. Chapman, Emma A. Wright and Mary G. Orcutt. The school building is a substantial frame and, with the exception of an eight-foot addition built in 1904, it remains unaltered, serving as an educational center for District No. 67. Ten or fifteen teachers in the township during the winter of 1904-05 were women, the total enrollment numbering 499 pupils, 254 of whom were boys and 245 girls.

Churches.—There are three country churches in the township, only one of which is in Town No. 14. It belongs to the Methodist Episcopal denomination and is known as the Central Church. It is located in the northeast corner of Section 36, near the Seven Hickory line, and was built in 1870. The material was gratuitously hauled from the Ambraw by people interested in the new church, and the brick foundation was built by Jacob Harry. The first pastor was Rev. William Mitchell, a pioneer circuit rider, who, in the winter of 1870-71, held one of the most extensive revivals ever known in that part of the country. It is said of him that he was responsible for the erection of all the Methodist Episcopal churches in that locality.

Four miles south and one mile west, located in the northeast corner of Section 23, Town 13, is the Wesley chapel, another Methodist church. In 1867 the first building was erected at a cost of $2,600, and was dedicated in December of the same year. Among the early officers were J. S. Gideon, Abner Brown and Joel Stevenson. Early pastors were Revs. Mr. Shirley, Mr. Mitchell and Mr. May. In 1890, during the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Osborne, the present church was built on the same site at a cost of $2,300. The present Board is composed of Jacob Ernst, Clem McDougle, Maggie Beals and H. Jenkins. The present pastor is Rev. F. M. Harry. The church also has a flourishing Sunday School, established in 1868. An early Superintendent was Joel Stevenson; the present Superintendent is John Gideon.

October 13, 1880, the St. Paul congregation, Evangelical Lutheran Church, was organized, and in 1882 a church was built in Section 15, at a cost of $1,300, and on November 5th of that year it was dedicated. Among the first officers were Christian Schroeder, Wilhelm Mohlenhoff and Gerhard Hofercamp. Early pastors were Revs. F. Schlechte, J. Brockmann, J. Todt and G. Wolter. In 1905 the increasing congregation required a larger building, and there is now in process of erection a handsome $13,000 brick edifice, which is to be the finest rural church in the county, if not in Central Illinois. It is located at the southeast corner of Section 21, Town 13. The church has a membership of 242, and it maintains a Sunday School, the average attendance of which is 175. The pastor, Rev. A. F. Nuendorf, serves as Superintendent. Among the present board are: Herman Zu Hone, Louis Blume, Fred Pardeich, Henry Furste, Mr. H. Niemeyer.

The enterprising spirit of the township is expressed in the fact that in 1895 a site was offered at the village of Humbolt, and the sum of $40,000 was subscribed, in the hope of securing the Eastern Illinois Normal, now located at Charleston.

HUTTON TOWNSHIP.

Hutton Township bears the distinction of having been the locality first occupied by a permanent settler in Coles County—the two numerous families of Parkers coming in not far apart in point of time, one locating in the northwestern part, and the other upon its eastern border. It is the southeastern township of the county, abutting Clark and Cumberland counties upon the east and south, respectively, Ashmore Township upon the north, and having on its western border the meandering channel of the Embarras. It contains approximately fifty-four sections of land, which varies in quality from the richest prairie to the broken tracts of clay soil and bluffs, along the river upon the west. Its first representative upon the Board of Supervisors was the man for whom the township was named—John Hutton.

The township is excellently watered and drained by Whetstone Creek and its tributaries upon the north, the smaller creeks which flow into the Embarras on the west, and the numerous branches of the Hurricane Creek and others in the central and southern portion. This condition makes it most excellent for stock raising, and to that vocation most of its farmers are devoted.

First Things—Villages, Postoffices, Etc.—

The first bridge across the Ambraw (Embarras) was a wooden structure built near the point of the first county settlement, and the location of the county's first mill, in Section 25-12-9.

The first Justices of the Peace were Joel Connelly and James Gill.

No railroads pass through Hutton Township and it has no towns or villages of importance as centers of trade.

The most ambitious attempt to build a town there was when Salisbury was laid out in 1837.

A postoffice was instituted there in 1844 by David Weaver, and called Stewart. In 1850 the name of the office was changed to Ashby (after pioneer John Ashby), but as that was so similar to Ashley, the name of another office in the State, it was again changed in 1861 to Hutton.

Salisbury was so named by John Hulén, who owned part of the land, after his native place, which was Salisbury, N. C. William Gilbert built the first house there and, together with a man named Bartness, started the first store. The village never grew beyond a dozen or so houses and a store, and the postoffice there has, within the past two or three years, been discontinued, the people receiving their mail over rural route No. 2, from Charleston. In fact, the entire township is at this time without a postoffice. Its people now get mail by means of two rural routes from Charleston, two from Casey and one from Westfield.

A postoffice called Butte was started in 1852 on the road in the southwest quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 31-12-10. In 1892 it was abandoned and the postoffice of Dirigo started on the road, about three-fourths of a mile northwest, in the south part of Section 30-12-10. It served its day, and then, like the others, disappeared before the modern improvement of rural free-delivery.

Diona (at first called "Dogtown," from the numerous dogs kept by its early inhabitants), is located at the southeast corner of Section 24-11-9. It was never platted as a village in this county, although it grew to be as populous as Salisbury. It is on the county line, and its population is about equally divided between Cumberland and Coles. A postoffice was started there in 1869.

An early center of population in Hutton was known as "Stringtown," so called because the inhabitants were rather numerous for about three-fourths of a mile along the Charleston and Westfield road, where it ran through the southwestern part of Section 5, and the northwestern part of Section 8. A saw-mill was located there, a brick yard, and a store which was run at different times by two early ministers of the Christian Church, Thomas Goodman and Samuel Peppers. There was a church there, with a school house and a carpenter and blacksmith shops. Thus it will be seen that Stringtown was at one time about as important a trading point as many pretentious villages. Nothing now remains of this early village but a church and a school house.

Secret Orders.—The only secret order organization existing in the town of Hutton is Hutton Lodge, No. 692, I. O. O. F., which was instituted April 7, 1881, in the Masonic Hall in Salisbury, and L. C. Cottingham was the first N. G. and T. L. Endsley, V. G. In 1895 they built a lodge room above Cox's store on Lot 12 in Salisbury. The building burned on January 12, 1903. The lodge, which owned the lot, rebuilt from the ground up during the same year. The present officers are: W. A. Cox, N. G.; Joseph Goff, V. G.; William Gossett, R. Sec'y; John A. Smith, P. Sec'y; G. W. Abernethy, Treas. The lodge has 111 members.

A Masonic Lodge was instituted in Salisbury about 1871, and continued there until about 1882, when it was moved to Diona, and is now located over the line in Cumberland County. No information about its officers and early members can be obtained from citizens there now.

Churches.—The denomination known as the Christian Church had many adherents in Hutton in an early day, and they organized a church at Stringtown about 1836, and erected a log building. About 1858 a brick building was erected, which was destroyed by a wind-storm in 1876, and during the same year a frame building was put up in its stead. Early preachers there were, Rev. Harmon Gregg, Rev. Samuel Peppers, Rev. David Campbell, from Wabash Point, and others. For some years past it has had no regular pastor.

Adams Chapel Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1838, and a log building erect ed the same year, on the northeast part of the southwest quarter of Section 21-11-10, was their place of worship. Rev. Burk was one of the early pastors. The church occupies at present a frame building erected in 1870 in the southwest part of Section 17-11-10. They have no regular pastor at present. The Trustees are John Moore, W. B. Johnson and Elijah Adams.

Whetstone Separate Baptist Church was organized in 1843 at Adam Coon's residence, in the northwest part of Section 33-12-10, by Rev. Matthew Baker, who was its first pastor. Their first house of worship was a frame building put up in 1857 in the northwest part of Section 33-12-10. Rev. Stanley B. Walker was the first preacher of this denomination in the township, and assisted these early congregations. Rev. Whitfield and Rev. William Bridgman were early pastors. Their first building was taken down and a new one erected in its place in 1887.

Hurricane Separate Baptist Church was the outcome of a division in the preceding church, and was organized by Rev. William Bridgman, who became its first pastor. They put up a frame building in 1858 on the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 19-11-10. That lasted until 1889, when it was torn down and the present building erected on the same site. Rev. Berry Webb is the pastor.

Little Flock Regular Baptist Church was organized at the Center School House, in the southwest corner of Section 15-11-10, on November 29, 1862. Among its organizers and early officers were: L. Gilbert, Jephtha Parker, Nathan Austin, John Alexander, Levi Sanger, Jesse Sanger, and T. J. Thornton. Its first pastor was Rev. James B. Walker, who was ordained at that meeting. Their church building was put up in 1865 on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 22-11-10. Their last pastor was Rev. T. D. Davis. They have none at present.

Liberty Chapel United Brethren in Christ was organized in 1852 in a log school house known as the Liberty Schoolhouse, by Rev. Walton C. Smith. Their first building was a frame, erected in 1857, on the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 34-12-10. Rev. Smith was its first pastor and later ones were Alexander Helton, Samuel Zook and Abraham Bennett. The old house was sold and moved and the present one built on the same site in 1904. The present pastor is H. S. Reese.

Weaver Chapel United Brethren in Christ Church was built in the year 1864 in the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter Section 23-11-10. The church was organized in 1864 by P. E. Chittenden and A. J. Nugent. The first pastor was Abraham Bennett. The first church house burned down December 25, 1899, and was rebuilt in 1900. Present pastor is H. S. Reese.

Oak Ridge United Brethren in Christ Church was organized by Rev. James Cogell in the year 1882 in what was known as the Hanley School House, in Section 12-11-9. The church house was erected in 1894 in the southeast corner of Section 1-11-9. James Cogell was its first pastor. Allen Bensley, J. W. Sawyer and A. J. Handley are the Board of Trustees. The present pastor is H. S. Reese.

Salisbury United Brethren in Christ Church was organized in the year 1896 by Rev. Rider, who was the first pastor. The church house was built in the year 1897, on the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of Section 10-11-10. The present pastor is H. S. Reese.

Wiley Chapel Christian Church, situated in the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 1-11-10, was organized by Rev. David Campbell in the year A. D. 1871. The church house is of brick. The trustees were E. Connelly, Solomon Beavers, Adam Cox, William Beavers and Owen Wiley. The first pastor was David Campbell and the present one Rev. Nidy.

Schools.—The first Connelly school house (No. 26) was built in the year 1850. The first teacher was J. C. Wright. A second house of brick was built in the year 1870 in the northeast corner of Section 25-12-10. The present teacher is Miss Mabel Stewart.

Davis School (No. 27) had its first house built in the year 1867. Some of the early teachers were John Ingram, G. B. Davis and John M. Smith. The present school house was built in the year 1900, on the site of the first one in the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 27-12-10. The present teacher is Maude Brown.

Johns School House (Dist. No. 28) is in the northeast corner of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 33-12-10. The first teachers were John Ingram and John M. Smith. The present teacher is Jennie Case.

Rennels School House (No. 29) was built in the year 1884 in the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of Section 31-12-10. Some of the early teachers were Murray Stone, John M. Smith and J. A. Tremble. The present teacher is Lucy Gossett.

The first Stringtown School House (No. 30) was built about 1856 or 1857 in the northwest corner of Section 8-11-10. The second school house was built in the year 1884 on the same site, the old one having been torn down. Some early teachers were Franklin Alexander and John M. Smith. The present teacher is Miss May Madding.

The first Salisbury School House (No. 31) was built about 1855-56, in the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 10-11-10. Some of the first teachers were: Andrew Edwards, Valentine McGahan, John Ingram and John Redman. A second house was built later, but was taken down in 1901 and a new building erected the same year, situated in the southwest corner of Section 3-11-10. The present teacher is Miss Helen Gray. Wiley School House (No. 32) was built in the year 1873 in the southwest corner of the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 1-11-10. The first teacher was Nettie Brooks. Belva Kocht is the present teacher.

Goble School House (No. 33) was built in the year 1873 in the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of Section 6-11-11. The first teacher was S. P. Davis. The present teacher is Miss Clara Endsley.

In the Berkley District (No. 34) the first school house was built in the year 1866, and was taken down, and the present one erected in the year 1899, in the southwest corner of Section 18-11-11. Its first teacher was John A. Riggins and the last teacher Della Moore.

Brandenburg School House (No. 35) was first built in the year 1857. The first teacher was Burgess Burkley. Some others were Valentine McGahan, Benjamin Dawson and William Gossett. The second school house was built on the same site in the year 1881 in the southeast corner of Section 14-11-10. The last teacher was Clayborn Rhue.

The first Center School House (No. 36) was built in the year 1856, in the southwest corner of Section 15-11-10. Its first teacher was George Padget. Some early teachers were: W. H. Schoonover, A. Eastin, Cynthia Kellogg, Benjamin Dawson, T. L. Endsley and W. G. Walker. The second house, of brick, was built in 1882 in the northeast corner of Section 21-11-10. It was burned down in the winter of 1884-85 and rebuilt in 1885. The present teacher is Clara Bidle.

The first Hutton School House (No. 37) was built in the year 1858 in the southeast corner of Section 18-11-9. The first teacher was May Nickols. Other teachers were George Padget, Lizzie Balch and Ricard McPherson. The second school house on the same site was built in the year 1883. The present teacher is O. C. Jenkins.

The first Hanley School House (District No. 38) was built about the year 1866. Some of the early teachers were Thomas Balch and Nettie Brooks. The present school house was built in the year 1900 and was last taught by Edgar Leitch. It is located near the center of Section 12-11-9.

LAFAYETTE TOWNSHIP.

Lafayette, the west central township of Coles County, is bounded on the north by Humbolt Township, on the east by Charleston, on the south by Pleasant Grove and on the west by Mattoon Township. It contains thirty-six square miles (an exact Congressional township) and its first Supervisor was William T. Jones.

The township is drained at the north by Riley Creek, which rises in Section 5 and flows east into Charleston Township at Section 1, thence south, emptying into the Kickapoo. The latter stream rises in Mattoon Township, flows east through the south center of Lafayette, draining that portion of the township, and on through Charleston Township to the Embarras River, where it empties. In the days of the pioneer broad-belts of woodland lined the two streams, and here the Kickapoo Indians lived and moved and had their being. The increasing cost of living, as well as increasing taxes on lands, has naturally resulted in the clearing of the woodland and to-day only those who have need for a little pasture or have money sufficient to enable them to maintain idle lands have preserved traces of the native forest and what is left is more picturesque than useful. The Dead Man's Grove once covered a large tract, but is now only a clump of trees on Section 4, abutting the north road between Mattoon and Charleston.

Cutting diagonally through the south middle portion of the township is the old State road, while across the northern end of the township was the line of the "Archer Road." Up to 1855, when the Terre Haute & Alton road pushed its way westward through Lafayette, the pioneers were still clinging to the woodlands and only by degrees did they venture to the prairie lands away from the fuel and timber supplies. The appearance of the first train made hearts rejoice and with it came promises of ease and luxury.

LOXA VILLAGE.

Midway between Charleston and Mattoon a station on the railroad for passengers and a switch were provided at the place now known as Loxa. In 1863 Capt. B. F. Jones platted the original town of two blocks, which was afterward enlarged by the Egbert and the Susan Jones additions. In 1868 a frame building was moved there in which the first general merchandise store was opened by Mr. Jones. The town was first named Stockton, possibly because of so much stock being shipped from that point, as stock raising was and is a chief industry of the township, but there being another Stockton in the State, the postal authorities required a change of name and Loxa was chosen, although it was not adopted by the railroad and general public until years afterward. In 1868 the postoffice was moved into the Jones building, where it has since remained, the present Postmaster being W. G. Armstrong. Later a blacksmith shop and a barber shop were established in the village. Two grain elevators supply the need for grain storage, that of R. H. Teeple, having been built in 1885, and that of J. O. Linder, in 1897. The capacity of the former is 12,000 and that of the latter 15,000 bushels.

Schools.—In 1857 a school house was built in Section 11, which is now known as the North Loxa School, and stands three-quarters of a mile north of the village. The first teacher was A. J. Fryor, now a lawyer of Charleston, and among the early Directors were John Monroe and William Shoemaker.

In 1871 T. J. Lee, a West Point graduate, opened an academy, and for seventeen years it was the pride of Coles County as an educational institution. During that time many were sent forth to take their places in the educational, legal, medical, religious and civic departments of the commonwealth. It furnished several County Superintendents, among whom were: C. T. Feagan, John Sawyer, W. E. Millar, A. J. Funkhouser, John Whisenand, all of Coles County, and Miss Nora Smith, of Douglas County. Mr. Lee also served two terms as County Superintendent of Schools. He died in 1888 and the academy, which passed into the hands of his brother, survived but three years.

In the fall of 1904 the academy building passed into the hands of District No. 79, when it was transformed into the primary department of the district. Miss Dora Gammill was the first teacher.

Telephone, Railroads, Etc.—A telephone system, now known as the Citizens' Mutual, established in 1900 in Loxa, connects that village with different points in its own and surrounding townships. In June, 1904, the electric railroad line was completed through Lafayette, by way of Loxa, connecting Mattoon and Charleston.

In 1878 the Grayville & Mattoon Railroad—now the Peoria branch of the Illinois Central—cut its way through the southwest corner of the township. On the line of the road in Section 29 is Jones' Switch, where, in 1900, W. D. Jones built a grain elevator of 8,000 bushels capacity. The Clover Leaf road passes through the extreme southeastern portion of the township.

On the Benj. D. Turney farm—early known as the Eckles farm—in Section 28, are the Turney Springs, once a camping ground for the Kickapoo Indians. The springs were opened to the public in 1865 by Mr. Turney, since when they have been a favorite resort for picnic parties.

In Section 18 is Grant Park Place, an unincorporated addition to Mattoon, on the west line of Lafayette Township. It is an historic spot in the county. It was established as the Union Fair Grounds in 1859, and on August 10, 1860, it was the scene of one of the biggest rallies of that campaign. Richard Yates, Owen Lovejoy and R. J. Oglesby spoke and a feast was spread on three tables, one-quarter of a mile long. In 1861 it was made a military camp and barracks, and was named Camp Grant. It was here that the Twenty-first Illinois Regiment was sworn into service by Capt. U. S. Grant, and he later became its Colonel.

On August 1, 1863, in Dumas Van Deren's grove, near the State road, southeast of Mattoon, the Knights of the Golden Circle held their historic "armed peace meeting."

Township Schools.—Outside of Loxa the township has nine schools. The oldest is the Monroe, formerly known as the True School. It was established as a subscription school in 1829, the pioneer teacher being Daniel Barham, who was also a "Hard Shell" Baptist preacher, and on Sundays the school house served as a church. It was of logs and built on the True land. In 1857 a frame school house was built near by, the first teacher of which was James McCullom and the first School Board consisted of William Leitch, Dumas Van Deren and William R. Jones. It was later moved three-quarters of a mile east to the Monroe farm, in Section 21, where, in 1900, the present building was erected in District No. 83.

In 1838 a log school house was built on Dumas Van Deren's land, in what is now Section 13. It was a subscription school and among the first teachers were Daniel Turney, John J. Peterson and J. A. McCullom. This school was abandoned in 1856. Thomas E. Woods, later editor of the "Mattoon Journal," was the last teacher. In the summer of 1857 a frame building now known as the South Loxa, or Hancock School, was erected in Section 14, where it now stands in District 84. Its earliest teacher was Phil. J. Fisher, now of St. Louis.

The Phipps School, built in 1857, at a cost of $370, stands at the southwest corner of Section 27, near the old James Ashmore place, where, in February, 1831, the first county election was held. The first teacher was J. J. Phelps. The building burned in 1899 and a larger one was erected in what is now District No. 86.

In 1880 the district just mentioned was divided and a new school building was erected in the district now known as No. 85, in Section 26. It is the Harmon School, and two of the early Directors were Samuel Harmon and Kilis Mason. It was burned in 1892 and a new building erected in its place.

In 1857 a school house was built in Dead Man's Grove, now known as the Oak Grove School, in District 80, in Section 4. The first teacher was John Latta and the first School Board William Millar and Frederick True. In 1903 the school house was rebuilt.

The Frazier School, sometimes called the Aye School, in District 81, Section 5, was built in 1872 on Henry Frazier's land. Among the early teachers were Ella Aldrich, Alice Berry and Helen Gaw. The members of the first Board were: Henry Frazier, R. B. Aye and J. F. Bush.

In 1873 the Plain View School District was organized, the first Board being Eliza Vanetta, S. B. Gray and J. W. Williams. In 1874 the present school in District No. 87 was established and a house built on the W. R. Jones farm in Section 29. The early teachers were Sue Linn, Lillie Boyle and William Phipps.

In the same year the Shinn School, in what is now District 82, was erected on Dumas Van Deren's farm at the southwest corner of Section 17. Among the early teachers were Capt. W. E. Robinson, William Phipps and Jasper Miller. Early Directors were William Leitch and Benjamin D. Turney.

April 15, 1905, Grant Park Place was set off from the Shinn District as District No. 154, and the following Directors were elected: J. Hornbeck, L. Ballinger and E. Hickey. On May 4 $1,000 in bonds were voted for a frame school building, which was erected during the summer of 1905.

At present there are four women and six men teachers in the township, and the enrollment for 1904-05 was 271 boys and 203 girls.

Rural Churches.—The oldest church in the township is Bethel, on the south line of Section 23, adjacent to which is the oldest cemetery. It is a Predestinarian Baptist, organized in 1829, Daniel Barham being the first preacher. In 1836, the first church, a log structure, was built. In 1865 a frame building was erected which later was remodeled. Elder George W. Dalby, now of Mattoon, has been pastor for fifty years.

In 1840 a dissension arose on a question of order, and several prominent members withdrew, organizing another Predestinarian Church, which held its meetings in the same building until 1856, when they built a house of worship at what is now 1421 Wabash Avenue, Mattoon. It was the first church in the new town and a graveyard was established at its rear. The building, erected under the pastorate of Elder Thomas Threlkeld, cost $2,500, and its first Trustees were James Jeffris, F. G. and E. M. True. It was sold in 1869 to the United Brethren and the Predestinarians returned to Lafayette Township and built near what is now the Big Four Railroad at the Monroe crossing. In 1890 the building was moved to where it now stands in Section 21. It is known as the Little Bethel, or "Stick-tight" Church. The latter name was given it because of the congregation once "sticking tight" to the freshly painted seats. Elder J. G. Sawin, of Mattoon, is now and has been for years its pastor. E. P. Ashbrook and I. W. Sawin are the present Board.

The Kickapoo Methodist Episcopal Church, which was moved to Lerna from the southern part of the township in 1882, was built in 1860, and was the outgrowth of an old log church.

In 1887 the Plain View Methodist Episcopal Church was built in Section 29. Among the first pastors were Revs. Richard Tate and E. Gallagher, but in 1904 the church was discontinued.

The Nineveh Missionary Baptist Church, now known as the New Liberty, was built in 1875, in Section 24, its first pastor being Rev. William Barker. The present pastor is Rev. T. F. Hayes, of Mattoon, who holds services there once a month.

The Mount Pleasant Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in 1844 by Rev. J. W. Woods, later of Mattoon. A. K. Ashmore and Jeremiah Craig were first officers. In 1855 a church building was erected in Section 2, on land donated Rev. R. C. Hill, he being the first pastor. In 1868 a new church was built at Loxa, while Rev. Mr. Hill was still its pastor. G. W. Davies, A. G. Harmon and Albert Brown are the present Board of Trustees. Rev. J. H. Milholland is pastor.

Town Hall.—In 1891 a town hall was built in Section 21, where the township elections are held. The young people of the vicinity in 1904 organized a debating society, the "Lagossian," which holds weekly meetings from September to May. It also has a library donated to the society in March, 1905, by Adolf Summerlin, editor and proprietor of the "Mattoon Commercial."

MATTOON TOWNSHIP.

When the townships of Coles County were organized the first representative upon the County Board for the town of Mattoon was James Monroe, afterwards Colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers in the Civil War, who took part in the battles of Perryville and Chickamauga, and was killed a few days after the latter at Farmington, Tenn.

Mattoon is in the western central part of the county, abutting Moultrie and Shelby Counties and lying between North Okaw and Paradise, with Lafayette on the east. It is a regular congressional township, containing thirty-six sections. It was originally mostly prairie land, having but a little of two points of timber, Whitley at the west and Little Wabash at the south. The prairie land is high and sheds water to the east and west and south, the streams draining it being the Kickapoo, Little Wabash and Whitley Creeks, with their branches. The native timber left will not exceed about one hundred and fifty acres in extent. The Wabash Point settlement was one of the most important and populous in the county, and the first house built out upon the prairie was by pioneer George M. Hanson, about 1829; and it was in this house (which stood exactly upon the line that later separated Mattoon and Paradise) that Hanson started the county's first postoffice. There were two very early postoffices in Mattoon Township, "Wabash Point," started by Gideon Edwards, probably at or near Richmond, in 1851, and "Republican," started by Charles W. Nabb in 1852 at Richmond, which was doubtless a successor to the Wabash Point Postoffice. The Republican Postoffice was later moved to Langston's place (later William Clark's), west of the Little Wabash, and was continued perhaps until Mattoon started. In 1893 a postoffice was started at Magnet, a way station on the Illinois Central Railroad, about three miles south of Mattoon.

John L. Allison built at Richmond, about 1836, the third frame house in the county. It was the largest and handsomest home for miles around. Frame houses were more numerous after 1840. About 1850 the Dole Brothers settled in Sections 7 and 8, and erected handsome homes. Others emulated their example and many dwellings were built in after years which stand to-day as towers of enterprise and thrift.

Rural Schools.—Mattoon Township has five rural schools. The Mooney School was established in a log house about 1840. In 1850 it was enlarged by an additional room. Early teachers were William Littler, David Freeland and Gideon Edwards. In 1862 a frame school house was built on Elisha Linder's farm, Miss Nancy Linder being the first teacher. It was replaced by a larger building in 1902, which now stands in District 102, in Section 33.

The Dixie School, No. 103, was built in 1860, where it now stands, in Section 31. An early Board was composed of C. K. Rightsell, Jefferson Curry and E. Alexander. Early teachers were Hannah Moore, John Gregg and William Bales.

The Dole School, No. 98, in Section 8, was the outgrowth of private schools, the first of which was taught in a log house in Section 6. The second was located in Section 7, Miss Lizzie Chamberlain being first teacher. The third, also a log house, stood in Section 9. It was made a public school in 1861. The first School Board consisted of C. M. Dole, Edwin Wright and Mr. Layton. The first teacher was Miss Mattie Ritter. The present school was built in 1866, among the early teachers being Hattie Reeder, Fannie Chamberlain and James G. Wright.

The Linder School, in District 99, was built in Section 20 in 1865. In 1867 it was moved to its present location in Section 21. An early Board embraced the names of Elisha Linder, Ephraim Sparks and E. W. Phillips. Early teachers were Samuel Scott, Lawrence Green Wharton and W. H. Puliston.

The Mound School, District 101, in Section 26, was built in 1897 to take the place of a smaller building erected in 1866, in which James Ley was a teacher. On the Board in 1897 were Charles Redman and Cliff Daniels.

Churches.—There are but two rural churches in the township, the Wabash Methodist Episcopal and the Mt. Moriah Cumberland Presbyterian. The former is a $2,400 brick structure, erected in 1875 on the State road, in Section 33. Among the early pastors of this church were Revs. William Mitchell and Uriah Warrington. The present pastor is Rev. E. L. Darley.

The Mt. Moriah Church was started in 1873 by Revs. John W. Woods and T. J. Campbell, the latter being pastor. In 1895 the Cumberland Presbyterian Church suspended, but the Predestinarian Baptists, who held meetings on alternate Sundays since 1875, still occupy the church once a month, but have no regular pastor. It is located on the south side of the State road, in the western part of Section 22.

CITY OF MATTOON.

Not until 1850 did any one settle near where the city of Mattoon now stands, a familiar scene during those days being the herding of cattle, the Noyes, Trembles, Messers and Allisons spending days in the saddle with their herds, little dreaming of the future city. Two years later came rumors of railroads, and the aim of every settler was to secure land at or near the crossing. All of Section 13, except about thirty blocks in the southeast portion owned by George Curyea, were secured by Elisha Linder, E. Noyes, James T. Cunningham, Steven D. Dole, John L. Allison and John Cunningham. In December, 1854, it was platted; on May 14, 1855, it was named for Mr. William Mattoon, one of the contractors of the Terre Haute & Alton Railroad, and on the following day the lot sale began. The first house on the site was one brought from the Benjamin D. Turney farm, three miles east, in February, 1855. It was drawn over the snow on hickory poles by sixteen yoke of oxen, eight yoke being driven by Benjamin D. Turney and the other eight by Charles Michael, James and John Michael, sons of the latter, riding within the house to the new town. It was located on the east side of the Illinois Central Railroad, near the present crossing of the Peoria branch. Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Thompson, the first occupants, opened a boarding house, wherein Miss Sarah Norvell, sister of Mrs. Thompson, and R. H. McFadden were married September 18, 1855, by Rev. Isaac Hart. It was the first wedding in the prairie town. The Thompson home was also the first place of worship, Rev. Mr. Hart serving as pastor.

So anxious were the people to build that they did not wait for the lot sale. They secured the refusal of selected sites and proceeded to build. On March 28 R. H. McFadden and Benjamin Watson, carpenters, raised the frame of a two-room house for Bluford Sexson, in one room of which a general merchandise stock was installed, the first in the embryo town. The house still stands on the original site, 1717 Charleston Avenue. The second house was built by Michael Tobey at what is now 1300 Charleston Avenue.

A second store was that opened north of the Terre Haute & Alton road, at what is now 1220 Richmond Avenue, by Steven Cartmell. A third general merchandise store was opened by James M. True and James T. and John Cunningham, under the firm name of True, Cunningham & Co., in the lower part of a two-story frame building at about what is now 1212 Richmond Avenue. A real estate office was opened by John L. Allison and a grain warehouse by John Cunningham.

At the lot sale on May 15, 1855, hundreds of people gathered and the result surpassed the most sanguine expectations, some lots selling as high as $300 each.

Meanwhile, work on the railroads was being pushed and, when within a mile of Mattoon, an agreement was made between the contractors which placed the cost of the crossing of the lines upon the company which was last to reach that point. This fell on the Illinois Central, which was a few hours later than the Terre Haute & Alton in reaching the coveted goal, where the spikes were driven sometime about the first of June, 1855.

In October, 1855, the plat of the original town was filed at Charleston, when Mattoon received its legal name. The first brick building was built at what is now 1805 Charleston Avenue in 1855 by E. Noyes, where a general store was conducted by Joseph Withington.

The most rapid growth of the town had been in the northeast part, then known as "True-town," but the tide soon turned to Broadway, where, near the railroad crossing at what is now No. 1705, the Pennsylvania House was erected in July, 1855. It was the pioneer hotel and was built by Charles and Perry Sanderson. The first sidewalk was from it to the Illinois Central crossing and was made of cobs, presumably from the Cunningham elevator.

The second hotel was the "Union," or "Kentucky House," which was built at what is now 1601 Broadway, and conducted by W. H. K. Pile. The third was the Essex House, begun in 1857 and completed in 1859, where it now stands at the crossing of the Illinois Central and Big Four Railroads. There were other so-called hotels or boarding houses started soon after.

The first two-story brick business house was the one now standing at 1523 Broadway, which was completed in 1856. It was built by the Trues and occupied by Cunningham, Allen & Abel, with a stock of dry goods and queensware. In that year the first two children were born in Mattoon, Charles Cartmell in July and Miss Mollie Puff in September.

Austin Perry, the pioneer barber (colored), who is still in Mattoon, and who established his business in 1857, enjoys the distinction of having shaved President Lincoln.

Village Incorporated.—Mattoon was incorporated as a village in 1857, the first officers being Michael Tobey, President of the Village Board, and Dr. John Dora, Peter J. Drake, Rufus Houghton, N. W. Chapman, Trustees; F. A. Allison, Attorney; R. H. McFadden, Justice of the Peace, and John Dora, Treasurer. At this time there were four hundred inhabitants, about eighty dwellings, a dozen good stores, two hotels, a newspaper and a number of other business enterprises.

In June, 1857, Section 14 was platted by E. Noyes, the lots being sold privately. The first house in this section was located about what is now 1906 Charleston Avenue. The first brick building was a two-story business house erected by Hiram M. Tremble, where it still stands at 2022 Western Avenue, and where Mr. Tremble conducted a general merchandise store. The historic "jog," at Nineteenth Street, was due to a disagreement between the owners of the two sections—Mr. Noyes declining to allow the streets of his section to join those of Section 13.

During the rainy seasons the streets were quagmires, the single boards then serving as sidewalks oftentimes being submerged in mud. This seems paradoxical, since Mattoon is the highest point between Terre Haute and St. Louis, and is 740 feet above the level of the sea.

In 1858 Lincoln and Douglas made their famous Senatorial campaign, and both were in the city on September 18, Douglas having put up the night before at the Pennsylvania House. Douglas rode in a carriage or wagon from Mattoon to Charleston on the morning of the 18th, followed by a procession of Democrats. Frank A. Allison says he went on the same train with Lincoln to Charleston, while others claim that both Lincoln and Douglas went to the county seat by the State road, each at the head of a delegation. Lincoln was in Mattoon again in February, 1861, when he visited the grave of his father in Pleasant Grove Township, en route to Washington for his first inauguration.

City Charter Granted.—In March, 1861, by act of the Legislature, a city charter was granted, fixing the city limits at two miles square, the south half of Sections 11 and 12 being added at the north, and the north half of Sections 23 and 24 being added at the south of Sections 13 and 14. The first city election was held April 1, when James Monroe was elected Mayor. At this time the population was 1,500, and the city boasted a district library, a telegraph office, several private schools, a public school, six organized churches and about thirty thriving business houses. The Civil War came on, but notwithstanding the fact that many of the city's best men went to the front, Mattoon's prosperity continued.

An exciting time for Mattoon was August 1, 1863, when a large procession of the Knights of the Golden Circle and sympathizers passed through the city en route to the historic "Armed Peace Meeting," in Dumas Van Deren's Grove.

Rapid City Growth.—In 1863 the city's population was three thousand, eight hundred being of school age. It was in October of this year that School District No. 1 was divided into Districts No. 1 and No. 7, and in April, 1864, the first Ward Councilmen were elected, Alpheus Hasbrouck being Mayor. This dated the beginning of a substantial building boom and, year after year, two and three-story brick business blocks were erected until in 1870, when no fewer than twenty-five business blocks stamped permanency upon the city's prosperity.

In 1876 the population had grown to 5,000, notwithstanding the panic of 1873. In July, 1877, business was temporarily paralyzed by the great railroad strike, which came so near ending in bloodshed.

On March 24, 1879, the city was redistricted, the two wards being made into five. Thus divided, the city remained until March, 1897, when it was again redistricted and the present seven wards established, C. E. Wilson being at that time Mayor.

In 1880 the city's population was about 6,000; in 1890, about 7,000; in 1900, nearly 10,000, and at present (1903), estimating it from the school census, not less than 13,000. William Byers is now Mayor.

Prior to 1891 the streets were almost impassable during the rainy season, and it was no unusual sight to see teams stalled on Broadway in mud hub-deep to the wagon. Cows roamed at will and dog-fennel grew unmolested. During 1890, while Joseph Withington was Mayor, a movement for better streets was started and in 1891, while Frank Kern was Mayor, Broadway, from Fifteenth to Nineteenth Street, was paved and, in the following year, concrete sidewalks were laid on both sides of the pavement. Pavements of brick and permanent walks of brick and concrete were laid annually and, in 1903, there are about eleven miles of pavement and about fifty miles of permanent walks (brick and concrete) throughout the city, which is underlaid with a net-work of drainage, including three miles of trunk sewerage laid since 1893, which finds an outlet in the big Kickapoo dredge ditch through the south part of the city.

Although Mattoon was located upon the prairie, with only a single tree in what now constitutes its corporate limits (the historic lone elm at Thirty-second Street and Western Avenue), it is now truly a forest city, the streets being lined and the parks filled with magnificent trees planted by citizens, their sunrified shade stretching over beautifully kept lawns, whose velvet surface furnishes a rich setting for pretty homes. This "city beautiful" was made possible when the "town cow" nuisance was abolished in 1892, and the fences removed from the front of lots.

Parks, Hospital and Public Library.—Mattoon has three parks. The oldest is the North Park, which was deeded to the city in 1858 by John L. Allison and James T. and John Cunningham. It occupies a block in the northeast part of the city. It is traced with walks and ornamented with a fountain, grass-plats and settees. Central Park lies a block north of the Essex House, between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets. North of Broadway and just east of the city limits is Peterson Park, which came to the city through the will of the late Judge Abner M. Peterson. It embraces twenty acres, including the Peterson home. It has not yet been improved.

The Mattoon Driving Park, with one of the finest half-mile tracks in Central Illinois, comprises forty acres in the southeast part of the city. It was established in 1880 by a corporation, but is now owned by Harrison Joseph, who is President of a racing association recently organized, Louis Katz being Vice-President, William Johnson Secretary and George H. Rudy Treasurer.

The Odd Fellows' Old Folks' Home is an institution in which the city takes great pride. It was built in 1898 and dedicated in October of that year. To secure it the city gave the site of 136 acres on LaFayette Heights, granted immunity from taxation for fifty years, furnished free fire protection, a mile of paving, street lights and $1,200 in money. The home is a well built three-story brick structure, with basement, and cost about $35,000. It has accommodations for 120 residents. There are also a cottage, a laundry, a dairy and a greenhouse on the premises. D. E. Baldwin, the first Superintendent, was succeeded three years ago by Mrs. Lola L. Rickard, who is still Superintendent.

Another prided institution is the $35,000 Carnegie Library at 1600 Charleston Avenue. It is a two-story and basement stone structure, thoroughly equipped, and was opened September 9, 1903. Miss Blanche Gray is now Librarian. The library contains 6,000 volumes and has a capacity of 20,000. Among the earliest public libraries was one established in 1860, another in 1870 and still another in 1885, all of which were short-lived.

In 1893, while John F. Scott was Mayor, the following named Library Committee was appointed by the Council: Messrs. E. P. Rose, Frank Kern, J. W. Craig, Abram Spitzer, J. A. McFall and Mesdames E. Jennings, W. P. Dunlap, George Shaw and Miss Louise Beall. The Council appropriated $300 for books and the library was opened December 17, 1893, in the Holmes building, at 1723 Broadway, with Mrs. William Shaw as Librarian. It was moved to the city building at 114 South Seventeenth Street in 1895, where Mrs. Cynthia Tobey was librarian, and to its present quarters in 1903, L. L. Lehman being President of the Library Board at the time. Mr. Carnegie contributed $25,000 toward the building.

Churches.—There are thirteen church organizations in the city, eleven of which are enclosed in their own buildings. In 1856 a Predestinarian Baptist Church was built at what is now 1421 Wabash, the first pastor being Rev. Thomas Threlkeld. In 1869 the building was sold to the United Brethren who, three years later, abandoned it. In 1879 it was leased by the Calvary Baptists and a few years later it was torn down.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was organized in 1857 with twenty-eight members, the first two pastors being Revs. Knight and James Ashmore. In 1860, during the pastorate of Rev. John W. Woods, a $4,500 brick church was begun, but not finished until 1865. The present $12,000 brick church was built on the same site, 1321 Broadway, in 1895 during the pastorate of Rev. A. G. Bergen. A Carnegie pipe organ was installed in 1905. The present pastor is Rev. L. W. Madden.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1856 with eight members, Rev. Clemmie Goar being first pastor. In 1859 a $10,000 brick church was erected at what is now 1320 Champaign Avenue, during the pastorate of Revs. J. Lane and G. H. Thayer. In 1871 a $12,000 church was built at what is now the northwest corner of Seventeenth Street and Charleston Avenue. O. E. Wilkin was pastor. Other pastors were Revs. N. P. Heath and J. H. Noble. It burned June 13, 1905. The present $40,000 stone building at 1601 Charleston Avenue was erected in 1902-03, during the pastorate of Rev. J. B. Horney. This church also has a fine pipe organ. The present pastor is Rev. W. A. Smith, D. D. Dr. D. M. McFall, a Trustee, and his late wife, Mrs. Helen McFall, by their generous gift of 320 acres of land on Western Avenue, in memory of their two sons, Howard and Leslie, started a hospital fund in 1902, which has been increased by a farm from Mrs. Mary T. Morris, and other donations for the endowment of a Methodist Memorial Hospital to be erected in the city.

The Church of the Immaculate Conception, Roman Catholic, at 2018 Richmond Avenue, is the outgrowth of a frame church built a block east in 1857 under the pastorate of Rev. Fr. Mangin. The present church is a $50,000 brick structure, dedicated December 11, 1887, during the pastorate of Rev. Fr. J. W. Crowe. It was in this church in 1901 that the first big pipe organ in the city was installed. Rev. Fr. John J. Higgins is now in charge of the church, with Rev. Fr. E. A. Brodmann assistant. Just east on the same block stands a two-story brick parsonage, built in 1881, during the pastorate of Rev. Fr. Crowe.

The Christian Church was organized in 1857 and a frame house was built in 1860 on lots donated by James Monroe and J. T. Cunningham. The first pastor was Rev. N. S. Bastion. In 1872 the congregation divided and another church was built at what is now 2412 Western Avenue, Tyra Montgomery and James A. Powell being the leading spirits. In 1876 the two churches united. In 1895 and '96 the present $12,000 brick church was built on the original site at 1600 Wabash Avenue. It has a pipe organ and the present pastor is Rev. O. E. Kelley.

The Presbyterian Church was organized May 26, 1860, with twenty members, an early pastor being Rev. J. W. Allison. In 1864 a frame church was built, where it yet stands, at 200 North Twenty-first Street, the pastor at the time being Rev. Dr. A. Hamilton. On November 1, 1903, the present structure at 2201 Western Avenue was dedicated. It has one of the handsomest pipe organs in the city. The building cost about $35,000, and the furnishings and organ about $10,000 more. Rev. Ralsa F. Morley is pastor.

The Central Baptist Church was organized February 17, 1897, by the union of two former Missionary Baptist congregations. The first pastor was Rev. W. H. Thiele. In 1901, during the pastorate of Dr. Charles Boaz, the building formerly occupied by the Presbyterian Church at 200 North Twenty-first Street, was purchased. It was repaired and now is the home of the Central Church, Rev. P. F. Hayes being pastor.

The Unity Church of Liberal Christians was built where it now stands at 2000 Western avenue in 1873, the congregation having been organized in 1867 and reorganized in 1872 with forty members, among whom were: Joseph C. Dole, Charles Bennett, W. B. Dunlap, C. G. Weymouth, T. P. C. Lane and E. A. Thielens, Revs. George A. Dennison and Jasper L. Doughtit being early pastors.

The First Congregational Church is an outgrowth of the new School Presbyterian Church, which united with the Old School in 1872. The New School frame church, at what is now 1320 Charleston Avenue, was purchased, the early pastors being Revs. J. Morrison, A. L. P. Loomis, A. M. Thome and W. McKellar. In 1897, during the pastorate of Rev. R. W. Newlands, the present $14,000 brick church was built on the site of the old. The present pastor is Rev. Naboth Osborne.

The Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, organized in 1878, purchased the abandoned Missionary Baptist Church, at 216 Twenty-first Street, for a church home, which still serves the congregation. Early pastors were Rev. W. H. Tomlins and Dr. Thrall. The present pastor is Rev. Andrew Gray, D. D.

The German Lutheran Church was organized in 1904. Services are held in a rented room at the corner of Twenty-third Street and Champaign Avenue, the pastor being Rev. Krueger.

The Zion German Evangelical Church was organized in 1903 and holds services in the Unitarian Church, 2200 Western Avenue. Rev. William Marten is pastor.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in the spring of 1866, under the pastorate of Rev. Smith Nichols. In 1877 a house of worship was completed and in 1903 a larger church took its place at the corner of Twentieth and Moultrie streets. The present pastor is Rev. S. R. Cottrell.

The Second Missionary Baptist Church (colored) was organized in 1870 and the present church at 2001 Shelby Avenue was built. Rev. G. A. Thurmer, of Champaign, is pastor.

There are three missions in the city. The Baraca, at 2512 Marshall Avenue, was established by Mrs. F. E. Bell, in 1900, under the supervision of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The Shelby Avenue Mission, 2612 Shelby Avenue, was organized in 1901 by Rev. A. A. Wilson, pastor of the Christian Church. It is in charge of William Brown. The Union Mission, at 1205 Moultrie Avenue, was organized in 1901 by Mrs. J. D. Andrews and Mrs. F. M. Votaw, who still have it in charge. A pastor, Rev. James Ostema, of Chicago, has been employed.

Every church in the city supports a Sunday School and a Young People's Society, the total Sunday-school enrollment being more than 1,500.

A prosperous Young Men's Christian Association was established in 1881 through the efforts of D. T. McIntyre, who was ten years its President. It was made a railroad branch in 1892, when A. C. Bridgman was made General Secretary. While H. L. Markell was Secretary it was moved to its present quarters, at 1409 Broadway. J. C. Starkey is the present Secretary.

Schools.—The earliest schools were subscription schools. The first, the Mattoon Academy, was taught by Rev. D. F. McFarland. Another was under the supervision of Miss Ida McNett in the old Baptist Church; another was taught by James Ballou, and still another was by Miss Susan Cleaves (now Mrs. Bennett), in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

The first public school was conducted in the winter of 1855-56 by James A. McCullam, in the upper room of True, Cunningham & Co.'s store, at what is now 1212 Richmond Avenue. In 1856 the first public school building, a two-room brick, was erected at what is now 1307 Champaign avenue. Early teachers were: James Ballou, Principal, and Miss Kate McMunn, teacher.

The school enrollment in 1859 was 186, for whom three teachers were employed—Charles A. Sage, in the unfinished Christian church; Miss Mattie A. Smith, at what is now 1612 Charleston Avenue, and Miss Eliza Voris, in the brick school.

In 1863 there were 800 children of school age in the district and in October of that year the district was divided into Districts No. 1 and No. 7. The following year the Illinois Central was established as the dividing line between the districts.

The West Side School building was erected in 1864-65. O. S. Cook was the first Superintendent, with Miss Jennie McKinstry, Miss Miller and Mrs. Riley assistants. Other early Superintendents were T. H. Smith and T. B. Greenlaw. It was from the grounds of this school that a Government commission took observations of the total eclipse of the sun August 7, 1869. In 1871, during the superintendency of J. H. Thompson, a third story was added to the building. In 1899, during the superintendency of B. F. Armitage, the present $32,000 Hawthorne building was erected on the old site, which is now described as the 2,500 block, between Richmond and Champaign avenues.

The East Side School was begun in 1864, completed in December, 1865, and opened in January, 1866. The first Superintendent was R. M. Bridges, the teachers being Misses Susan M. Cleaves, Mattie Blake and C. P. Deming. Other early Superintendents were N. P. Gates and N. C. Campbell. In 1900 the building was torn down and the present Longfellow School, a counterpart of the Hawthorne, was built at the same cost, on the former site on the 1200 block, between Prairie Avenue and Broadway. The building committee for both the Longfellow and Hawthorne consisted of R. J. Conlras, I. A. Rhue and I. N. Gibbs.

The South School, 1217 Lafayette Avenue, a two-story brick, was completed in 1878 during the superintendency of E. P. Rose. The teachers were: Misses Lovinia Ewing, Carrie Riddle, Helen Patterson and Julia Pulsifer.

The North School, 1206 Shelby Avenue, a two-story brick, was built in 1882 while John Hall was Superintendent. The teachers were: Misses Ella Granger, Lila Wright and Carrie Riddle.

The Columbian School, a two-story brick, was completed in 1893 on the 2100 block between Marshall and Edgar Avenues, while B. F. Armitage was Superintendent. The first teachers were Misses Kate McCarty and Mary Phillips.

The Braden was built in 1893, where it still stands in Section 3, northwest of the city. It is under the jurisdiction of the Mattoon School Board, and was built during the superintendency of B. F. Armitage.

On March 5, 1886, the two school districts were consolidated into District No. 1, now known as District No. 100. The first Board after the consolidation was composed of J. R. Tobey, Dr. C. B. Fry, James W. Craig, G. F. Gould, Charles Bennett and A. R. Candy. B. F. Armitage was first Superintendent and continued in that office for fifteen years. Miss Lola Bridges was the first Principal. At that time there were twenty-one teachers in the grades. Until 1890 the Unitarian church housed the High School. In January of that year a new $20,000 High School building was opened at 2104 Western Avenue, with Miss Lucy B. Taylor as Principal. In 1902 it was enlarged at a cost of about $35,000, during the superintendency of W. W. Wilkinson. G. P. Randle, the present Superintendent, has been at the head of the schools for two years.

The St. Joseph Parochial School and Dominican Convent combined was built where it still stands at 1900 Richmond Avenue in 1903, during the pastorate of Rev. Fr. Murphy of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. It took the place of a frame school building erected in 1872 during the pastorate of Rev. Fr. Stiek.

Normal School.—The Eastern Illinois Normal School, now located at Charleston, is an abducted child of Mattoon. In 1895 a committee of Mattoon citizens, composed of C. E. Wilson (Chairman), James H. Clark, L. L. Lehman and J. F. Scott, secured the passage of a bill by the Legislature for the establishment of an Eastern Illinois Normal School. Mattoon (as a city) and its citizens subscribed money and concessions to the amount of about $140,000, but, notwithstanding the work of Mattoon and the committee, and the money appropriated, and the understanding by the Governor and supporters of the bill in the Legislature that the school should be located at Mattoon, Charleston, with a bonus of much less, succeeded in landing the prize which had been fathered by Mattoon—had been made possible only by the efforts and labors of Mattoon citizens.

The controversy regarding the location of the school developed much bitter feeling, and charges were freely made at that time that corrupt influences had governed the selection of the location. It is hoped, however, that the institution will fulfill the purposes for which it was founded and that the cardinal principles of honesty, uprightness, truth and fair-dealing may be instilled into the minds and woven into the characters of those who receive instruction within its walls.

Railroads and Shops.—The crossing of the Terre Haute & Alton and the Illinois Central in this city in 1855 was the first railroad crossing in the State. In 1862 the name of the Terre Haute & Alton Railroad was changed to the Indianapolis & St. Louis, and in 1868 Mattoon gave $60,000 in cash, thirty acres of ground and built a reservoir for water to secure the principal construction and repair shops, which were built in 1869 on blocks 89 and 90 between Eighth and Tenth streets. In 1870 Mattoon became a division point. The telephone installed between the shops and the dispatcher's office in 1877 was the first in the city. In 1889 the road passed into the hands of the Vanderbilts and the name was again changed to The Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad, and still later "Columbus" was changed to "Chicago," and it is now known simply as the "Big Four."

The water question became an urgent one with the railroad during the administration of C. E. Wilson as Mayor in 1895, on account of the failure of the reservoir to maintain a sufficient supply. The matter was taken up with energy by the Mayor and Council, and test wells upon the railroad's right of way, just at the western edge of the city, sunk by the city authorities, developed water, and a contract was made by which the city turned over the wells and machinery and a small tract of ground to the railroad, while the railroad agreed to release the city from all liability to furnish water or to maintain a reservoir.

The Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Road (now owned by the Illinois Central Railroad) was built in the later 'seventies. It was on this, the third independent line of the city, that the Peoria Division shops were located in 1880, when the city paid to the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Company the sum of $30,000 to secure them. They are located on the north of the right-of-way, between Twenty-eighth and Thirtieth streets.

The Chicago branch of the Illinois Central, which was built through the city in 1855-56, built its double-track through the city in 1901. The lower story of the Essex House, completed in 1859, still serves as the Union Station.

Manufacturing Industries and Enterprises.—The Chuse Manufacturing Company, which began on a small scale in 1875 with J. F. Chuse and Richard Heap as proprietors, is now an incorporated institution, capitalized at $65,000. The new plant, built in 1900, is located at 1320 Prairie Avenue, while just across the street west is the old plant built in 1880, which is also operated by the company. The principal article of manufacture is high-speed electric engines, five hundred having been completed to date. The officers are: J. F. Chuse, General Manager; E. C. Craig, President; S. W. Phillips, Vice-President; R. A. Bareuther, Treasurer; W. F. Johnson, Secretary.

Thatcher & Sons' construction and repair shops, at 2003 Broadway, were established in 1890 and enlarged in 1893. The company is made up of J. A. Thatcher and sons, and does an extensive business.

The Mattoon Stove and Range Works, at the north end of Twelfth Street, was started in 1903 by the removal from Charleston to this place of the stove-foundry plant, which had been in operation there for many years. A syndicate of the citizens of Mattoon purchased a tract of ground at $100 per acre, platted it and sold the lots at $175 each. A site was retained in the tract for the location of the foundry plant, which was donated to the company, and also the profits upon the sale of lots, amounting to about $18,000. The concern began operations in December, 1903, and now employs about seventy-five men. The manager and principal owner is J. W. Ramsey.

Starbuck, Sons & Co., manufacturers of children's vehicles, was started in 1902 at 1720 Charleston Avenue, and is now located at 2913 Cottage Avenue. The company is capitalized at $20,000 and is owned by R. B. Starbuck and his three sons, one of whom (Charles) invented the vehicle or "hand-car" which is manufactured.

The Mattoon Gas Company was chartered April 26, 1867, by Ebenezer Noyes, James M. True and Jonathan Richmond. In 1870 J. D. Herkimer and others purchased the charter and a plant was built where it yet stands, at 1321 Richmond Avenue. In 1875 the name was changed to the Mattoon Gas Light & Coke Company. In 1901 E. A. Potter and others, of Chicago, purchased the plant and capitalized it at $75,000, and in 1905 a plant of double capacity was built at 1320 Richmond Avenue. The present officers are E. A. Potter, President; M. E. Sampsell, Treasurer, and Arthur M. Hart, Secretary.

The Mattoon Heat, Light & Power Company was chartered February 16, 1892, as the Somerville & Marks Electric Light Company and the first street lights were installed in April of that year. On August 2, 1898, it became the Mattoon Heat, Light & Power Company, capitalized at $52,000. The first officers were: C. E. Wilson, President; Louis Katz, Vice-President; J. A. McFall, Secretary; J. F. Marks, Manager and Treasurer. The present officers are: P. C. Somerville, President; Louis Katz, Vice-President; E. A. Potter, Treasurer and General Manager; H. W. Tolle, Secretary. The plant is located on the west side of Fourteenth Street, south of the Big Four right of way.

The Mattoon City Railway Company's electric line is described in the general county history. Its power house and car barn is at the west side of Fourteenth Street, between Broadway and the Big Four Railroad. The officers are: E. A. Potter, President; A. W. Underwood, Secretary; L. S. Rose, Treasurer.

The City Electric Light plant was built in 1896, and is under the supervision of the Lights Committee of the City Council. It began with less than 100 lights and has now 180 arc lamps for street lighting.

The Mattoon Clear Water Company, incorporated in 1885, established the present plant at 1201 Marshall Avenue and laid six miles of mains that year. On November 22, 1890, H. S. Clark assumed control, since when nine miles of mains have been laid and eight public drinking-fountains established. The immense cistern and the 120-foot standpipe are supplied from twenty-one artesian wells. In 1905 the capacity of the plant was doubled at a cost of over $20,000. The officers are: H. S. Clark, President; John F. Scott, Secretary, and H. W. Clark, Treasurer and General Manager.

Newspapers.—The city has three newspapers—two daily and one weekly. The "Journal-Gazette," edited by H. F. Kendall and E. B. Tucker, is the result of the combining, in December, 1904, of the "Mattoon Weekly Gazette," established by R. W. Houghton in 1856, and the "Mattoon Daily Journal," established as a weekly by W. O. Ellis in 1863, and as a daily in 1874 by Thomas E. Woods. Notable editors of "The Gazette" were C. B. Bostwick and C. G. Peck, while Thomas E. Woods, William F. Purtill and M. H. Bassett will be remembered as editors of "The Journal." The consolidated plant is at 111 South Sixteenth Street.

The "Mattoon Commercial," a twelve-page weekly, was established as the "Radical Republican" by E. Noyes in 1867. It was changed to the "Mattoon Commercial" in 1871, and bought by Rufus Summerlin & Sons in 1872. Since 1876 Adolf Summerlin has been sole owner and editor. In connection with the printing office he conducts a book bindery, purchased in 1884 of U. T. S. Rice, who established it in 1874. The combined industry is located at 118 South Seventeenth Street.

The "Mattoon Morning Star," a daily, was established by John Cunningham & Sons May 20, 1888. In 1896 it was purchased by the Star Printing Company, and Wilbur B. Hinds became editor. The present editor is G. H. Mosser. The plant is located at 1616 Charleston Avenue.

Telephone Companies.—The Mattoon Telephone Company, capitalized at $25,000, was franchised in 1894, ten years after the passing of the Illinois Telephone Company, which did business in the city from 1881 to 1884, having at one time 100 'phones installed. The present officers of the company are: I. A. Lumpkin, President; C. E. Wilson, Vice-President; W. C. Lumpkin, Secretary and Treasurer. The central office is located at 117 South Seventeenth Street, and at present there are installed in the city 1,100 instruments.

The Coles County Telephone Company was inaugurated in May, 1887, with a capital of $12,000, and the toll-lines were established throughout the rural districts. In 1898 the capital was increased to $38,000 and now the lines operate over 200 miles, with twenty-seven stations. W. C. Lumpkin is general manager.

Miscellaneous.—The Mattoon Refrigerating Company, north of the Big Four right-of-way, at Twenty-fourth Street, is the only ice-plant in the city. It was established in 1896 and the annual output is 4,000 tons. George O. Cobb is manager. Another plant was started the same year on La Fayette Avenue, adjoining the Illinois Central Railroad on the west, but sold out to the last named company and was closed up. There are two tile factories. The earliest is owned by J. W. Hogue, and was established by him in 1876. It is located on South Thirtieth Street, between Marshall and Marion Avenues. The Mattoon Tile Works are located north of Piatt Avenue and east of the Illinois Central tracks. They were established in 1883 by Theodore Jonte, present owner and manager. They make both tile and brick.

In the south part of the city Theodore Beltin began the making of brick in 1897. He now makes about a million and a half bricks annually.

The artificial stone factory of Harry L. Powell was established in April, 1903. It is located on Cottage Avenue, near Twenty-second Street. The principal products are open and solid concrete blocks for building purposes, made by a machine of Mr. Powells' own invention.

Of the three lumber yards, two are owned by Andrews Brothers. J. D. Andrews is the resident partner. One yard is north of the Essex House and the other is at Nineteenth Street and the Big Four right-of-way. They were purchased in 1888 of Hinkle, Coddington & Co., an early firm. The other is owned by Moore Brothers, successors to their father, the late J. W. Moore, who purchased the yard at Nineteenth Street, between Charleston and Wabash Avenue, in 1869 from Kahn Brothers.

The George N. Buck Manufacturing Company, at 1422 Broadway, was established about 1885, with Charles N. Buck as manager, the "Best-o'-Grip" and "Keystone" hose supporters being the principal articles of manufacture. Night robes and bonnets are also made. Charles A. Shinn is the present manager.

The Kern Supporter factory was established April 1, 1884, for the manufacture of the "Perfect" hose and skirt supporter, and does a $40,000 annual business. It is located in the Virginia building, 1501 Broadway, and Frank Kern is owner and manager.

There were three early elevators, two belonging to John Cunningham. One, built in 1855, stood on the Terre Haute & Alton Railroad, near where the Big Four shops now stand, and the other, in 1860, on the Illinois Central Railroad, three blocks north of the Essex House. In the latter year E. & I. Jennings built on the east side of the Illinois Central Railroad tracks and just south of Broadway. Since then elevators have sprung up year after year and many have been destroyed by fire. To-day there are three elevators and grain storage houses and five broom-corn warehouses to supply the needs of the rich and productive country surrounding.

The first postoffice was established in 1855, and located in the store of True, Cunningham & Co., J. M. True being first Postmaster. In 1856 the office was moved to about 1611 Broadway, and in 1869 it was moved to 112 South Seventeenth Street, James H. Clark being Postmaster. In 1884 it was moved to the city building, 114 South Seventeenth Street, by Postmaster Clark. In 1895 it was moved to the Kern Annex, 1507 Broadway, and on August 1, 1903, to its present location, 1501 Broadway. John S. Goodyear is now Postmaster. In 1892 the free city delivery was inaugurated with four carriers. At present there are seven. On October 2, 1899, the rural mail-service was established with one carrier. There are now five, each covering about 25 miles daily, the five carriers serving 2,970 people. Since February 1, 1901, the office has been kept open all night for accommodation of those having boxes and for making up the mails for night trains. A sub-station was established November 2, 1903, at 2022 Western Avenue, and is in charge of Daniel Beals.

The earliest nurseries were those of Tyra Montgomery and Noyes & Kirchgraber. The former was established in 1867 and embraced fifteen acres in the northwest part of town. The first greenhouse was built in 1870 and five others within the next five years. Mr. Montgomery suffered two destructive fires, and in 1885 sold out and the nursery was abandoned.

The Kirchgraber Nursery, located in the east part of the city on Lafayette Heights, is the outgrowth of the Noyes & Kirchgraber Nursery established in 1869, between what is now Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets on the north side of Western Avenue. In 1874 the partnership was dissolved and John Kirchgraber built a greenhouse on East Broadway. In the same year he bought ten acres on what is now Lafayette Heights and established the present nursery, which covers seventeen acres. In 1877 the Broadway greenhouse was moved to the nursery site. In 1885 Mr. Kirchgraber took his son into partnership, the latter assuming charge of the greenhouses, which are now five in number, with a glass area of 10,000 square feet.

Another greenhouse is that of J. W. Shrader at 212 South Fifteenth Street. It was established in 1890, and is now 100x50 feet in size. Mr. Shrader's business increases year by year.

The earliest cemetery was a burial ground in the south part of the city in what is now the 1500 block between Lafayette and Marshall avenues. It was here that the early burials were made. In 1862 Dodge Grove Cemetery, comprising ten acres, was opened by the city.

This, one of the most immaculately kept cemeteries in Central Illinois, is located at the north end of Twenty-second Street and comprises forty acres. It is maintained by the city. John E. Miller is sexton and through his efforts a receiving vault was built in 1903. The cemetery is traced by concrete walks and gravel driveways, and is set with splendid trees.

East of Dodge Grove, between Nineteenth and Sixteenth Streets, is Calvary Cemetery, the property of the Church of the Immaculate Conception. It comprises twelve acres and was platted in 1885. Patrick Kennedy is sexton.

Business Thrift.—The business thrift of Mattoon is emphasized in the fact that the express office, established in 1856, is to-day, perhaps, the most important on the line between Chicago and Cairo.

The earliest amusement hall was Carthell hall, built in 1856 about what is now 1606 Broadway; the second was Union hall, built by Mrs. Mary Darcy Fitzgerald in 1862, at what is now 1900 Western Avenue; the third was the Dole Opera House, built by Dole Brothers about 1864, at what is now 1601 Broadway. It was in Dole's hall that Mc Cullough, Barrett, Ward, Keene, Mary A. Livermore, Emma Abbott, Clara Louise Kellogg and others appeared before the Mattoon public. The opera house was burned about 1899.

The Mattoon Theater, a well-equipped and modern play-house, was built in 1896 at No. 2000 Prairie Avenue, at a cost of about $25,000, and is owned by Mrs. Carrie Kingman, Charles Hogue being manager.

Fire Department.—The earliest Fire Department was that organized in 1860. In 1861 the Town Council appropriated $100 for ladders, the merchants donated sixty buckets and the Illinois Central and Terre Haute & Alton Railroads the hooks—the former furnishing the iron and the latter making them.

In 1885 the present fire company was organized as Union No. 1, G. W. Redfern, chief. Its equipment consisted of two hand hose-carts and its quarters were in the city building. In 1898 a team of horses was presented the department by Mrs. Carrie Kingman, and a hook and ladder wagon was purchased. In 1899 J. D. Hill, the present chief, was appointed. In 1904 an additional team and a hose wagon were purchased, and in 1905 a combination chemical engine and ladder wagon were added. The company now consists of Chief Hill and five men, all salaried men.

The Mattoon City Court was established on March 21, 1898, with headquarters in the city building, with J. F. Hughes as Judge. The present Judge is L. C. Henley.

A business college has been maintained since 1895 by D. W. DeLay.

Banks.—The first bank in Mattoon—and the second in the County—was started in 1858 or '59 by James T. and John Cunningham, T. A. Marshall and O. B. Ficklin. It was a private bank and occupied a frame building about what is now 1713 Broadway. It discontinued business about the same time as did the Farmers & Traders Bank at Charleston.

In the fall of 1862 Pilkington & Green opened a private bank at the same location. Green later retired, and the name was changed to Pilkington & Co. W. B. Dunlap began his banking career as bookkeeper for this firm and later became a partner.

The firm went out of business upon the establishment of the First National Bank.

About 1866 was the inception of a private bank, which later developed into the Farmers & Merchants Bank, with M. B. Abell President and G. R. Gibson, Cashier, at what is now 1803 Broadway. It failed very soon after it was organized in 1876, and the failure was a disastrous one to the people of Mattoon and vicinity.

The First National, having a capital of $100,000, was established February 21, 1865, with C. M. Dole, President, John W. True, Cashier, and W. B. Dunlap, Teller. In April the fixtures and furniture of the Pilkington Bank were purchased and on May 1, 1865, the bank opened. In 1866 the bank moved into its present quarters at 1613 Broadway. W. B. Dunlap later became its President. L. L. Lehman, the present President, was elected April 13, 1894. The other officers are: G. S. Richmond, Vice-President; R. A. Bareuther, Cashier, and W. T. Osborne and Clinton Hoots, assistant cashiers.

The Mattoon National Bank was chartered May 20, 1874, with W. B. Dunlap, President, and Joseph H. Clark, Cashier. The directors besides the two named were E. B. McClure, Moses Kahn, J. Richmond, Ambrose Kern, G. T. Kilner, T. C. Patrick and Michael Walsh. The bank is located at 1704 Broadway, and has a capital of $60,000, with nearly $100,000 surplus profits. The present officers are: C. E. Wilson, President (who was elected July 21, 1887); Harrison Joseph, Vice-President; H. P. McNair, Cashier; Fred Grant and C. D. Kingman, assistant cashiers.

The State Savings Bank, at 1701 Broadway, was established May 18, 1893, with a capital of $50,000. The first officers were: James H. Clark, President; J. A. Montague, Cashier. The present officers are: J. A. Montague, President; Louis Katz, Vice-President; W. T. Avey, Cashier; C. L. Kern, assistant cashier.

There are four building and loan associations each capitalized at $1,000,000. The Mattoon Building and Loan Association was chartered January 30, 1883. The first officers were: L. L. Lehman, President; J. J. Beall, Vice-President; Joseph Withington, Secretary. The present officers are: R. J. Coultas, President; J. W. Shrader, Vice-President; Joseph Withington, Secretary. It is located at 115 South Seventeenth Street. Mr. Withington has made a splendid record in his twenty odd years of service, and the company should retain him as long as he desires to stay.

The National, at 108 South Seventeenth Street, was chartered in 1888. The first officers were: George F. Gould, President; W. A. Phillips, Vice-President; C. T. Feagan, Secretary. The present officers are: W. N. McKamy, President; F. M. Schulhoff, Vice-President; Samuel Owings, Secretary.

The People's Bank, in the Demaree building, was organized March 1, 1890, with B. C. Hinkle, President; J. H. Slover, Vice-President; J. J. Beall, Secretary. Present officers: M. L. O'Connor, President; I. B. Craig, Vice-President; F. G. Herman, Secretary.

The Okaw Building and Loan Association was chartered March 9, 1901, with C. C. Robinson, President; E. C. Craig, Vice-President; Frank Barr, Secretary. Present officers: E. H. Slover, President; E. C. Craig, Vice-President; Howard Lytle, Secretary.

In 1874 a Co-operative, or Mutual Life, Insurance Company was started, called the Masonic Benevolent Association. Its first officers were: Joseph H. Clark President, and E. C. Caldwell, Secretary. It developed quite a large business, and for a number of years seemed to be exceedingly prosperous. But a decline came in its affairs and about 1894 it suspended.

Club Organizations.—The Ladies' Reading Club, the first literary club in the city, was organized by Mrs. Charles Bennett, May 5, 1877. Its membership is limited to twenty-two. Among early Presidents were Mrs. Skinner, Mrs. Charles Bennett and Mrs. W. B. Dunlap. The present officers are: Mrs. John R. Hamilton, President; Mrs. Charles Bennett, Vice-President; Mrs. W. N. McKamy, Secretary. Meetings are held in the Library building on Fridays during the club year.

The Home Culture Literary Club was organized in March, 1889. The first officers were: Mrs. Martha Boyd, President; Mrs. Leone Miller, Secretary and Treasurer; Mrs. Jennie Thielen, Critic. The present officers are: Mrs. Thomas Donnell, President; Mrs. Ida Morrison, Vice-President; Mrs. Romeo Owings, Secretary. Membership is limited to twenty. Meetings are held on Fridays throughout the club year.

The Study Class was organized January 29, 1889, with Mrs. Geo. W. Shaw, President; Miss Pink Messer, Vice-President; Miss Stella Dunlap, Secretary. The present officers are: Mrs. G. H. Cokendolpher, President; Mrs. John McNutt, Vice-President; Mrs. Laura Trogden, Secretary. Membership is limited to twenty-four and weekly meetings are held in the library.

The Treble Clef, a musical club of forty members, was organized September 10, 1895, with Mrs. T. W. Gaw, President. The club meets semi-monthly and its present officers are: Mrs. Frank Kern, President; Miss Florence Phelan, Vice-President; Mrs. Frank Cox, Secretary.

The Mattoon Council of Women's Clubs was organized in February, 1897, is composed of the Ladies' Reading Club, Study Class, Home Culture Club and thirty patron members, and has a membership of 100. It works on broad lines, is influential and progressive. The first officers were: Mrs. Charles Bennett, President; Mrs. Ernest Moore, Vice-President; Mrs. Wm. F. Purtill, Secretary. Other Presidents were: Mrs. Frank Barr, 1899 to 1900; Mrs. Lila Sinsbaugh, 1900 to 1901; Mrs. Adolf Summerlin, 1901 to 1903. The present officers are: Mrs. C. C. Rogers, President; Mrs. A. Summerlin, Vice-President; Mrs. G. E. Colson, Secretary. Meetings are held the first Friday of every month during the club year in the assembly room of the library.

The Federation of Charities was organized March 11, 1895. First officers were: Mrs. M. A. Geary, President; Miss Laura Fallin, Vice-President; Mrs. G. F. Gould, Secretary. The present officers are: Mrs. F. E. Bell, President; Mrs. J. V. Fitch, Vice-President; Mrs. Sophia C. Scott, Secretary.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized June 5, 1878, with Mrs. Mary J. Hinkle President and Mrs. T. R. Clegg Secretary. The present membership is 100, and meetings are held monthly in the Methodist Episcopal church. The present officers are: Mrs. Belle Clark, President; Mrs. Lyman Gould, Vice-President; Mrs. Laura Snapp, Secretary.

The South School Association was organized at the South School building in April, 1904, and meets the second Monday of every month during the school year. It has fifty members and the present officers are: Mrs. Joseph Holaday, President; Mrs. P. N. Kelly, Vice-President; Mrs. F. C. Collins, Secretary. It is a mothers' club.

A similar association is the Hawthorne Club, organized in February, 1905, with seventy members. Its officers are: Mrs. Charles Bennett, President; Mrs. Arthur Lamb, Vice-President; Mrs. Martha Robinson, Secretary. Meetings are held the second Tuesday of each month during the school year.

The Leo, a men's club, was organized September 27, 1903, on strictly temperance lines, by Rev. Fr. E. A. Brodmann, of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, who is still its spiritual director. John Fitzgerald was first President. The present officers are: William Moran, Jr., President; Edward Smith, First Vice-President; Matthew Timmons, Second Vice-President; Robert Raef, Secretary. It has sixty members, and meets twice a month in the club rooms, 2012 Western avenue.

Mattoon has many other clubs and societies, most of which are purely social.

Fraternal Lodges.—Mattoon from infancy has been a fertile field for secret societies. They have flourished through the nourishment of popular approval, smiled upon by public favor and caressed by the warmth of fraternal sentiment.

Coles County Lodge, No. 260, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, was organized July 15, 1858, in Cartmell Hall, W. C. Cunningham, N. G. In 1888 Odd Fellows' Hall, at 1521 Broadway, was purchased, the committee being Henry Dahling, Valentine Schlicher, Louis Katz, Oliver Newcomb and George De Wald. F. M. Phipps is now Noble Grand and J. W. Cavius Secretary. Two outgrowths of this lodge were the German Lodge, No. 144, organized in 1864. George Goldgart, N. G., and Harmony Lodge, No. 551, organized June 15, 1874. F. M. Phipps, N. G. The former consolidated with the mother lodge in 1882 and the latter in 1889. Its present membership is about 145, and regular meetings are held on the second and fourth Fridays of each month, at their elegantly furnished rooms at 1900 Western Avenue, which are open every Thursday afternoon to the wives, daughters and sisters of members. The first Exalted Ruler was C. E. Wilson, and the present one is I. A. Lumpkin.

Labor Societies.—Mattoon Division, No. 37, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, was organized December 14, 1864, with Anson Gustin, Chief Engineer. The present membership is 105, with O. F. Hamilton, C. E. and A. M. Garner Sec. Meetings are held in Castle Hall. Meadow Lawn Division, No. 577, B. of L. E., was organized July 25, 1901, the Chief Engineer being John M. Rossiter. The present membership is fifty-one, with J. M. Rossiter and Geo. S. Henderson as principal officers. Meetings are held in Carpenters' Hall.

An auxiliary of the B. of L. E. is New Endeavor Division, No. 57, G. I. A. to B. of L. E., organized October 16, 1891. Mrs. D. Flynn is President and Mrs. James Tremble Secretary. Meetings are held in Castle Hall.

The S. G. Tiley Lodge, No. 116, B. of R. T., organized June 28, 1885, is a flourishing organization. Meetings are held in the B. of R. T. Hall, 1700 Broadway, F. R. Mitchell being Master and J. H. Putnam Secretary. An auxiliary is Sisters of 116, Lodge No. 60, L. A. to B. of R. T., organized February 7, 1898. Meetings are held in Trainmen's Hall. Mrs. Sadie Bellnap is President and Mrs. Lulu Mawbry Secretary.

Union Star Lodge, No. 37, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, holds its meetings in Castle Hall. C. E. Woodhouse is Chief Carman and William Henderson Secretary.

Beacon Lodge, No. 111, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, organized June 22, 1882, meets in I. O. O. F. Hall. O. E. VanMeter is Master and L. F. Norton Secretary.

Viola Lodge, No. 350, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, was organized February 24, 1901, with W. T. Downs, Master. The present membership is fifty-six. Charles F. Stewart is Master and G. E. Robinson Secretary.

Division No. 101, Order of Railway Conductors, was organized December 3, 1883, with F. B. Helmer as Chief Conductor. Meetings are held in Castle Hall. F. B. Helmer is Chief Conductor and William Byers is Secretary and Treasurer.

Labor Unions.—The Musicians' Protective Union, Local No. 224, A. F. of M., was organized September 15, 1902, with H. C. Gibley, President. The present membership is sixty-three, with J. R. Chalk, President, and Edgar Wilson, Secretary. Meetings are held at 1817 Broadway.

Big Four and I. C. Lodge, No. 116, Boiler-maker Helpers, was organized August 5, 1903, with E. Seibert President. The membership is twenty-three, with W. E. Mooford, President, and Charles Liscome, Secretary. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall.

Enterprise Union, No. 89, I. B. of B. & H., was organized May 12, 1901, with William White President. The present membership is twenty-seven, with John McFee President and Henry W. Smith, Secretary. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall.

Industrial Lodge, No. 96, I. A. M., was organized in 1901, with D. W. Branan, President. The membership is 135, with A. A. Lofgren, President, and A. E. Monteith, Secretary. Meetings are held in Castle Hall.

Subordinate Union, No. 55, B. M. I. U. of A. (Bricklayers' Union), was organized May 5, 1903, with Otis Tucker, President. The membership is twenty-two, with A. F. Adair, President, and F. S. Adair, Secretary. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall.

Mattoon Typographical Union, No. 520, was chartered July 14, 1902. The first President was E. R. Starkweather. The membership is nineteen, with William Rider, President; and Miss Katherine Wilson, Secretary and Treasurer. Meetings are held at Foresters' Hall.

The International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Local No. 745, was organized October 1, 1902, with Jerry Tippy as President. Meetings are held at Carpenters' Hall. Harvey M. Newport is President and James W. Ellis, Secretary.

The Master Horse Shoers' Protective Association, Local No. 341, was organized January 2, 1903, with A. H. Johnson, President. No regular meetings are held. S. C. McDuffie is President and J. L. Winter Secretary.

The Journeymen Barbers' International Union of America, Local No. 326, was organized July 18, 1901, with B. F. Liese, President. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall. William McKelory is President and J. J. Donner, Secretary.

Mattoon Lodge, No. 224, B. of M. & I. S. B. of A., was organized June 12, 1900, with Earl Barker, President. The membership is thirty-two, with J. A. Falter, President, and William Darling, Secretary. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall.

The Tailors' Union, J. T. U. of A., No. 36, was organized November 11, 1902, with Otto Baur, President. The membership is sixteen, with Henry Ohme, President, and Frank Krick, Secretary. Meetings are held in Foresters' Hall.

The International Protective Association of Retail Clerks, No. 673, was organized August 15, 1902. James Frazier is President and Miss Carrie Robson, Secretary.

The Cigarmakers' International Union of America, No. 127, was organized March 24, 1899. Ernest Ohme is President and Harvey Sparks, Secretary.

The International Association of Metal Mechanics, No. 122, was organized January 28, 1902. W. A. Philhower is President and Wm. Tivis, Secretary. Meetings are held in B. of R. T. Hall.

The United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, No. 347, was organized August 25, 1899. J. H. Towell is President and William La Clare Secretary. Meetings are held in Carpenters' Hall.

The Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paper Hangers of America, No. 611, was organized April 1, 1902. Meetings are held in Carpenters' Hall. George Claridge is President.

Other unions include the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America, No. 129, organized August 12, 1902; the International Union Stationary Engineers, No. 179, organized December 31, 1902; the Women's International Union Label League, No. 109, organized Sept. 3, 1903; The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, No. 383, organized August 16, 1903; Mattoon Association of Letter Carriers, Branch No. 384, organized October 9, 1895; Rural Free Delivery Association, No. 21, organized December 24, 1903, and the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, No. 158, organized December 19, 1902.

The Central Labor Union is a body made up of delegates from subordinate local unions, and was organized June 15, 1902, with Earl Barker President. The membership is fifty, with D. W. Branan, President, and Louis Poliquin, Secretary. Meetings are held in Carpenters' Hall, and through the efforts of this and the subordinate unions, some of the finest industrial parades ever witnessed in this city have been given.

CITY IN BRIEF.

Limitation as to space in this volume has prevented the writer from dwelling upon the extent of Mattoon's mercantile growth, her undeveloped riches and the talented men and women who have figured conspicuously in her own and in county and State affairs.

Seventeen blocks of brick business houses, ranging from two to four stories in height, and filled with activity, make Mattoon not only a city in size but a city in every sense of the word. It is surrounded by farms as rich as any in the country, and underlaid not only with coal but, as I believe, with rivers of oil and gas awaiting development. Many bright men and women have won places of honor in the business and professional world, while in literature, music and art, the city can point with pride to several who stand close in rank to the best talent in the country.

MORGAN TOWNSHIP.

The town of Morgan (named for pioneer David Morgan) is a very irregular shaped tract, nine miles long from north to south, a little over four miles wide at its north line and about one and a half miles wide at its south end. It extends from Douglas County on the north to Charleston Township on the south. Its west line coincides with the east line of Seven Hickory and the winding channel of the Embarras River is its eastern line.

The township contains from twenty-five to twenty-six sections of land, and has within its borders some of the best soil in the county and some of the poorest. Its western part is upon the prairie and the broken, hilly country borders the river. It is drained in the north part by Greasy Creek and Dry Branch, and in the southern portion by smaller tributaries of the Embarras.

Some First Events.—The first death in the borders of the township is thought to have been that of the wife of pioneer Aaron Collins.

The first marriage was that of a daughter (Clara) of Mr. Collins to Mr. Thomas Creighton, the ceremony being performed by David Morgan, the first Justice of the Peace.

The first Supervisor was Nathan Thomas.

The first school house was built in 1839-40, but the name of the first teacher cannot be learned.

The earliest attempt to start a village was the establishment of a store and blacksmith shop, etc., in the south part of Section 30, Township 14, in the 'sixties, and called Curtisville. No land was platted there, but a postoffice was started in 1867.

Greasy Creek is said to have received its queer name from the fact that certain early settlers on its borders had a habit of poaching their neighbors' hogs, and, after cleaning their carcasses, threw the entrails and other refuse into the creek, causing its waters to become greasy.

Morgan contains two villages, started after the building of the "Clover Leaf" Railroad—Rardin and Bushton. Both were surveyed and platted in 1881. The former was named for John H. Rardin, one of the owners of the land upon which it was located, and the latter for David and John Bush, who owned the land upon which it was platted.

Villages.—Rardin has to-day five stores, a grain elevator and about 225 population. The elevator was the work of George Wyeth, who, about 1895, purchased a warehouse there and converted it into an elevator.

Church History.—Its one church, the Rardin Cumberland Presbyterian, was organized some time about 1843-45, about one and three-fourths miles south of Rardin. Rev. James Ashmore was its first minister, and John W. Woods and Robert Hill, early Cumberland Presbyterian preachers, often visited and preached to its congregation. The church was removed to Rardin about 1884, and about eleven of its first members were still associated with it, among whom were: William Morgan and wife, Aris Galbreath, Nancy Johnson, J. L. Rardin, Mary A. Rardin and Catherine Golladay. It is now without a regular minister, but has a good organization, with over 140 members. Its elders are: J. T. Taylor, Wm. Foley, A. J. Morgan, J. F. Davis, J. A. Covert and T. P. McAllister.

Rardin's one Lodge is No. 861, I O. O. F., which was instituted October 16, 1902. Its first officers were: J. F. Davis, N. G., and Thomas Collins, Secretary. The present officers are Jacob Long, N. G., and W. T. East, Secretary.

The lodge has over sixty members, is out of debt, and has several hundred dollars in the treasury.

Bushton has two churches, two stores, two elevators and a restaurant, and in the neighborhood of 200 population. The first elevator was put up there by George Wyeth about 1883. The Farmers' elevator was erected in 1902.

The Pleasant Valley Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in the town of Seven Hickory in 1881, and built a house on Section 31, Township 14, about 1882, which was dedicated by Rev. H. H. Adams. Its first Trustees were: William Stites, Jackson Gerard, David Bush and Conrad Burgner, and its first pastor was Rev. S. H. Huber. This church was removed to Bushton in 1901, and its present pastor is Rev. M. C. Hull.

The Bushton Christian Church was organized there in 1886, with Rev. Isaac Lamb as its first minister. Among its first members were the Perishos, Fraziers, O'Hairs and Powers, all prominent families of that vicinity.

Its present pastor is a Rev. Mr. Smith.

Bushton has a lodge of the Modern Woodmen (No. 4019), organized in 1901.

Frank Blizzard is the present G. C. and R. N. Rankin is Clerk.

There are two churches in Morgan Township besides those in Bushton and Rardin.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, known as Union C. P. Church North, was organized about 1842 by Rev. James Ashmore. It is located in what is known as "Greasy Point," near the Union Cemetery. The present building was put up in 1904. The old one stood about half a mile southwest. They have no regular preacher at this time.

A building is now under way in Rardin which is to be used as a parsonage, and, when completed, a minister will be employed to serve as pastor for both this and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Rardin.

The Salem Missionary Baptist Church was organized about 1860, and a building was erected in 1862, somewhere in the southern part of Section 19-13-10. Rev. James Walker was its first regular preacher. Among its first members were: Isaac and Nancy Roberts, Fielden, Martha and Susan Banks and W. D. Roberts. The last named was made a deacon. The church was moved to about the middle of the southwest quarter of Section 30-13-10, some time from 1886 to 1888, and about 1888-89 a new building was erected at the last named location, which was dedicated as the Union Baptist Church, the former name being abandoned. The name "Union" was adopted because it was intended that both denominations of Baptists (Missionary and Primitive) should have the privilege of using the building. There is no record, however, of any regular organization of Primitive Baptists there. The first pastor of the new Union Baptist Church was Rev. Joseph Payne. Rev. D. M. Stiles of Charleston now holds regular services there. The two Union churches in Morgan Township are distinguished colloquially as "Union North" and "Union South."

The voting place of the township was at the California school house until the town hall was erected in Rardin in 1886. This hall is unique in respect to the fact that the money to build it was derived from the old dog-tax, which was imposed many years ago upon dogs, for the purpose of reimbursing owners of sheep that were killed by dogs. As Morgan Township dogs became civilized, they ceased killing sheep and the accumulated money was used to build a town hall. It is facetiously referred to as Morgan's "dog-house."

Schools.—A year or two prior to 1840 the first school house was built somewhere in the timber along the Embarras River, but the location and the name of its first teacher cannot now be learned. It must have been somewhere in Greasy Point, as it was there that David Morgan and other prominent pioneers settled. The first school district was probably the California District, started in the later 'forties, which included pretty much the whole township.

In 1879 the township contained only three districts, the other two being called the Hazel Dell and the Winkleblack districts. It has been subdivided since into several more districts.

The present building, which is the third one erected in the California District (No. 12), is located in the northeast corner of Section 17, Township 12, and its last school was taught by Miss Stella Robertson.

The Winkleblack School (No. 13) is the successor of an old log school house, built in the 'forties. A frame house succeeded that in the 'sixties, and the present building succeeded that. It is located in the northeast part of Section 30, Township 13. An early teacher in the old log building was William Cory. The last school was taught by Miss Luada Fort.

The Rardin School (No. 6) is the successor of the old Hazel Dell, which was located one and a half miles northwest of its present location in the village of Rardin. The early teachers of the Hazel Dell School, beginning about 1861-62, were: J. B. Williams, Sarah E. Breeding, I. W. Perisho and S. M. Foulger. The present building is a comfortable structure of three rooms. J. T. Taylor, Samuel Rardin and W. E. Worsham were probably the first directors. The last term was taught by W. H. Crispin and Miss Adelia Christian.

The Bushton School (No. 11) was originally commenced about 1885 in an old store building on the west side of the California district, and moved from there to the old Grange Hall. The district was divided in 1900, and in that year the present comfortable building of two rooms was erected in Bushton. An early teacher was Miss Laura Jennings. R. P. Barr taught first in Bushton and the last school was taught by W. E. Cottingham and Miss Minor Duvall.

Contrary School (No. 10) is located in the northeast part of Section 31, Town 14. The building was erected about 1876. J. J. Collins was one of its earliest teachers, and the last session was taught by O. C. McGahey.

Busby School (No. 126) is located near the northeast part of Section 21, Town 14. Among its early teachers were: Thomas Creighton, Alfred Flohr, J. B. Williams and Joseph Nesbit. The last session was taught by Hubert Hill.

NORTH OKAW TOWNSHIP.

North Okaw Township derives its name from the Okaw (Kaskaskia) River, which, entering at the extreme northeast, courses in a south-westerly direction through the northern portion of the township. It was called North Okaw to distinguish it from Okaw Township, to the south in Shelby County. It is bounded by Moultrie County on the west, Douglas County on the north, Humbolt Township on the east and Mattoon Township on the south. It comprises all of Township 13 and the southern half of Township 14, Range 7 East, and contains fifty-four square miles.

Timber, Streams, Etc.—The heavy timber of walnut, white oak, hickory, maple and other varieties which once covered the northern portion of the township, has almost entirely disappeared; only a remnant of its sylvan glory, bordering the river, marks the location of the vanished forest. The north central part of the township is drained by the Okaw River and its tributaries. The river is spanned by four iron bridges, the one at Jackson's Ford, built in 1873, costing $3,400; the Humboldt bridge, built in 1879, costing $1,000; Cook's Mill bridge, built in 1886, costing $5,300, and Flank bridge, one and one-half miles north of the Humboldt bridge, built in 1903, costing $4,000. At the south, flowing west through the township, is Crab Apple Creek, which drains that portion of the township, but in addition to all these natural water-ways, it has more drainage districts than any other township of the county.

Soil and Agricultural Characteristics.—Its prairie soil is a rich, black loam, and its farms are among the most valuable in the county. The principal products are Indian corn and broom-corn, the latter having been raised to some extent as far back as 1865, the original planters being Thomas Senteny and Mr. Faulkner. The amount cultivated from 1880 to 1900 averaged 10,000 acres annually. Since then the acreage has diminished, and in 1904 only about 2,500 acres were planted.

First Officers.—The first Supervisor of the township was John Hoots, and among the county officers furnished by the township were two Sheriffs—James Hamilton and William Checkley. The former loosened the trap for the first legal hanging in the county, that of Thomas Chapman, in January, 1885.

During the 'seventies the Farmers' Grange flourished, several organizations having been formed in North Okaw Township. They were the forerunners of the Farmers' County Institute, which, in 1903, is active and strong, with Harvey N. Ames, of North Okaw, as Secretary.

Land values have kept pace with the progress of the township. Much of the land which, in 1853, was entered in North Okaw at $2.50 an acre, in 1905 is valued at $150 per acre.

Coles Station.—At the extreme southwest corner of the township, where four townships—North Okaw and Mattoon of Coles County, East Nelson and Whitley of Moultrie County—join, is located the hamlet of Coles. There cutting across the corner of North Okaw, is the Peoria Branch of the Illinois Central, the only railroad in the township, and in that corner of the township are a general merchandise store, built in the early 'seventies, two residences and the railroad depot. The plat for the village of Coles was made in 1872.

Fuller's Point.—The Fuller's Point postoffice was the earliest in the township, established in 1849 at Henry Fuller's house, one mile west of the present site of Cook's mill. Previous to the establishment of this office the people of that section got their mail from the Paradise postoffice. About 1848 Dr. J. T. Johnson was appointed Postmaster and the office was moved to his house, one mile west of Henry Fuller's. About 1860 it was again moved, this time to the home of Martin Price, one mile farther west, directly on the line now separating Coles and Moultrie Counties. It was here that the village of Fuller's Point sprang up. It consisted for years of one store, the postoffice and a couple of dwellings, and now consists of two stores, a blacksmith shop and two dwellings. In 1904 the postoffice was discontinued and Fuller's Point now receives its mail from Sullivan by Rural Route No. 1.

About two miles south of this point is the line of the old "Archer Road," sometimes called the "South Springfield Trace." It ran to Springfield from Marshall, through Charleston, and was partly surveyed by Ebenezer Noyes in 1836 under Commissioner Timothy Young. After the establishment of the Fuller's Point postoffice in 1842, its mail was received and distributed by means of this road until the postoffice was started in Mattoon in 1855. It was also a stage road and a relay station was maintained at the William Harrison Smith farm, now owned by Thomas Smith in the northeast corner of Section 22-13-7.

Cook's Mill.—In the midst of heavy timber about four miles wide on the Okaw River, a saw-mill was erected in 1861 by McGee & True. A year later it was sold to Elam Cook, who built a house for himself and a number of houses for his mill-hands. This furnished the nucleus for the town of Cook's Mill. In 1862 Robert Gilland built and furnished a general merchandise store, and a year later sold it to Elam Cook. It was in this store that the post-office was established in 1870, Elam Cook being Postmaster, the mail being carried by way of a "star-route" from Mattoon. Cook was succeeded in turn by D. A. Crum, John Wilson, H. T. Crum, D. F. Hoots, Robert Morgan and the present Postmaster, Jesse Webb. The office is now located in Daniel John's store in the Odd Fellows' building, and serves about 300 people.

The town now has four general stores, two restaurants, one blacksmith and wagon shop, one barber shop, one undertaking establishment and a molasses factory.

The village has one school, known as the Cook's Mill School, built about 1865 on land donated by Elam Cook. Among the early teachers was the late Dr. R. A. Pickering. In the summer of 1902 a larger building took its place.

Churches.—There are also two churches at Cook's Mill. One is the Missionary Baptist, known as Pleasant Grove Church, established in 1866. It is a strong and flourishing church, with a well-kept five-acre cemetery adjoining. In 1900 a larger and more commodious church was built at a cost of $1,500. The present pastor is Reverend Sharpe.

The other church is a later organization, the church edifice having been built in 1901. It is a Separate Baptist Church, called Webb Chapel, and the present pastor is Rev. Jacob Busch.

Secret Organizations.—There are four secret societies in the village, of which Bluff Lodge, No. 605, I. O. O. F., was the first to be organized. Its charter was granted in February, 1876, the first principal officers being James Hamilton, N. G., and Joseph Perry, V. G. The lodge had twenty-five charter members, its present membership being sixty-three. It has suffered twice by fire within the past ten years, the last being in the summer of 1901, when a large part of the village was burned. The lodge now owns a two-story building, the hall being in the upper story, where the K. of P. and M. A. F. O. also meet.

An auxiliary is the Cook's Mill Rebekah Lodge, No. 571, organized August 26, 1902, by Mrs. Anna Patterson, of Mattoon, with twenty-two charter members. The present membership is thirty-seven. Among the first officers were: Mrs. Ettie Webb, N. G., and Anna Wilson, V. G., who are yet serving the lodge, with John Wilson as Secretary.

In February, 1902, Pythagorean Lodge, No. 617, K. of P., was organized in I. O. O. F. Hall, with twenty-six charter members. The present membership is eighty. It meets weekly. Among the present officers are: Thomas McKelvie, C. C.; F. M. Hortenstein, V. C.; E. A. Wellbaum, K. of R. & S. It is numbered among the strongest lodges in the county.

April 1, 1903, a Modern American Fraternal Order was organized, with Mrs. Daniel Johns as President. It has 107 members and is prospering.

The township hall is also located at Cook's Mill. It was built in 1892 at a cost of $500. Here all political meetings and township elections are held.

Schools.—Outside of Cook's Mill there are ten schools in the township. The first school house built in the township was that at Fuller's Point, built of logs about 1848. It was also the earliest public school, and among its early teachers was James Hamilton, now of Mattoon. One of the earliest boards was Dr. J. F. Johnson, John Turner and Pleasant Ellis. In 1865 the school house was torn down to make way for a frame building, which stood until 1884, when it, in turn, gave way to the present frame building in District No. 90, two miles west of the present site of Cook's Mill.

The next school in point of age was that known for years as the Wade School. It was built about 1850 and was also of logs. It was the outgrowth of subscription schools taught in homes of the neighborhood. Joel Martin was one of the earliest teachers, and one of the earliest boards was made up of Jackson Wade, James Martin and William Osborne. In 1860 it was supplanted by a frame building. In 1888 a larger school became necessary and the present building was erected. Owing to the largeness of the district it was divided in 1897, and one and one-half miles southeast, in Section 33, the Hoagland School, No. 95, was built. The first teacher was Miss Carrie Barr and the first board consisted of James Hoagland, Frank Dole and James White.

In 1852 the Smith School was established in the kitchen of Widow Payton's log house, where William Finley and Harrison Smith wielded the birch. Two years later a log house was presented to the district (then known as No. 3), by Mr. Drexel, which was moved to the center of the district to be used as a public school. The first teachers were Frank Odell, Harrison Smith and Mark Ashworth, and the first board, Amos Rice, Sr., Dudley Hopper and William Cree. In 1863 a frame building took the place of this school house. The latter served until 1890 when it was supplanted by the present structure in District No. 94 on Section 22.

The Ames School was established in 1859 in a small house belonging to Mr. Dodd, and a year later a frame school-house was built near by in Section 26, then District No. 5. Early teachers were M. S. Ashworth, Eliza Voris and Riley Bales. First board: N. W. Ames, C. C. Ashworth, Morris Cramer. In 1893 the school-house burned and the present structure was built in the present District, No. 95.

The Hoskins School, established in 1862, was a frame building. It was on the Lowry Hoskins land. Mr. Hoskins was on the first board with John Hoots, and John Hoskins was the first teacher. A new school-house was built in place of the old one in Section 12 in 1893, in present District No. 92.

In District No. 91 (Section 93, Town 13) is the "Little Red School." It is a frame building and was built in 1864. An early Board was composed of David Thomas, William Jackson and James Ellison.

In the northern part of the township are the Senteney, the Hobart and the Columbia schools. The first was built in 1862 by private subscription, the money being furnished by Jacob Webb, Allen Campbell and Henry Duncan, Thomas Senteney gratuitously erecting the building. John D. Daugherty, Irving Graham and Hiram Campbell constituted the first board. Early teachers were James Hoskins, William Bails and William Hendricks.

A new school-house was built in 1886 in place of the old one in Section 26, Town 14—present District No. 88. The first teacher in the present building was E. E. Senteney.

The Hobart School, a frame, was built in 1870. In 1884 it was moved to its present location in Section 32, Town 14, District 89.

The Columbia School, District 120, on Section 23, Town 14, a frame building was erected in 1893. The first teachers were Lulu Eck and W. M. Easton.

During the winter of 1904-05 there were seven women and four men teachers in the township. The salaries range from $35 to $60 a month, while in the early days of public schools teachers received from $20 to $35 a month and "boarded 'round." In 1904 there were, in the North Okaw schools, 249 male and 216 female pupils.

Churches.—The oldest church in the township is the Mt. Zion Separate Baptist, in Section 18, two miles west of the old iron bridge. It was built in the early 'forties and was then known as the "Clap-board Chapel." It was rebuilt in 1860, during the pastorate of Col. Vaughn. Its present pastor is Rev. Harry Blythe. It has a cemetery adjoining.

One mile northeast of Mt. Zion church, in Section 17, on the Fuller's Point road, is the Zoar Predestinarian Baptist Church. It was organized in 1860 and its first pastor was G. W. Dalby, now of Mattoon. In 1865, the present church was built at a cost of $1,000. It is now under the joint pastorate of Elders R. E. and E. D. Elder. It also has an adjoining cemetery.

Quinn Chapel, a Methodist church, is located two and one-half miles north of Cook's Mill in Section 23, Town 14. The original building was erected in 1863, at a cost of about $800, and was dedicated in 1866. Early pastors were Revs. W. H. McVey, William Mitchell and D. E. May. In 1894, under the pastorate of Rev. A. J. Ives, the old building gave way to the new, and the present $1,300 church was built. The present pastor is Rev. J. B. Martin. It has eighty members, a flourishing Sunday School established in 1864, and an Epworth League. The nearest cemetery is at Cook's Mill.

In 1871, Zion Methodist Episcopal church was built in Section 24, southeast of Cook's Mill, near the township line, at a cost of $1,400. Rev. E. D. May was the first pastor. Among the first trustees were Dudley Hopper, J. W. Farrar and Z. J. Baird, all of whom afterward moved to Mattoon. Other prominent members moved out of the neighborhood and, in 1901, the church was abandoned.

PARADISE TOWNSHIP.

Directly west of Pleasant Grove and south of the town of Mattoon, bordered on the west by Shelby County and on the south by Cumberland County, lies the town of Paradise. It contains only the north twenty-four Sections of Township 11 N., R. 7 E., and is the smallest township in the county. It received its name from the village and that took its name from the postoffice previously started within its territory, while the postoffice was so named by George M. Hanson, because he came from near Paradise, Va., now West Virginia. Its territory was included in what was known as the Wabash Point Settlement, and that, with the Muddy Point Settlement, contiguous on the east, constituted the two most populous and important settlements in the county at an early day. After the township was organized its first Supervisor was Adam W. Hart.

The Illinois Central Railroad cuts through the township from Section 3, at the north, to Section 21 at the south, where it crosses the county line. Almost paralleling the railroad, and one and one-half miles west of it, is the Little Wabash River, which, with its tributaries, drains the western part of the township, while Buttermilk Creek, with its branches, drains the eastern portion. The woodland—once dense and trackless, save for the Indian trails—has almost disappeared, there remaining only a single grove and a narrow belt of trees on each side of the Little Wabash. Crossing the southeastern portion, in snake-like form, as in Pleasant Grove, can be seen the terminal moraine.

Paradise Village.—The earliest village platted in the township was Paradise. It was laid out in 1837 by Joseph Fowler, and comprised about seven blocks of land. The first industry established was a steam grain mill erected by Miles W. Hart and Clemmie Goar, being the first of its kind in this part of the country. A year later, the fire-fiend, in high carnival, leveled it to the ground. It was rebuilt and ran till 1847, when it was moved to Charleston by Byrd Monroe. Charles Sawyer had the previous year platted some of his land lying in Section 33 on the State road, and called it "Paradise," but nothing came of it. The location of the mill in Section 8, by Hart & Goar, brought the village there.

The first school in the village was taught in 1839 by David Campbell in his home, and the first church—a Baptist, long since abandoned—was erected in 1840, Rev. Samuel Pullen being its first pastor. No postoffice was regularly established at Paradise until 1844, at which time Stephen Cartmell was appointed Postmaster. His duties were not arduous, as the stages delivered mail but once a week. With the coming of the Illinois Central the stage line was abandoned and, in 1856, Paradise became a "star route" office out of Etna. Thus it continued until 1902, when the postoffice was suspended, since which time the village has received its mail from rural route No. 2 out of Mattoon.

In 1854 Paradise had three thriving general merchandise stores and two churches—one a Baptist and the other a Methodist. The latter, of brick, was erected in 1853. In 1869 it was torn down and the material used in a larger structure, built at a cost of $3,000, just west of the village. The anvil had rung for years beneath the brawn of "the village blacksmith," and a tannery, another necessary enterprise, contributed its products to the needs of the community.

On May 23, 1854, Wabash Lodge, No. 179, A. F. & A. M., was organized under dispensation, the charter being granted October 2, 1854. The meetings were held bi-monthly in what was known as the "mud-house," tallow candles furnishing light. A. H. Chapman, N. W. Chapman and A. W. Waller were the first three officers.

The glory of Paradise was now departing. The ribbons of steel which marked the line of the Illinois Central Railroad, coursed their way one and one-half miles distant and, on the line to the south and east, the village of Etna sprang up, and today sixteen houses and one general store are all that remains of that once prosperous and promising village of Paradise.

Etna.—The village of Etna, consisting of nine square blocks, was platted in 1860 on the line between Sections 16 and 21 east of the railroad. Lots were sold at private sale at about $10 each, and were greedily purchased. The dwelling house of Daniel R. Bland was the first erected. During the fall a store was built, into which, a few months later, Isaac Hart & Son moved their general merchandise stock from Paradise. About the same time a stock of groceries, hardware and liquors was installed in another building by Robert S. Mills.

In 1860 a Baptist church was built by a general contribution. It was open to all other denominations of the village.

The Masonic Lodge, which was moved the same year from Paradise, held its meetings in the upper room of the church. In 1891, the Disciples (or Christian) church was reorganized, and a building erected at a cost of $1,600 under the pastorate of Rev. Isaac Lamb. The present pastor is Rev. H. H. Harrell.

In 1880 the Methodists of the village formed a church organization and held their meetings in the Baptist church until 1888, when they built a house of worship at a cost of $1,300. It was dedicated in July of that year. Rev. Durham was one of the early pastors. The church burned in 1901 and in 1902, during the pastorate of Rev. G. E. Burton, a new and more modern edifice was erected. This was dedicated July 13, 1902. The present pastor is Rev. E. L. Darley. The church has a Sunday school and an Epworth League, both flourishing.

Wabash Lodge, No. 179, A. F. & A. M., also outgrew its quarters and in December, 1888, moved to its present hall in the second story of the Hamblen building, B. H. Lawson being Master and A. G. Apperson, Senior Warden. At present, the lodge has an enrollment of forty members, with W. M. Deckard, Master, and William L. Campbell, Senior Warden.

The Modern Woodmen also have a thriving lodge, which was organized in the winter of 1896 with twenty charter members. Meetings are held in the A. F. & A. M. hall, and at present the lodge has a membership of fifty-five, the three first officers being Frank Wilson, V. C.; John Bingaman, Clerk, and Jos. Goar, Advisor.

A Court of Honor was organized in 1900 by George Storm. It met semi-monthly for two years. Since then meetings have been suspended, but the insurance branch is kept up.

Etna has two grain elevators, each doing a large business. One, owned by Thomas Ferguson, has a capacity of 12,000 bushels. It was built by Ferguson in 1901; the other, owned by Frank Lowe has an equal capacity and was built by Mr. Lowe in the same year. Previous to the erection of elevators, cribs furnished grain storage for buyers.

Etna has one school. The first school building was erected in 1868, and James Richardson was the first teacher. Thirty years this building served the needs of the district. In 1898, a commodious school house was built, which is still the educational center of District No. 108.

The township hall, located at Etna, was built in 1899 at a cost of $300, and there all township elections and political meetings are held. Etna also has one hardware store, three general merchandise stores and one blacksmith shop.

Rural Schools.—Outside of Etna, there are in the township five schools. In the extreme southwest, in District No. 109, is the Union School (in Section 19). The original building was frame, erected on Adrian Higgins' farm, in 1850. Among the early teachers were T. D. P. Henley, Daniel Tremble and John Reynolds. In 1885 the first school house was replaced by a new and larger building. North of this and within three-quarters of a mile of the town of Paradise, is the West Paradise School in District No. 104, on Section 8. It is the outgrowth of a little log building erected in 1837, where private schools were held until funds provided by the public school act of 1845 were appropriated for public school purposes. This building, which served the double purpose of both school and church, was not abandoned until 1862, when the present frame building was erected one-half mile to the south. Three-quarters of a mile east of Paradise, in what is now District No. 105, in Section 9, was erected in 1865, and opened August 7th of that year, East Paradise school. Two years ago it was replaced by a larger and more commodious building. Among the early teachers were Leon Lipman, R. J. Gannaway and Isabel Beverly. About two miles east, in District No. 106 (Section 11), is the Dry Grove school. The first building was erected in 1868 on the Dry Grove road, and was replaced in 1899 by a more commodious structure. Among the early teachers were Joseph Glenn and Joseph Cavins.

Two miles south, in District No. 107 (Section 13), is the Buttermilk School, named for the neighboring creek. The building was erected during the troublous times of 1863, and among the early teachers were three women—Jane Swengel, Lizzie Balch and India Buchanan. In 1901-02 there were enrolled in the schools of the township 130 boys and 119 girls.

Churches.—Outside of Etna and Paradise there are but two churches in the township. One, the Methodist Protestant, built eighteen years ago, is close to the north line and west of the center in Section 4. It was organized in 1881 by Rev. S. S. Safford, of Paris, Ill. For a time it flourished, but fortune changed, and six years ago it was abandoned. The other is the Dry Grove Methodist church, built in 1883 in Section 12, under the pastorate of Rev. Ewers. Rev. E. L. Darley is the present pastor.

The earliest place established for divine services in what is now Paradise Township was in the woods in what is now Section 3, midway between the present Camp Ground Cemetery and Dry Grove Church. It consisted of a heavy wooden pulpit under a clap-board roof, surrounded by wooden tents. From 1831 to 1833 it served the Methodist pioneers as a place to sing and preach and pray. A few years later a wooden tabernacle was built about one and one-half miles northwest. It was 50 feet square, with a log house adjoining. Here, also, wooden tents were built. Near by God's Acre was established, which is now known as the Old Camp Ground Cemetery, about midway of and near the north line of the township, in Section 4. Here, until 1855, thousands came annually to worship from early spring till winter. Just across the ravine on the west is the site of a second camp ground, which for several weeks every year from the laying out of the townships to 1880 was a tented city where divine services were held under the auspices of the Methodist Church.

PLEASANT GROVE TOWNSHIP.

As the needle turns to the magnet, so did the face of the white man turn to the west in the seeking of home, fame and fortune. The caravan and canoe brought him across the boundaries of Illinois, and gradually, with the course of empire, he followed the path of the sun. In the footsteps of "poor Lo," he blazed his way to the territory now embraced in Coles County. Close to the timber belts he clung, the territory now known as Pleasant Grove Township, a most attractive home site. Here early settlers colonized, ever planning and building for their children and their children's children.

Pleasant Grove, with its forty-four square miles, eleven miles long by four miles wide, is the west center of the south tier of townships in Coles County. It consists of the north twenty-four sections of Township 11 N., Range 8 E., and that part of the north twenty-four sections of Township 11, Range 9, lying west of the Embarras River. The first Supervisor was Joseph Edman. It is bounded by Paradise, Lafayette and Hutton Townships on the west, north and east, respectively, and by Cumberland County on the south.

Streams—Mineral Springs.—It is through this township that the zigzag terminal moraine marks its way. Who suggested the name is not known, but the name Pleasant Grove seems to have been a favorite, as there are several Pleasant Groves in Illinois. The township has within it the headwaters of four streams: Little Muddy, Indian, Clear and Dick's Creeks. The prairie section remained much under water until the laying of tile in the 'seventies. Through these underground channels ponds were emptied, and to-day these portions are the richest of agricultural sections. The woodman, with his ax, made inroads on the forests, and the heavy belts of timber gradually disappeared until, to-day, only fringes of trees remain.

The natural wonder of the township is the cluster of ten mineral springs on a half-acre tract about two and a half miles south of Lerna, near the middle of Section 23, known as the Coles County Mineral Springs, whose properties vary. Each of these springs is different in quality, one being impregnated with sulphur, another with chloride of sodium, another with iron, etc.

A post-office was established here under the name of Springville, with Henry Wilson as Postmaster, in 1847, but was later moved to a store which was started about 1852 by James Milton True and Thomas A. Marshall, near the middle of the south line of Section 10, Town 11 N., R. 8 East, on land owned by Thomas Jeffries. This store was quite a prominent trading point, and was sold about 1853 by True and Marshall to George Diehl and Isaiah H. Johnston.

Here, from 1836 to 1840, a general merchandise store was conducted by John Whetstone, who was also a mender of clocks. In 1857 a saw-mill was established in the neighborhood by William Ewing. It was in operation when the townships were organized and was not abandoned until after the war.

It was about this time that the health-giving properties of the springs led Dr. Halbrook to build in the neighborhood, and it was he who popularized them as a resort. It was in his home that patients were treated by the use of the waters, many cures being effected. In the early 'eighties a hotel and cottages were built by Mr. Kaywood and, for a number of years, the resort was widely known, drawing hundreds from the surrounding country. In 1892 Dr. Henry Megeath erected a new hotel, but the pendulum of success soon started on its backward swing. In a few years the springs were abandoned and, to-day, they are in an open pasture, shorn of their past glory, save by the deserted hotels and a near-by residence occupied by a farmer.

A postoffice was established in 1879, under the postmastership of W. L. R. Funkhouser, near the railroad on the northeast quarter of Section 4-11-18. After being carried on for a few months it was discontinued.

Farmington Village.—The first village in Pleasant Grove Township was Farmington. It was laid out in 1852 and is situated in Section 16. It never grew beyond four stores, a blacksmith shop, a carriage shop and a steam flouring mill. It was at the height of its glory in 1875. The first postoffice of the township was established in this locality at an early date, with Eugene Campbell as Postmaster, and, when Farmington was laid out, it was moved to the town. In the 'fifties it had three mails a week from Charleston, but in February, 1862, the service was reduced to one mail a week. It is now served by a rural route.

The village has two churches—Methodist and Presbyterian—the first congregation of the former holding its services in a brick school house, erected in 1853 and known as the Farmington Seminary. In 1857 the Presbyterians, aided by the Methodists, built a church in the west part of the village, in which services were held until 1866, when a new and larger church was built. Rev. Mr. Caldwell is the present pastor. In 1866 the Methodists also built a church in the village, Rev. I. H. Aldrich, of Mattoon, being one of its earliest pastors. Rev. C. E. Bennett, of the Lerna circuit, now serves the congregation.

The brick seminary was finally turned over to the Township School Board, who transformed it into a public school. A few years later, the capacity became insufficient, it was sold for store purposes and the present school house, known as the Campbell School, in District No. 61, was built. The prosperity of Farmington began to wane with the establishment of Janesville, and its business diminished until, to-day, it can hardly be called a hamlet.

Janesville.—With the coming into the county of the Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, in 1877, the site for Janesville was established, and in 1879 the town was laid out, one half being on the Cumberland County side of the line and the other on the Coles County side. The two-hundred population is about evenly divided, and on the Pleasant Grove side is located a church, built in 1895, where three denominations—the United Brethren, the Disciples and the Baptists—worship.

Lerna.—A postoffice by the name of Selina was established at the residence of George B. Balch about two miles southeast of the present village of Lerna in June, 1878, but was discontinued when Lerna was started on the railroad in December following. The following year Ralph H. Osborne, a Methodist minister, was appointed Postmaster, and it was at his home that the mail was received and distributed.

In October, 1880, the "Clover Leaf" was surveyed across the line of the Peoria, Decatur & Evansville Railroad, and the rails were laid the following spring. In 1882 the present town of Lerna was platted. The town grew rapidly and to-day its population numbers 475.

In 1883, the first school house was built—D. P. Todd being the first teacher—and it was from this school that the first class (six young ladies) graduated, receiving their diplomas April 13, 1897—the occasion being the first annual commencement of the Lerna schools. In 1889, the present four-roomed school house was built, the first Principal being A. Skidmore.

Lerna has two churches, a Methodist and a Cumberland Presbyterian. The former was moved thither from Kickapoo Point in 1884. It was dedicated in 1885 by Rev. Robert McIntyre, the noted lecturer and pulpit orator, who then lived in Coles County. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Durham and the present pastor is Rev. C. E. Bennett. The Cumberland Presbyterian church was erected in 1888. Its first pastor was Rev. Girard and its present pastor is Rev. S. M.

Teague. The building cost $3,000, and it was dedicated September 6, 1892.

Lerna was incorporated November 25, 1889. The first Village Board was Dr. R. N. Leitch, President; Oscar Harris, Clerk; John Rodgers, William Kincaid, William Ewing, James Bille, Trustees; F. F. Freeman, Treasurer. The present officers are: George Gordon, President; William Morrison, Clerk; W. N. Rumley, T. B. Osborne, L. E. McGinnis, William Wooldridge, William Highland, Irwin Goble, Trustees, and William Williams, Treasurer.

The original town just east of the crossing of the two roads consisted of about two and one half acres. Additions were soon platted, William Ewing's to the west, Hackley's first and second to the north, Jeffries' first and second to the east, and Todd's first and second to the south.

The Lerna bank opened for business in 1901 with a capital stock of $20,000. Its first officers were R. C. Willis, President, and C. H. Faris, Vice-President. In 1902 President Willis resigned, and C. H. Faris was elected in his place, and R. G. Hall was made cashier.

The only newspaper in Pleasant Grove Township was established in 1895 as the "Lerna Enterprise." In 1902 it was purchased by G. Lay Wolfe, and its name was changed to the "Eagle." It is a bright and newsy weekly, and is now edited by H. W. Dill.

Lerna has three secret order lodges: Lerna Lodge, No. 788, A. F. & A. M.; Lerna Camp, No. 1473, M. W. A., and Lodge of Royal Neighbors. The former was organized under dispensation, December 10, 1888, and the charter was granted October 3, 1889, with an enrollment of thirty-six members. The first officers were N. S. McDonald, W. M.; T. A. Endsley, Secretary; J. M. Hackley, Treasurer. The present officers are W. L. R. Funkhouser, W. M.; L. D. Eldridge, Secretary; Robert Wooldridge, Treasurer. The present membership is forty. The lodge rooms are over the bank and were dedicated January 1, 1901. The M. W. A. Lodge was organized in Freeman Hall and charter was granted September 2, 1900. The principal officers were: T. C. Ewing, V. C.; and F. Roswell Voris, Clerk. At present they are George Gordon, V. C., and Charles R. Diehl, Clerk. The lodge has a membership of 140, the largest of any organization in the township. The Lodge of Royal Neighbors was organized in 1902, and meets once a month in the M. W. A. hall. Its head officer is Oscar McGinnis.

A thriving enterprise is the Lerna Creamery organized in 1903 by its present proprietors, John and Charles Faris.

J. M. Haddock, the undertaker, is originator of the Lerna Burial Association, organized in 1902. It was reorganized March 28, 1904, as the Charitable Death Benefit Association of America, a chartered institution, Mr. Haddock having the right of the State.

There are also two grain elevators, one on the Illinois Central Railroad, established in 1890 by Taylor Arterburn, and now owned by John H. Snowden, capacity, 20,000 bushels. The other one, the Clover Leaf, was established about 1891 by W. L. R. Funkhouser and is now owned by F. L. Champion, capacity, 12,000 bushels. Aside from these enterprises Lerna has one two-story brick business block, five stores, two barber shops, two restaurants, and four blacksmith shops and a hay-barn. The latter was built in 1904 by J. H. Snowden and has a capacity of 300 tons.

The town has one and one half miles of concrete sidewalks and is a fine grain center, being at the heart of a rich agricultural territory, as was evidenced in the displays at the one-day street fair held in Lerna October 6, 1904.

It also has a telephone service, the first installed in the township. In 1897 the Coles County Telephone Company's line wired into the village and established a central office, and two years later—September, 1899—the Farmington Citizens Mutual Company also connected with Lerna. In the fall of 1903 the Lerna Mutual Company was organized and a local service instituted which, at the present time, has in operation about forty instruments.

The postoffice, which was opened up with the survey of the town, was for twelve years located in stores; but in 1893 it was moved to an independent building by the Postmaster, James Jeffries. On March 1, 1903, rural service was inaugurated, the one route covering 25 miles and serving 450 people. William Greason is present Postmaster.

Pleasant Grove has no town hall, and in Lerna, when the elections are held, a store or a shop in each of the two precincts is selected as a polling place.

Trilla. The village of Trilla is on the line between Cumberland and Coles counties, and is also on the Clover Leaf Railroad, the building of which, in 1882, dates the platting of the town.

The original site was laid out by Jacob Fickes, a log house owned by him being the only residence on or near the site. It gave way to a two-story frame house, the first in the village, after which other residences and store buildings sprang up. The original plat was enlarged by a Fickes Addition at the east and a Hart Addition at the west, and now the village has about forty houses, three general merchandise stores, two restaurants, one barber shop, one livery stable, two blacksmith shops and two grain elevators. One elevator, built in 1885, with a capacity of 5,000 bushels, is owned by F. D. Voris of Neoga. The other, built in 1900, capacity, 5,000 bushels, is owned by John H. Snowden, one of the most enterprising men of the township, who also owns a 500-ton hay barn, built in Trilla in 1888. The barn is in the heart of a hay-producing district, and from it 3,000 tons of select timothy hay are shipped annually.

The Trilla postoffice, which is fourth class, was established in 1882. Henry McPherson was the first Postmaster. He was succeeded in turn by C. E. Marlette, J. W. Brown, and others. The present Postmaster is D. F. Jones. The annual revenue of the office is $300. It has one rural route of twenty-five miles, which serves 600 people.

It has a telephone office, established in 1895, in Henry McPherson's store, with two country lines, the Baughman and the Farmer's, and the Coles County Company's line, which connects with Mattoon.

In 1886 a one-room school house was built in the village—now District 110—Mrs. H. M. Ozee and Henry McPherson being early teachers. The rapid growth of Trilla necessitated a larger school building and, in 1893, a two-room structure was built. Hiram Landrus was one of the first principals and Miss Grace Chapman a teacher.

There are three churches in Trilla. One, a Missionary Baptist, built in 1888 at a cost of $1,200, was abandoned in 1904. The church once accommodated a flourishing congregation, and among the early pastors were Revs. Mr. Payne and Mr. Griffiths. In May, 1905, it was purchased by the United Brethren, who now hold regular services there. The Methodist Episcopal church was erected about 1894 at a cost of $1,200. An early pastor was Rev. N. H. Gowan. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Beatty. In 1887 the Cumberland Presbyterian people moved the two-story Beals church to Trilla from Bonaset, where it stood on the Jesse Beals land, just north of the county line one and one-quarter miles east in Section 20, Range 8. It was built about 1865 and its earliest pastor was Rev. Mr. Goodnight. It took the place of a log church, 20x36 feet, which was built between 1844 and 1846 and dedicated in the latter year. It was the first church of that denomination in the township. George Fickes, now living in Mattoon, was one of the pioneers who helped to raise it. Its first pastor was Rev. James Ashmore. The pastor now in charge of the church at Trilla is Rev. Z. M. Wyckoff, and the new church was built in 1890, at a cost of $1,500.

There are three lodges and a G. A. R. Post in Trilla. The Muddy Point Lodge, No. 396, A. F. & A. M., was organized in the old Muddy Point school, in 1863, by a committee from the Wabash Lodge at Etna. Among the first officers were: Jesse Beals, W. M.; Joshua Landrus, S. W.; C. L. Williams, Secretary.

In 1865 a second story was added to the Anderson school in Bonaset, into which the lodge moved. In 1879 the school-house burned and during the same year the lodge built a second-story to the Beals church, one-half mile south. Here it again fitted up quarters where it remained until 1887, when it was removed to Trilla, occupying a room over Brown & McPherson's store. In 1901 the lodge again lost its equipment by fire. Another building took the place of the one burned and the lodge again installed itself in the upper room, with new furnishings, where it still burns the light of Masonry. In 1888 a dissension arose among the members, which resulted in a number withdrawing and organizing the lodge at Lerna, now known as Lerna Lodge No. 788.

In 1892 the sisters and wives of the Muddy Point Masons organized an Eastern Star Lodge, which is still flourishing and which holds its meetings once a month in the Masonic Hall. It was organized by Hallie Brady and among its present officers are: Mrs. C. A. McPherson, W. M.; Henry McPherson, W. P.; Dora Schee, Secretary.

In 1893 Trilla Camp, M. W. A., was organized. It has a membership of fifty and meets twice a month.

In 1885 the Veterans of the Civil War met in the Masonic Hall of the Beals church and organized Trilla Post, No. 303, G. A. R., with twenty-three charter members. Lewis W. Brown was first Commander. At present it has but eleven members and still meets once a month in the Masonic Hall at Trilla. Among the present officers are: Lewis W. Brown, Commander; Henry McPherson, Vice-Commander.

Rural Schools.—Outside the villages are eight schools in the township. Muddy Point School being the oldest. In the early 'thirties Theron E. Balch taught the first school, in a pole-cabin located near where the Folger Cumberland Presbyterian church now stands, in Section 16, Range 8, East. Ten years later a log school house was built near by or in place of the pole-cabin, and there "Young America" was taught the "Three R's" by early wielders of the birch. In 1859 this school was abandoned for a frame building that year erected in Section 8, Range 8, nearly a mile to the northwest. Early teachers in the school were Mary Reynolds and James Crume. In 1885 the force of progress brought about the building of a larger school one half-mile east and in Section 9, Range 8 East, the present Muddy Point school in District No. 65 was erected, among the first teachers being Oscar Cavins and Miss Lou Snowden. The first Board was L. E. McGinniss, A. H. Odell and Thomas Snowden.

Another old school is that at the head of Indian Creek, in Section 12, Range 8 East, known as the Indian School. It was first taught in the early 'thirties in some of the settlers' cabins. In 1836 a school house was built on the Indian Presbyterian church ground. Among the first teachers were Theron Balch, I. J. Monfort and Eli Thayer. In the early 'fifties a frame structure took the place of the log building and there Jane Linn, Mary Kelso, Nannie Bovell and Mary McDonald taught. The present school was built about 1880 on the George T. Balch land in District 63. The present Board is Robert L. Best, O. L. Gibson and T. B. Endsley.

The Buck Grove or Jeffries School in District No. 66, was originally built in 1861. It was a frame building erected near the center of Section 7, Range 8 East. An early Board was Jacob Dornblaser, George Diehl and William Thomas. Among the early teachers were Margaret Diehl, D. A. Lyle and George D. Jeffries. In 1890 a more modern structure was built on the opposite side of the road to the southwest to take the place of the first building. The present Board is W. R. Knight, Ed Connell and T. J. Diehl.

The Rodgers School, in District No. 62, was originally built in 1868, in the southeast corner of Section 18, Range 9. The first Board was composed of Bennett Nicholson, J. Baker and John Rodgers. Among the early teachers were Luemda Dieckell, William Campbell and Layman Rodgers. In 1892 a new building, which yet stands, was erected on half mile north of the former building. The present Board consists of Robert Balch, James Phipps and John W. Baker.

The Balch School, in District No. 115, Section 22, Range 9, was built in 1869. An early Board consisted of Jacob Phipps, John White and F. Harwood. Among the early teachers were George Balch, Alpha Balch and Warren Butler. Time has dealt gently with the building and it still stands in a grove of native trees not far from the Embarras. The present Board is composed of J. L. Harwood, W. S. Werden and W. T. Phipps.

The Wright School, in District No. 111, is the outgrowth of a little building erected in the timber on the Riley land in Section 15, Range 8, about 1865. Early teachers were Rebecca Clancy and John Alison. In 1875 a larger school was needed and accordingly a new building was erected on the John Jeffries land, in the northern part of the section. Ten years later the building was torn down and the material was used in the building of the school which stands one and one-quarter miles south, in Section 22, Range 8. The present Board is composed of William Nichols, Robert Brady and D. G. Greer.

The Leitch School, in District No. 60, is in the northeast part of Section 10, Range 9, near the eastern boundary of the township. It was built about 1866, where it now stands. An early Board consisted of Charles Leitch, H. Ceel and Henry Edmond. Among the early teachers were Warren Butler, James Parkinson and W. H. Werden.

The Ooley or Mineral Springs School, in District No. 113, was built in 1874 at its present site in the middle east part of Section 23, Range 8. An early Board consisted of E. P. Gordon, John Brown and John Selee. Early teachers were Izatus Whitacre, James Dunn and Lizzie Gray. It was built on Dr. Hallbrook's land while he had charge of the once famous springs but one-half mile distant to the west.

The number of pupils enrolled during the winter of 1904-05 in the township were 712—373 boys and 339 girls. The teachers employed were nine men and five women.

Churches.—Outside of the three villages there are five churches in Pleasant Grove—two Cumberland Presbyterian, one Presbyterian and two Methodist Episcopal churches.

The Folger Cumberland Presbyterian church, near the Clover Leaf Railroad, in the west part of Section 16, Range 8, is the outgrowth of a big revival in 1837. In 1843 J. W. Woods, later of Mattoon, organized a church, the members of which met in neighborhood houses until 1854, when a building was erected, S. K. Gammill, John Van Meter and W. L. R. Funkhouser being among the first officers. An early pastor was Robert Hill. Religious services were held here until 1882, when the present church was built at a cost of $1,600 on the site of the old edifice. It was during the pastorate of Rev. John W. Woods. The present pastor is Rev. S. A. Teague. Among the officers are J. Will Walker, Mark Wortham and J. H. Gammill.

The Shiloh Cumberland Presbyterian Church in the north part of Section 19, Range 9, was built about 1867 near the old Gordon graveyard where lie the remains of Thomas Lincoln, the father of the martyred President. The late Rev. John W. Woods, of Mattoon, was also the organizer of this band of Christian worshippers, and Rev. Benjamin Hill was an early pastor. The old structure gave way to a larger and more modern one, which was built about twenty years ago and is yet a stronghold for religious worship.

Indian or Pleasant Prairie Church (Presbyterian) was organized August 30, 1830, with fourteen members, by Rev. B. F. Spillman from the General Assembly. Two years later a log church was built by the members who gave their work and the material free. For two summers meetings were held there, although the floor, the siding and windows were not added until 1834. Early pastors were Isaac Bennett, James H. Shields and John McDonald. Among the early members were Theron E. Balch, James Ashmore, Thomas McCracken, Mary Wayne and Elizabeth Logan. In 1839 the congregation divided into old school and new school factions, but both congregations held their services alternately in the same church. In 1852 the dual congregation erected a new church and in it, as before, both congregations worshipped until 1857, when the new school organization built a church at Farmington.

In 1866 the old school faction built a new church one-quarter of a mile east in Section 12, Range 8 East, and abandoned their former place of worship, where, in 1868, Prof. T. J. Lee first established his academy, which was afterward located in Loxa. The new church was the magnet which drew again into one fold the two congregations, and, in 1871, the church at Farmington was abandoned and the Indian church again resounded with united harmony of songs of praise. Among the early pastors were Revs. Nathaniel Williams, James Allison and Ellis Williams. The present pastor is Rev. Caldwell. One of the early and most earnest elders was George B. Balch, a local poet of distinction. Among his poems are many that will live as long as the history of Pleasant Grove lives, especially "The Hand of God in American History," "The Address to Old Settlers" and "The Grave of Thomas Lincoln."

The Mount Tabor Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1858 by Rev. John Adams, the church originally consisting of five members. John Irwin, Dorothy Irwin, Robert Leitch, Jane Leitch and Hettie Swicher. The first meetings were held in a log church belonging to the United Brethren, which had served the latter congregation for a number of years. For twenty-eight years the Methodists held their meetings in this temple of logs, but the advance of time drew them from their primitive abode in 1866, when the Leitch school was built, and there services were held until 1892. In that year, during the pastorate of Rev. James Tull, the present church was built in the southern part of Section 4, Range 9. Rev. C. E. Bennet is present pastor.

The Muddy Point Methodist Episcopal Church is located in the west part of Section 9, Range 8, and at the west side of the Muddy Point cemetery, one of the best kept in the township. In the beginning the little congregation met alternately with a neighboring Cumberland Presbyterian body. In 1866 the Methodists completed a church for themselves on ground donated in 1858 by Joseph Glenn, a pioneer who was one of its first members and most ardent worshippers. Rev. J. H. Aldrich was the first pastor and the dedication services were held August 29, 1866. In 1887 the frame church was moved about 600 feet to its present location west of the cemetery, where it was remodeled and made as new. Rev. C. E. Bennett is the present pastor.

SEVEN HICKORY TOWNSHIP.

The town of Seven Hickory is nine miles in length from north to south, extending from Douglas County to Charleston Township, and almost six miles wide extending from Morgan to Humboldt Townships. It contains 34 sections, but the tier of sections on the west are fractional, containing each a little less than five hundred acres. It is located mainly upon the crest of a water-shed on which streams head that flow east and west and south. There is hardly an acre of untillable land within its borders, and its soil is of the blackest in color and richest in quality.

The township received its name from a cluster of seven hickory trees which, in pioneer days, stood in the northeast corner of Section 20, in Town 13. Because it was "out upon the prairie," it was the last land to be settled upon by residents, and no permanent settlement is known upon it prior to about 1850. Cattle were grazed upon it, and wolves and deer were hunted on it prior to that time, and even for some years after. But its black soil was gradually encroached upon with the plow and tilled, from year to year, with splendid results. In all this prairie region trees were planted by the settlers and no idea of how it first appeared can now be obtained by passing over this land so dotted and decorated by orchards and groves and rows of splendid shade trees, all of which have been placed there by the hand of man.

The southwestern part of the township was first settled upon, and Samuel and John Rosebraugh, William and Jack Coons, Abner Brown, Benjamin McNeal and Milo Mitchell are said to have been the first settlers there. They built their houses of sawed lumber instead of logs, and though small, their dwellings were made comfortable. Jesse O'Hair is given as authority for the statement that there were about a hundred families in the township when it was organized in 1859.

The first voting place for the township was at the Nickles School House, which was in the northwest corner of Section 16-13-9; then later at the Center School House, which was south and west of the present one of that name in Section 10, and continued there until a town hall was built in 1885, close to Fair Grange on the southwest, just over in Section 14.

The first school-house was erected about 1855 or 1856, in the southwest-tern part of the township. It was a comfortable frame building.

Subscription schools, such as were first taught in the earlier settled parts of the county, were unknown here, the free-school system having just been well established in the county when the schools began to be opened in the township. The Le Baron History, published in 1879, gave the number of schools in the township at that time as thirteen, the length of school terms as six months, and the average wages paid to male teachers $14.79 and to female teachers $28.19 per month. The value of its school property at that time was $5,800 and the principal of its township school fund was $3,847.

Prior to the building of the Clover Leaf Railroad—which now enters the township at the northeast corner of Section 12 and, after running southwest for a little more than a mile and a half, goes due south to Charleston—there was no village within its limits.

One John Mason started a general store in the township some time about 1872, seven or eight miles north of Charleston, which did a good business until about 1880, when Mason was murdered by parties unknown.

One J. H. Davidson started a blacksmith shop in the 'seventies, and aside from these there were no other enterprises of that kind until Fair Grange was platted on the line of the "Clover Leaf" in the fall of 1883.

A postoffice called Rural Retreat was started in 1853, which was first located on the Springfield Trace near the north line of the township and was continued for several years not far from the present Rural Retreat church, sometimes in Coles and sometimes in Douglas County, its location depending on which one of the settlers was willing to be bothered with the care of the office.

Charleston is—and always has been—the place where the most of the population go to trade, although many in the northern part go to Arcola, Hindsboro and other points north. It was to gain and hold all the trade of the township at Charleston, that the plank road enterprise was started, about 1870, which has been described in the general history of the county.

Railroad History.—About 1871 the people of Seven Hickory, having learned of an enterprise to construct a railroad between Tuscola and Charleston, voted bonds in aid of the road to the amount of $40,000, which were issued bearing ten per cent interest annually. One General Ayers, a railroad promoter, got possession of these bonds for the purpose of furthering the enterprise, and the next heard of them was that they were in the possession of Eastern parties who claimed they had bought them, and the people of Seven Hickory Township were up in arms.

In the meantime, the plan of building to Tuscola through Seven Hickory—which would have taken the road through the whole length of the township—was changed, and it was decided to go north from Charleston for three or four miles into Seven Hickory, and then northeast to Danville. This plan was violently opposed by the people in the north part of the township who felt that the change was to their disadvantage.

The collection of the bonds and interest was resisted by the people and litigation began and continued several years, until the total amount of bonds, interest and costs is said to have reached about $90,000. A compromise was then effected, and the people at an election held July 10, 1884, voted for an issue of $60,000 to liquidate the whole matter. Seven Hickory, however, without the aid of these bonds in any way, got the railroad according to the last plan, which was to build to Danville.

About 1880 the "Clover Leaf," which was at first a narrow-gauge road, was constructed from Charleston north in Seven Hickory to a point about four miles north of the south line, and thence northeast. The first freight out of Charleston was a carload of lumber taken to Fair Grange in April, 1881, for J. W. Frazier, who was building a new house on his farm. The township has taken up and paid all the bonds except $30,000, which were refunded into four and one-half per cent bonds upon their maturity, July 10, 1904. The new issue was made payable at the rate of $6,000 per year for five years, the purchaser of the bonds paying a bonus of $175 for them. This sale illustrates the change in financial conditions since 1884, when, in order to float the bonds at par, it was considered necessary to make the rate of interest ten per cent.

Grange Organization.—In the 'seventies the farmers in many parts of the West felt that their interests would be benefitted by organization, and what was called the "Grange" movement developed in the town of Seven Hickory to a greater extent than elsewhere in the county. Mr. John Salmons was perhaps the most active in the matter, although many others were as much imbued with the spirit of the organization as he was. A grange hall, for the purpose of holding meetings, was built near the Rural Retreat church, and doubtless the Seven Hickory farmers received much benefit from their activity in that direction.

Fair Grange.—The postoffice started on the railroad in the spring of 1883 was first called Arena, but within a few weeks the name was changed to "Fair Grange" as more suited to the sentiments of the people. The village, which was not platted until the fall of the same year, adopted the same name.

Fair Grange has a grain elevator owned by Wyeth & Harding, which was built in 1890. Two general stores are kept, one by Clarence Hersey, and the other by Job W. Massey. The latter is an old settler of the county, and one who has helped develop its resources.

The population of the village is estimated at about one hundred.

The only lodge of a secret order in the township is that of the Modern Woodmen (No. 3124) at Fair Grange. It was organized August 6, 1895. John E. Connelly was the first V. C. and Edward Craig is now V. C. Mr. C. F. Kilgore has been its clerk from the start.

Churches.—Rural Retreat Christian Church was organized about 1856. Among early members were William Coombs, Phillip Moyer, James Breeden, Mrs. James Wheatley and others. Mordecai Cole was an early preacher. The building was erected in 1866. The building committee was Thomas Wyeth, Harmon Gregg and John Parr.

Prof. W. F. Black is said to have had something to do with the church about that time, and is given credit for much of its early growth and prosperity. The church is said to have been the parent of those of the same denomination in that vicinity—the Hindsboro, Bushton, Walnut Grove and Kemp Churches. Removal of members and decline in church interest caused the church to be without services for two years prior to August, 1904. At that time Rev. Charles R. Scoville, an evangelist, revived and reorganized the church. John Parr, M. Murphy, James Shields, M. Eversole, William Johnson, John Henry and M. Walters are now officers of the church. The minister is Elder Melnott Miller. The building is located near the southeast corner of Section 22-14-9.

Olive Branch Methodist Episcopal Church was organized 1865-66, holding meetings in residences or school houses until 1869, when a frame church was erected. A Rev. Mr. Wallace was active in its organization and dedication of the building. Among its first members and officers were Henry Nickles, Z. B. Jones, Jack Foreman and J. R. and Levi Salmons. The church was remodeled in 1901, and its first preacher then was Rev. William Mitchell. Its present pastor is Rev. F. M. Harry.

Walnut Grove Christian Church, in Section 31, Town 14, was the outcome of meetings held in school houses for about two years, and conducted by Elder J. E. Steele. About 1895-96 the building was erected and dedicated by Elder Steele. Isaac Moler, R. J. McAllister and A. A. Honn were among its first officers. The church has no regular preacher now.

The Pleasant Valley Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in Seven Hickory Township, but removed to Morgan, and the history of the church is given in connection with that township.

Another early Methodist Episcopal church that was started, probably a little after 1860, was that known as the Bradshaw Chapel, about a mile east of Rural Retreat church. Rev. Bradshaw was the first preacher. Nathan Wyeth, Nathan Thomas, John Cofer and Alanson Burson were prominent early members and Rev. David Shirley was a later preacher there. The church was removed to Douglas County about 1868.

Schools.—The O'Hair School (No. 39) was first built in Section 27 in the later 'fifties, the present building was put up in 1870 in Section 35, Township 14. An early teacher was Aaron Balch. Miss Golden Knight is now in charge as teacher.

Bunker Hill (or Emhuff) School (No. 40) located on Section 27, Town 14, was previously on land of Samuel Wyeth's. The building erected on Section 27 in 1871 was replaced in 1903 by the one now in use. Sarah Burns taught early. The school is now taught by Miss Ella Miner.

Martin Box School (No. 41) was built in 1871 on Section 30, Town 14. James Rosebraugh taught there early. Miss Daisy Miner is the present teacher.

Shiloh School (No. 123) is located in Section 20, Town 14, and the present building was put up in 1887. An earlier building was erected in 1871.

Eversole School (No. 124) is now in Section 21, Township 14. It was first on Section 16. The first building was erected in 1870, and the last one in 1902. Thomas Payne taught early. The school is now taught by Miss Celia Carroll.

Wheatley School (No. 125), built in 1870 on Section 23, Township 14, had F. E. Hobart, John Favorite and James Wheatley for early teachers. That building burned in 1901, and in 1902 the present one was put up, in which Miss Anna Knapp taught the first school. No. 28666, 1886, this year.

Grant School (No. 42) known at first as the old Gray School, was built about 1868. Its first teacher was David Riddick. The district was divided, and in 1894 this school was located on the Grant farm. The present teacher is Clarence Huffman.

Center School (No. 43) was started in 1870, not far from its present location in Section 10, Township 13. It was moved to its present site in 1868, and the building now used was put up in 1888. The first teacher after it was moved in 1868 was W. T. Foreman, and the first teacher in the present building Clara Osborn. The present teacher is Minnie E. Taylor.

Fair Grange School (No. 44), in Section 11, Township 16, was built in 1864, and James W. Craig taught the first school. The new house built in Fair Grange in 1902 cost $1,800. The present teacher is D. C. Carson.

Seven Hickory School (No. 45) was in a district organized from the old Gray and Glasco schools, and the building was erected in 1892. V. Goff was the first, and Claude Christeson is the present teacher. It is in Section 20, Township 13.

Glasco School (No. 46) is in Section 30, Township 13. The first house was built in 1858, and the present one in 1885. Miss Hulda Oliver taught at first and Miss Maggie Reat teaches now.

The Dice School (No. 47) was built about one-fourth of a mile north of the present location in 1860, and in 1884 the present house in Section 28, Township 13, was built. W. H. Crispin taught its first and Elmer Smith its last school.

Marshall School (No. 48) in Section 22, Township 13, was started with the building of a house in 1867-68. The present building followed about 1886. Joseph Heath and Nettie Decker taught the first and second schools, respectively, in the old house, and Miss Dovie Sellars taught first in the last house. R. L. Montz now teaches there.

Mullen School (No. 49) is in Section 30, Township 13, and the first house was put up in 1865, with Miss Addie Carney as first teacher. That house was burned about 1878, being replaced the same year by the present building, in which J. C. Balbis first taught.

CITIZENS OF COLES COUNTY.

The verdict of mankind has awarded to the Muse of History the highest place among the Classic Nine. The extent of her office, however, appears to be, by many minds, but imperfectly understood. The task of the historian is comprehensive and exacting. True history reaches beyond the doings of court or camp, beyond the issue of battles, or the effects of treaties, and records the trials and triumphs, the failures and the successes, of the men who make history. It is but an imperfect conception of the philosophy of events that fails to accord to portraiture and biography its rightful position as a part—and no unimportant part—of historical narrative. Behind and beneath the activities of outward life the motive power lies out of sight, just as the furnace fires that work the piston and keep the ponderous screw revolving, are down in the darkness of the hold. So, the impulsive power which shapes the course of communities may be found in the molding influences which form its citizens.

It is no mere idle curiosity that prompts men to wish to learn the private, as well as the public, lives of their fellows. Rather it is true that such desire tends to prove universal brotherhood; and the interest in personality and biography is not confined to men of any particular caste or vocation.

The list of those to whose lot it falls to play a conspicuous part in the great drama of life is comparatively short; yet communities are made up of individuals, and the aggregate of achievements—no less than the sum total of human happiness—is made up of the deeds of those men and women whose primary aim, through life, is faithfully to perform the duty that comes nearest to hand. Individual influence upon human affairs will be considered potent or insignificant according to the standpoint from which it is viewed. To him who, standing upon the seashore, notes the ebb and flow of the tide and listens to the sullen roar of the waves, as they break upon the beach in seething foam, seemingly chafing at their limitations, the ocean appears so vast as to need no tributaries. Yet, without the smallest rill that helps to swell the "Father of Waters," the mighty torrent of the Mississippi would be lessened, and the beneficent influence of the Gulf Stream diminished. Countless streams, currents and counter currents—sometimes mingling, sometimes counteracting each other—collectively combine to give motion to the accumulated mass of water. So is it—and so must it ever be—in the ocean of human action, which is formed by the blending and repulsion of currents of thought, of influence and of life, yet more numerous and more tortuous than those which form "the fountains of the deep."

In the foregoing pages are traced the beginning, growth and maturity of a concrete thing, Coles County. But the concrete is but the aggregate result of individual labor. The acts and characters of men, like the several faces that compose a composite picture, are wrought together into a compact or heterogeneous whole. History is condensed biography; "Biography is History teaching by example."

It is both interesting and instructive to rise above the generalization of history and trace, in the personality and careers of the men from whom it sprang, the principles and influences, the impulses and ambitions, the labors, struggles and triumphs that engrossed their lives.

In the pages that follow are gathered up, with as much detail as the limits of the work allow, the personal record of many of the men who have made Coles County what it is. In each record may be traced some feature which influenced, or has been stamped upon, the civic life.

Here are pioneers who, "when the fullness of time had come," came from widely separated sources, some from beyond the sea, impelled by diverse motives, little conscious of the import of their acts, and but dimly anticipating the harvest which would spring from their sowing. They built their little cabins, toiling for a present subsistence while laying the foundations of private fortunes and future advancement.

Most have passed away, but not before they beheld a development of business and population surpassing the wildest dreams of fancy. A few yet remain whose years have passed the allotted three score and ten, and who love to recount, among the cherished memories of their lives, their reminiscences of early days in Coles County.

Among these early, hardy settlers and those who followed them, may be found the names of many who imparted the first impulse to the county's growth and homelikeness, the many who, through their identification with agricultural pursuits and varied interests, aided in her material progress; of skilled mechanics who first laid the foundations of beautiful homes and productive industries, and of the members of the learned professions—clergymen, physicians, educators and lawyers—whose influence upon the intellectual life and development of the community it is impossible to overestimate.

Municipal institutions arise; Commerce spreads her sails and prepares the way for the magic of Science that drives the locomotive engine over the iron rails. Trade is organized, stretching its arms across the prairie to gather in and distribute the products of the soil. Church spires rise to express, in architectural form, the faith and aspirations of the people, while a university, together with schools, public and private, elevate the standards of education and of artistic taste.

Here are many of the men through whose labors, faith and thought these magnificent results have been achieved. To them and to their co-laborers, the Coles County of to-day stands an enduring monument, attesting their faith, their energy, their courage, and their self-sacrifice.

[The following items of personal and family history, having been arranged in encyclopedic (or alphabetical) order as to names of the individual subjects, no special index to this part of the work will be found necessary.]

ABERNATHY, George W., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Tippecanoe County, Ind., March 4, 1858, the son of Samuel and Mary Abernathy, natives of Indiana. Both parents died while Mr. Abernathy was very young. He was then taken to Cumberland County, Ill., and soon familiarized himself with the labor connected with working a large farm. At length he was promoted to the dignity of a regular paid farm hand; later, rented property, and in 1891 was able to purchase his present place of seventy acres in Hutton Township. On this farm its owner has made substantial improvements.

On January 1, 1890, Mr. Abernathy was married to Belle, daughter of J. J. Cottingham, and of this union five children have been born: William, Clara, Blanche, Mary and Freddie. In his political affiliations Mr. Abernathy is a Democrat. He is a member of Hutton Lodge, No. 692, I. O. O. F., at Salisbury.

ADAMS, Captain William E., (deceased) was born in Bedford County, Tennessee, October 15, 1830, the son of John J. and Martha (Gammel) Adams, natives of Tennessee, who came to Coles

County, Ill., and settled in Pleasant Grove Township in December of 1830. The subject of this sketch received his early education in the country schools of his district, but after reaching his fifteenth year, spent several years in other schools and in his leisure hours read law. Finally after a course in the Law School at Madison, Wis., he was admitted to the bar in 1857. He began to practice at Mattoon, and was engaged in this profession, when in August, 1862, he felt called upon to enlist in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being at once made Captain of the same, and serving until his discharge, which occurred in July, 1865. He then returned to Coles County, and was elected Clerk of the Court, serving as such for two terms. In 1873 he was elected County Judge, acting in this capacity for four years. He was a member of the City Council for three years, and of the Board of Education for a considerable time.

In August, 1858, Captain Adams was married to Olive A., daughter of David and Olive (Green) Holton, natives of Vermont, who emigrated to Wisconsin in 1853. Of the children born to them, the following survive: Jennie M., wife of W. V. Miles; Sarah S., widow of S. M. Leitch; William E., an attorney, and Helen, wife of I. H. John.

ston, Jr. Captain Adams was a member of the Charleston Post, No. 271, G. A. R. He served as an elder in the Presbyterian Church for many years before his death, which occurred September 21, 1884.

ADKINS, William R., (deceased) was born in Charleston Township, Coles County, Ill., December 14, 1851, the son of Gowen and Nancy Adkins, residents of Kentucky. Being brought up on the home farm and receiving his education in the public schools, he began to do general farming and to be interested in stock-raising at an early age, and soon had accumulated enough to purchase three hundred acres of fertile land.

On the 5th of September, 1877, Mr. Adkins was united in marriage to Addie, daughter of H. H. and Hannah Cecil. Five children were born to them: Henry G., John H., Elizabeth M., Charles E. and Frances E. Mr. Adkins was affiliated with the Democratic party, and was a member of the Baptist Church. His decease occurred April 30, 1895.

ADKINS, William Francis, farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, was born in Wheatland, Knox County, Ind., July 17, 1862, the son of William F. and Rebecca (Long) Adkins, natives of Tennessee and Indiana, respectively. The father served as a soldier in the Mexican War, and also for four years in our Civil War. In 1866 the family removed to Princeton, Ind., and here the subject of this sketch received his education and spent his youth. In 1882 he came to Mason County, Ill., where for four years he was engaged in farming. Then he went west but returned in 1892 to Mason County, finally locating in Coles County in October of 1894.

On April 29, 1897, Mr. Adkins was united in marriage to Miss Alice (McPherson) Montgomery, and to them has been born one daughter—Ruth Marion. Mr. Adkins is affiliated with the Democratic party in his political views, and is a member of the Masonic fraternity, connected with the Blue Lodge at Mattoon. He belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian church.

ALLISON, Charles W., Justice of the Peace and Notary Public, Etna, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County March 13, 1837, the son of Doctor William and Edith (Everett) Allison, the former a native of Hardin County, Kentucky, and the latter of North Carolina. The parents located in Coles County in 1831, where the father practiced his profession as a physician and was likewise a minister in the Methodist denomination. The son, Charles W., spent his youth upon a farm, and on June 9, 1862, enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving as a non-commissioned officer, and being mustered out in 1865. On February 22, 1861, Mr. Allison was married to Susan J., daughter of James and Carrie Jones, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County in 1848, and of this union four children were born, three of whom survive: William E., James E. and Frances A.

Since 1884, Squire Allison has devoted himself to his official duties. A Republican in his politics, he has served as a Justice of the Peace for twenty-eight years, and Notary Public for eight years. He belongs to the Methodist Church, and has been Superintendent of the Sunday School for the past twenty-five years.

AMES, Newton C., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Somerset County, N. J., September 16, 1850, the son of Nelson W. and Susan A. (Cramer) Ames, natives of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, respectively, who moved to Coles County in 1857, settling on Section 36, North Okaw Township, on 240 acres purchased from the railroad company. Here the father died in July, 1882. He left seven children, three of whom were born of a former marriage, the subject of this sketch being the eldest child of the second marriage. Nelson W., Ames' first wife was Miss Nancy M. Hoadley, and of this union four children were born, three only surviving: Oliver H., George R. and Ruter S.; Mary G. died at the age of five years. The children of the second marriage were: Newton C., Louisa, wife of F. Noyes, Sarah E. and John B.

NEWTON C. AMES.

Newton C., of whom we write, received his education in the public schools and at Westfield Academy, with a course at the Bryant & Stratton Business College in Chicago. He then spent eighteen months on the plains of Kansas as a ranchman. In 1876 he returned to Coles County, locating in 1879 on a part of his present farm, where he began to breed and feed stock on a large scale. All improvements on Section 24, where he resides, are the work of the owner. He has a fine residence and orchard, and the land is in a good state of cultivation.

On January 7, 1880, Mr. Ames was united in marriage to Laura A., daughter of Richard Thomas, an early settler in Humboldt Township, and of this union four children have been born: Harvey N., Anna B., Inez E. and Nellie Blanche.

In his political views Mr. Ames is a Republican, and has served as School Director. His membership in the Masonic Church and training in the same.

AMES, Oliver H. (history), North Willow Township, Coles County, was born in Wilcox County, Pa., November 28, 1840, the son of Nelson W. and Nancy (Hoadley) Ames, who were natives of Connecticut. After leaving the public schools in Somerset County, N. J., the family moved in 1847 to Coles County, Ill., where they purchased land, which they subdivided and the father's decease on July 25, 1855. Oliver H. Ames remained with his parents until he attained the majority, when, in 1864, he purchased eight acres of land and began to work on himself. He owns at present a fine estate consisting of 250 acres, 200 constituting the home farm, the remainder being located elsewhere in North Willow Township. On this land cattle are extensively bred and general farming operations carried on.

On May 4, 1864, Mr. Ames was married to Sophia Whimsey, daughter of James and Elizabeth (Morton) Whitley. Her grandfather, Charles Morton, was the founder of Charleston, Illinois. Of this union five children were born, of whom three survive: Charles L., Harry and Gertrude. Willie and Mary being deceased. Mrs. Ames died August 12, 1886. On February 11, 1891, Mr. Ames was united in marriage to Anna, daughter of J. J. Wilson of Jasper County, and to them have been born one child, Earl. In his political views, Mr. Ames is affiliated with the Republican party, and he has served as School Director and as Assessor.

ANDERSON, Bartholomew, farmer, Charleston Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Salisbury, Hutton Township, Coles County, March 7, 1855, the son of Elias and Amanda Anderson, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively, but who came to Coles County, Ill., about 1840. Both parents are now deceased. Bartholomew Anderson received his education in the schools near his home, and continued with his parents, and in Hutton Township, until 1880. In 1892 he purchased a farm of seventy acres in Charleston Township, where he now resides, and devotes his time to general farming and the raising of stock.

On March 10, 1881, Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Amanda, daughter of David and Amanda McKenna, and of this union four children have been born: Bessie and Charles, both deceased; Coral, wife of Charles McAdams, and Audley. In his political views Mr. Anderson is a Republican. He belongs to the Kickapoo Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Charleston, and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church at Whetstone.

ANDERSON, David, farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Fulton County, Ill., January 29, 1861, the son of Cornelius and Mary A. Anderson, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively, who came to Coles County in 1867. The father is deceased, his death occurring in 1878. Mr. Anderson received his education in Hutton Township and in early manhood was engaged for several years in farming there. In 1883 he moved to Humboldt Township, and in 1901 went to Lafayette Township, locating on part of the Burgner farm, where the family reside at present. Mr. Anderson owns 100 acres on Section 13.

On February 23, 1885, Mr. Anderson was married to Sarah, daughter of Daniel and Amanda (Hall) McKenzie, natives of Indiana and Kentucky. Mr. McKenzie died in 1878. His widow resides four miles south of Charleston. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of four children: Oscar, Palmer, Agnes and Jessie. In his political affiliations Mr. Anderson is a Democrat. He is a member of Kickapoo Lodge, No. 609, I. O. O. F., at Charleston. He and his wife belong to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Loxa.

ANDERSON, Samuel T., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Pulaski County, Ky., October 22, 1859, the son of W. S. and Amanda (Rayborn) Anderson, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. Mr. Anderson received his education in the schools of Kentucky, and then began to work at farming. In 1881, coming to Coles County, he at first worked by the month for neighboring farmers, after which he rented land and later bought property of his own. He now owns 100 acres of land in North Okaw Township, besides two lots in the village of Humboldt, with a residence. He raises considerable stock and carries on a well-conducted farm.

On November 29, 1884, Mr. Anderson was married to Maggie, daughter of Claus and Mary Stolley, and of this union the following named children have been born: John C. Frederick, Vera Perrine, Mary Alice, Ernest Franklin and Samuel Lowell. In his political views Mr. Anderson is a Republican, and is a member of the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen fraternities. Mrs. Anderson belongs to the Presbyterian Church. Her parents were natives respectively of Germany and Ohio, the latter of mixed Scotch and Pennsylvania-Dutch ancestry.

ANDREWS, Emery, one of the leading lawyers of Coles County, Ill., and a citizen of Mattoon, was born at Rose Hill, Jasper County, Ill., April 3, 1868, the son of William T. and Harriet E. (Harding) Andrews, natives, respectively, of Fayette County, Ind., and Taylor County, Ky. His grandparents, William P. and Catherine (Lee) Andrews, and Abram and Lydia (Hardin) Harding, on the paternal side, natives of Virginia, and on the maternal side, of Kentucky. His great-grandfather, Samuel Andrews, was a Virginian, and his great-grandfather, Aaron Harding, was born in Kentucky.

William T. Andrews was a farmer by occupation, and the boyhood of the subject of this sketch was spent in making himself serviceable on the farm and in attending the district schools of his neighborhood. In early manhood he applied himself to school teaching, continuing this until 1887, when he commenced the study of law under Hon. H. S. Clark, of Mattoon, and in May, 1890, he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of law in Mattoon during that year. He soon acquired a large clientele, and became known as one of the leading lawyers of Coles County. In 1895 he entered into partnership with James Vance, Jr., which firm still continues. The firm is the legal representative in Coles County of the American Surety Company of New York, and of other corporations and prominent concerns. In November, 1896, Mr. Andrews was elected State's Attorney of Coles County, serving as such from 1896 to 1900 with such ability as to win the general commendation of the public.

On July 4, 1890, Mr. Andrews was united in marriage with Melvina Crum, who was born at Cook's Mills, Coles County, and in girlhood received her mental training in the district schools of that vicinity. Five children have resulted from this union, namely: Harriet B., aged fourteen; Roscoe C., aged twelve; Martha Louise, aged eight; Genevieve, aged six, and Lola, an infant.

Although not member of a church, Mr. Andrews is sympathetically disposed towards all religious denominations. In politics he is an earnest and influential Republican, and in fraternal circles is identified with the K. of P., I. O. O. F., A. F. & A. M. and M. W. A.

ANNIN, S. A., farmer and stock raiser, Oakland Township, Coles County, was born in Somerset County, N. J., November 8, 1837, the son of Jacob V. D. and Lettie W. Annin, who came to Illinois in 1849, and located in Coles County in 1852. The subject of this sketch was brought up after the fashion of the day, assisting in the farm work and getting his education at the home schools. He has been successful as an agriculturist and now owns 340 acres of land.

On May 3, 1866, Mr. Annin was united in marriage to Sarah Hall, of East Oakland Township, and to them were born two children: Mary W., wife of C. S. Hall, and George N., a resident of Oklahoma. Both his wife and mother are deceased, the death of the former occurring June 24, 1899.

Mr. Annin is a Republican and belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

AREND, George H., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, April 16, 1853, the son of William and Margaret (Aufferhilde) Arend, natives of Prussia, Germany. Mr. Arend was educated in the schools of Cincinnati, and in 1876 came to Illinois, where for a time he followed his trade as a cabinet-maker. He at length purchased 120 acres of land and turned his attention to farming. He now owns 170 acres on Section 16, Humboldt Township, where he has a fine residence, all improvements having been made by himself.

In 1874 Mr. Arend was married to Adriana, daughter of William and Eugenie Byl, of Holland, and of this union eight children have been born: William, Mattie, George, Nelly (wife of Cornelius Byl), Henry, Margaret, Anthony and Adria. In his political views Mr. Arend is a Republican. He has been School Director, and is a member of the German Lutheran Church.

ARMSTRONG, William G., merchant and Postmaster, Loxa, Coles County, Ill., was born in Wabash County, Ind., October 28, 1843, the son of Jonathan E. and Prueella (Moody) Armstrong, natives of Franklin County, Ind., and New York, respectively. In 1867 the parents removed to Jasper County, Ill., where the father's death occurred in 1892. In August, 1862, Mr. Armstrong enlisted in Company I, Ninety-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and was with Sherman in his famous "march to the sea," and participated in the "grand review" at Washington. He was mustered out at Indianapolis in 1865 and went to Jasper County, Ill., where for five years he was engaged in farming and in doing carpenter work. In 1872 he moved into Pleasant Grove Township and in 1888 went to Loxa, where he is still at home once more. In 1902, however, he established his present grocery, and, on April 30, 1906, received his appointment as Postmaster at Loxa.

On September 12, 1869, Mr. Armstrong was married to Lizzie, daughter of Samuel Anderson, and to them have been born nine children: Alonzo G., John, Alva, Ezra, Hattie, Sylvia, Lulu, Gladys and Ada (deceased).

Mr. Armstrong is a Republican in his political views, and has been Collector for one term. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic at Charleston, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church at New Liberty.

ASHWORTH, L. A., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Virginia December 22, 1839, the son of C. C. and Hannah (Mooney) Ashworth, natives of the same State, who came to Shelby County in 1853 and to Coles County in 1854, settling in North Okaw Township. Prior to his sixteenth year Mr. Ashworth had few opportunities to secure a good education, but since that period he has by diligent study fitted himself for a teacher. For four terms after attaining his majority he taught, and then turned his attention to farming. At first he rented land, but in 1870, in conjunction with his brother Mark, purchased property, their partnership being dissolved in 1875. Mr. Ashworth now owns 243 acres, which are well improved and cultivated, and here he raises stock in addition to general farming.

On July 16, 1863, Mr. Ashworth was united in marriage to Eliza, daughter of Amos Rice, Sr., and of this union twelve children were born, ten of whom are living: Job A., Walter Edward, James L., Anetta, wife of L. E. Cole; Sadie B., wife of C. W. Neff, of Indianapolis; William, John, Jessie, wife of Harry Davis, of Coles County; Charles C. and Ethel. In his political views Mr. Ashworth is a Democrat, and has been twice elected Supervisor of North Okaw Township, served two terms as Justice of the Peace and School Director ten many years. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

BABER, Elijah, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Warren County, Ky., October 29, 1844, the son of John and Mary

Baber, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively, who came to Coles County October 29, 1852, and settled in Ashmore Township, later moving to Hutton Township. The mother died in Ashmore Township in 1866. The father's decease occurred in Hutton Township in 1893. Mr. Baber's youth was spent in Coles County, and he has always followed the occupation of a farmer, save for a period of four years, when he was engaged in mercantile pursuits in Westfield. In 1898 he returned to his present farm of 160 acres in Hutton Township.

On April 4, 1867, Mr. Baber was married to Lucinda, daughter of Ambrose and Rachel Edwards, of Ashmore Township, and of this union eight children have been born, of whom four are living, viz.: George T., who married Lula Kagay and has one son, Byford; Hannah J., Charles, a farmer in Cumberland County, Ill., and Sarah, who is the wife of Frank Morgan of Ohio. In his political views Mr. Baber is a Democrat. He and his family are members of the United Brethren Church at Liberty, Coles County.

BAILS, Charles L., farmer, Charleston Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the locality in which he now resides November 15, 1868, the son of Andrew and Drucilla Bails, natives of Tennessee and Indiana. Charles L. Bails received his education in Charleston Township and then turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, in which, with the exception of two years' experience in the grocery business, he has always been engaged. In 1897 he located upon his present farm of 112 acres, where he has made many substantial improvements, and where he raises considerable stock for sale.

On November 14, 1888, Mr. Bails was married to Della V., daughter of James Gee, of the vicinity of Indianapolis, Ind., and of this union four children have been born: Nellie I., Lena L., William L. and Fred B. In his political views Mr. Bails is a Democrat, being a member of the Central Committee from the Sixth Ward. He has been School Director, and is one of the directors of the Farmington Citizens' Mutual Telephone Company.

BAIN, Alexander N. (deceased), was born April 3, 1828, the son of Alexander and Margaret Bain, natives of Edinburgh, Scotland. Mr. Bain was brought up on a farm, but later began work in the railway shops at Sandusky, Ohio, changing to the shops at New Albany, Ind. On April 1, 1857, with his brother, he came to Charleston and erected a small building in which they started a foundry, working in a small way until 1863, when they made their first stove. For a period of years Mr. Bain engaged in mercantile pursuits, but in 1874 he disposed of his interests in the business and turned his attention once more to the foundry. An active participant in all that pertained to the welfare of Charleston and to Coles County, Mr. Bain was the prime mover in the organization of the State Bank in 1892, serving as its first President. He was largely interested in farming and stock-raising also.

On February 3, 1853, Mr. Bain was married to Catherine Caldwell, who was born February 8, 1832, the daughter of Daniel and Martha Caldwell, of Appomattox County, Va. Five children have blessed this union: Emma, Fannie, Charles F., Katie and Nannie. Mr. Bain's death occurred January 22, 1897, at that time being President of the Charleston State Bank. He was a prominent Mason and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

BALCH, George Theron, farmer, Pleasant Grove Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County, Ill., July 9, 1847, the son of William Boyd and Mary Ann (Paris) Balch, natives of Tennessee, who joined a party of emigrants from that State to Illinois in the early part of the nineteenth century. William Balch, the great-grandfather of George T., and his brother, Amos, were soldiers of the Revolution, having enlisted in North Carolina, the home of the family at that period. Theron Balch, father of William (2d.), and grandfather of George T., came with his wife, Alpha, and his family to Coles County in 1829, and secured land in what is now known as Pleasant Grove Township. They assisted in the organization of Pleasant Prairie Presbyterian Church near their home. Theron E. Balch died November 1, 1838. In the course of time William became owner of nearly 200 acres of land. His death occurred in Pleasant Grove Township when he was seventy years of age. His wife died in the same township, aged fifty-five years. They left a family of five children: George Theron, Thomas C., Susan M., the wife of Jacob Phipps; Alpha, the wife of Doctor O. L. Wilson, of Nebraska, and Annie E., the wife of Benjamin McNeal.

George Theron Balch, the subject of this sketch, was educated in the district schools, with a course of two terms at Lee's Academy at Loxa. For fifteen years thereafter he spent his winters in teaching and his summers at work upon the farm, at length purchasing property of his own. He now owns 348 acres, 228 being in the home farm and 120 on Section 35, in Lafayette Township. His homestead in Pleasant Grove is one of the best in the county.

On January 27, 1877, Mr. Balch was married to Nancy C., daughter of Andrew and Evelyn (Dryden) Allison, early settlers of Coles County, and four children have been born of this union: Mary Evaline, Susan Helen, Flora Emily and Nelly, the first three named being normal school graduates.

In his political views Mr. Balch is a Republican. He has served as Supervisor for two terms and School Director for many years. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder and superintendent of the Sunday School.

BALCH, Captain James A. (deceased), was born October 20, 1833, in Coles County, Ill., the son of Alfred and Elizabeth (Gambell) Balch, residents of Tennessee and Kentucky, but who came among the very earliest settlers of Coles County, their arrival dating about 1820. During the progress of the Civil War Mr. Balch enlisted in Company E, Fifth Illinois Cavalry, and later was elected Captain of Company I, of the same regiment. In all he served more than four years.

On November 12, 1857, Mr. Balch was married to Patience Ann, daughter of Patrick and Elizabeth Nicholson, natives of Tennessee, who were also among the early settlers of Coles County. Mr. and Mrs. Balch were blessed with five children, all of whom are deceased, with the exception of one daughter, Sarah C. Mr. Balch's death occurred January 4, 1869. During his life he was a member of the Presbyterian Church, to which body his wife at present belongs.

BARNES, Rev. L. G., farmer, Ashmore Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the locality in which he now resides February 24, 1868, the son of Milton W. and Mary J. (Goodnight) Barnes. The mother was a daughter of the Rev. Stephen W. Goodnight, a pioneer, and an itinerant of the last century, his death occurring in 1898, at the age of eighty years. Mr. Barnes, the father, was born in Ashmore Township, Coles County, in 1830, being the son of Enos Barnes, who came to Coles County about 1820, lived the life of a farmer, was the first Supervisor of Ashmore Township, and died July 5, 1900, his wife having preceded him by twenty years, her death occurring in 1880. They were the parents of eight children, the subject of this sketch being the twin brother of Doctor W. E. Barnes, of Clarkville, Ill.

Rev. L. G. Barnes worked on his father's farm and attended district school until 1888, when he was able to take a course at the University at Lincoln, Ill. He taught school between terms, and graduated in theology, being ordained to preach in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in 1897. His first regular charge was at St. Omer's Church, near his home in Ashmore Township. In 1903 he decided to take up agricultural pursuits, and having an interest in the homestead estate of 163 $\frac{1}{4}$ acres, he went there to live.

On August 23, 1893, Mr. Barnes was united in marriage to Bessie B. Hallock, daughter of George R. and Virginia (Gover) Hallock, and of this union one daughter has been born, Mary Leak. In his political views Mr. Barnes is a Prohibitionist, and he is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

BASSETT, Martin H., well-known editor and publisher, Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born at Arcola, Ill., June 15, 1867, and there received his education. His parents, William H. and Helen M. (Gruelle) Bassett, are natives of Cynthiana, Ky., and his grandparents, Jonathan and Elizabeth (Discher) Bassett, natives of the same State. Jonathan Bassett, the great-grandfather, was a Virginian. On the mother's side his grandfather, John B. Gruelle, was a native of Kentucky and his grandmother, Prudence (Moore) Gruelle, was born in Macon, Ga., the great-grandfather, William Gruelle, being a native of Lyons, France.

William H. Bassett, father of the subject of this sketch, is editor and publisher of the Charleston, Ill., "Plainedealer-Herald." During the Civil War he enlisted at Mattoon as a private in the Seventy-ninth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry and was promoted to be Captain of Company K in that regiment. He later served twenty years as County Judge of Douglas County, Ill.

Mr. Bassett learned the printer's trade in the office of the Arcola (Ill.) "Record," becoming an apprentice therein at the age of eleven. He has since served as city editor of the Springfield (Ill.) "Evening Telegram," and from there he went to Chicago, where he served as police and court reporter on papers of that city. In 1895 he bought the "Arcola Record," in 1899 became connected with the "Mattoon Journal" and in August of that year in connection with Hon. Emery Andrews he bought that paper. On January 1, 1905, they sold "The Journal."

On September 16, 1891, Mr. Bassett was united in marriage with Mary C. Logan, who was born in Arcola, Ill., where she received her early mental training, afterwards pursuing a course of study in the Oxford (Ohio) Female Seminary. One child resulted from this union: William, who was born in Arcola, Ill., July 17, 1896. Mrs. Bassett is a daughter of Samuel B. Logan, Deputy Sheriff of Coles County, just before Douglas County was created from it, and he was elected the first Sheriff of Douglas County. He enlisted in Mattoon in the Union Army for service in the Civil War; was also a soldier in the Mexican War.

In politics Mr. Bassett is a Republican. In fraternal circles he is identified with the Royal Arcanum and the A. F. & A. M.

Mr. Beavers received his education in the public schools near his home, and then settled down to an agricultural life. He owns twenty acres, in addition to which he operates 150 acres on the home place. He raises and feeds stock quite extensively.

On November 2, 1893, he was married to Clara, daughter of Jasper Doty of Hutton Township, and of this union three children have been born: Dessie O., Leroy McKinley and Christa Matyl. In his political views Mr. Beavers is a Republican, and he has served as Assessor for Hutton Township, being elected to this office in the spring of 1904.

BECKER, William (deceased), was born in Germany January 1, 1831, the son of Fred and Catherine Becker, natives of the same country. Coming to the United States in 1851, in early manhood, he engaged in mining in the Far West, but about 1858 journeyed eastward over the plains, stopping at St. Louis, Mo., where, for a period of five years, he was employed in doing fine metal work. In 1863 he went to Mattoon, Ill., and there started a grocery and restaurant, which he disposed of later, purchasing eighty acres of land in Coles County, where he labored at farming for nine years. At the end of this time he sold his farm, and, removing to Mattoon, started a grocery, in which he was engaged until a short time previous to his death.

On March 23, 1860, Mr. Becker married Anna M., daughter of Earnest and Carrelia Y. Bradmerkle, of St. Louis. Six children were the result of this union: Lizzie, Fred, a druggist of Mattoon, who died September 30, 1900; May, Henry, Lena and Lilly. Mr. Becker belongs to the Republican party in politics, and served two years as Coroner of Coles County. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church at Mattoon.

BELL, Dr. F. E., physician and surgeon, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Lowell, Iowa, January 12, 1854, the son of Rev. and Mrs. Henry Bell. Graduating from the Lincoln (Ill.) University, in the classical course in 1872, Mr. Bell then taught school for five years, when he entered the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, graduating there in 1880. Choosing for his first location Russell, Iowa, the young doctor later returned to Illinois, where for eight years he practiced at Palmyra. In 1890 he removed to Mattoon, his present place of abode. To a certain extent he is interested in agriculture, being the owner of 240 acres of land in Lafayette Township, besides farms in Wabash and Edwards Counties.

On December 30, 1880, Dr. Bell was united in marriage to Addie, daughter of William and Maria Hungerford, of Lincoln, Ill., and to them have been born five children: Addie M., Florence E., William H., Viola M. and Henry E. Dr. Bell is affiliated with the Republican party, and has served the First Ward of his city as Alderman for three terms. He is a member of the United States Pension Examining Board, also of the American Medical Association, of the Aesculapian Society and the Illinois State and Coles County Medical Societies. He belongs to the I. O. O. F., the M. W. A. and to the Court of Honor, and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. For three years he has been one of the trustees of Millikin University at Decatur, Ill.

BELNAP, Hiram W., inspector of safety appliances for the Inter-State Commerce Commission, was born June 21, 1867, at Nokomis, Montgomery County, Ill., the son of Nuel M. and Elizabeth M. Belnap. Having finished a course in the public schools, young Mr. Belnap attended the Central Normal College at Danville, Ind., during the years 1885 and 1886. Having finished his education, he entered the employ of the "Big Four Railroad" in April, 1890, in the capacity of brakeman, being promoted to conductor in September of 1894. As soon as eligible he became a member of the B. of R. T., serving as general chairman of the grievance committee from 1893 to 1900, and being elected Secretary of the Grand Board of Trustees of the same body in 1899, having been reelected to that office thrice since that date.

On December 24, 1889, Mr. Belnap married Sadie, daughter of George O. and Annette E. Dinsmore of Edgar County. Five children have blessed this union: Nuel D., Ruth A., Ralph O. (deceased), Roy M. and Kathryn F. Mr. Belnap's politics are Democratic. He belongs to the Tribe of Ben Hur, to the K. of P. and to the B. of R. T. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

BIDLE, Charles, farmer, Hutton Township, was born in Westfield, Clark County, Ill., October 20, 1860, the son of George and Christy Ann (Asa) Bidle. George Bidle, the father, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, September 23, 1833, came to America in 1852, and to Westfield, Coles County, Ill., in 1854. The mother was also a native of Germany. In 1865 they removed to Hutton Township and purchased the farm now owned by their son. Both parents are now deceased. The mother's death occurred in 1892, and the father's one year later. Since his fifth year Mr. Bidle has been a resident of Hutton Township. Very early in life he chose to become a farmer, to which duties he has added the cares of stock-raising and selling. He owns at present 180 acres of fine land in Hutton Township.

On October 20, 1886, Mr. Bidle was married to Alma, daughter of Hamilton and Diantha Short, of Hutton Township, and of this union three children have been born: George L., Christy M. and Clara. In his political views Mr. Bidle is a Democrat, and he belongs to the lodge of I. O. O. F. at Westfield.

BIRD, William, locomotive engineer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Toronto, Canada, May 19, 1852, the son of Joseph and Mary Bird, natives of Canada. Mr. Bird received the customary education and remained on the farm until his nineteenth year, when he began railroad work. In 1881 he came to Mattoon, where for the past twenty-two years he has been in the employ of the "Big Four" Railroad as a locomotive engineer. In his chosen work he has proved successful, and is now the owner of valuable city property.

On February 4, 1886, Mr. Bird was married to Lillian, daughter of James H. and Elizabeth Arterburn, natives of Louisville, Ky., and of this union four children have been born, three of whom are living: Edna M., Harold J. and Hudson M. In his political affiliations Mr. Bird is a Republican. He belongs to the B. of L. E., and to the B. P. O. E. Mr. Bird and family are members of the Congregational Church.

BLACK, James S., retired farmer, Oakland, Coles County, was born in Clark County, Ill., the son of Josiah and Sasannah (Ashmore) Black, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively, who came to Coles County in 1836, being among the pioneer settlers of the county. On September 30, 1861, in the city of Chicago, Mr. Black enlisted in Company B, Fifty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving three years and one month. He was disabled at the battle of Shiloh, earning an honorable discharge.

Having spent most of his life on a farm, he found it difficult to retire from active labor, even after forty years of experience, and to-day may be found looking after the details of various property interests. Mr. Black is affiliated with the Democratic party in his political views, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

BLAND, Thomas, retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Kentucky September 26, 1832, the son of Grant and Mary (Dozier) Bland, who were also natives of Kentucky and who moved to Illinois in 1871, but are now both deceased. Mr. Bland secured his education in Kentucky. On October 28, 1861, he enlisted in Company A, Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, for the Civil War, serving for one year. Being wounded at Chattanooga, he was discharged because of physical disability, and, on this account, he now draws a pension. In 1871 he came to Douglas County, Ill., but two years later removed to Coles County, where he has resided ever since. By trade he is a carpenter, but is likewise interested in farming and has accumulated a good property at Mattoon.

On January 26, 1851, Mr. Bland was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John Piles, of Germany, and of this union eleven children were born, six of whom are living, viz.: Mary, Benjamin, Elizabeth and Sarah (twins), Robert and Jeannette. In his political views Mr. Bland is a Democrat, and in religious belief a Liberalist.

BLINKENBAKER, Felix A., a prominent and popular citizen of Charleston, Coles County, Ill., where he has been engaged in various important capacities for a number of years, was born in Humboldt Township, Coles County, December 12, 1857. He is a son of Newton J. and Mary E. (Watson) Blinkenbaker, of whom the former was born in Louisville, Ky., and the latter a native of Clark County, 1810. The father died in 1891 and his mother passed away in 1898.

The subject of this sketch attended the common schools in his youth, and soon after reaching mature years became interested in public affairs. For a considerable period he was secretary of the "Charleston Herald" Company, continuing in the same capacity after that paper's consolidation with the "Charleston Plaindealer."

Mr. Blinkenbaker has been twice married, first to Ella L., daughter of Joseph Patton, a native of Kentucky, who settled in Coles County at an early period. Mrs. Blinkenbaker was born in Charleston, Ill., and died in 1888. Mr. Blinkenbaker's second wife was Zeda Fisher, a daughter of Alexander Fisher, and a native of Charleston, Ill., where she died in 1897. Mr. Blinkenbaker is the father of two children: Margaret and Zeda.

In politics the subject of this record is a Republican. He was elected City Clerk of Charleston in 1887 and served in that capacity two terms. For six terms he held the position of Master in Chancery. He is now a member of the Charleston City Council, having been elected from the Fourth Ward in 1902, and reelected in 1904. He is also a member of the Public Library Board. Fraternally Mr. Blinkenbaker is identified with the B. P. O. E. He is not at present engaged in active business, but finds a life of leisure.

BLOCK, Frederick, farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Germany, June 22, 1841, the son of Henry and Maria Block, natives of Germany, who emigrated to the United States in 1849, first locating at Cincinnati, Ohio. In 1860 the family removed to Indiana, and later to Coles County, Ill. Mr. Block was educated in the public schools and brought up on a farm. In December, 1861, he enlisted in Company I, Fifty-second Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and served in the Civil War for four years. After his return to Coles County he was interested in a grocery store, but at the expiration of three years turned his attention to agriculture, and his time has since been occupied with his farm in Mattoon Township.

On October 23, 1871, Mr. Block was married to Maggie, daughter of James and Fanny Kalso, natives of New York and Canada, respectively, but early settlers of Dearborn County, Ind., and of this union five children have been born, three of whom are living: Frederick W., Bertie L. and Archie C. In his political views Mr. Block is an Independent. He belongs to the Lutheran Church, whose tenets are those subscribed to by his forefathers.

BOHLANDER, L. W., farmer, Pleasant Grove Township, Coles County, was born in Brookwell, Franklin County, Ind., October 5, 1867, the son of William and Rachel (Lohrey) Bohlander, natives of Germany, residing in Indiana. Mr. Bohlander was educated in the public schools of Indiana, came to Coles County in 1888, and two years later began farming operations in Seven Hickory Township. In 1897 he purchased his present farm of sixty-five acres, and here he raises stock and fruit. He has thoroughly improved his property until his place is known as one of the best in Pleasant Grove.

On November 29, 1890, Mr. Bohlander was married to Mary, daughter of Philip and Rachael (Black) Lohrey. They have an adopted son, Frank Robert Bohlander. In his political views Mr. Bohlander is a Democrat. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen fraternity, and is a member of the Lutheran Church.

BRADING, William B., retired farmer, Oakland, Ill., was born in Muskingum County, Ohio, December 25, 1845, the son of James and Margaret (Bradford) Brading, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively, who removed to Edgar County, Ill., in March, 1857. Mr. Brading's youth was spent on a farm, and he has always felt a decided interest in agricultural pursuits. During the past two years he has bought and sold over $200,000 worth of farming land. Personally he owns 1,006 acres in Edgar, Coles and Douglas Counties, besides valuable property in Oakland.

On February 5, 1870, Mr. Brading was united in marriage to Ellen, daughter of Eli and Rebecca Housel. Mr. Housel was a Virginian by birth; he came to Edgar County, Ill., in the 'thirties, to meet his wife, who was a native of that county. To Mr. and Mrs. Brading four children have been born: Margaret J., Clara B., Abigail V. and Bert E. In his political views Mr. Brading is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church.

BREEDLOVE, Robert L., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, was born in Morgan County, Ind., February 21, 1844, the son of Robert and Elizabeth (Watts) Breedlove, natives of Champaign County, Ohio. Educated in the public schools, Mr. Breedlove early showed a preference for the life of a farmer, and soon branched out in life for himself, most of his time being occupied with this vocation. He located in Coles County in 1899. His wife also owns eighty acres of land in Seven Hickory Township.

On November 22, 1896, Mr. Breedlove was married to Mrs. Laura (Craig) Patterson, daughter of Robert and Angeline Craig, natives of Illinois and Kentucky, respectively, who were among the early settlers of Coles County. By her first marriage Mrs. Breedlove became the mother of three children: Robert E., William C. and Bertha A. In his political affiliations Mr. Breedlove is a Republican. He has served on the School Board of his district, and is a member of the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternities. He and his family belong to the Christian Church.

BREWSTER, John F., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, Ill., March 4, 1864, the son of James M. and Lydia J. (Miller) Brewster, natives of Illinois. Mr. Brewster's grandfather was Davis Brewster, who came from Virginia, and was one of the early settlers of Coles County. Educated in the common schools, Mr. Brewster supplemented his early training by home reading and study. At the age of fifteen he left the homestead, his mother having died in 1874, and began to work as a farm hand until by diligence he had saved money enough to purchase forty acres of land for himself. Gradually he has added to this property until he now owns 240 acres in Section 21 in Okaw Township. His farm is, for its size, one of the best in the township, and all improvements have been brought about by its owner's patience and energy. Many heads of fine horses and cattle are fed on this place.

On February 23, 1892, Mr. Brewster was united in marriage to Anna May, daughter of Charles G. and Lucretia (Hunt) Davis, natives of Kentucky, but among the pioneers of Moultrie County, Ill. Of this union one child was born: Gweneth Oscar, who died at the age of six months. In his political affiliations Mr. Brewster is an active Democrat, and he has served as Assessor two terms—1889 and 1891—and as School Treasurer for ten years, being elected in 1894. He and his wife are both members of the Christian Church at Mattoon.

BRIGGS, Alexander, Charleston, Ill., was born in Springfield, Mass., April 10, 1855, the son of Andrew and Jane (Briggs) Briggs, early settlers of Illinois. They came to Arcola in 1857, where Mr. Briggs, Sr., worked as a stone mason until 1863, when he removed to Charleston. Here he continued to work at his trade until the time of his decease, which occurred in 1878. His wife still survives (1905), residing in Charleston.

Alexander Briggs attended the public schools near his home until he was old enough to learn a trade. He then chose that of stone cutting, and soon became a workman of more than ordinary skill. In 1874 he went to Europe, and in England and elsewhere on the Continent he plied his trade. Returning to Charleston in 1876, during the following year he established a marble and monument business, in which venture—in connection with general contracting, in which occupation he engaged in 1887—he met with success, but in 1903 he decided to sell his monumental business to the Charleston Monument Company. After this he continued contracting, being engaged in the erection of some of the best places in the city. The buildings erected by him include some stone churches, the Eastern Illinois State Normal School, the high school building, the Briggs Block, of which he is the principal owner, and some handsome residences, including his own.

On October 4, 1880, Mr. Briggs was married to Mary, daughter of James McFarlane, of Greencastle, Ind. Her parents were natives of Scotland. Of this union ten children have been born, of whom nine are living: Ada, Jessie, Mary, Margaret, Stella, George, Arthur, Donald and Frances. John died at the age of eight months. Mr. Briggs owns a farm in Coles County, over 300 acres in Louisiana and 800 acres in Oklahoma. In his political views he is a Republican. He belongs to the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen, National Union and Travelers' and Equitable fraternities.

BROOKS, Frank A., electrical engineer, was born in Mattoon, Ill., October 7, 1865, the son of John C. and Lotta (Blake) Brooks, natives of Illinois and Ohio, respectively. John C. Brooks, the father, was born near Paris, Ill., moved to Charleston in 1860, and soon thereafter enlisted in the Sixty-sixth Regiment, Illinois "Western Sharpshooters," serving in the Civil War for four years and eight months. In 1872 he finally went to Sullivan, Morgan County, Ill., remaining there for nine years.

The early education of the son, Frank A., was gained in Sullivan, and was completed in the high school at Mattoon. After leaving school, for one and a half years he was in the employ of the Central Union Telephone Company. Then, for five and one-half years he worked in Boston for the Thomson-Houston Electric Company. In 1889 he returned to Charleston, where he built the Charleston Gas and Electric Company plant, in which he is still financially interested, and of which he is manager. In 1895 Mr. Brooks, in partnership with Mr. R. Calle, founded the Charleston Telephone and Electric Company. The system reaches all points in the county, and their contract with the Bell Telephone Company enables them to connect with most places in the United States. Mr. Brooks has supervision of the entire property.

On May 24, 1887, Mr. Brooks was married to Nellie, daughter of Andrew B. and Allie (Mullholland) Shortess, of Sullivan, and of this union three children have been born: Mae, Richard and Frances. In his political views Mr. Brooks is a Republican. He belongs to the Masons, Elks and Modern Woodmen fraternities.

BROOKS, John C., D.D.S., retired, was born near Paris, Edgar County, Ill., August 28, 1838, the son of T. Martin and Sarah (Chenoweth) Brooks, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively, who came to Edgar County in 1825. Mr. Brooks was educated in the common schools near his home, and remained with his parents, assisting on the farm, until September 10, 1861, when he enlisted in the Union Army, serving until January 25, 1865. Upon his return from the army he began the study of dentistry in Charleston, later graduating from the Dental College at Indianapolis.

On October 17, 1864, Dr. Brooks was married to Lottie, daughter of Simeon Blake, of Ohio, and of this union three children have been born: Frank A., Essie, wife of W. E. Tower, and Clara W. Since 1865 up to 1904, Dr. Brooks has practiced his profession in Charleston, with the exception of a few years spent in Sullivan, Ill.

In his political affiliations Dr. Brooks is a Prohibitionist, and fraternally is associated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Grand Army of the Republic organizations, and is also a member of the Presbyterian Church.

BROWN, James A., a well-known resident of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., where he is engaged as freight agent of the "Big Four" Railroad, was born in Montgomery County, Ill., March 23, 1848. He is a son of George W. and Sarah A. (Jenkins) Brown, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of South Carolina. In early youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in Hillsboro (Ill.) Academy. On approaching years of maturity, he became connected with the "Big Four" Railroad as telegraph operator at various points, and since 1872 has performed the duties of station agent at Hillsboro, Ill., and Mattoon, Ill. He has been identified with the "Big Four" Company for forty years. In 1896 he was stationed at Mattoon, and since then has filled the position of freight agent of the "Big Four" with the same ability, diligence and fidelity which have characterized his previous years of service.

On September 20, 1871, Mr. Brown was united in matrimony with Margaret S. Evans, who was born in Montgomery County, Ill. This union has been the source of four children, namely: Ethel M., Frederick G., Horace E. and Lois. Ethel M. married W. O. Dunlevy, an attorney-at-law, of Indianapolis, Ind., where she resides.

Mr. Brown is a consistent member of the Methodist Church and in politics supports the principles of the Republican party. He has served two terms as Alderman in the Mattoon City Council from the Second Ward. In fraternal circles he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. and the M. W. A. He is a man of upright character, and is highly esteemed for his sterling worth.

BROWN, John, farmer and stock-raiser, Charleston Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Quincy, Adams County, Ill., January 22, 1845, the son of Abner and Edie J. (Glassco) Brown, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, and early settlers of Coles County, Ill. In 1850 the father went overland to California, but returned to Coles County, where his death occurred June 12, 1869. The mother is yet living and resides in Mattoon.

Mr. Brown was but five years of age when his parents brought him to Coles County. When he was about ready to venture in life for himself the war broke out, and he enlisted in Company B, Fifth Illinois Cavalry, in August, 1861, serving until discharged in 1865. Then, returning to Coles County, he engaged in general farming and stock-raising operations, in which he has been very successful, being the owner at present of 238½ acres of land on Section 7, Charleston Township, on which he and his son Fred B. are breeding pure blooded Hereford cattle.

On September 4, 1872, Mr. Brown was united in marriage to Susan A. Martin, of Lafayette Township, Coles County, and of this union four children have been born: Fred B., Elmer E., who married Laura Teepell; Bert C. and Oscar. In political affiliations Mr. Brown is a Republican.

He belongs to the G. A. R. post at Charleston, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Salem, in which he is acting as a steward.

BROWN, Captain Lewis W., Postmaster at Trilla, Pleasant Grove Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Crawford County, Ind., February 5, 1837, the son of George and Sophia (Williams) Brown, natives of Tennessee and Pennsylvania, respectively. Captain Brown came to Coles County in 1852. In April, 1861, he enlisted in Company B, Twenty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, for ninety days. At the expiration of that period he re-enlisted in Company F, Thirty-first Indiana Volunteer Infantry and served until discharged in 1865. For meritorious service he was commissioned Captain, with command of Company F, Thirty-first Regiment, Indiana Volunteers.

On February 12, 1867, Captain Brown was married to Hannah, daughter of Lemuel and Lucy Landrus of Pennsylvania, and of this union nine children were born, seven of whom are living: Otto W., Joshua, Andrew E., Celinda, John A., Ellen S. and Grace L. After the close of the war Captain Brown returned to Coles County and began farming operations, which he continued until 1889, when he moved to Trilla and became a pension attorney. In 1897 he was appointed Postmaster at that place, an office which he still holds. Captain Brown owns a forty-acre farm in Cumberland County, Ill. In his political views he is a Republican. He belongs to the Masonic order, and the Eastern Star and G. A. R. organizations, and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

BULL, Thomas Jefferson, farmer and stock-raiser, Ashmore Township, Coles County, was born in Edgar County, Ill., March 25, 1837, the son of Henry and Jane (Simpson) Bull, natives originally of England, who settled in Virginia.

Mr. Bull had just begun to take an interest in agricultural pursuits when the Civil War broke out and he enlisted in Company C, Fifth Iowa Cavalry, in September, 1861, serving thereafter four years and taking part in the battles of Fort Donelson, Pittsburg Landing, Corinth, Antietam, Selina and others of lesser historical importance. He received his discharge in 1865, returning then to Edgar County, and after marrying, moved to Coles County, where he now owns 240 acres and has a fine residence with all improvements.

On January 16, 1866, Mr. Bull was united in marriage to Isabel Olmsted, daughter of John T. Olmsted, of Ashmore. Of this union six children have been born, of whom three daughters are now living: Minnie, wife of William Stinson; Mollie and Blanche. Three other children, Nelly, Henry and Edwin, are deceased.

In his political views Mr. Bull is a Republican, and he has served as Road Commissioner, as School Director and as Township Treasurer. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

BURGNER, J. Morris, farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born on the farm where he now resides, November 15, 1860, the son of Conrad and Nancy (Whitesel) Burgner, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, who came to Lafayette Township in 1854, where they purchased a farm, and, in 1867, built the substantial brick house which their son now occupies. Both parents are deceased, the father's death occurring in 1894 and that of the mother in 1898. Mr. Burgner was educated in the common schools near his home and at Lee's Academy. Since attaining manhood he has been engaged in general farming and stock-raising, and so successful has he been that he now owns 720 acres of valuable land.

On September 16, 1885, Mr. Burgner was married to Anna M., daughter of Richard J. and Mary Hancock, and of this union six children have been born, three of whom are living: Joseph, Orr and Victor. Those deceased are: Maude, Zella and Emery. In his political views Mr. Burgner is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Salem.

CALDWELL, John H., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Leavenworth, Ind., March 15, 1841, the son of Joseph and Julia (Davidson) Caldwell, natives of Kentucky and Indiana respectively, and who are both deceased. The subject of this sketch received his education in Leavenworth, and was thereafter, for a period of eighteen years, engaged in mercantile pursuits in the same locality. In 1868, however, he removed to Hardin County, Ill., where he operated a mill. Fourteen years later (1882) he went to Paradise Township and secured a farm and has ever since devoted his attention to agriculture, owning at present 100 acres of land.

On December 27, 1867, in Missouri, Mr. Caldwell was united in marriage to Laura, daughter of William and Marietta Goodwin, of Leavenworth, Ind. To them have been born three children, of whom Frank G. is the only survivor. Mr. Caldwell is a Republican in his political views.

CAVINS, Joseph, retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Marion County, Ohio, January 24, 1838, the son of Joseph and Nancy Cavins, natives of Loudoun County, Va., who came to Coles County in 1840, settling in Dry Grove. Mr. Cavins received his education in the public schools of Coles County and at an early age began teaching, but the breaking out of the war put a temporary end to that vocation, resulting in his enlistment on July 8, 1861, in Company C, First Illinois Cavalry. At the end of three months he was captured, paroled, and returned to Coles County. For several years thereafter he was alternately engaged in teaching and farming, and so successful has he been in agricultural matters that he owns at present 640 acres of land in Mississippi and fifteen acres adjacent to Mattoon on the home place. Since 1892 he has practically lived a retired life, although he still retains his farming interests.

On December 25, 1862, Mr. Cavins was married to Melissa, daughter of William and Nancy Ferguson of Coles County, and of this union nine children have been born: Elmer W., of normal; Ill.; Joseph O., of Mississippi; Elmer C., principal of Biggs' (Ill.) school; William T., principal of Sullivan schools; Stanley T., physician at Stanford, Ill.; Lester B., physician in Mattoon and General Hospital; Luther V., principal of Hixley schools; H. O. C., student in the Eastern Illinois State Normal; and Melissa Grace, student in the Mattoon High School. Mr. Cavins died August 7, 1890. On November 10, 1891, Mr. Cavins was united in marriage to Maggie, daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Boyle) Ellison, of Adams County, Ohio. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, and has served as Justice of the Peace, School Treasurer and Trustee and been Supervisor of Paradise Township for three terms, and Supervisor of Mattoon Township two terms. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being Treasurer of the Building Committee, and is now President of the Board of Trustees.

CECIL, Henry H. (deceased), late of Charleston, Ill., was born in Mercer County, Ky., February 15, 1826, the son of Samuel W. and Keziah (Bryan) Cecil, natives of Maryland and Virginia, respectively, who removed to Indiana when their son was but four years of age. Here the youth received his education and learned to take an interest in agriculture.

On October 7, 1847, Mr. Cecil married Hannah E., daughter of Benjamin and Lydia Robinson, natives of Kentucky, where their daughter was born July 23, 1827. In 1863 Mr. Cecil removed with his family to Coles County, Ill., where for many years he was engaged in farming in Pleasant Grove Township. Of the six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Cecil, five attained maturity, namely: Fannie, Margaret J., Henry H., Mary A., and Daniel E. Mr. Cecil spent the closing years of his life in Charleston, where he died August 4, 1905. In his political affiliations he was a Democrat, and was a member of the Baptist Church, as is his wife, who survives him.

CHALK, John R., general manager of the Mattoon Elevator Company, Mattoon, Ill., was born April 12, 1862, in Boone County, Ind., the son of Benjamin L. and Margaret J. Chalk. The father was born June 2, 1826, in Greene County, Ohio, removing to Indiana in 1846. He is now living retired in Elizabethtown, Ind.

After graduating from the Indianapolis public schools, and spending one year at Wabash College, Crawfordsville, Ind., John R. Chalk at length graduated from the Indianapolis Business College in the year 1887. For several years after leaving school he held the position of superintendent and general manager of the commission house of J. T. Smith, of Indianapolis. In 1900 he removed to Mattoon, and became a member of the Mattoon Elevator Company, acting at the same time as general manager for the concern. The company operates and owns the following elevators: One at Mattoon, two at Doran one at Allenville, one at Gays and one at Conlogue.

On August 17, 1887, Mr. Chalk was married to Mary M., daughter of Hamilton and Eliza Carr, of Boone County, Ind. One son has been born to them, Lloyd Basil. Mr. Chalk is a Republican in his politics and is a member of the First Presbyterian Church.

CHAMPION, Rev. Edward D., M. A., minister and farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, was born in Paradise Township, Coles County, August 3, 1860, the son of Richard and Mary (Campbell) Champion, natives of

EDWARD D. CHAMPION.

South Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. Richard Champion, Sr., the grandfather of the subject of this sketch, located in Coles County in 1830, being among the first pioneer settlers of the country.

Edward D. Champion attended the schools near his father's farm, and later entered the Illinois Wesleyan University, at Bloomington. He attended this institution for six and one-half years, graduating therefrom in 1889. Receiving his ordination in proper time, he began preaching in the Methodist Church, and this ministry has continued to the present day. On week days the reverend gentleman may be found at work on his 120-acre farm in Mattoon Township, where he is interested in stock raising. He possesses also 160 acres of land in New Mexico. On his homestead is to be found one of the few natural gas wells in this part of the country, by means of which his residence is heated and lighted.

On June 15, 1881, Mr. Champion was married to Mattie E., daughter of Thomas D. and Emily (Reed) Fulton, natives of Ohio, but at present residents of Mattoon. Of this union five children have been born, of whom three are living: Richard D., a resident of New Mexico; Horace E. and Mary E., who reside at home. In his political affiliations Mr. Champion is a Republican. In 1904 he was elected President of the Board of School Trustees of Mattoon Township. He has also held minor offices at different times.

CHAMPION, Richard, Sr. (deceased), emigrated from South Carolina with his family, coming across the states of North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky, and settling in Illinois. At that period there were no railroads, no telegraph lines and no mail facilities. In 1830 he came to Coles County and settled on what is called the "Old State Road," two miles west of Little Wabash Creek and six miles southwest of Mattoon. He was the parent of seven children, and was known as a hardy, helpful pioneer, whose strength remained with him to a ripe old age. He died December 23, 1852.

Richard Champion, Jr., son of the preceding (also deceased), was born in South Carolina and was brought by his parents to Coles County in 1830, where he grew to manhood and lived a strenuous, useful life. The old homestead is one-half mile west of Paradise and eight miles southwest of Mattoon. In his early manhood Mr. Champion was married to Mary Campbell, of Paradise Township, and of this union nine children were born, three only of whom grew to maturity: William, Martha and Edward. Mr. Champion proved to be possessed of good business ability. Starting out in life with no capital and in the space of twenty years he had accumulated something like one hundred thousand dollars. He organized with the assistance of Hinkle & Co. the old Farmers and Merchants Bank in Mattoon, which proved a wise venture. While under his management the bank had a highly prosperous career, but after his death and in other hands it met with disaster which resulted in its going out of existence. In partnership with James Cunningham Mr. Champion also went into live stock exchange, forming a partnership not only for Mattoon, but for a territory of about forty miles to the south. In his political views Mr. Champion was a Whig and later a Republican. As Supervisor of Paradise Township, a community which furnished a large number of Union soldiers, he was enabled to be of service to many families deprived of the husband's and father's care during the dark days of the war. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and helped erect a house of worship, which still exists. His integrity and ability were unquestioned. He died on June 20, 1889, and his wife, December 15, 1863.

CHAMPION, William M., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, was born in his home township November 20, 1846, the son of Richard and Mary (Campbell) Champion, natives of South Carolina and Tennessee, respectively, but among the early settlers of Coles County. Mr. Champion was brought up on a farm, and has always made stock-raising and general farming his occupation in life. At present he owns nearly 500 acres of fine land in Paradise Township.

On May 24, 1866, Mr. Champion was married to Nancy H., daughter of Elisha and Rebecca Linder, pioneers of Coles County, and of this union nine children have been born, six of whom are living: George M., Elisha, William H., Raymond E., Martha J. and Mabel R. In his political affiliations Mr. Champion is a Republican. The family is identified with the Methodist Episcopal Church.

CHAPMAN, Robert N., Postmaster, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston, April 28, 1848, the son of Augustus H. and Harriet A. (Hanks) Chapman. His father, Augustus H. Chapman, was the grandson of Rev. Benjamin Chapman, of Hanover, N. H., and son of Thomas Chapman, of Paola, Ind., and was Lieutenant Colonel of the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War, dying in Charleston, Ill., September 11, 1898. Mrs. Chapman, the mother, was a third cousin of President Abraham Lincoln, and granddaughter of Sarah Bush Lincoln, the step-mother of Abraham Lincoln, who reared our martyred President, after he had lost his mother, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, when he was only ten years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Augustus H. Chapman were among the earliest settlers of Charleston, Mrs. Chapman still residing there, at the age of seventy-eight years.

Robert N. Chapman received his education in the public schools of Charleston. He served as Assistant Revenue Assessor in 1868-70 and in 1871 was clerk in the Essex House, in Mattoon, Ill., later occupying the same position in the Dole House, in Mattoon, and the Laclede and Everett Hotels in St. Louis, Mo. He was engaged in business as an abstractor of titles in Charleston for several years, and later held the office of Deputy County Clerk, which last position he resigned to accept his present position as Postmaster, and is now serving his ninth year, having been appointed by President McKinley on July 1, 1897.

In his political views Mr. Chapman is a Republican and has been more or less active in politics for the past forty years, being well known to all the prominent men and politicians throughout the State. He has the respect and confidence of all the people of his city and county, and it is conceded by all, regardless of their political views, that he has made the best Postmaster Charleston ever had. Mr. Chapman has never married.

CHECKLEY, William M., who is successfully engaged in the broom-corn business in Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born at North Okaw, Coles County, Ill., September 19, 1862, the son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Crum) Checkley, the former a native of Yorkshire, England, and the latter of Clark County, Ind. Mr. Checkley received his mental training in the public schools in North Okaw, and in 1896 established himself in the broom-corn business in Mattoon, in which he has met with deserved success. He is a man of good business qualifications and upright character, and is held in high esteem throughout the community.

On March 17, 1881, Mr. Checkley was united in marriage with Lucinda D. Price, who was born and schooled in North Okaw Township. Seven children resulted from this union, namely: Stella, Alfred, Olive, Harvey, Horace, Lillian and William. In politics Mr. Checkley is a prominent Republican and served from 1890 to 1894 as Sheriff of Coles County. In religion he is a Methodist. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Foresters, Modern Woodmen of America and Court of Honor.

He was elected Judge of the Common Pleas Court in 1870; elected to the State Senate in 1880; made delegate-at-large to the National Republican Convention in 1888, and chosen elector-at-large on the Republican ticket in 1896. He served as Department Commander of the Illinois Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1891-2; was appointed Commander of the Second Brigade I. N. G. by Governor Tanner, resigning in 1903. Besides the Grand Army of the Republic, he belongs to the Masonic order and the B. P. O. E.

CLARK, Dr. James C. (deceased), was born in Mattoon Township, Coles County, February 9, 1857, the son of William and Sarah Clark, pioneers of Coles County. After spending his youth on his home farm, Mr. Clark entered Rush Medical College at Chicago, Ill., graduating from that institution in 1878. Soon after receiving his degree, Dr. Clark located at Janesville, Coles County, practicing in that place for nearly ten years. In 1891 he removed to Mattoon.

On September 3, 1884, Dr. Clark was united in marriage to Viola, daughter of Landon and Mary (Tate) Tinsman, natives of Ohio, and they became the parents of one son, James LeRoy, who is now a student in the Mattoon schools. The doctor was a Mason, a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and belonged to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. His decease occurred on June 2, 1896.

CLARK, James H. (deceased), was born in Putnam County, Ill., February 26, 1836, the son of John and Elizabeth Clark, natives of Kentucky and Virginia, respectively. Mr. Clark's education was secured in the public schools of his native town, supplemented by a two years' course in Asbury University. In August, 1862, he came to Mattoon and became interested in mercantile pursuits, which were interrupted by his being appointed Postmaster by President Grant in 1869. This office he held for sixteen consecutive years, until April 30, 1885. For more than twenty-two years he was a member of the Republican State Central Committee, for a portion of that time acting as Chairman. In 1890 President Harrison appointed him Bank Examiner for Kentucky, but after two years of service he resigned.

On September 8, 1864, Mr. Clark was married to Samantha Tyler, of Oneida County, N. Y., whose death occurred May 17, 1892. August 30, 1893, Mr. Clark was united in marriage to Nellie G., daughter of Theodore and Abigail Tittle, of Cartersville, Mo., and of this union three children were born: James H., Gladys E., and Arthur T.

COFER, Thomas Noble, County Judge of Coles County, was born in Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., September 1, 1871, the son of Thomas Noble Cofer, Sr., and Rachel E. (Combs) Cofer. The father was born in Hardin County, Ky., July 20, 1839, the son of John and Mary E. (McGill) Cofer. In 1852 John Cofer purchased 1,700 acres of land six miles west of the present town of Oakland. He was an active, enterprising farmer. His homestead was on a tract of two hundred acres located on the Springfield Road, but later he moved six miles west and settled in the middle of a prairie. He was appointed Postmaster of "Rural Retreat." John Cofer was born at Cane Spring, Bullitt County, Ky., July 9, 1804, the son of Thomas and Sarah Winn (Griffin) Cofer, of Virginia and Maryland, respectively. December 1, 1825, he married Mary E. McGill, and they became the parents of ten children. He was always successful financially. In 1871-2 he represented Douglas County in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly. His death occurred in Cook County, Texas, on February 12, 1881. His son, Thomas Noble Cofer, Sr., received his education in the public schools, and then chose an agricultural life. On November 29, 1870, he was married to Rachel E. Combs, daughter of William Combs, who came to Coles County in 1853, and they became the parents of four children: Thomas Noble, William E., John C. and Margaret E. Mrs. Cofer died on December 12, 1900. Her husband rents his farm of 240 acres, and since 1899 has lived a retired life. In his political views he is a Democrat. He has served as School Director for thirteen years and has been Supervisor and Drainage Commissioner. He belongs to the Methodist Church.

Thomas Noble Cofer, Jr., attended district school near his home. Then he went to the high school at Arcola, Ill., from which he graduated in 1889. Later he attended De Pauw University at Greencastle, Ind., but in the sophomore year he returned to the farm, and for a time taught in the public schools. Deciding to study law, he entered the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., January 5, 1895, graduating from the law department in Chicago June 6, 1896. During the same year in association with H. P. Cofer, the present City Attorney of Charleston, he opened an office in that city. The partnership continued for one and one-half years, but since that time the subject of this sketch has conducted his law practice alone. In 1902 he was elected County Judge, and is now (1905) filling that position, at this time being the youngest County Judge in Illinois.

THOMAS NOBLE COFER.

On September 30, 1903, Mr. Cofer was married to Miss Della App, at Lafayette, Ind. In his political views he is a Democrat, and is the first Judge elected in the county by his party since 1880. He is an eloquent public speaker and a successful advocate. He belongs to the Order of Odd Fellows, Charleston Lodge, No. 609, of which he is a Past Grand, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 623, Charleston, and is a member of the Christian Church. He is the proud father of Thomas Noble Cofer III., who was born June 15, 1905.

COLE, Richard, farmer, East Oakland Township, Coles County, was born in Putnam County, Ind., December 8, 1835, the son of Mat thew and Alice Cole, natives of North Carolina and Ohio, respectively. The subject of this sketch received his education in the schools of his home county, and did not leave his parents until in 1878, when he came to Coles County and purchased 160 acres in East Oakland Township, increasing the amount of land until at present his homestead consists of 178 acres of fertile soil.

On April 13, 1858, Mr. Cole was united in marriage to Catherine, daughter of James and Mary Swinford, of Kentucky. Three children have been the result of this union: James P., Mary E. and Lucy A. Mr. Cole is a Democrat in his political opinions; is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and belongs to the Baptist Church.

Mr. Conley's education was secured at the schools in the immediate vicinity of his home, and he remained with his parents on the farm until he started out in life for himself. He has always been interested in matters pertaining to agriculture, and is known as a successful farmer and stock-man. He owns at present 222 acres of land in Hutton Township.

On December 12, 1852, Mr. Conley was married to Lucinda, daughter of John C. and Elizabeth Davis, and of this union five children have been born: Annie, who is the wife of John Bennett of Decatur, Ill.; Alexander, Sarah Florence, who is the wife of J. C. Dodson; Joel G. and Mary E. (deceased). In his political views Mr. Conley is a Republican, and is a member of the Christian Church.

CONLIN, Henry, farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Madison County, Ohio, June 8, 1859, the son of John and Hanora (McGuire) Conlin, of County Clare and Limerick, Ireland, respectively, who came with their parents to America in the 'forties. John Conlin, the father of the subject of this sketch, proved to be a successful farmer, for at the time of his death in February, 1907, he possessed 220 acres of land. His widow survives and resides at Mattoon, Ill. Of the nine children born to this family Henry was the third. He received his education in the public schools near his home. He began to farm on his own account when he had but forty acres. Now he is the owner of 230 acres in Section 30, North Okaw Township. His wife also has a small place in her own name.

Mr. Conlin was married February 2, 1888, to Maggie, daughter of Peter and Catherine Murphy, natives of Ireland, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Conlin are the parents of nine children: Peter, Daniel, Catherine, John, Hanora, Henry, William, Agnes and Irene. Mr. Conlin has served as Collector and as School Director for his township, and is now on the special Drainage Commission in both Coles and Montrie Counties.

CONNELY, Edmund R., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Lawrence County, Ind., March 6, 1829, the son of Joel and Effie Connely, natives of North Carolina and Virginia, respectively, who, after removing to Tennessee, Kentucky and Indiana, came to Hutton Township in Coles County in 1832, where they spent the remainder of their days. Mr. Connely's death occurred in 1853; his wife died in 1875. The grandfather of the subject of this sketch on the maternal side was Rev. Charles Bennington, a Baptist minister and a soldier of the Revolutionary War.

Edmund R. Connely passed his youth on his father's homestead, and received the customary education of that early period. As soon as he was old enough to be employed profitably he was given work upon the farm and has continued to be interested in agriculture to the present time. Upon the decease of his parents he came into possession of the old home place, and is to-day the owner of 240 acres, upon which he raises fine stock, besides the usual farm produce. He has made many substantial improvements on his place.

On October 21, 1850, Mr. Connely was married to Rebecca, daughter of John and Belinda Platt, of Hutton Township, and of this union eleven children were born: Addie, the wife of Wesley Pentzer, of Columbus, Ind.; Mary, who died at the age of four; Emery P., a resident of Oklahoma; Malden, a farmer in North Dakota; Oscar of Ashmore Township; Olive, wife of William Lambert of Rockville, Ind.; Ellis and Willis (twins), who are farmers in Hutton Township; Rebecca, deceased; Ione, wife of Charles McConnell of Cadiz, Ohio, and Edmund A., of Jasper County, Ill. Mrs. Connely died in 1875. On August 25, 1876, Mr. Connely was united to Rebecca, daughter of Michael and Susan McConnell, of Cadiz, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Connely have one child, Sara, who is the wife of J. C. Arnold of Robinson, Ill. In his political views Mr. Connely is a Republican. He has represented his township on the Board of Supervisors, and has held other minor offices. He is a member of the United Brethren Church at Westfield.

COOK, James A., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Adams County, Ohio, June 5, 1862, the son of George and Sarah (Phillips) Cook, natives of Ohio, who came to Coles County, Ill., in 1864. Here in the village of Cook's Mills and in Humboldt the father worked at the trade of saddle and harness making, which he had learned in his youth. He occasionally taught school as well. He and his wife were the parents of five children: Emroy, wife of Abraham Enlow, of Tuscola, Ill.; Lodelia, wife of Calvin Haney; Randolph C., Abey Lucian and James A. Mr. Cook, the father, died in December, 1893, and his wife in February, 1895.

James A. Cook was educated in the district schools near his home. In 1886 he began farming operations, and he now owns 160 acres of valuable land, on which he raises stock and does general farming.

On December 25, 1887, Mr. Cook was united in marriage to Mary Julia, daughter of Thomas and Ann (Fleming) Sentency, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, who came to Coles County in 1842. Of this union four children have been born: Edward, Sylvia Jane, James Ralph and Clarence Valentine.

In his political affiliations Mr. Cook is a Republican, and has served his township as School Director. He belongs to the order of Modern Woodmen, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

COTTINGHAM, Charles D., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County December 20, 1873, the son of Jacob K. and Sally (Fowler) Cottingham. Educated in the public schools and a business college of Terre Haute, Ind., Mr. Cottingham early chose the life of a farmer, and this has been his occupation ever since. He makes a specialty of breeding fine Hereford cattle on his eighty-acre farm in Charleston Township, while his home farm is devoted to agricultural products.

On April 24, 1895, Mr. Cottingham was married to Estella, daughter of James and Clementine (Nicholson) Lumbrick, natives of Illinois. In his political views Mr. Cottingham is a Republican. He is now serving his second term as School Director. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World fraternity. He and his wife belong to the Church of God.

COTTINGHAM, Jacob K., retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born November 15, 1831, in Floyd County, Ind., the son of Andrew and Margaret (Grant) Cottingham, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. In the year 1854 the family moved to Coles County, Ill., and settled one mile south of Charleston. After becoming of age Mr. Cottingham still remained in the same vicinity, and engaged in brick making and in farming until 1876, when he removed to Seven Hickory Township, but, in the year 1900, came to Charleston and retired from active labor, although he yet owns 200 acres in Seven Hickory Township.

On March 5, 1861, Mr. Cottingham married Sally A., daughter of James and Susan Fowler, residents of Illinois and Indiana, respectively. Twelve children have been born to them: William, Margaret, George, Joseph, Charles, Fred, Alvey, Harry, Minnie and Maude, who are still living, and James A. and Rosa B., deceased. Mr. Cottingham is a Republican in his political views.

COTTINGHAM, Joseph U., farmer, Lafayette Township, was born in Charleston Township July 27, 1870, the son of Jacob K. and Sarah A. (Fowler) Cottingham. Mr. Cottingham received his education in the common schools of Seven Hickory Township; supplemented by a course at Normal College. At an early age he began teaching school, and for thirteen terms he labored at this calling in Lafayette and Pleasant Grove Townships. During the intervals between terms he interested himself in farming operations. In 1896 he located upon his present farm of 15+ acres, where he has since been engaged in stock-raising and general agriculture.

On August 19, 1896, Mr. Cottingham was married to Florilla, daughter of Elijah and Sophia (Whitney) Vanatta, early settlers of Coles County. Mrs. Cottingham prior to her marriage attended normal college, after which she taught school for six terms in Lafayette Township. Mr. and Mrs. Cottingham are the parents of two children: Lillian B. and Chester C. In his political views Mr. Cottingham is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

COULTAS, R. J., M. D., Mattoon, Ill., was born in Scott County, Ill., July 19, 1864, the son of T. F. and Elizabeth Coultas, natives of England and Scotland, who came to Virden, Macoupin County, about 1870. R. J. Coultas received his education in the common and high schools of Virden with a course in Illinois College at Jacksonville, from which institution he graduated in 1887. He then attended the medical department of the University of Michigan, and spent some time in Bellevue Hospital, New York City. After graduating in July, 1890, he began practice in Mattoon. He took a post-graduate course in the New York Post-Graduate Medical College in 1893, and has made a specialty of eye, throat and ear diseases.

On August 12, 1892, Dr. Coultas was married to Miss C. L. Voigt, of Mattoon. In his political affiliations he is a Republican. He is a member of the Coles County Medical Society, Aesculapian Medical Society and Illinois State Medical Society, and is Special Examiner for the United States Pension Department for eye and ear complaints.

COX, Frank, a prominent and successful insurance and loan broker of Mattoon, Ill., was born in Moultrie County, Ill., December 16, 1853, the son of Hiram and Susan (Turney) Cox, the former born June 26, 1826, in Kaskaskia, Ill., and the latter a native of Paris, Ky. Frank Cox's paternal grandfather, John Cox, married Hannah McCutcheon, of North Carolina, and his maternal grandfather, Thomas Turney, wedded Sarah Jones, both of Paris, Ky. Hiram Cox located in Mattoon with his family in 1867, was a farmer by occupation and one of the organizers of the First National Bank of Mattoon. His death occurred February 12, 1900, his wife having passed away in 1863.

In early youth the subject of this sketch attended the public schools of Mattoon and afterwards pursued a course in the University of Illinois. Previous to engaging in his present business Mr. Cox taught school for eight years, and was for three years Principal of the West Side School in Mattoon. Mr. Cox has been identified with the insurance and loan business for twenty years, and has distinguished himself by his superior business ability. Involving transactions he has been conscientious and upright, and has won the confidence and respect of those with whom he has had dealings with him.

On August 3, 1880, Mr. Cox was married at well-bek with Jennie Hughes, who was born in Brookville, Ky., and received her mental training in the schools of Mattoon. Five children resulted from this union, namely: Irving H., Arthur H., Frank A., R. Clarence and S. Marie. The parents of Mrs. Cox moved to Coles County and located in Mattoon in 1867.

Mr. Cox adheres to the faith of the Presbyterian Church, and politically is a Republican. In fraternal circles he is identified with the A. F. & A. M. and the K. of P.

CRAIG, Edward Chilton, a well-known and successful lawyer of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in Mattoon April 7, 1872, the son of James W. and Mary (Chilton) Craig, the former of whom was born in Morgan Township, Coles County, and the latter in Scott County, Ill. In early youth Mr. Craig was a pupil in the Mattoon high school, from which school he was graduated in 1889. He afterward attended the University of Illinois, where he obtained his degree in 1893 and subsequently pursued a course in the law department of Harvard University. He was admitted to the bar in January, 1896, and has practiced law in Mattoon since that time with constantly increasing success.

On November 9, 1899, Mr. Craig was united in marriage with Fanny Ione Dilley, of Dallas, Tex., who was born in Shelbyville, Ill. Mrs. Craig is a graduate of Mary's Institute, at St. Louis. One child has been born to them, namely: George Mansfield Craig.

On political issues Mr. Craig comes with the policies of the Democratic party. He represented his ward for one term in the City Council of Mattoon, and has served as a member of the Board of Education. In religious faith he adheres to the Episcopal Church. Fraternally he is affiliated with the B. P. O. E. The nine years of his professional career in Mattoon have afforded ample assurance of a bright and useful future.

CRAIG, I. B., attorney, Mattoon, Ill., was born on a farm in Coles County, April 28, 1854, the son of Isaac and Elizabeth (Bloyer) Craig. The father was a native of Kentucky who came to Clark County, Ill., in 1828, locating in Coles County in 1832 on a farm, where he died January 12, 1893, after a successful life.

The subject of this sketch was raised in the manner of most farm lads. His early education was secured in the district schools and at Charleston. He read law with the Hon. O. B. Ficklin, and James W. Craig, later graduating at the Ann Arbor Law School, and in January, 1879, he formed a law partnership with his brother, Judge James W. Craig, which continued until 1896. In 1899 Mr. Craig entered into partnership with Mr. Fred A. Kinzel, which still continues, the firm being one of the best known and most successful in Central Illinois, with a large practice throughout the State.

October 22, 1879, Mr. Craig was united in marriage with Helen Hasbrouck, daughter of Abram Hasbrouck, one of the earliest and most successful merchants in Mattoon, Ill. They have four children: Helen Louise, Florence Gertrude, Kathryn and Elizabeth. Their residence on Charleston avenue is one of the most commodious and beautiful in Mattoon.

In political sentiment Mr. Craig is a Democrat. In 1888 he was elected to the Illinois House of Representatives and in 1892 to the Senate. At the expiration of his term as Senator in 1896 he was again elected to the House; was the Democratic nominee for Speaker of the House when it convened in 1897, and was again re-elected to the House in 1904. Mr. Craig is a member of the Mattoon Board of Education and takes deep interest in educational affairs. He is affiliated with the orders of Masons, Elks and Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Congregational Church.

CRAIG, James Wesley, lawyer and jurist, Mattoon, Ill., and present officiating Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Illinois, was born in Coles County June 29, 1844, the son of Isaac Nickles and Elizabeth (Bloyer) Craig, the father a native of Montgomery County, Ky., and the mother of Lancaster, Pa. His paternal grandparents, Robert and Elizabeth (Nickles) Craig, were Virginians, and William Craig, his great-grandfather, was born in North of Ireland in 1731. On the maternal side, his grandparents, John and Elizabeth Bloyer, were natives of Switzerland. The great-grandfather, William Craig, came to America during the Colonial period and settled in Virginia. He served in a Virginia regiment for four years during the Revolutionary War, and died in 1823. The grandfather, Robert Craig, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and was engaged in the battle of the Thames in which Chief Tecumseh was killed. Isaac N. Craig, the father of the subject of this sketch, served in the Black Hawk War. Thus is here presented and transmitted to the descendants of Judge Craig, as part of this biographical review, a record of three generations of patriotic valor, in which even the least emotional of men must take a deep and inspiring pride.

The boyhood and youth of James Wesley Craig were spent in a manner common to reflective and aspiring boys of that period with similar surroundings. He attended the district schools of his neighborhood, and made himself useful, as best he could, in the sphere of life where his lot was cast. In early manhood he entered the University of Michigan, where he pursued the requisite course of study in the law department and, after finishing the course, was admitted to the bar on 23d day of March, 1867. He shortly built up an extensive practice, was soon recognized as one of the leading legal practitioners in his section of the State, and in 1872 his standing was recognized by his election to the office of State's Attorney for Coles County, in which he served four years. In June, 1903, he was elected Judge of the Fifth Judicial Circuit of Illinois, composed of Coles, Clark, Cumberland and Vermilion Counties, and in this position, his record has been that of a perspicacious, keenly analytical, impartial and fearless Judge. He commands the unreserved respect of the bar in his circuit and enjoys the implicit confidence and sincere esteem of all who come in contact with him.

On June 17, 1868, Judge Craig was united in marriage with Mary Chilton, who was born in Scott County, Ill., and in girlhood pursued her course of mental instruction at Monticello Seminary. From this union have resulted four children, namely: Edward, Chilton, Elizabeth Lovina, James Wesley and Donald Bloyer.

In politics Judge Craig is a Democrat and in religious belief, is an adherent of the Episcopal faith.

CRAIG, William R. (deceased), was born in Charleston, Illinois, April 2, 1858, the son of Robert and Angeline Craig. The grandfather, Isaac N. Craig, came from Edgar County to settle at an early day in Coles County. William R. Craig received his education in the public schools near his home and then chose the life of a farmer. The farm of 230 acres, near Loxa, Coles County, which he cultivated up to the time of his decease, is now the property of Mrs. G. E. Craig, his widow, who rents it to a tenant, and who, desiring to give her children the advantages of a good education, now resides on Jackson Street, Charleston.

On February 24, 1885, William R. Craig was married to Gertrude E., daughter of Green H. and Harriette E. Neeld, and of this union three children were born: Robert, Charles and William. In his political views Mr. Craig was a Democrat, and had been a School Director. His decease occurred on February 11, 1900.

CRITES, Charles P. (deceased), late farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, was born in Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., October 18, 1847, the son of Robert A. and Louisiana (Brandenburg) Crites, natives of Missouri and Indiana, respectively, who came to Hutton Township in 1845. Later they moved to Douglas County, and settled in Lafayette Township in 1860. The maternal grandfather, Solomon Brandenburg, was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving under General Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe. He was one of 20 skirmishing parties who followed a band of Indians and took part in the battle which occurred near the present site of Charleston. He settled in Hutton Township in 1828 and died in 1861. The father, Robert A. Crites, took part in the Civil War, joining June 10, 1861, at Mattoon, in Company B, Seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under the command of President Lincoln; was mustered out July 27, 1861, on the same day re-enlisting in the same company, and again, on December 22, 1861, re-listed as a veteran, serving until June 2, 1865. Returning to Coles County he began farming but later removed to Leavenworth, Kas., where he died.

Charles P. Crites, the subject of this sketch, was but a young man when he enlisted on November 25, 1864, in Company F, Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He was mustered out July 13, 1865. He then returned to Lafayette Township and resumed farming operations, a work he has continued to the present time. He owns to-day eighty-seven acres of land and also possesses a hardware store in Mattoon, which is conducted by his sons. In September, 1870, Mr. Crites was married to Mary Archey, and of this union one child was born, Annie, who is the wife of Grant Frost. Mrs. Crites died on December 23, 1873. On December 9, 1878, Mr. Crites was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary R. (Alford) Williams, daughter of Isaac and Mary Alford, natives of Tennessee and Virginia, who settled in Coles County in 1878, and of this union six children were born: Clara, wife of James Hurst; William and Edward, who are engaged in the hardware business at Mattoon; Thomas, Jennie and May. In his political views Mr. Crites was a Republican; he belonged to the G. A. R., Post No. 404, at Mattoon, and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His decease occurred January 5, 1905.

CURTIS, Sterling P., merchant, Oakland, Ill., was born in Coles County, June 19, 1858, the son of Philander C. and Elizabeth (Modrell) Curtis, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively, and who were pioneers of Coles County. Since his sixteenth year Mr. Curtis has been engaged in mercantile pursuits, and is to-day proprietor of a large department store in Oakland.

On August 18, 1879, Mr. Curtis was united in marriage to Susan, daughter of James C. Labov, an early settler of Edgar County, Ill. Of their union two children have been born, one of whom—Chase L.—is now living. In his political views Mr. Curtis is a Republican, is a member of the Masonic fraternity and of the Modern Woodmen of America, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DALTON, William, retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Tennessee in February, 1831, the son of Wyatt and Elizabeth (Reece) Dalton, natives of North Carolina and Indiana, respectively. The subject of this sketch received his education in the public schools and in 1863 enlisted in Company B, Thirty-sixth Iowa Volunteer Infantry, for service in the Civil War, but because of ill-health was discharged in 1864. Two years later he came to Mattoon, Ill., where he has since been engaged in house-moving and other mechanical work. At present he is associated with a son in the manufacture of brooms. He owns some property in Mattoon.

On September 12, 1850, Mr. Dalton was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Willis, a native of Germany, who, after emigrating to America, settled in Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Dalton are the parents of six children, three of whom are living—Alonzo M., Charles C. and Alice B., the two latter being twins. In his political affiliations Mr. Dalton is a Republican. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

DAUGHERTY, Wesley, farmer, Morgan Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, Ill., January 20, 1834, the son of John and Hetty J. (Hoag) Daugherty, natives of Vincennes, Ind., who came to Coles County in the early 'twenties. Raised on a farm and choosing to devote his life to agricultural pursuits, Mr. Daugherty has been very successful in his vocation, having acquired 235 acres of land in Morgan Township.

On February 18, 1856, Mr. Daugherty was married to Phoebe, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Clark, natives of Kentucky and pioneers of Coles County. Of this union five children were born, four of whom are living: Pauline, Joseph, Charles W. and Hetty J., one son—Albert—being deceased. In his political affiliations Mr. Daugherty is a Democrat and has served as School Director three terms and as Road Commissioner for three years. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

DAVIS, Commodore Perry, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in Lawrence County, Ind., September 13, 1829, the son of John C. and Elizabeth Davis, who came to Hutton Township, Coles County, in 1829, where the father secured a farm and was there engaged in farming until his death. The subject of this sketch received his education in the home schools and later bought a farm in Hutton Township, which now includes 224½ acres of fine land, upon which he has spent his life in farming and stock-raising.

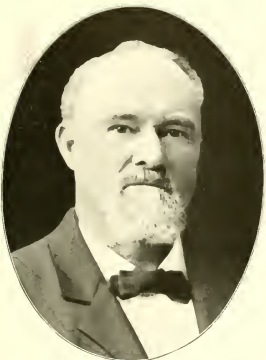

In 1853 Mr. Davis married Elizabeth Connelley, and of this union there are four surviving children: John, Henry, Nancy and Newton. Mrs. Davis' death occurred April 16, 1889. In March of 1890 Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Mrs. Mary J. Davis, widow of Alfred Davis, who died in 1884, leaving three children: Ida, Ernest and Ora. Mr. Perry Davis is a Republican in his political views and has served as School Director for his district.

DAVIS, George W., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born on the old Davis homestead in Hutton Township, January 9, 1858, the son of John A. and Elizabeth Davis. Mr. Davis, Sr., died when his son was but thirteen years of age, and at fifteen the lad began to work as a farm hand, continuing in this line of employment until he attained his majority, when he purchased forty-three acres of land in Charleston Township and engaged in business on his own account. After making several changes, in 1895 he bought his present farm, which contains 140 acres, and here he is engaged in raising stock and in general farming.

On August 11, 1878, Mr. Davis was married to Ellen, daughter of R. P. and Mary A. Hackett, of Charleston, and of this union six children have been born, five of whom are living: Carrie, who is the wife of Wilber Goble; Orion, who married Emma Keller; Charles, who married Hattie Brown of Ashmore Township; Mollie and Harmon. Noah, another son, is deceased. In his political relations Mr. Davis is a Republican. He is a member of the Church of Christ, which holds its services at the Wiley brick chapel.

DAVIS, Green B., retired farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Hutton Township December 12, 1836, the son of John

C. and Elizabeth (Toliver) Davis, natives of Kentucky and Alabama, respectively, who settled in Coles County in 1829. Mr. Davis was educated in the public schools near his home and at Westfield College, after which for twelve terms he taught school. Deciding to become a farmer he purchased a number of acres of land which constitutes part of his present farm. This amount has been increased until he owns at present 385 acres, on which general farming and stock-raising are carried on. Since 1885 this property has been rented and Mr. Davis has lived retired. On May 30, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry. He entered the service as Second Lieutenant, but later received the commission of First Lieutenant. He enlisted for three months, and at the expiration of sixteen weeks received his discharge.

On August 12, 1869, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of John and Sarah Atkins, of Clark County, Ill., and of this union two children have been born: Sarah Annie, wife of John R. Durbin, and Mattie L., wife of Fred Mohlenhoff. In his political views Mr. Davis is a Republican. He has served as Town Clerk several terms, as Supervisor one term, and has been Justice of the Peace for fourteen years. He is a director and stockholder in the Mattoon National Bank. Mr. Davis belongs to the G. A. R.

Post, No. 401, at Mattoon, Ill., and his wife are both members of the Mattoon Baptist Church. Mr. Davis takes an honest pride in the fact that he has never bought any expensive dry goods or clothing on credit in his life.

DAVIS, Henry, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County, January 16, 1860, the son of C. P. and Elizabeth (Connelley) Davis. Mr. Davis was reared on the home farm, receiving his education in the district schools and later working for his father on the homestead where he was born until his marriage, when he purchased eighty acres in Charleston Township and ventured out in life for himself. He has been successful in business and now owns 160 acres on Section 23, Hutton Township.

On February 16, 1888, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Mary Elizabeth Cossett, daughter of John and Mary Cossett, who were among the earliest settlers of Coles County. Of this union three children have been born: Mabel, Ruth and Florence. In political views Mr. Davis is a Republican, and has served as School Director. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and belongs to the Church of God.

DAVIS, James O., confectioner, Mattoon, Ill., was born June 13, 1868, in Shelby County, Ill., the son of Miles W. and Laura Davis. Young Mr. Davis came with his parents to Mattoon in 1883, where he attended school for several years. From that time he was variously employed, sometimes farming, at others being employed as a clerk, until 1891, when he made his first venture on his own account, beginning as a pop-corn vender with a wagon on the street. He later built his present building and now carries on a general confectionery business.

On April 2, 1892, Mr. Davis was married to Elsie M., daughter of Thomas and Sophronia Nolan, of Shelbyville, Ill. They have three children: Edna B., Thomas W. and Harry M. Mr. Davis belongs to the Republican party.

DAVIS, John C. (deceased), was born in Kentucky and in boyhood, having the misfortune to become an orphan by the death of both his parents, was reared by strangers until his fourteenth year. Then, leaving his native State, he came to Indiana, where he became by occupation a boatman. In early manhood he married Elizabeth Toliver, of Alabama, and of this union sixteen children were born, of whom thirteen survive: C. P. Riley, Mrs. Elijah Conley, Green B., Nathaniel, William, D. F., J. W., Samuel P., George W., Mrs. Katherine Remels, Mrs. Sarah Waltrip and Mrs. Mahala Adkeris.

Upon their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Davis came, in 1830, to Coles County, Ill., possessing between them less than $5.00 in money. Then began the struggle for existence experienced by so many. During the daytime in winter Mr. Davis split rails for the usual pioneer price of two to three "bits" per 100, and in the evening spent all his time making and mending shoes for his family and others who employed him, or in pounding in a mortar the corn with which to make meal for the next day's bread. Mrs. Davis, in the meantime, would sit hour after hour at the loom or spinning-wheel, that neither themselves nor their rapidly increasing family should go unclothed. Life was strenuous in those "good old days," and perhaps none were sorry to lay down a burden which to us of this age seems, at best, very heavy. The dates of the death of Mr. Davis and his wife have not been returned with this sketch.

DAVIS, Nathaniel, retired, Charleston, Ill., was born in Hutton Township, Coles County, February 22, 1839, the son of John C. and Mary Davis, natives of Kentucky and Alabama, respectively, who came to Coles County in the year 1830. When the war broke out Mr. Davis had been working at his trade as a carpenter, but he immediately enlisted in Company H, Third Missouri Cavalry, serving with this regiment until mustered out on December 31, 1864. He then moved to Coles County, where he took up his trade once more and worked thereat until 1870, when he moved to Lafayette Township, and carried on a farm for two years. In 1872 he went to Ashmore Township, and for six years was interested in farming there. He next established a general mercantile business in Ashmore, which he continued until his retirement in 1902, and in October, 1903, removed to Charleston. He owns at present 664 acres of land.

In December, 1870, Mr. Davis was united in marriage to Mary L., daughter of Baker and Mary Waters, natives of Ohio, who came to Coles County at an early date. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of three children: Ida, wife of John Snyder of Ashmore; George H. and Grace P. Mr. Davis is a Republican in his political views; is a member of Charleston Post, No. 271, G. A. R., and belongs to the Christian Church.

DAVIS, Riley, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County February 18, 1834, the son of John C. and Elizabeth Davis, pioneers of Coles County. Mr. Davis received the usual education of those days, and made acquaintance with the drudgery of farm life, hiring out as a hand by the month for a period of four years. At length he was enabled to purchase 160 acres of land, and by his own efforts has acquired the ownership of 674 acres in Hutton and Ashmore Townships, a feat of which any man could well feel proud.

RILEY DAVIS.

On January 3, 1856, Mr. Davis was married to Ann, daughter of Fountain and Elizabeth (Phelps) Turner, natives of Virginia, who were reared in Kentucky and came to Coles County in 1834. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of five children: Elizabeth, who is the wife of Robert Reed and has four children; Fountain, who married Nevada Walton, and has two children; Sarah, the wife of James Blake, who has three children; Mary, the wife of John Garner, who has eight children; John, married Eliza Goble, and has six children. In his political views Mr. Davis is a Republican.

DAVIS, Samuel P., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in the locality in which he now lives March 29, 1855, the son of John C. and Elizabeth Davis, who were pioneer settlers of Coles County. Mr. Davis received his education in the common schools near his home with a supplemental course of two years' study in Lee's Academy at Loxa. He remained for some time on the home farm, teaching school during the winter months in Hutton Township and conducting farming operations in the summer. In 1882 he moved to his present farm, purchasing at first eighty-five acres, which has been augmented from time to time until he is now the owner of 313 acres, upon which much stock is raised.

On August 26, 1875, Mr. Davis was married to Mary E., daughter of Joseph and Eliza J. Waltrip, early settlers of Hutton Township, and of this union five children have been born: Minnie, Thenia, Della, Walter and Alta. In his political views Mr. Davis is a Republican. He belongs to the Church of Christ worshipping at the Waley brick church.

DECKARD, Jacob H., rural mail carrier, Etna, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Grayson County, Kentucky, March 12, 1850, the son of Josiah R. and Mary E. (Hart) Deckard, who came to Coles County, locating in Paradise Village in October, 1857. Both are now deceased. Mr. Deckard remained on the homestead and followed the occupation of a farmer until 1901. In October, 1903, he entered the government service in the capacity of rural mail carrier, a position he still retains.

On May 12, 1868, Mr. Deckard was married to Margaret, daughter of Adam and Nancy D. (Gannaway) Hart, natives of Kentucky, who were among the early settlers of Coles County. Of the six children born of this marriage four are now living: Luella, Mary E., Nancy D. and Edna M. The other two children, John M. and Ethelyn, died after reaching maturity. In his political views Mr. Deckard is a Republican. He has served one term as Assessor, and has been Highway Commissioner for six years, Town Clerk four years and Collector for one term. Mr. Deckard is a member of the Court of Honor, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DECKER, Demetrius J., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, was born in Charleston, Ill., November 17, 1846, the son of J. K. and Mary (Morton) Decker, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively, who located in Coles County in 1836. D. J. Decker received the customary common-school education, and then began to do farm work. In 1868 he went to California, where he pursued the same calling, and upon his return to Illinois, he purchased property in Coles County. He is now located two and one half miles north of Charleston.

On May 6, 1869, Mr. Decker was married to Mary E., daughter of Malhon and Harriet (Weaver) Gray, natives of Indiana and Illinois, and of this union two children were born. Mr. Decker is affiliated with the Republican party, although in local affairs he votes independently. He belongs to the A. O. U. W. fraternity.

DEVORE, James A., farmer, formerly of Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, was born in Iroquois County, Ill., July 7, 1859, the son of Peter M. and Margaret (Montgomery) DeVore, his father being a native of Kentucky and his mother of Indiana. His parents came to Illinois in 1851, and his father assisted the Government Surveyors in surveying Iroquois County and also acted as a locator of lands for its pioneers. Both parents are now deceased.

The son (James A.) was reared on his father's farm, and followed the occupation of a farmer until he was twenty-two years of age.

when he engaged in teaching in the local schools for about five years; and, having a taste for music, gave considerable attention for a time to teaching and composing music occasionally for friends. Preparatory to engaging in the teaching profession, he received his instruction chiefly from his brother, W. C. DeVore, a graduate of Westfield College, meanwhile receiving his training in the line of music from Mrs. M. E. DeVore (wife of his brother, W. C.), who was also a graduate of the same institution. During the later years of his life in Illinois, Mr. DeVore managed his wife's 80-acre farm in Seven Hickory Township, while giving a portion of his time to instruction of pupils in music. He advocates the teaching of musical form and harmony to beginners of music.

On July 4, 1886, Mr. DeVore was united in marriage to Miss Iva J. Clapp, daughter of Emanuel and Mary E. Clapp, who were natives of Coles County. To Mr. and Mrs. DeVore have been born five children, namely: Mervin E., Perley A., Lulu F., Bessie J. and William O. Mr. DeVore's political affiliations are with the Democratic party, and he and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. About a year ago Mr. and Mrs. DeVore removed to Hopkins, nodaway County, Mo., where they now reside, but he and his wife retain their property interests in Coles County.

DICE, George W., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, was born in Fountain County, Ind., September 24, 1860, the son of Jacob and Phoebe Dice. Mr. Dice received a good education in his native county, and at an early age began to teach school. This occupation, alternated with farming, has been his life work. He owns at present 120 acres in Seven Hickory Township.

On September 29, 1896, Mr. Dice was married to Sarah C., daughter of Wesley and Amarilla (Cottingham) Tucker, natives of Indiana and Illinois, respectively, and of this union three children have been born: Erma M., William R. and Marion W. In his political affiliations Mr. Dice is a Democrat, has been School Director for twelve years, and in 1904 was made President of the Board. Mrs. Dice is a member of the Presbyterian Church, her husband being an attendant of the same.

DICE, Jacob (deceased), was born in Augusta County, Va., June 12, 1823, the son of George and Jane Dice, natives of Virginia, who located in Fountain County, Ind., in 1830. Jacob Dice and wife came to Coles County, Ill., in 1861. So successful was the subject of this sketch in his farming and stock-raising ventures that at his death he left an estate of 649 acres of land in Seven Hickory and Charleston Townships.

JACOB DICE.

On August 10, 1858, Mr. Dice was married to Phoebe, daughter of John and Catherine Van Sickle. Mr. Van Sickle was born in Pennsylvania and his wife in New Jersey, both dying in Indiana. Their daughter, Mrs. Dice, was a native of Fountain County, Ind., born October 29, 1839. Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dice were the parents of eight children, four of whom are now living: George W., Charles M., Oscar J. and Lillian M. Mr. Dice died on March 13, 1899, while his widow, who still survives, continues to reside on the old homestead. In his political views Mr. Dice was a Democrat. He belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Dice is a member of the Christian Church.

DIGBY, C. C., Mayor and merchant, Charleston, Ill., was born in Morgan Township, Coles County, Ill., October 28, 1862, the son of Joseph M. and Alice (Andre) Digby, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. Upon the breaking out of the Civil War, Joseph M. Digby enlisted at Mattoon, Ill., in Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry. Previous to this he had been occupied in agricultural pursuits. His death occurred in 1863, being the direct result of a wound received at the battle of Murfreesboro. Mrs. Digby, his widow, is yet living with her son. Before her marriage she was engaged in teaching school. Mr. and Mrs. Digby had but one child, the subject of this sketch, who was only one year old at the time of his father's death.

C. C. Digby received his education in the district schools near his home, and until early manhood continued to reside upon the farm. His attention was directed to religious matters, and very early he showed an inclination to do evangelistic work, in which he was engaged for five years. For two years he was pastor of the Methodist Church at Toledo, Ill., later had charge of the Charleston circuit, but he was finally forced to retire on account of severe throat trouble. In 1899 he opened a shoe store in Charleston, and this venture has been crowned with success. In March, 1905, he traded his shoe store for a farm and is now in the real estate business, also being interested in the zinc mining business in Arkansas.

On October 2, 1884, Mr. Digby was married to Cora E., daughter of David and Jane Maddock, the former a retired farmer of Champaign County, Ill., and of this union four children have been born, Laren, Clara, Paul and Charles. On April 9, 1903, Mr. Digby was elected Mayor of Charleston, but retired on the expiration of his term in May, 1905, being defeated for re-election because of strict enforcement of law. In his political views Mr. Digby is a Republican and has served three years as a member of the School Board. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias and is registered Chaplain of the Second Illinois Regimental Uniform Rank of the order, of which S. G. Tiley, of Mattoon, is Colonel, this being his second term of four years. He is likewise Scribe of the order of Ben Hur, and belongs to the Royal Circle, the Royal Arcanum, Order of Elks and Odd Fellows. In religious belief he is a Methodist.

DOLE, Charles M., retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Terre Haute, Ind., May 24, 1826, the son of Enoch and Harriet (Dexter) Dole. Mr. Dole received his education in Indiana, and came to Coles County in 1851, in 1852 locating in Mattoon Township. He was one of the original platters of the town of Mattoon, and in company with a brother built the Dole House, Dole Opera House and many other important buildings in the city. For ten years he was President of the First National Bank, but recently has retired to private life.

In 1849 Mr. Dole was married to Mary Palmer and of this union one son was born, Frank D. The first Mrs. Dole is deceased. In 1861 Mr. Dole was united in marriage to Charity A. Blackman and they are the parents of two children, Charles E. and Mary B.

DOLE, Joseph C., farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, was born in Roseville, Ohio, November 22, 1822, the son of Enoch and Harriet (Dexter) Dole, natives of New Hampshire and Vermont, respectively. In the year 1849 Joseph C. Dole came to Coles County and made a purchase of some land, but did not permanently locate until 1853, since which time he has devoted himself extensively to farming operations, including the raising and shipping of fine stock. He owns at present 700 acres of land.

In 1851 Mr. Dole was married to Elizabeth Pierce, who died in 1852. In 1865 he was united to Sarah, daughter of Stephen Willis, of Wisconsin, and of this union three children were born:

Stephen D., Elizabeth P. and William E. Mrs. Dole died in 1871. In 1875 Mr. Dole married L. J., daughter of John and Hannah (Libby) Bennett, and to them five children have been born: Sarah P., Anna L., Joseph C., Minshal and John B. In his political views Mr. Dole is a Republican. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Mattoon and belongs to the Unitarian Church.

DOLE, Stephen Dexter (deceased), was born at Bradford, now Manchester, N. H., December 23, 1813, the son of Enoch and Harriet (Dexter) Dole. The family early moved to Hamilton, Ohio, and later to Terre Haute, Ind. Mr. Dole received his education in the public schools, and early chose to become a farmer. In 1849 he purchased land at Whitley Point, and in 1853 made this place his permanent home. On November 23, 1853, he was married to Emily (Tipton) Ogden, and of this union four children were born: William C., Joseph E., Mary P. and Laura F. His decease occurred March 18, 1885.

DONNELL, Thomas, marble dealer, Mattoon, was born near Philadelphia, Pa., in July, 1840, the son of James and Jane (Knox) Donnell, natives of Ireland, who had emigrated to America. Mr. Donnell received his education in the Philadelphia schools, and there afterward learned the trade of a marble cutter. He came to Mattoon, Ill., in March, 1867, and established the business house which is to-day known by the firm name of Donnell & Son.

In 1875 Mr. Donnell was married to Letitia Kite, of Connecticut, and of this union five children have been born: Jenny, wife of Samuel Owings; William, partner in business with his father; Bessie, Ray and Douglass. In his political views Mr. Donnell is a Republican. He has been a member of the School Board for eighteen years, and was Chairman of the Board of Supervisors for one term. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

DORA, James W., M. D. (deceased), was born near Augusta, Bracken County, Ky., May 5, 1827, the son of Beauchamp and Nellie H. Dora, both natives of Bracken County. Dr. Dora received his education in select schools and in Augusta College, with a course in Bartlett's Commercial College, from which institution he graduated in 1848. One year of the two he remained in this school was spent as its book-keeper. In the year 1848 he began the study of medicine under Dr. George R. Todd, of Cynthiana, Ky.

On April 11, 1850, at Cynthiana, Ky., Dr. Dora was married to Martha E. Smith, who died in 1872, leaving four children: Neoma C., Mary H., William and Margaret A., all of whom are deceased except Margaret A., who married William C. Robertson, of Louisville, Ky., and who still resides there. During the winter of 1850-51 he was a student in the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati, and in the spring following began practicing his profession at Buena Vista, Ky. Later, in the year 1851, and during a part of 1852, he was once more a student in the Ohio Medical College, from which he was graduated in the spring of 1852. Returning to his neglected practice, he remained in Kentucky until in August, 1855, when he decided to move to Illinois, locating in Mattoon. During the same year he attended the winter lecture course at the Eclectic Medical College in Cincinnati.

In October, 1863, Dr. Dora moved to Chicago, and there took a course in Rush Medical College, from which he was graduated in April, 1865. After receiving his degree he returned to Mattoon and continued the practice of his profession in that city until his death, which occurred August 20, 1891.

On November 10, 1875, Dr. Dora was united in marriage, at Paris, Ky., to Sallie A. McQuown who was born at Nolin, Hardin Co., Ky. Of this union two children were born, both of whom are living, Claude Bernard and Waldo Emerson. They are both talented young men, educated at the University of Chicago and both served in the United States army during the Cuban campaign, being stationed at Matanzas and Havana, Cuba.

Dr. Dora's widow survives, residing at Mattoon, Ill.

In his political affiliations Dr. Dora was a strong Democrat. He was the first Mayor of Mattoon, and held this office for years. He also served as City Treasurer for two terms.

DORNBLASER, Joseph F. (deceased), was born in Pennsylvania, October 7, 1838, the son of Felix and Eliza (Mayer) Dornblaser, natives of the same State. Brought by his parents to Coles County in the year 1851, Mr. Dornblaser spent his youth on the homestead, and as he grew more interested in agriculture as the years flew by, he at length adopted farming and stockraising as his life vocation. He was very successful in his ventures and at the time of his death as a part of his estate left 197 acres of land in Pleasant Grove Township.

In 1863 Mr. Dornblaser was united in marriage to Mary M. Ferguson, who died in November, 1868, leaving two children: Eliza M. and William O. On June 30, 1870, Mr. Dornblaser was married to Nora E., daughter of Jesse M. and Eliza Williams, and of this union four children have been born: Raymond, Joseph F., Mary G. and Eliza M. Mr. Dornblaser is a Republican in his political views, and has served as School Director for a period of three years. He is a member of the Masonic Order, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is identified with the Presbyterian Church, of which his wife is also an active member.

ried to Mary, daughter of James and Lucinda (Knight) Anderson, and of this union four children have been born, only one of whom survives, Mark A. In his political views Mr. Dornblaser was a Democrat, and had served one term as County Commissioner. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and, with his wife, was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

DORNBLASER, William O., farmer and stock-raiser, Trilla, Coles County, Ill., was born in Pleasant Grove Township July 27, 1868, the son of Joseph F. and Mary (Ferguson) Dornblaser. When only three months old the subject of this sketch lost his mother by death, and he was temporarily adopted by Mrs. Martha Ferguson, with whom he lived until he was fourteen years of age, when he returned to his father's farm and assisted in the general work of the place until the death of his parent. Since that time he DORSCH, Charles G. (deceased), was born in Germany February 16, 1853, the son of Christian and Catherine Dorsch, natives of the same country. Immigrating to the United States in the year 1881, and selecting Charleston as his place of abode, Mr. Dorsch was employed as a journeyman butcher for about four years. In 1884, however, he opened a market of his own in the Charleston House Block, where he remained until able to erect a building for himself. This property is now owned by his widow.

In October, 1875, Mr. Dorsch married Emma, daughter of Charles A. and Marie Imberg, natives of Germany, and they became the parents of three children: Mamie, Charles Augustus and Louise Pauline. Mr. Dorsch was a Democrat in his politics and was a member of the Knights of Pythias. His death occurred in October, 1894, after which his widow carried on the business until the son, Charles, was admitted to partnership. Of the three children Mamie became the wife of J. J. Downer, and has two children, Mary L. and John Dorsch; Charles Augustus married Meda Myers and has one daughter, Mamie Pauline; Louise Pauline became the wife of Harry E. Ball.

DOTY, George W., farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Charleston Township, Coles County, January 27, 1838, the son of James and Mary E. (Teall) Doty, natives of Ohio and Tennessee, who came to Coles County in September of 1826. Reared and educated in Charleston Township, Mr. Doty there pursued the usual routine of a farmer lad until he attained his majority. In the year 1877 he purchased a farm of his own and moved to his present homestead. He now owns 100 acres of land in Lafayette Township, besides forty more in Charleston Township.

On November 28, 1861, Mr. Doty was married to America, daughter of J. V. and Elizabeth (Hancock) Jones, natives of Kentucky and Indiana. Mr. and Mrs. Doty are the parents of three children: Theodasia, wife of Oliver Woods of Charleston Township; Bertha A., wife of Solomon Kershot of Lafayette Township; and Sylvanus Monroe, who married Stella Rardin, and is a farmer in Lafayette Township. Mr. Doty is a staunch Democrat in his political views, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church at New Liberty, in which he has been a deacon for the past sixteen years.

DOTY, James T., retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston Township July 3, 1841, the son of James and Mary E. (Teall) Doty, natives of Ohio and Tennessee, respectively, who settled in Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., in September, 1826, but later removed to Charleston Township, where the mother died in 1878, and the father on January 26, 1896. The Doty family claims descent from Edward Doty, one of the Puritan emigrants who came from England on the Mayflower in 1620.

As early as 1862 Mr. Doty began life for himself. At first he rented land on which to farm, then purchased eighty acres, which was gradually increased until he now owns 211 acres of fine land. Until he retired from active labor in 1901 he was engaged in stock-raising and general farming operations. In 1864 he had gone to Montana on a gold-hunting expedition, but feeling satisfied that agriculture, while more slow, would bring larger returns in the end, he came back to Illinois within the year.

On December 4, 1862, Mr. Doty was married to Evelyn, daughter of Benjamin and Margaret Parker, natives of Tennessee and Virginia, respectively, but early settlers of Coles County. Of this union six children have been born, of whom four are living and two deceased: Emily L. (deceased), Otto E., Oliver G., Tabitha M., Albert (deceased), and Goldie.

In his political associations Mr. Doty is a Democrat.

He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church at New Liberty.

DOTY, Samuel T., retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Coles County March 4, 1834, the son of James and Mary E. (Teall) Doty, natives of Ohio and Tennessee, respectively, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Doty received his education in Charleston Township, Coles County, and remained on the homestead until 1853, when for a period of five years he worked as a farm hand. His earnings enabled him to purchase fifty acres of land, with which to start in life for himself. He is the present owner of 106 acres.

In 1864 Mr. Doty was married to Cynthia A. Pacher, of Coles County, who died February 24, 1904. Mr. Doty occupied himself with his farming interests until 1895, since that time living in retirement in Charleston.

In his political associations he is a Democrat.

DOUGHERTY, James B., farmer and Supervisor of Morgan Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, Ill., February 23, 1857, the son of Frank and Lucinda (Clark) Dougherty, natives of Illinois, both of whom are now deceased. Mr. Dougherty's youth was spent on a farm, and his education was secured in the district schools of his neighborhood. When he grew to manhood he chose an agricultural life, and he now owns 120 acres of land in Morgan Township.

In September, 1876, Mr. Dougherty was married to Margaret A., daughter of John and Margaret (McGregor) Clinkenbeard, early settlers of Coles County, and of this union five children have been born: William A., Rosa A., Lon L., Lola A. and John W. In his political views Mr. Dougherty is a Democrat, and is now serving his second term as Supervisor. He has also been Highway Commissioner for nine years, and School Director for twelve years. He is a member of Lodge No. 686, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at Rardin, and of the Modern Woodmen of America and Court of Honor at Charleston. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

DOWNEY, Samuel, farmer. Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, was born in County Down, Ireland, in 1848, the son of Patrick and Elizabeth (Robinson) Downey, natives of Ireland, both being now deceased. In 1854 Mr. Downey came to America, and for three years thereafter resided in Kentucky, coming to Coles County, Ill., in the year 1857. During the past thirty-five years of his life he has been occupied with farming operations, conducted always within a radius of one mile of his present residence.

On November 18, 1869, Mr. Downey was married to Rhoda, daughter of Patrick and Catherine Farrell, natives of Ireland, who came to Kentucky in 1850, in which State both died. Mr. and Mrs. Downey are the parents of eight children, six of whom are still living: Elizabeth A., William E., John P., Mary A., Samuel and Charles D. In his political views Mr. Downey is a Democrat. He has been Road Supervisor for three terms, and is at present serving as School Director. He and his family are members of the Catholic Church.

DRISCOLL, John, farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Kentucky June 29, 1862, the son of James and Margaret (O'Connor) Driscoll, natives of Ireland, who came to New York in 1826, went soon after to Kentucky, where they resided until 1864, at which time they moved to Coles County. Mr. Driscoll received the customary education of that time and locality, and then at an early age chose to become a farmer, which vocation he has never forsaken. He is the present owner of 200 acres of land in Seven Hickory Township.

On September 14, 1897, Mr. Driscoll married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael and Rose McTaggart, natives of Ireland, who came to Coles County about 1875. The father is deceased, the mother surviving. Mr. and Mrs. Driscoll are the parents of four children: Mary, Margaret, Rose C. and John E. In his political affiliations Mr. Driscoll is a Democrat. He belongs to the Catholic Church.

DUDLEY, J. E., farmer and stock-raiser, Section 12, Ashmore Township, Coles County, was born in the locality where he now resides, August 13, 1856, the son of Guilford and Mary (Wiley) Dudley, natives of Massachusetts and Kentucky, respectively, who came to Coles County in the 'twenties and settled on the farm where their son now resides. The father proved to be a prosperous farmer, being the owner of 900 acres of land at the time of his decease, which occurred February 4, 1864. He left nine children, of whom the subject of our sketch was the youngest. After attaining his majority Mr. Dudley remained interested in agricultural pursuits. He now owns 200 acres of well-improved land.

Mr. Dudley was married on February 7, 1877, to Emma J. Reed, daughter of Caleb and Jane Reed, of Ashmore, Coles County, and four children were born of this union: Everill (deceased), Albert Dean, Mary and Geddeah (deceased). Mrs. Dudley died June 13, 1886. On January 9, 1887, Mr. Dudley was united in marriage to Lura Woodrum, daughter of William and Sarah Woodrum, of Ashmore. The second marriage has resulted in the birth of two children, Myrtle and Theron.

In his political views Mr. Dudley is a Republican. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity (Seventh degree), to the Modern Woodmen of America, and to the Court of Honor. Mrs. Dudley is a Royal Neighbor. Both are members of the Baptist Church, in which Mr. Dudley is a deacon. He has also been Superintendent of the Sunday School for twenty-one years.

DUNN, Hon. Frank K., attorney-at-law, Charleston, Ill., was born in Mount Gilead, Ohio, November 13, 1854, the son of Judge Andrew K. and Emily (Armentrout) Dunn, natives of Maryland and Ohio, respectively.

FRANK K. DUNN.

The subject of this sketch received his education at Kenyon (Ohio) College and at the Harvard University Law School, graduating from the former institution in 1873 and from the latter in 1875, during the latter year being admitted to the Ohio bar. He then spent three years in partnership with his father, who was Judge of the Court of Common Pleas at Mount Gilead.

Mr. Dunn came to Charleston in 1878, and there engaged in the practice of his profession.

On June 1, 1882, he was united in marriage with Alice, daughter of James S. and Margaret Trimble, of Mount Gilead, Ohio, and of this union three children have been born: Andrew Ruth and Herbert—the latter deceased.

Mr. Dunn is a Republican in his political views. In 1897 he was elected Circuit Judge for the Fifth Circuit, serving one term.

EDGAR, James Rue, farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides July 28, 1872, the son of James and Margaret (Hilligoss) Edgar, natives of England and Illinois, respectively. The father came to Coles County in 1857, when he was nineteen years of age. The grandfather, also a James Edgar, came to America, and later to Coles County, Ill., where he died at the age of 93. James Edgar, Sr., started in life with no capital, yet he now owns 240 acres of land. He is a director in the State Bank of Arcola, and lives a retired and peaceful life in that village.

James Rue Edgar, the subject of this sketch, attended the public schools near his father's home and took an additional course at the Wesleyan College, Bloomington, Ill. When he became of age he engaged in business on his own account. He now owns 120 acres of fine farm land, on which he raises fancy stock. He also cultivates 225 acres of land adjoining his farm.

On December 22, 1898, Mr. Edgar was married to Minnie A., daughter of John and Alice Black, of Humboldt. Four children have been born of this union: Maud, Clarence, Russell, Grace. Mr. Edgar is affiliated with the Democratic party in politics, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

EDGAR, William T., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born two and one-half miles east of the village of Humboldt April 28, 1866, the son of James and Margaret (Hilligoss) Edgar. Mr. Edgar received his education in the home schools, and then selected agricultural pursuits as his life work. He now owns 200 acres of valuable land, 120 being the home farm, on Section 34, and 80 acres being on Section 27. He owns a good residence, with all necessary improvements.

On February 23, 1893, Mr. Edgar was married to Ida M., daughter of Thomas and Sarah Reeder, of Coles County. Mr. and Mrs. Edgar are the parents of five children: Harry Otis, Arthur James, Margaret Pearl, Paul Thomas and Ora May.

ELLIS, James W., farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born on Section 21, Lafayette Township, July 9, 1840, the son of John and Lucretia (Trne) Ellis, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County, in 1830. Both are now deceased. Mr. Ellis remained on the paternal homestead until 1850, when he went to Missouri, and three years later he drove a team from that State to California. In 1860 he returned to Lafayette Township, and in April, 1861, enlisted in Company B, Seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving for three months, after which he reenlisted in Company D, Forty-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving with this regiment until February, 1863. He then enlisted as a member of the Marine Brigade on a Mississippi River gunboat, remaining in this service until October, 1864, when he returned to his home, where he has since been engaged in farming on his ninety-acre farm.

On February 22, 1865, Mr. Ellis was married to Hulda, daughter of William and Eunice Leach, and eight children born of this union are now living, namely: Lucretia, William L., John F., Anna B., Vernie V., Lilly M., Georgie and James R. In his political views Mr. Ellis is a Democrat, and is a member of the G. A. R. at Mattoon.

ELLIS, Smith T., a well-known and successful contractor, Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in North Okaw Township, Coles County, November 14, 1861, the son of Pleasant M. and Rebecca Ellis, natives of Tennessee. Pleasant M. Ellis came to Coles County in 1835, locating in North Okaw Township, where he carried on farming until his death, at the age of seventy-two years. Smith T. Ellis was reared on a farm, and in early youth enjoyed the advantages of the district schools. At the age of nineteen years he began teaching school, and continued in this occupation for three years. In 1885 he moved to Mattoon and engaged in the grocery business, which he conducted four years. He then turned his attention to the contracting business, which he has successfully followed ever since.

On August 21, 1884, Mr. Ellis was united in matrimony with Martha E. Luce, who was born in Oakland, Coles County, Ill., and pursued her girlhood studies in the North Okaw schools. Three children have blessed this union, namely: Lucy Edith, Grace and Bertha Mabel. The parents of Mrs. Ellis came to Coles County at an early period and located in East Oakland Township. Her father was a native of Ohio and her mother was born in Indiana.

In politics, Mr. Ellis upholds the principles of the Democratic party. For two years he was a member of the City Council of Mattoon. Fraternally, he is identified with the K. of P. and the M. W. A. His religious belief is that of the Baptist Church. He is a man of high character and good business capacity, and conducts his affairs with energy and diligence.

ELLISON, Arthur, farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Miami County, Kan., February 6, 1871, the son of Theodore and Jane (Gallion) Ellison, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively, both of whom are living in retirement at Mattoon, Ill. They own 400 acres of fine land, which their sons oversee. Arthur Ellison attended the public schools in Illinois and then decided to lead an agricultural life. On May 30, 1894, he was married to Martha, daughter of Marion and Frances Watson, and of this union three children have been born: John M., Theodore A. and Cleburn. Mr. Ellison farms 130 acres of his father's estate. In his political views Mr. Ellison is a Republican.

County, Kan., May 19, 1876, the son of Theodore and Louisa Jane (Gallion) Ellison, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. Mr. Ellison secured his education in the schools of Illinois, and then began farming. He resided for some time with his parents, and is at present cultivating sixty acres of his father's valuable estate. On January 8, 1899, Mr. Ellison was united in marriage to Eva Agnes, daughter of William H. and Jennie P. (Harris) Selby, natives of Illinois, and of this union two children have been born—Kenneth Edmond and Hazel Grace. In his political views Mr. Ellison is affiliated with the Republican party.

EMHUFF, Stephen, retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born October 18, 1826, in Silver Creek Township, Clark County, Ind., the son of Elijah and Hila (Allen) Emhuff, natives of Virginia and New York, respectively. Mr. Emhuff received his education and spent his youth in Clark County until the year 1849, when he removed to Rock Island County, Ill., farming there until the spring of 1856, when he went to Sullivan County, Ind. Again he removed to Coles County, Ill., settling in Morgan Township in 1861. The year following he betook himself to Seven Hickory Township, where he purchased forty acres of land, which has been increased to 360 acres at the present date. Engaged in the occupation of farming and stock-raising, it was not until 1895 that he felt he could retire from business.

On April 3, 1851, Mr. Emhuff married Martha Wilson, in Clark County, Ind., and of the children born to them three are now living: William, who is on the home farm; Emily, wife of Bert McAllister, of Madison County, Ind., and Margaret, wife of James O. Toland, of Seven Hickory Township. Mrs. Emhuff died on May 7, 1901. On June 23, 1902, Mr. Emhuff was united in marriage to Mary Gill. Mr. Emhuff belongs to the Democratic party, and is a member of the Christian Church at Charleston.

ENDSLEY, Thomas Lee, farmer, Charleston Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coshocot County, Ohio, November 21, 1842, the son of Thomas and Matilda (Karr) Endsley, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Endsley received his education in the schools of Ohio. In 1866 he came to Westfield, Ill., where, for a short time, he engaged in mercantile pursuits. He then purchased land in Hutton Township, and for three years managed his farm, but at the expiration of this period moved to Charleston, where for five years he acted as clerk. He then returned to Hutton Township and engaged in merchandising in Salisbury until 1886. In March, 1899, he bought his present farm of 168 acres, upon which he has made all necessary improvements. He has a herd of thirty Red Polled cattle, and a large number of Tamworth hogs, and is quite extensively engaged in breeding pure-blooded stock.

On October 24, 1867, Mr. Endsley was married to Mary J. Endsley, a native of Illinois, and of this union two children were born: Clarence and Lizzie, wife of W. E. Adams, Jr. Mrs. Endsley died on January 31, 1876. On September 12, 1888, Mr. Endsley was united in marriage to Mrs. Eliza J. (Marshall) Karr, and of this union two children have been born: Carlos M. and Antha Euphemia. Mary J. Endsley, Mr. Endsley's first wife, was a daughter of Andrew and Elizabeth Endsley of Hutton Township, Coles County. Mr. Endsley's second wife, who was Mrs. Eliza J. (Marshall) Karr, is a daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Marshall—the father of Scotch-Irish blood and the mother a native of Pennsylvania. The present Mrs. Endsley is a great-granddaughter of a soldier of the Revolution, who crossed the Delaware with Gen. Washington just before the battle of Trenton.

Mr. Endsley was a private in Company H, One Hundred and Forty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, during the Civil War, in politics is a Republican and a charter member of Hutton Lodge, No. 692, I. O. O. F., at Salisbury, Coles County. He belongs to the Presbyterian Church, in which he is an elder.

Landing at Castle Garden they proceeded to Boston, Mass., where the father became a contractor on the Boston & Worcester Railroad. Later the family went to Toledo, Ohio, where Mr. Gilduff assisted in building the locks on the Miami Canal. In 1840, the Gilduffs removed to Adrian, Mich.,

and after twenty-two years of residence there, they went to Litchfield, Ill.

James Gilduff received his education in the public schools near his home, and early in life chose to become a locomotive engineer. From 1856 to 1870, he ran a construction train on the St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad, and then became engineer on the passenger trains running between Mattoon and St. Louis. Afterwards his "run" was between Indianapolis and St. Louis. He then became Engineer Superintendent. In 1893 he was made foreman of the roundhouse at Mattoon, a position he retained until in 1898, when he retired from the railroad service. In 1895 he purchased eighty acres of farm land, which is rented to a tenant.

In 1867, Mr. Gilduff was married to Mary, daughter of John and Catherine Kelly, pioneers of Christian County, Ill., settling near Pana, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Gilduff have three living children: James, William F. and Mary Ellen, wife of Philip Kelly of Kansas City. Mr. Gilduff built the pleasant residence in which he now resides. Mr. Gilduff assisted in the organization of the Total Abstinence Society in Mattoon, and the following year there were no licenses granted in that city. He is a trustee in the Catholic Church.

GLASSCO, Mrs. Ann E., Charleston, Ill., was born in West Virginia June 4, 1828, the daughter of William and Sarah Frost, natives of Virginia. On December 24, 1846, Miss Frost was married to Madison Glasco, the son of Enoch and Rachel (Carlton) Glasco, early settlers of Coles County, Ill. Madison Glasco became in many ways prominent in the early history of his county. He was a man of good executive ability, and did a prosperous business in land and cattle exchange. To Mr. and Mrs. Madison Glasco were born: Edwin Bruce, Emmet, Sarah F., Mary Ellen, Madison A., Elizabeth A., Jerome and Lelia J. Madison Glasco died March 19, 1876, and in 1888 his widow was married to Kimball Glasco, a brother of her late husband. On February 17, 1899, occurred the death of Kimball Glasco. Mrs. Glasco is a well known and highly respected resident of Charleston, Ill.

GLASSCO, Emmet T., retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston Township, September 27, 1852, the son of Madison and Ann E. (Frost) Glasco, natives of Kentucky and West Virginia, respectively. Madison Glassco, the father, came to Coles County with his parents, Enoch and Rachel (Carlton) Glassco in 1829. Here the grandfather, Enoch Glassco, entered land, and his son Madison became a very extensive farmer and cattle breeder, owning 700 acres of land, with large herds of cattle and often as many as 800 head of hogs. During the Civil War, Madison Glassco served two years in the Fifth Illinois Cavalry. His death occurred in March, 1874, leaving a widow and four children.

Emmet T. Glassco, who was the second child, received his education in the public schools near his home, and at the high school in Charleston. When he became of age he left the paternal homestead and began farming on his own account. He now owns 365 acres of land two miles west of the city of Charleston; also handles considerable stock and personally oversees all his agricultural interests, although living retired in his residence on Tenth Street, Charleston, since 1897.

On September 5, 1882, Mr. Glassco was married to Elizabeth, daughter of George and Catherine Birch, early settlers of Coles County, and of this union four children have been born, of whom two died in infancy. Walter E. and Nellie A., the two surviving children, are both students in the Charleston high school. In his political views Mr. Glassco is a Republican.

GRANT, John, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Ashmore Township, May 7, 1848, the son of John and Sophia (Lively) Grant. The father was born in County Down, Ireland, coming to Canada in 1837, later removing to Virginia, where he married his wife, who was a native of that State. Her father, William Lively, was a soldier in the War of 1812, and her grandfather served in the Revolutionary War. In 1848, Mr. Grant's parents settled in Hutton Township, where the mother died in 1882, and the father in 1884. The subject of this sketch was educated in Ashmore Township and here he engaged in farm labor until 1863, when he went to Seven Hickory Township, for a period of forty years. In 1903 he moved to Hutton Township, where he owns 136 acres, on which general farming operations are carried on.

In August, 1865, Mr. Grant was united in marriage with Mary Loughran, a native of Ireland, and to them have been born eight children: John, Sophia, wife of Samuel Irby; Alice, wife of G. W. Masly; Ellen Jane, wife of Charles Faris; James R., Bridget, wife of Henry Shields; Naomi and William. Mrs. Grant died on May 21, 1903. HAMILTON, John R., a well-known citizen of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., where he is successfully engaged in the coal, wood and feed business, was born and raised in Coles County. He is the son of James and Margaret L. (Hoskins) Hamilton, the former a native of Adams County, Ohio, and the latter of Morgan County, Ill. Mr. Hamilton established himself in his present line of business in 1892, and by energy, close application and fair dealing has met with deserved success. August 19, 1896, he was united in marriage to Kate V. Van Deren, who was born in Charleston, Coles County, and received her mental culture in the Charleston High School and at Chautauqua, N. Y.

In politics Mr. Hamilton is an active Republican. For six years he served as Deputy Sheriff under his father, who held the office of Sheriff of Coles County during that period; later serving in the same capacity for a year and a half under Sheriff J. H. McClelland, when he resigned the position to assume the office of Circuit Clerk of Coles County, Ill., in 1888. He has also filled the office of Supervisor of Mattoon Township. In fraternal circles Mr. Hamilton is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P., I. O. O. F. and B. P. O. E.

HANDLEY, Charles O., farmer, Humboldt Township, was born in Fayette County, Ind., February 10, 1860, the son of Oliver and Charlotte (Lewis) Handley. The mother is deceased and the father resides in Indiana. The subject of this sketch was the oldest son, and after receiving his education remained with his parents and helped on the farm. In 1893 he moved to Coles County.

On April 17, 1895, Mr. Handley was married to Annie, daughter of Christian Schrader, who is a prominent farmer residing on Section 14, Humboldt Township. He was born in Prussia, Germany, March 25, 1835, and was the son of Frederick and Elizabeth Schrader. The former died in Prussia, but the mother came to America in 1861, her death occurring in New York. Christian Schrader received his education in Prussia, emigrated to America in 1857 and came to Coles County in 1864. He enlisted in Company K, Twenty-fourth Illinois Volunteers, served for three years, and took part in some of the memorable battles of the war. After the war he married Mary Mullinoff, and they became the parents of five children: Anna, wife of Charles O. Handley; William, Frederick, Lena, wife of Don Gillespie, and Herman, a minister in the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Schrader belongs to the G. A. R., is a School Director, a Republican in his political affiliations, and belongs to the German Lutheran Church.

Mr. Handley, his son-in-law, operates Mr. Schrader's farm of 160 acres, and makes a specialty of raising thoroughbred hogs. Mr. and Mrs. Handley have three children: Clara, Elsie and Curtis. Mr. Handley is a Republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HARDING, W. L., builder and contractor, Charleston, Ill., was born in Hendricks County, Ind., July 13, 1850, the son of Aaron and Hannah (Payne) Harding, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively, who came to Jasper County, Ill., in 1850. Both parents are deceased; the father dying in 1853 and the mother in 1879.

W. L. Harding received his education in the public schools of Illinois, and remaining on a farm until 1876, meanwhile learned the carpenter's trade. He then moved to Charleston, where for eight years he worked in Eli Huron's bookstore. He then found employment with the Hart Pioneer Nursery at Fort Scott, Kan., traveling for his employers through the western States. In 1888 he returned to Charleston and began contracting and building operations, since which time he has erected many of the finest stores and residences in the city. He employs from five to twenty men during the busy season. His office and shop is at 314 Sixth Street.

On October 29, 1879, Mr. Harding was married to Mary L., daughter of George and Sarah Larrimer, of Jasper County, and of this union four children have been born: Ada, wife of F. P. McCord, of Mexico, Mo.; Myrtle and Gertrude, teachers in the Duluth (Minn.) schools, and Harry, who is in the United States Navy, serving at present with the Asiatic fleet under Robley Evans. In his political views, Mr. Harding is a Republican. He is a member of the I. O. O. F., and belongs to the Christian Church, of which he has been Treasurer, and is now acting as Deacon.

(Gannaway) Hart, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively, but early settlers of Coles County. Mr. Hart's entire life has been spent in Paradise Township. He has always been engaged in general farming, and now owns 134 acres of land.

On February 24, 1876, Mr. Hart was married to Rebecca A., daughter of John and Mary A. Campbell, natives of Tennessee, and of this union three children have been born, two of whom are living: John M. and Letha. In his political affiliations Mr. Hart is an ardent Republican. He has served as Township Commissioner for eight years, as Treasurer of the Board of Commissioners five years, and as School Director for three years. He belongs to the Masonic order, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has been Steward for eight years, Trustee for a similar term and Superintendent of the Sunday School for four years.

HART, Arthur M., Treasurer Mattoon Gas Light and Coke Company, was born in Shelby County, Ill., December 24, 1875, the son of Joseph M. and Almira Hart, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively, who were early settlers of Coles County. The father was a member of Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War, and gave four years of service to his country. He died January 17, 1900. His widow survives him, residing at Mattoon, Ill.

Arthur M. Hart was brought to Mattoon when but five years of age, and in the public schools of that place received his education. Two of his summer vacations were spent working for a grocery store as delivery man. For four years after completing his schooling he was employed in a dry goods and clothing store, after which he entered the service of the Gas Company as bookkeeper and collector, later being promoted to Assistant Superintendent. When the concern was reorganized, Mr. Hart became one of the stockholders and directors, and is at present its Treasurer and Superintendent.

On June 22, 1902, he was married to India M., daughter of J. M. and Sarah J. Bresee, natives of Illinois and Indiana, respectively, and of this union one son has been born, Richard B. In his political views, Mr. Hart is a Republican. He has served one term as City Treasurer in Mattoon, being the only Republican elected on that ticket. Upon the expiration of his term of office he was made City Comptroller, and is serving in this capacity at the present time. He and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

HASHBARGER, Jacob L., farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, February 8, 1851, the son of James M. and Mary E. (Roberts) Hashbarger, natives of Ohio, who came to Illinois in 1868, locating in Humboldt Township, Coles County, in 1873. Mr. Hashbarger remained on the homestead with his parents until after he had attained his majority. On November 3, 1881, Mr. Hashbarger was united in marriage to Emma C., daughter of I. L. and Mary Kelsey. He then purchased a farm for himself in Humboldt Township, which he managed until 1891, when he moved to his present homestead of 113½ acres in Lafayette Township. Mr. and Mrs. Hashbarger are the parents of six children: Mary, wife of Albert Crum of Mattoon; Edith, Esther, Kelsey, Leslie and Reginald. In his political views, Mr. Hashbarger is a Republican, and is now serving his first term as Road Commissioner. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which body he is one of the Stewards.

HAYWARD, Charles S., V. S., whose period of professional practice in Mattoon began in 1902, and who has already acquired a remunerative patronage, was born in Ash Grove, Vermilion County, Ill., October 17, 1868. He is a son of Martin and Marietta (Hollingsworth) Hayward, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. His paternal grandparents were Charles and Elizabeth E. (Vickers) Hayward, of whom the former was born in Maryland. On the mother's side, his grandparents were John and Sarah L. (Haworth) Hollingsworth.

The subject of this sketch attended the public schools of Illinois and Indiana in boyhood, and then became a pupil in Vermilion Academy at Vermilion Grove, Ill., from which he was graduated in 1888. From 1889 to 1891, inclusive, he pursued a scientific course at Earlham College in Richmond, Ind., and afterwards practiced his profession in Danville, Ill., for six months, as a doctor's student, with Dr. J. C. Stewart. He graduated from the Ontario Veterinary College, in Toronto, Canada, in March, 1892, with the degree of V. S., and has since been engaged in successful practice in Mattoon.

On November 8, 1891, Dr. Hayward was united in marriage with Lillie Cook, who was born in Vermilion County, Ill., and acquired her education in Champaign County, Ill., and at the Vermilion Academy. This union became the source of four children, namely: Elma, Alpha, Harold and Thelma.

In religious faith, Dr. Hayward belongs to the Society of Friends. Politically he is a supporter of the Republican party. In fraternal circles, he is identified with the I. O. O. F.

HEDGES, Elijah, veteran of the Civil War and farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Ohio, June 8, 1840, the son of William C. and Mary C. (Thomas) Hedges, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. In 1856 the family moved to Coles County, Ill., where the parents were engaged in agricultural pursuits until their death. Mr. Hedges was brought up in the customary manner of the early days. On August 9, 1862, he enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which regiment he served two years and ten months. He then returned to Illinois and resumed farming operations.

On October 13, 1867, Mr. Hedges was married to Amanda, daughter of Jacob and Susannah (Toby) Harry, natives of Ohio and Maryland, who came to Coles County in 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Hedges are the parents of five children: Cora B., Carrie E., Omer F., Perley L. and Mary L. In his political views, Mr. Hedges is a Republican. He and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HENLEY, F. N., lawyer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Coles County, December 26, 1869, the son of L. C. and Mary E. (Allison) Henley, who came from Tennessee to locate in Coles County in 1848. The father, besides carrying on a farm, practiced law there for forty years, but is now Judge of the Mattoon City Court.

F. N. Henley was educated in the Mattoon High School, read law with his father and E. P. Rose, and graduated from the Ann Arbor (Mich.) Law School in 1891, returning to Mattoon to begin practicing with Mr. Rose, who died in 1894. In 1895, Mr. Henley was made City Attorney, having served previously, from 1891 to 1893, as a member of the Common Council. He is President of the Adair Abstract Company of Charleston, Ill., and of the Eagle Stone Company of Bloomington, Ind., and is attorney for the Mattoon Building and Loan Association—the oldest concern of its kind in the country.

Mr. Henley was married in June, 1895, to Cora, daughter of Frank Kern, a merchant of Mattoon, and they are the parents of two children: Virginia and Francis Kern. In his political views Mr. Henley is a Republican.

HENLEY, John L., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the same township, September 22, 1867, the son of L. C. and Mary E. Henley, natives of Tennessee and Illinois, respectively. Mr. Henley's youth was spent in Mattoon, but he is at present interested in general farming and stock-raising on the farm owned by himself and wife, which consists of 175 acres of land in Paradise Township.

On April 19, 1893, Mr. Henley was united in marriage to Almira, daughter of William B. and Fanny M. Ferguson, natives of Pennsylvania and Coles County, both of whom are now deceased. The parents of both Mr. and Mrs. Henley were among the worthy pioneers of Coles County. Of this union five children have been born: Thomas E., Paul A., Mary L., William B. and Frances I.

Mr. Henley is a Republican politically, and is serving his second term as Supervisor of Paradise Township, and is now in his third term as School Trustee. He is a Mason and belongs to the M. W. A. Mrs. Henley is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

HENLEY, Lapsley C., a prominent citizen of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., and one of the foremost lawyers of Coles County, was born July 11, 1840, in Trenton, Tenn., and in early youth received his mental training in the common schools of Illinois. He is a son of Thomas D. and Rebecca M. (Campbell) Henley, the former born in South Carolina and the latter in Abingdon, Va. His grandfather, Thomas Henley, was born in South Carolina, the father of the latter being a native of England. Patrick Campbell, the maternal grandfather, whose parents were of Scotch derivation, was a native of Ireland, where his wife was also born. Thomas D. Henley moved, in 1844, from Trenton, Tenn., to Charleston, Ill., where he was Principal of the Charleston School, and where he died in 1847.

Lapsley C. Henley grew to manhood in Coles County, of which he has been a continuous resident since he was four years of age. He is one of the honored quota of Coles County veterans, who rendered gallant service during the Civil War. In 1874, he was admitted to the bar and soon attained notable prominence in his profession, in the court proceedings of his section of the State becoming one of the most conspicuous figures.

On January 7, 1864, Judge Henley was united in marriage with Mary E. Allison, who was born in Coles County, Ill., and in girlhood acquired her education in the schools of Mattoon. Six children were the offspring of this union: John L., Francis N., Lapsley C., William W., Mary L. and Edward V. Judge Henley is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and in politics has been an earnest and influential Republican. He served as County Judge of Coles County from 1886 to December, 1894, and was elected Judge of the City Court of Mattoon in January, 1902. He has also held the office of City Attorney of Mattoon, and has represented his ward in the City Council. For four terms he was a member of the Mattoon Board of Education, during two years of which time he served as President of that body. In all of these important official positions he has acquitted himself with signal ability and fidelity to his trust. Fraternally Judge Henley is identified with the Grand Army of the Republic and the Knights of Pythias. His high personal rectitude, and the variety and importance of the public positions held by him during his residence in Coles County render his career an important part of its history.

HENRICHS, Hans, contractor, Mattoon, Ill., was born October 4, 1854, in the Province of Schleswig, Germany, the son of Hans and Mary Henrichs, natives of Germany. After completing his education in the public schools of his native land, in 1874, he joined Company Two, Eighty-fourth Regiment of the Imperial German Army, where he served for three years. Next he was apprenticed to John Paul in order that he might master the carpenter's trade, which he followed for four years before he decided to emigrate to the United States. In 1882 he was located in Tuscola, Ill., but in 1898 he moved to Mattoon, where he has since been engaged in general contracting. Among the buildings which he has erected are the Congregational and First Presbyterian churches, Carnegie Library, Stove Foundry, and the Illinois Traction Company's Power House, besides rebuilding the Demaree Block, the East and West School Houses and the High School Building.

his education in the public schools near his home, and, at an early age, settled down to farming. He is at present the owner of eighty acres of fine land in Seven Hickory Township.

On December 16, 1878, Mr. Jenkins was married to Clara M., daughter of John and Eliza (Nichols) Morris, natives of Illinois and Indiana, respectively, and of this union three children have been born: Lillie M., Bessie E. and T. Frederick. In his political views Mr. Jenkins is a Democrat, and has served one term as Assessor, three years as Drainage Commissioner, and three years as School Director. He is a member of Charleston Lodge, No. 609, I. O. O. F. and also of the M. W. A. fraternity. Mr. Jenkins and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JENKINS, E. A., retired, was born in Putnam County, Ind., August 30, 1834, the son of John M. and Nancy (Martin) Jenkins, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Jenkins remained with his parents until he was of age, when he went to Greencastle, Ind., to accept a position as clerk. In 1859, in company with his brother, W. M. Jenkins, he came to Charleston and opened a mercantile establishment. Upon the retirement of this brother in July, 1886, the firm name was changed to E. A. Jenkins & Son, which was again changed in 1896, on the retirement of the father, to William F. Jenkins, who succeeded to the business.

On May 30, 1861, Mr. E. A. Jenkins was married to Amanda A., daughter of John and Martha Jeffries, early settlers of Charleston, and of this union six children were born: John E. (deceased), William F., Joseph, Gertrude, Fanny and Kate.

In his political views Mr. Jenkins is a Republican, and he has served five years as School Director. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows fraternity, and is an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being one of the Trustees of his local church.

JENKINS, William F. (deceased), former dry-goods merchant, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston, March 17, 1864, the son of Elijah A. and Amanda Jenkins. After graduating from the high school he took a full course at the Bryant & Stratton Business College, in Chicago. Returning to Charleston he was employed by W. M. & E. A. Jenkins until 1886, when he became a member of the firm of E. A. Jenkins & Son. His father retiring in 1896, Mr. Jenkins became sole owner of the business, which he greatly increased and improved, making it one of the leading stores in Central Illinois.

Mr. Jenkins was married May 21, 1890, to Martha E., daughter of Isaiah H. and Sarah A. Johnston, and of this union two children were born: William F. and Hubert J. Jenkins.

Mr. Jenkins was a Republican in politics and gave considerable attention to public affairs; was a member of the City Council from 1891 to 1893; Vice-President of the Charleston Industrial Association, a Director in the Second National

Mr. Jenkins died of la grippe, after an illness of two weeks, at his home in Charleston, February 11, 1905.

JENKINS, W. M., retired, was born in Putnam County, Ind., in July, 1832, the son of John M. and Nancy Jenkins, natives of Kentucky, in which State they were married. Mr. Jenkins received his education in Indiana, and in the fall of 1859 came to Charleston, where, in partnership with a brother, E. A. Jenkins, he engaged in the dry-goods trade, from which, on account of ill health, he retired in 1886.

In April, 1857, Mr. Jenkins was married to his cousin, Elizabeth Jenkins, who died in October, 1892, leaving no children. Two nieces, Elmira and Stella Carter were taken into this family before the decease of the wife. In his political views, Mr. Jenkins is a Republican, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JENNINGS, Ephraim, retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Natick, Mass., October 22, 1825, the son of Ephraim and Lucy (Pierce) Jennings, natives of Massachusetts. The subject of this sketch spent his youth in his native State, and there received his education and began his life work as a civil engineer. His first work of importance was done on the Boston Water Works, where he was engaged from 1847 to 1849. Deciding to come West, Mr. Jennings first located at Kenosha, Wis., but in June, of 1850, went to Fremont, Ohio, where he assisted in building the Lake Shore Railroad between Cleveland and Toledo, and in locating the road between Norwalk and Oberlin, as well as that from Norwalk to Bellevue. In March, 1853, he came to Mattoon as engineer in charge of a division of the Illinois Central Railroad from Wabash Point to three miles north of Arcola, but at the expiration of three months resigned this position and took charge of the contract for grading and bridging that part of the road, accomplishing this task in five months' time. In December, 1853, he went to Chicago, where for ten years he was identified with the grain brokerage business as well as contracting for wood, ties, etc., for the Illinois Central Railroad. In 1863 he moved his family to Mattoon and, until his retirement in 1900, was in the grain business. While a resident of Mattoon he took an interest in public enterprises and for five years was a director of the Grayville & Mattoon Railroad, which is now a part of the Illinois Central Railroad system.

On December 27, 1853, Mr. Jennings was united in marriage to Elizabeth W., daughter of John and Lucy Bacon, and to them were born five children: Lucy B., Amelia, Edward R., Harriet E. and Henrietta M. On December 27, 1903, he and his wife were privileged to celebrate their golden wedding.

Mr. Jennings is a Republican in his political views, and has served on the County Board of Supervisors, as member of the Board of Education and also as a member of the City Council of Mattoon. He is a member of the Congregational Church, and has served many years as a deacon in the same.

JENNINGS, S. V., farmer, East Oakland Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the same township in which he now resides, November 7, 1875, the son of Thomas and Catherine Jennings, natives of Ireland. The father came from County Mayo, Ireland, to Coles County, Ill., about 1855, the mother coming from Kilkenny to join him in 1858. In 1892 they removed to Champaign County.

The subject of this sketch received his education in his home schools, and has followed the pursuit of agriculture most of his life. He now owns 150 acres of valuable land on which he makes a specialty of raising fine horses and hogs. He makes his home with a sister, Cecelia. Mr. Jennings is associated with the Democratic party in his political views, and is a member of the Catholic Church.

JOHNS, Daniel, merchant, Cook's Mills, Coles County, Ill., was born in Noble County, Ohio, December 4, 1858, the son of McKenzie and Lousa (Rucker) Johns, natives of Maryland. His grandfather, Daniel Johns, was a native of France, who settled in Baltimore, Md., upon coming to America, but later moved to Ohio. Daniel Johns, the second, received his education in the public schools of Ohio. In 1871 he moved to Edgar County, Ill., and in 1874 came to Coles County, locating in North Okaw Township, where he at first rented a farm. In 1881, however, he decided to try village life, so he moved to Cook's Mills, where for three years he carried on the business of brick making. Later he became a contractor and bridge builder, but in 1901 opened a general store, in which business he is now engaged.

On February 1, 1877, Mr. Johns was united in marriage to Armenda, daughter of John and Mary Whitley, natives of Tennessee and North Carolina. In his political associations Mr. Johns is connected with the Republican party. He belongs to the I. O. O. F. and to the K. P. fraternities.

JOHNSON, Franklin A., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in the place where he now resides December 29, 1869, the son of William and Mary Jane (Miller)

Johnson, natives of Ireland and Illinois, respectively. William Johnson, the father, was born March 22, 1822, came to Illinois in 1850, and settled in North Okaw Township in 1857. Here he was married to Mary J. Miller, who was born July 22, 1834. Four children were born to them: Robert M.; Anna A., the wife of C. F. Moore; Sarah J. and Franklin A. At the time of his death, June 8, 1901, Mr. Johnson, Sr., was possessed of 240 acres of land. He had served as School Trustee and School Director. Mrs. Mary J. Johnson, his wife, died May 23, 1898.

Franklin A. Johnson received his education in the public schools, after which he began farming. He now owns 120 acres of land with good residence and all improvements of an up-to-date farm. He raises considerable stock on Section 28, in North Okaw Township. On August 24, 1892, Mr. Johnson was united in marriage to Amanda E., daughter of Jefferson and Mary J. (Dallas) Harry, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. The parents of Mr. Harry were Jacob and Susannah (Tobey) Harry. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are the parents of two children: Olive Marie and Margaret Hazel. In his political affiliations Mr. Johnson is a Democrat. The family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOHNSTON, Felix, Cashier of Second National Bank, Charleston, Ill., was born in Coles County, June 17, 1849, the son of I. H. Johnston. Supplementing his common-school education by a two years' course in Dennison College, Ohio, Mr. Johnston was then ready to enter the City Bank of Charleston in the position of book-keeper. When the Second National Bank was organized in 1871, he was made Teller of the same, and in 1885 he was advanced to the cashiership, an office which he still retains.

In October, 1873, Mr. Johnston was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Albert and Catherine Compton, early settlers of Coles County. Four children have been born of this union: Frank, Howell, Donald and Harriett. In his political views, Mr. Johnston affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHNSTON, Isaiah H., President Second National Bank, Charleston, Ill., was born in Russell County, Va., April 24, 1827, the son of Abner and Polly (Fuller) Johnston, natives of the Old Dominion, who came with their family of five children to Coles County, October 10,

1830. Isaiah H. Johnston passed his youth in the regular pioneer fashion, and secured such education as the schools of his neighborhood afforded. Before attaining his majority, he married on February 10, 1848, Harriet, daughter of Thomas and Patsey Jeffries, who came to Coles County from Grayson County, Ky., in 1830, and of this union three children were born: Felix, Emily, and Philander, who died in infancy. Mrs. Johnston died April 14, 1853. Soon after his wife's decease Mr. Johnston removed from his farm to Springfield, where for a time he engaged in mercantile pursuits; while there President Pierce appointed him to the postmastership of the little office of Springfield. Eighteen months later he moved to Johnstown, Cumberland County, in which place he again became Postmaster, this time under President Buchanan. In this town he had charge of a steam saw and grist mill. In 1857 he went to Mattoon and started a general store, and in 1860 was elected Sheriff of Coles County. He then removed to Charleston and there, at the expiration of his term of office, once more became a merchant.

On July 10, 1855, Mr. Johnston was united in marriage to Sarah A., daughter of Richard H. and Rachel P. Gray, who came from Tennessee in 1834, and of this union seven children have been born: George D., deceased; Polly, deceased;

Flora G., deceased; Charles, deceased; Martha, Bertha and Isaiah H., Jr. On January 1, 1869, Mr. Johnston, with T. A. Marshall and John W. True, opened a private bank in Charleston under the firm name of T. A. Marshall & Co. On August 1, 1871, the Second National Bank of Charleston was organized, absorbing the T. A. Marshall & Co. house. Mr. Johnston became President of the new institution July 16, 1873, an office he has held continuously since that date.

Mr. Johnston was elected a member of the County Board of Supervisors, for the town of Charleston in April 1889, and was re-elected continuously up to and including 1892. He was elected Chairman of the Board in 1890 and in 1891. Since his arrival in Charleston no citizen has done more by influence and energetic action for the upbuilding of the city than has Mr. Johnston. He is one of the few pioneer residents who survive, and who has witnessed the many marvelous changes brought by time in Coles County. During the almost forty-five years of his residence there he has been one of the chief factors in the commercial success of Charleston and in the furthering of all pertaining to the county's growth.

JONES, Charles H., merchant, Loxa, Coles County, Ill., was born in Lafayette Township, September 25, 1853, the son of John Dumas and Susan (Hancock) Jones, the father a native of Harrison County, Ky., and the mother of Coles County, Ill. Mr. Jones, Sr., came to Lafayette Township in 1845, and there became a prosperous farmer. His death occurred January 27, 1872. His widow resides in Mattoon, and is almost the oldest native-born person now living in the county.

Charles H. Jones received his education in the public schools near his home and at Lee's Academy. He taught school for six years, and in the summer time turned his attention to farming. In August, 1883, he went to Loxa and entered a store as clerk, was a partner from 1885 to 1893, since which time he has been sole proprietor, and it has grown to be the extensive concern which he now operates.

On April 3, 1879, Mr. Jones was married to Nannie, daughter of A. A. and Elizabeth Walker, of Pleasant Grove Township, and of this union three children were born: Alexander Dumas, Frank W. and Harry Lynn, the two younger dying in infancy. Mrs. Jones died June 25, 1883. On November 28, 1889, Mr. Jones was united in marriage to Mollie A. Hogg, of Bethany, Ill., and to them have been born three children: Jessie D., Charles T. and Mildred D. In his political affiliations Mr. Jones is a Democrat, and has been Postmaster at Loxa three terms. He is a member of the Syracuse Lodge, No. 143, K. of P., at Charleston, and belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Loxa, of which he is one of the Trustees.

JONES, Mosies, farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Kentucky, January 1, 1842, the son of James and Martha (Peyton) Jones, natives of Kentucky. After receiving his education, Mr. Jones decided to follow an agricultural life, and this, with a brief exception, has been his occupation ever since he made his youthful decision. He owns at present forty acres of land in Seven Hickory Township.

On December 2, 1861, he enlisted in Company G, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served with his regiment two years, when he returned to his home in Charleston. On October 1, 1868, Mr. Jones was married to Celia Jane, daughter of Henry and Sarah (Massey) Prnett, natives of Kentucky, who located in Coles County in 1852, and of this union eight children have been born, six of whom are living: Eliza B., Sarah E., Harvey B., Norah M., Bertha A., and Pheby J. In his political views Mr. Jones is a Democrat. His family are members of the Christian Church.

JONES, William D., farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the township in which he now resides November 21, 1856, the son of William R. and Eliza P. (Threlkeld) Jones, both natives of Kentucky. The father made his first visit to Illinois in 1833, but returned to Kentucky, where he remained for four years longer before making his permanent home in Coles County, where he devoted his attention to farming. His wife, Eliza P. (Threlkeld) Jones, died December 31, 1856, and in 1861 he married Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of William and Louisa (Williams) Ewing. The children by the first marriage were: Thomas T., born October 18, 1854, and William D. Three children were born of the second marriage, of whom two were twins, born in 1863, and dying at birth; the third being Sarah Louisa, born in April, 1865, who married Emory Gibbs, and died in November, 1894, leaving one son, Herbert Gibbs. William R. Jones, who was one of the early settlers and a prominent citizen of Coles County, died in 1879, but his second wife still survives, residing on her own property at the corner of South Seventeenth Street and Wabash Avenue, Mattoon, Ill. Thomas T. Jones, the oldest son of William R. Jones by his first marriage, and brother of William D., subject of this sketch, resided in Coles County until the spring of 1901, when he sold his farm and removed with his family to Lawrenceville, the county-seat of Lawrence County, Ill., where he now resides.

William D. Jones received his education in Lafayette Township, and at an early period in his career, deciding to follow the avocation of his parents, engaged in farming on Section 29. He now owns 172 acres. In 1896 he built an elevator on the Illinois Central Railroad, at Jones' Switch, and here he has handled much grain, the product of his farm and that of the community around.

On October 1, 1879, Mr. Jones was married to Cynthia A., daughter of R. E. Y. and Mary A. (Van Meter) Williams, of Lafayette Township, and of this union four children have been born: Frank R., employed in the Mattoon State Savings Bank; Claude D., in the office of the Superintendent of the Peoria Division of the Illinois Central Railroad at Mattoon; Mary E. and Arthur T. In his political views Mr. Jones is a Republican. He has served one term as Supervisor; has been Road Commissioner and School Trustee. Mrs. Jones is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

JOSEPH, Harrison, jeweler, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Pataskala, Licking County, Ohio, September 8, 1836, the son of John and Pamela (Peters) Joseph, natives of Ohio. The grandfather of the subject of this sketch, Ezekiel Joseph, was a Sergeant in the War of 1812. John Joseph, his son, was by profession a veterinary surgeon. Harrison Joseph received his education in the public schools of Kirkersville, Ohio. Later he studied the jewelry trade in Newark, Ohio. In 1863, he engaged in the service of the Government, purchasing horses for its use throughout Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and in this manner became acquainted with the virtues of Coles County and formed his determination to reside there. He settled in Mattoon in October, 1867, and opened a jewelry store in partnership with Joseph H. Clark. Later he was with James H. Clark, but in 1876 became the sole proprietor of the store, where he is now doing a successful business. His store is stocked with a fine line of elegant jewelry, cut glass and hand-painted china. Mr. Joseph owns a small farm near the southeastern limits of the city where he keeps the fine horses of which he is so fond.

On December 30, 1858, Mr. Joseph was married to Vashtie Hamrick, and of this union three children have been born: Jennie B., wife of Dr. O. W. Ferguson; Charles Herbert, and Myrtle, wife of Fred Snider. In his political views Mr. Joseph is a Republican. He is one of the directors in the Mattoon National Bank, now its Vice-President, and has been, at various times, President, Vice-President and Secretary of the Mattoon Driving Park Association, being the owner of the park.

KANE, James, farmer, Humboldt township, Coles County, was born in the city of Belfast, Ireland, December 12, 1833, the son of Patrick and Eliza (O'Hara) Kane, natives of Ireland, where both died. Emigrating to America in 1853, Mr. Kane supported himself by working at the cooper's trade, which he had learned in the old country. He located in Madison, Ind., and afterward went to Switzerland County, in that State, where, during the Civil War, he enlisted in Company D, Twenty-second Indiana Infantry, serving for fifteen months and being engaged in several serious battles. He was wounded at Pea Ridge and ordered home to Indiana. After his recovery he worked at his trade in Lafayette and Delphi, and later established a shop of his own at Rockfield, where he resided for many years, before finally locating (in 1882) on his fine farm of 160 acres on Section 13, Humboldt Township, in Coles County, Ill. In 1857 Mr. Kane was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of James and Rosa Brady, of Madison County, Ind., who were originally natives of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Kane are the parents of eleven children, four of whom are deceased. Those living are: Patrick, Robert, James, Daniel Charles, Ellen, wife of John Stewart; Sarah, wife of William Mead; and Maggie, wife of Daniel James. In his political views Mr. Kane is affiliated with the Democratic party. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

KEENAN, Richard, retired, Mattoon, Ill., was born June 6, 1830, in Westmeath County, Ireland, the son of John and Helen Keenan, natives of the "Emerald Isle." Landing in New York about 1850, Mr. Keenan was employed for three years at Greenwood, N. Y. At the expiration of this time he came as far West as Chicago, an adventurous undertaking in those days, and here he found work with the Illinois Central Railroad, continuing in their employ until 1898, although in the meantime he had changed his place of abode to Mattoon. Through industry and economical habits he has accumulated seven pieces of city property in Mattoon.

On August 16, 1872, Mr. Keenan was married to Tabitha, daughter of Joseph Egan, of Tennessee, and they have one son, John, now a locomotive engineer on the Illinois Central Railroad. Mr. Keenan is a Democrat. He is a member of the Catholic Knights of America, and attends the Catholic Church.

KENDALL, Harry Frederick, editor and publisher, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Flora, Ill., August 17, 1863, the son of Cyrus D. and Catherine Roxilla (Miller), the former a native of Erie County, Pa., and the latter of Bellefontaine, Ohio. His paternal grandparents were Cyrus and Lucy (Aubrey) Kendall, and his great-grandparents on the same side, Morrel and Mary (English) Kendall, all natives of Orange County, Vt., where the family resided for ~~some~~ generations. Mr. Kendall's grandparents on the maternal side were Thompson and Abbie (Sparks) Miller, and his great-grandfather, through his grandmother, Lucy (Aubrey) Kendall, was John Frederick Aubrey, who was a surgeon in the British Navy during the French and Indian War, which ended with the capture of Quebec by the British in 1759, in which Dr. Aubrey took part. He was discharged from the British service in 1770, soon after came to America and joined the Continental Army, with which he served up to the close of the Revolutionary War. Cyrus D. Kendall, father of Henry Frederick, served four years as a soldier of the Eleventh Missouri Volunteers during the Civil War, in which he held the position of Captain.

Harry F. Kendall's childhood was spent at Louisville, Clay County, Ill., his family later removing to Newton, Jasper County, where he graduated from the Newton High School in 1884. In the fall of the same year he entered the preparatory department of the University of Illinois, and a year later matriculated in the University proper, graduating in the class of 1889 with the degree of A. B. He then read law for two years in the office of T. J. Smith, of Champaign, and in 1891 passed the examination before the Illinois Supreme Court and was admitted to the bar. He then took up newspaper work, and in October, 1895, became owner and publisher of the "Mattoon (Ill.) Gazette." On January 2, 1905, he effected the consolidation of "The Gazette" and "The Journal" of Mattoon under the name of "The Journal-Gazette," and is now President of "The Journal-Gazette" Company, issuing daily and weekly editions, and of the Gazette Printing Company. His success as editor and publisher has been demonstrated by the standing which that paper has attained under his management.

Mr. Kendall was married March 2, 1898, to Jessie B. Johnson, who was born at Alma, Marion County, Ill., and educated in the Newton (Ill.) High School, the Kirkwood (Mo.) Seminary and the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston. She is a daughter of Hale Johnson, who was a candidate for Vice-President on the Prohibition ticket in 1896. Mr. Kendall supports the principles of the Republican party as an editor and a citizen, and fraternally is associated with the Court of Honor and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

KENNY, William J., Cashier First National Bank, Charleston, Ill., was born at Windsor, Shelby County, Ill., December 5, 1863, the son of Thomas and Ellen Kenny, natives of Ireland. The father emigrated to the United States in 1848, the mother arrived in 1851, and their marriage occurred in Dayton, Ohio, after which they located on a farm near Windsor, Ill., in the 'fifties.

Mr. Kenny's education was gained in Windsor, and in 1882 he entered the Circuit Clerk's office at Shelbyville, as Deputy, a position which he held for four years. He then obtained employment in the mail service until 1880. His next employment was as bookkeeper in the Charleston Bank, being promoted in 1896 to the cashiership, a position which he still occupies.

In February, 1890, Mr. Kenny was married to Mary C., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Norfolk, of Charleston, and to them have been born three daughters: Helen, Marguerite and Corrine. Mr. Kenny is a Democrat in his political views, and has served as Alderman for two years.

KNOLLENBERG, Fred, farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born in Oldenburg, Germany, July 27, 1837, the son of Henry and Eliza (Reuter) Knollenberg, natives of the same country, where the father died. Educated in Germany, where he was raised on a large farm, Mr. Knollenberg went from home to serve seven years in the army before he finally emigrated with his widowed mother to the United States. They went first to Missouri, where, in 1869, the mother died. After five years, Mr. Knollenberg decided to move to Illinois, and on February 16, 1871, he came to Mattoon and rented the farm which he now owns. Soon he purchased eighty acres, which was gradually added unto until the estate consists at present of 480 acres of excellent farming land, all improvements, including the fine residence, having been made by the subject of this sketch.

On November 24, 1864, in Germany, Mr. Knollenberg was united in marriage to Bernadina Knebel, who was born in Germany, July 17, 1840. They are the parents of four children: William, Rudolph, Henry and Frederick. They have one grandchild, Minnie, who is the wife of William Niemeyer. Mr. Knollenberg has given to each of his children eighty acres of land. In his political views he is a Republican, and he has served as School Director. He is an attendant of the Lutheran Church.

KURTZ, J. Frederick, locomotive engineer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Michigan, March 9, 1842, the son of Jacob and Fredericka Kurtz, who came to America about 1840, locating in the State of Michigan. The father still resides there, but the mother is deceased. Until his twentieth year, Mr. Kurtz remained on the home place. After completing his education, he began work on the railroad, and for the past forty years he has found employment in the capacity of a locomotive engineer. So fortunate has he been that no accident has ever marred his record. He now resides in Mattoon, where he owns some valuable property.

On November 24, 1870, Mr. Kurtz was married to Isabelle, daughter of Mary and John Bloxham, natives of England, but later residents of New York, where both died. Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz are the parents of two sons, John B. and Frederick J., who were formerly engaged in the hardware business in Mattoon, but who are now dealers in the same line in San Diego, Cal. In his political views Mr. Kurtz is a Democrat. He and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

LAMBERT, Richard, farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in County Cork, Ireland, May 3, 1862, the son of Michael and Susan (Stout) Lambert of the same country. Mr. Lambert received his education in Ireland. He emigrated to America in 1882, coming directly to Coles County.

On January 5, 1898, Mr. Lambert was married to Mary, daughter of Peter and Catherine (Grady) Murphy, and of this union two children have been born: Catherine on August 15, 1899, and Margaret on October 28, 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Lambert own a splendid farm of 160 acres, which is located in an ideal part of Section 19, North Okaw Township. Here they raise stock and broom corn, besides carrying on general farming operations. In his political views Mr. Lambert is a Democrat. Mrs. Lambert is a member of the Catholic Church.

LANE, Hon. Thomas P. C. (deceased), was born in Ashburnham, Mass., May 30, 1827, the son of Josiah and Nancy (Wilder) Lane, natives of Massachusetts. Mr. Lane's acquaintance with Coles County dates from 1856, when he located at Mattoon. For about twenty-five years he was engaged in the practice of law. In 1881 he moved to his farm just west of Mattoon.

On December 18, 1861, Mr. Lane was married to Helen M. Rose, and of this union two children were born: Nannie P. and Ida M. By her former marriage Mrs. Lane had one daughter, Lillie, who married H. S. Riddle of Mattoon. Mrs. Lane died April 15, 1902. In his political views Mr. Lane was a Republican. He served for a number of years as Supervisor and held other positions of prominence. He was a member of the Unitarian Church. His death occurred February 28, 1897.

Of Mr. Lane's two daughters, Nannie P. Lane married Arthur T. North, an architect of Kewanee, Ill., and to them have been born three children, two of whom are living: Helen C. and Page L. Mr. and Mrs. North live on the old Lane homestead, west of Mattoon. In his political views Mr. North is a Democrat, and he belongs to the Masonic fraternity.

LANPHIER, Henry, farmer and stock-raiser, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Munster, Ireland, in 1867, the son of Thomas and Ellen Lanphier, natives of the same county. Mr. Lanphier emigrated to the United States in 1885, locating first in Canada, going west to Cincinnati, Ohio, and afterward coming to Coles County, Ill., where he worked by the month on a farm until he was able to rent a place. Finally, in 1894, he purchased his present farm of 100 acres. He has a fine residence and has made various improvements.

On February 20, 1895, Mr. Lanphier was united in marriage to Cordelia Haybrook, and they had one child, Clifford. Mrs. Lanphier died in 1900. In 1902 Mr. Lanphier was married to Orpha Lippert, and one child has been born of this union, Ruth. In his political views Mr. Lanphier is a Republican. He is a Drainage Commissioner and Commissioner of Highways. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has belonged to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows for fifteen years. He attends the Methodist Church.

LARUE, Jacob, farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, Ill., June 16, 1849, the son of John and Elizabeth Larue, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County about 1830. Mr. Larue passed his boyhood days on his father's farm, and choosing this occupation for his lifework, he has ever since been an agriculturist. He owns at present 194 acres of land in Paradise township.

On September 4, 1872, Mr. Larue was married to Arloa N., daughter of William and Diantha Smith, natives of Pennsylvania, who came to Coles County about 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Larue are the parents of seven children, four of whom are living: Diantha E., William Ora, Rosa Edward and Ruth Ella. In his political views Mr. Larue is a Republican. He has served one term as Commissioner of Highways. He belongs to the Odd Fellows' fraternity. He and his family are members of the Christian Church.

LAWSON, Benton H., farmer, Neoga Township, Cumberland County, Ill., was born in Coles County April 26, 1851, the son of Thomas F. and America (Wortham) Lawson, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County in 1845. Both are now deceased. Mr. Lawson attended the public schools near his home, is a graduate of Terre Haute Business College, and passed his youth on the home farm in Paradise Township. He has always been interested in agricultural matters and has accumulated 420 acres of land, 160 of which are in Paradise Township. His residence is across the county line in Cumberland County.

On October 28, 1875, Mr. Lawson was married to Mary C., daughter of John and Mary Kelly, of Indiana, and of this union eight children have been born, five of whom are living: John F., Lucy A., Charley W., Fred K. and Lola B. In his political affiliations Mr. Lawson is a Republican. He has served as Collector for three terms, as Highway Commissioner one term, and is at present (1905) acting as Drainage Commissioner. Mr. Lawson belongs to the Masonic order, attending the Blue Lodge at Etna, and the Chapter at Neoga. He also belongs to the Odd Fellows' fraternity.

LEE, Charles L., publisher of the "Charleston Courier," Charleston, Coles County, Ill., was born in that town November 8, 1860, the son of Jonathan and Mary A. (Strode) Lee, the former a native of Kokomo, Ind., and the latter of Lancaster, Ohio. At the age of eight years he went out on a farm with his parents, who moved back to Charleston when he was thirteen years old. Afterwards, he attended the public schools, working during vacations on the farm for a period of three years. Then he was employed for two years at the blacksmith's trade with his father. At the age of eighteen years, he learned telegraphy, which he followed for an equal period. At the end of this period he bought a small newsstand in the postoffice lobby in Charleston. After eleven months had elapsed, he moved into larger quarters and added to his outfit an ice cream parlor. A few months later, he moved into still larger quarters and opened a restaurant and bakery. He learned the baker's trade, took charge of the work within five months, and the firm of Lee Brothers did a very prosperous business. In February, 1883, Mr. Lee moved to Terre Haute, Ind., where he spent a year in the same business. In May, 1884, he went to Streator, Ill., and there built up a flourishing trade, but lost heavily by fire, on February 8, 1889. In May of that latter year, he went to Chicago, and bought a restaurant, which he sold in May, 1890. He then opened another restaurant and bakery in another part of the city. During the World's Columbian Exposition he was very prosperous in this venture, but sold out October 16, 1893, just before the termination of the Exposition, and returned to Charleston.

On January 1, 1894, Mr. Lee purchased a half interest in the "Charleston Weekly Courier." He started a daily edition on June 6, of the same year, and on December 16, 1894, became the sole owner of the paper, and has since conducted the business alone. For ten years Mr. Lee has been a Director in the Coles County Building and Loan Association, and in May, 1902, was elected Secretary of that organization.

On November 8, 1882, Mr. Lee was united in marriage with Mary L. Laws, who was born and schooled in Westfield, Ill. Politically Mr. Lee is a Democrat, and has served two terms as a member of the City Council of Charleston. Fraternally he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., I. O. O. F. and B. P. O. E.

LEHMAN, Hon. Lewis L., President First National Bank, Mattoon, was born at Bruschal-Baden, Germany, August 13, 1845. Mr. Lehman came to Newark, N. J., in 1858, and moved to Henry, Ill., in 1861. On August 11, 1862, at Peoria, he enlisted in Company B, Eighty-sixth Volunteer Infantry; at Chickamauga, on September 19, 1863, he was captured, and afterward confined in the Rebel prisons at Richmond and Danville, Va., and Andersonville, Ga., until March, 1865. He was mustered out in August of that same year, returning to Henry and came to Mattoon to reside in 1875.

On December 12, 1888, Mr. Lehman was married to Ella M. Granger, of Mattoon, and of this union two children have been born: Marion and Louis Harry, sixteen and ten years old, respectively. In his political views Mr. Lehman is a Republican; in 1888 he was elected State Senator for Coles, Douglas and Cumberland Counties, serving four years. He was a member of the City Council for ten years; was President of the Mattoon National Bank from 1880 to 1888, and has been President of the First National Bank since January, 1894.

Mr. Lehman has held several honorary positions, such as President of the Board of Education; President of the Library Board; member of the County Board, having been Chairman of the same, and served as Clerk of the Circuit Court of Marshall County, Ill., from 1868 to 1872. In October, 1903, he was appointed by Gov. Deneen a Trustee of the University of Illinois, vice Congressman William L. McKinley, of Champaign, who had resigned.

LINDER, Elisha (deceased), was born in Hardin County, Ky., August 16, 1807, the son of ELISHA LINDER.

Isaac and Nancy (Richardson) Linder, grandson of Daniel and Rebecca (Van Meter) Linder, and great-grandson of Lawrence Linder—the latter being one of the three brothers who came to America from Germany at a very early age. Isaac Linder, the father, died when Elisha was but seven years of age, and from that hour the lad seemed to feel that the support of the family fell upon him. He learned the trade of brick-laying while in Kentucky, and when, in January, 1831, he came to Illinois and purchased forty acres of uncultivated land, he was able to erect his own log cabin in which he lived for the greater part of that year. He raised a crop and then returned to the South for his mother and the family for whom he had made the new home. At times he worked at his trade, but becoming interested in farming and stock-raising, he found it more profitable to devote most of his attention to the latter, in which his success became so great that he finally became the owner of 2,000 acres of land. He was one of the three men who owned the original site of Mattoon, the east side of the town being platted on his land.

On April 16, 1837, Mr. Linder was married to Rebecca, daughter of John and Hannah (Radley) Sawyer, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County in 1828, and of this union fourteen children were born: Mary, Daniel, Martha, Nancy, John, Rebecca, Lillie, Louisiana, Flora, Sarah, Sidney, Isaac, Minta and Elizabeth. Although never taking an active interest in politics, Mr. Linder was at heart a Republican. His death occurred October 7, 1899. His widow survives, residing upon the old homestead.

LINDER, Isaac V., farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, was born in the locality which is his present home, viz.: four miles southwest of Mattoon. He is the son of Elisha and Rebecca (Sawyer) Linder, natives of Hardin County, Ky. He acquired his education in the district schools near his home, and at an early age became associated with his father in his extensive agricultural interests, this relationship being continued until the death of his father in 1899, since which time he has been engaged on his own farm of 200 acres. On December 5, 1883, Mr. Linder was married to Sarah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Brotherton, of Mattoon, and of this union two children have been born: a son, who died in infancy, and a daughter, Irma.

In his political views Mr. Linder is a Republican. He has always taken an active interest in elections, seeking the nomination and election of worthy candidates. He has not been a seeker for office himself, although for a short time he held the office of School Director, and from 1881 to 1884 was a member of the County Board of Supervisors for the town of Mattoon. He was elected Supervisor for a second term in 1899, and re-elected in 1901, resigning just before the expiration of his term in 1902 on account of the serious illness of his wife. During his term as Supervisor many important measures were before the County Board, and he was prominent and active in opposing all schemes of extravagance and advocating measures of prudence and economy in the affairs of the county.

Mr. Linder's relations with his father were close and affectionate, and the death of the latter was a sad blow to the son. They had for many years been partners in farm and stock operations, and Isaac was made the executor of his father's will. He is a member of the Little Wabash Methodist Episcopal Church, and was for nine years Superintendent of its Sunday School and a Trustee of the church for nearly twice that length of time. Mr. Linder lives in a beautiful home, which he built upon his farm just west of Mattoon, and takes pride in keeping his grounds and the whole farm in splendid condition.

LINDER, John O., grain and stock-dealer, Loxa, Coles County, was born on the old Linder homestead in Charleston, Ill., September 11, 1868, the son of George W. and Mary (Cassel) Linder, natives of Indiana and Coles County, respectively. Mr. Linder was educated in the schools near his home, and remained with his parents until 1897, when he moved to Loxa and went into the grain business. Later he built an elevator made necessary by his growing trade. He owns thirty acres of land near Loxa and farms on a small scale; also buys feed and ships considerable live stock.

On March 27, 1890, Mr. Linder was married to Margaret, daughter of Jacob K. and Sally A. (Fowler) Cottingham, of Charleston, and of this union one child has been born, Lucille. In his political views Mr. Linder is a Republican. He is a member of the B. P. O. E. at Charleston.

LINDER, Mrs. Rachel A., Charleston, Ill., was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, July 7, 1837, the daughter of John and Henrietta McIntyre, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia. John McIntyre, the father, now deceased, was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1800, the son of Alexander and Elizabeth (McBride) McIntyre, being the fifth in a family of seven children. He received a good education for that day, and then moved to Ohio and began farming. He was married in Lancaster, Fairfield County, to Henrietta Hedges, and there died in 1843. His widow came to Coles County in 1857, and with her children settled on a farm in Seven Hickory Township. Mrs. McIntyre, who was born in 1810, is yet living (1905) at the age of ninety-five years. She is the owner of an eighty-acre farm, but since 1877 has made her home with a daughter, moving in 1882 to Charleston. In 1882, leaving a tenant upon the farm they removed to Charleston. She is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Of her children, Jemima (deceased in 1864) became the wife of George Whitsel; Truman (deceased in 1873) was a farmer; John (deceased in 1864) was likewise an agriculturist; and Rachel Ann is now the widow of Jacob Linder.

Jacob Linder, the husband of the subject of this sketch, was born January 6, 1836, and died June 7, 1887. Mr. and Mrs. Linder were married in Charleston Township, May 31, 1860, and five children were born in this home, four of whom died in infancy, the surviving child being Minnie, wife of J. F. Clark, of Danville, Ill. Mrs. Rachel Linder owns two farms in Coles County, but resides in Charleston, where the aged mother, Mrs. McIntyre, makes her home with her.

LIPPINCOTT, George W., broom-corn broker, Charleston, Ill., was born in Champaign County, Ohio, June 9, 1848, the son of Samuel and Rachel (Johnson) Lippincott, natives of Ohio. The father was a farmer and stockman, who came with his family across the country by wagon at an early date settling in Morgan Township, Coles County, in the fall of 1853. Here he continued his agricultural labors until the time of his death, March 28, 1894. His wife's decease occurred March 26, 1895. George W. Lippincott attended the district schools near his home in Morgan Township. He remained on his father's farm until his twenty-fifth year. In 1873 he purchased land in Morgan Township. This, together with other lands, and the old homestead, which yet belongs to him, makes an aggregate of 355 acres.

On October 4, 1873, Mr. Lippincott was married to Mary E., daughter of Rev. G. W. Montgomery, of Morgan Township, and to this union seven children have been born: Rhodolph P., a Presbyterian minister, who graduated from Washington and Jefferson College, at Washington, Pa., also from the Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa.; Charles A., a farmer; Emma, wife of Dr. R. H. Craig; Jessie, wife of Frank H. Craig; Ruth, wife of Burt F. Goldman; John T., a grocer; Mary, at home.

In his political views Mr. Lippincott is a Republican, and is usually a delegate to Congressional or Judicial conventions. For two years previous to his taking up his permanent abode in Charleston, in 1899, he resided in Urbana, Ill., so that his children, who were attending school there, might have a home. He engaged in the broom corn brokerage business in 1900, in partnership with Mr. Newt. Walden, the firm being known as Lippincott & Walden. In 1902 the partnership was dissolved, and his son John T. became a member of the firm. Mr. Lippincott is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

LORD, Livingston C., President of the Western State Normal School, Charleston, Ill., was born in Killingworth, Conn., August 27, 1851, the son of Benjamin and Antoinette Lord, natives of Connecticut. In boyhood Mr. Lord attended the public schools near his home, and was graduated from a Connecticut State Normal. He engaged in teaching in his native State until 1874, when he removed to Minnesota, where, for eleven years, he acted in the capacity of President of the Minnesota State Normal School at Moorhead.

In 1874 Mr. Lord was united in marriage to Mary E. Cook, and of this union three children were born: Ethelyn, Frank and Inez. In July, 1899, Mr. Lord came to Charleston as President of the Eastern Illinois Normal School, and is at present (1905) acting in that capacity.

In his political affiliations Mr. Lord is a Republican. During 1903-05 he was President of the Illinois Schoolmasters' Club. He is a member of the Congregational Church.

LOUDERMILT, S. J., builder and contractor, Charleston, Ill., was born in West Virginia July 2, 1848, the son of Jacob and Julia (Meadows) Loudermilt, natives of Germany and Scotland, respectively, who emigrated to Lewis County Mo., in 1850, where the father carried on an extensive business as farmer and miller. Here both parents died.

S. J. Loudermilt was educated in the public schools, and worked on his father's farm, but after the decease of his parents, he moved, in 1864, to Douglas County, Ill., where he made his home with a maternal uncle, Alexander Meadows, a carpenter and builder. Here the young man learned his trade. In 1865 he enlisted in Company A, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered out at Raleigh, N. C., and discharged at Chicago. He settled in Charleston in 1881, and started in business as a master builder. Since that time he has built many of the best houses in the city. It is seldom that less than sixteen men are to be found in his employ during the summer, and from four to five are kept busy in the winter months. His planing mill and shops are located on North Sixth Street, and his fine residence is on the corner of First and Polk Streets.

On March 7, 1872, Mr. Loudermilt was married to Nancy C. Frame, daughter of John and Elizabeth Frame, of Douglas County, Ill., and of this union two children have been born: Cora, wife of Warren Edmond, and Ora, wife of Harry Denton. In his political views Mr. Loudermilt is a Republican. He is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. Loudermilt and wife attend the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she is a member.

LOWE, Francis M., merchant and grain dealer, Etma, Paradise Township, was born in Jasper County, Ill., December 21, 1861, the son of Addison and Rebecca Lowe, natives of South Carolina, who came to Illinois in 1850, locating in Coles County about five years later. The father is deceased, but the mother is yet living. Mr. Lowe spent his life upon the farm until 1892, at which time he engaged in mercantile pursuits at Etma. He owns eighty acres of land in Paradise Township, and is interested in grain dealings to a certain extent.

Mr. Lowe was united in marriage to Ida, daughter of Harry and Ailey Huntington, of Coles County, and to them were born five children, one of whom is deceased. Those living, are: Harry F., Essie, Edna R. and Julia. Mr. Lowe is affiliated with the Republican party and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

LUMPKIN, Iversen Allen, D. D. S., a skillful and prosperous dentist of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., who enjoys a large patronage, including the best element in the city, and financially, one of its substantial citizens, was born in Miller County, Mo., June 30, 1843, the son of John and Elizabeth Lumpkin, natives of Virginia, where the former was born in Buckingham County. The paternal grandfather was Moore Lumpkin.

In early youth Dr. Lumpkin received his mental training in the public schools of Missouri, and began the practice of dentistry in Shelbyville, Ill., in 1863, where he had a long and successful career. In 1885 he moved to Mattoon, where he has since practiced his profession with equal success. Associated with him in this work is his son, Dr. William C. Lumpkin, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Their offices are located in the Lumpkin Building erected in 1901. Dr. Lumpkin and his son are the organizers of the Mattoon Telephone Company, and the Coles County Telephone Company, the latter of which was organized in 1894, and the first in 1897.

On December 24, 1867, Dr. Lumpkin was joined in wedlock with Margaret Cutler, who was born in Shelbyville, Ill., where she received her early mental culture. One child was the issue of this union, William C. In matters of politics Dr. Lumpkin is a firm and influential Democrat, and served one term as a member of the Democratic State Central Committee. Fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., belonging to the Blue Lodge, Chapter, Council, Commandery and Eastern Star. He is also identified with the K. of P. and the B. P. O. E.

LUMPKIN, William Cutler, D. D. S., who is successfully engaged in the practice of dentistry in Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in Shelbyville, Ill., March 24, 1872, the son of Dr. Iverson A. Lumpkin (a sketch of whose life appears elsewhere in this volume) and Margaret Lumpkin, the former born in Miller County, Mo., and the latter in Shelbyville, Ill. The paternal grandparents, John and Elizabeth (Cutler) Lumpkin, were natives of Virginia. The grandparents on the mother's side were James and Margaret Cutler.

In youth the subject of this sketch attended the common schools, after which he was a pupil of the Mattoon High School, and pursued his professional course of study in the Chicago College of Dental Surgery, from which he was graduated in March, 1892. Since that period, he has been associated with his father in the practice of dentistry in Mattoon. Their offices are in the Lumpkin Building, erected in 1901. The Lumpkins, father and son, organized the Mattoon Telephone Company and the Coles County Telephone Company, the former in 1894, and the latter in 1897.

On October 16, 1895, Dr. Lumpkin was united in marriage with Bessie Adamson, who was born in Covington, Ind., and received her education in the Mattoon High School and Science Hill Seminary at Shelbyville, Ky. One child, Richard, has been the result of this union. Politically Dr. Lumpkin is a supporter of the Democratic party. Fraternally he is identified with Lodge No. 260, A. F. & A. M., and is also affiliated with the K. of P. and the B. P. O. E. Dr. Lumpkin is highly regarded in Mattoon, and bears the reputation of a very proficient and successful dentist.

MARSHALL, John H., attorney, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston, Ill., January 13, 1864, the son of Col. Thomas A. and Ellen I. (Miles) Marshall, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Marshall graduated from the city High School, and then for three years attended the University of Illinois, at Champaign, after which he went one year to the University of Pennsylvania, registering in the Law Department. He was admitted to the Bar in 1887, and has ever since devoted his attention to the practice of his profession.

On December 12, 1889, Mr. Marshall was married to Minta Linder, of Mattoon, and of this union one son was born: Thomas Linder. In his political views Mr. Marshall is a Republican. He was elected State's Attorney in 1888 and re-elected in 1892. In May, 1901, he was appointed resident Trustee of the Eastern Illinois State Normal School, a position which he still holds.

Mr. Marshall belongs to the Masonic order and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MARTIN, Alexander T., farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, was born on the farm and in the house in which he now lives April 3, 1844, the son of John and Martha (Cassidy) Martin, natives of Tennessee and Kentucky, respectively. His parents came to Coles County in 1830 and here the father died in 1875. The mother is yet living at the age of 84. The son was educated in the district schools of his township, and remained on the homestead with his parents until starting out in life for himself. He often says he "began farming at the age of seven and has been at it ever since." He owns at present thirty acres, while 103 acres belong to the family. Mr. Martin says his father and himself hauled from Charleston the first shingles put on a store house in Mattoon.

In February, 1870, Mr. Martin was united in marriage to Maggie Wells, and they had three children: Minnie, Lena May and Herbert. Mrs. Martin died in 1878 and in 1886 Mr. Martin married Mary E. Miller, and of this union have been born four children: Albert, Idella, Charles W. and Helen L.

In his political views Mr. Martin is a Democrat.

MARTIN, C. W., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in the same locality October 17, 1862, the son of David and Sarah A. Martin, who were pioneer settlers of Coles County. The father died March 10, 1904; his widow survives and resides on the old homestead. Mr. Martin has always felt an interest in agricultural matters, and since completing his education has spent most of his time in raising stock and in general farming operations. He owns at present 134½ acres of land in Hutton Township.

On March 19, 1890, he was married to Clara, daughter of Abram and Nancy Stairwalt, and of this union four children have been born: Ray, Claude, Maude and Vivian. In his political affiliations Mr. Martin is a Democrat, and he and his wife are members of the Separate Baptist Church.

MARTIN, Henry W., retired farmer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Coles County May 3, 1835, the son of John M. and Susan Martin, natives of Tennessee, who located in Coles County in the early 'twenties. Brought up on a farm, Mr. Martin has continued to follow the same occupation for most of his life, now owning 346 acres in North Okaw Township, besides valuable property in Mattoon. At one time Mr. Martin resided in Texas, and here he was conscripted into the Confederate Army, serving until the close of the war. He had two brothers serving in the Union Army and two others who joined the Confederate forces.

On September 1, 1859, Mr. Martin was married to Susannah, daughter of Reason T. and Nancy Atlerburg, of Kentucky originally, but also early settlers of Macoupin County, Ill. Four children have blessed this union, of whom only his son, John J., is now living, his daughter, Cora B., having died during the past year. Mr. Martin is affiliated with the Democratic party, and he and his wife are members of the Baptist Church at Zoar, Fuller's Point.

MARTIN, John, grocer, Mattoon, was born May 21, 1850, in Wurttemberg, Germany, the son of Antone Martin, a native of the same province. Emigrating to America in 1869, he located a year later in Mattoon, Ill., and for more than two decades was in the employ of the Big Four and the Peoria, Decatur & Eastern Railroads. For the past ten years, however, he has been engaged in the grocery business in Mattoon, in which he has been successful and is now the owner of valuable property within the city limits.

On May 18, 1882, Mr. Martin was married to Clara, daughter of Mrs. Katherine Schmutge, of Mattoon. Four children have been born to them, of whom three are now living: Marie M., Katie V. and Carl A. Mr. Martin belongs to the Democratic party and is a member of the German Lutheran Church.

MAXWELL, Benjamin R., architect, Charleston, Ill., was born in Coshocton County, Ohio, June 22, 1848, the son of Sylvester and Susan (Ricketts) Maxwell. The father was a carpenter by trade and settled in Charleston in 1859, where he plied his trade until 1871, when he retired. His death occurred August 19, 1876. He and his wife were the parents of five children: Emma, wife of G. L. Catlin; Benjamin R., Luther, Alice, wife of S. R. McVey, and Melvina. Benjamin R. Maxwell acquired his education in the Ohio schools and learned his trade of carpentry and architecture with H. V. Freeman, of Charleston. Then he worked as a journeyman, spending two years in the State of Kansas. Two years afterward he was foreman in a Terre Haute shop. In the spring of 1875 he came back to Charleston and entered into partnership with G. L. Catlin under the firm name of Catlin & Maxwell, this relationship continuing for fifteen years. In 1880 the firm dissolved partnership, since which time Mr. Maxwell has erected the Court House, the Normal School, High School, Briggs Block and many of the finest residences in the city of Charleston.

On March 21, 1875, Mr. Maxwell was married to Mary C., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samvel Mitchell, early settlers of Coles County, and of this union six children have been born: Myrtle, wife of J. R. Blair, merchant at Brocton, Edgar County; Arthur, Wymer, Ethel, Zina and Carlos. All of their children have received the advantages of a good education, four being graduates of the High School. In his political views Mr. Maxwell is a Democrat. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen and to the Odd Fellows fraternities, and is a member of the Baptist Church.

MAUZY, John H., retired, Oakland, Coles County, Ill., was born in Preble County, Ohio, November 30, 1840, the son of Joseph H. and Margaret (Christler) Mauzy, both of whom were born in the same county as their son. In 1868 they removed to Christian County, Ill., but are both now deceased. Young Mr. Mauzy remained with his parents on the farm until August, 1862, when he enlisted in Company C, Fiftieth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving until mustered out on April 11, 1865, when he located in Decatur, Ill., and later held the office of Sheriff of Macon County for a period of four years. In 1893 he removed to Oakland, where he purchased fifty acres within the city limits, and on this land he is making a specialty of raising fine hogs.

On October 20, 1870, Mr. Mauzy was united in marriage to Hattie, daughter of Isaac O. and Rachel (Nester) Virden, and to them was born one son, Joseph Q., who was married October 25, 1894, to Iva O. Smith. They now have two children: John Conway and Ray Clifford. Mr. John H. Mauzy is a Republican, belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a member of the Christian Church.

McCLELLAND, James H., farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Fairfield County, Ohio, December 13, 1834, the son of Alexander and Minerva (Spangler) McClelland, natives of Ohio. The father died at the age of seventy-seven years on the farm upon which he was born. He and his wife were the parents of six children, five boys and one girl.

James H. McClelland, who was the second son, received his education in the common schools, and worked on the farm at home. In March, 1857, he came to Coles County, bringing with him a team of horses, and was thus enabled at once to engage in farming operations. On September 6, 1862, Mr. McClelland enlisted in Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Mounted Infantry, serving for three years. He took part in the battles of Perryville, Ky., Chickamauga, Breed's Hill and Selma, Ala., Milton, Tenn., and in all the battles from Chattanooga to Atlanta. He was in the Army of the Cumberland, James Monroe being his Colonel. His last hard battle was fought at Selma. Entering the army as Sergeant, he ended with the title of First Lieutenant. He received his discharge July 13, 1865, at Camp Butler, near Springfield, Ill.

On February 3, 1859, Mr. McClelland was married to Zelda, daughter of William and Mary Hedges, who came from Ohio to Coles County in 1856. The couple were schoolmates in their early days. Of this union nine children were born, of whom four died in infancy. Those living are: Salem W. and Willis W., of Terre Haute, Ind.; Jessie B., Mary L. and Bertha B., who is the wife of Joseph E. Pape, of Mattoon.

Mr. McClelland owns an eighty-acre farm in Charleston Township, which is rented to a tenant. His fine residence is standing on two acres of ground on South Tenth Street, Charleston. In his political views Mr. McClelland is a Republican. In 1880 he was elected Recorder and Circuit Clerk of Coles County for four years. In 1886 he was elected Sheriff, acting for four years in this capacity. He has also been Assessor and Supervisor, and for ten years has been Pension Attorney. He is a charter member of the Grand Army of the Republic, Post No. 271, having been Commander of the Post for five years, and Secretary of the order for the past four. He likewise has belonged to Kickapoo Lodge, No. 90, of Charleston, for twenty-three years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

McCONKEY, Major G. W., veteran of two wars and Justice of the Peace, Oakland, Ill., was born in Washington County, Va., April 18, 1820, the son of John S. and Harriet McConkey, natives of Virginia, who came to Paris, Ill., in 1828. His youth was spent in Edgar County, and there his education was received. For a number of years he was employed on the Wabash, Ohio and Mississippi rivers in the capacity of boatman a part of the time and farming the balance.

In June, 1846, Mr. McConkey enlisted at Paris, Ill., in Company H, Fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry for the war against Mexico. His regiment was landed at the mouth of the Rio Grande, and under the command of Gen. Zachary Taylor fought its way up the Rio Grande as far as Camargo. From there it marched under the command of Gen. Patterson to victory at the foot of the mountains, and thence to Tampico, where it joined Gen. Scott on his way to Vera Cruz and was among the first troops to land there. After the capture of Vera Cruz it fought at Cerro Gordo, and on the road to the City of Mexico as far as the Castle of Perote, when, the period of enlistment of the regiment having expired, it was sent home, and he was mustered out in June, 1847.

In August, 1861, Maj. McConkey organized Company E, Fifth Illinois Cavalry, for service in the army of the Union, and was under the command of Gen. Curtis through Missouri and Arkansas to Helena, in the latter State. In May, 1863, he took part under Gen. Grant in the siege of Vicksburg, and after the fall of that place was under the command of McPherson, Sherman, Custer and others, being mustered out with his regiment October 27, 1865.

On October 11, 1849, Mr. McConkey was married to Louisa R., a daughter of Samuel and Ruth Ashmore, of Oakland, Ill., and of this union nine children were born, of whom four are deceased and five living.

In his political affiliations Mr. McConkey was a Democrat until 1860, when he allied himself with the Republican party, with which he has been identified ever since. He served as First Supervisor of Oakland Township, has been Collector for two years, Assessor for three years, a Justice of the Peace twenty years and, under President Buchanan, was Postmaster for four years.

He is Commander of Oakland Post No. 188, G. A. R., and he and his wife are members of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, with which he has been connected for forty years.

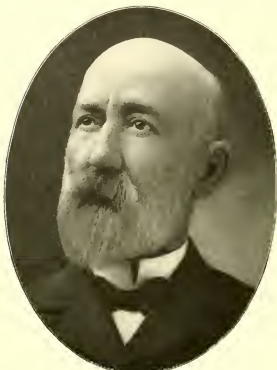

McCONNELL, William, merchant and farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Belfast, Ireland, in 1832, the son of Robert and Helen (Greer) McConnell, natives of Ireland, where the father died. When he was but fourteen years old, young McConnell accompanied his mother to America. For several years they resided in Guernsey County, Ohio. In 1860 Mr. McConnell came to Charleston and opened a meat market, acquiring in the purchase of cattle, in which business he continued for several years, a very successful trade. Being industrious and saving, he soon purchased a fine 200-acre farm in Hutton Township. This property is operated by a tenant. He bought his present home in Charleston in 1898.

On November 6, 1864, Mr. McConnell was married to Sarah, daughter of William and Harriet Crouch of Baltimore, Md., and of this union seven children have been born: Maggie, wife of M. Ingram; John, a farmer; Nan, the wife of George Heistand; Belle, former wife of R. Brown; Mary, wife of W. O. Carter, Mansfield, Ohio; Minnie, wife of Dr. M. W. Bisson, Abingdon, Ill., and William, of Terre Haute, Ind. In his political views Mr. McConnell is a Democrat.

McCRORY, William E., President of the First National Bank, Charleston, Ill., was born in Cynthiana, Ky., March 20, 1839, the son of James and Mary E. McCrory, natives of Kentucky. In 1837 the father came to Coles County, Ill., and for two years was engaged in mercantile pursuits, for a part of this period serving as Postmaster at Charleston. In 1839 he returned to Kentucky, but in 1850 brought his family with him and established a home in Charleston, where he spent the remainder of his life. Among other offices which he held was that of County Clerk, from 1852 to 1860.

The subject of this sketch received his education in Charleston, and in 1856 entered the Farmers' and Traders' Bank as its cashier. This office he held for six years. In company with Dr. Trower, John Monroe, T. G. Chambers and Robert M. Parcels, he organized the Coles County Bank, serving as its cashier until 1868, when the controlling interest in the First National was purchased, and he was made cashier of the latter institution until 1890, at that time becoming its President, a position which he yet retains.

WILLIAM E. MCCRORY.

On March 20, 1860, Mr. McCrory was married to Catherine R., daughter of John F. and Harriet (Miller) Parcels, and granddaughter of Stephen Miller, one of Coles County's early settlers. Mr. and Mrs. McCrory are the parents of two children: W. P., of St. Louis, and Adele, deceased. In his political affiliations Mr. McCrory is a Democrat.

MCDONALD, Newell S., Deputy Circuit Clerk, Charleston, Ill., was born in Pleasant Grove Township August 1, 1849, the son of Rev. John and Nancy (Means) McDonald.

Rev. John McDonald was born near Wheeling, W. Va., in 1797, but early removed to the State of Ohio, where he studied theology as it was taught in that day, and was later ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church. In 1830 he came as a pioneer minister to Illinois. The places of worship were then nothing more than log cabins and school houses, while during the warm days of summer the groves were often turned into temples of praise. He entered land in Pleasant Grove Township, and there provided a home for his family. He was a pronounced Abolitionist, both in belief and practice, and many of his sermons were largely devoted to maintaining that principle. He was a diligent worker in the cause of Christ, and many churches owed their existence to him. He won the esteem of all who knew him. He died in 1866 at the age of sixty-nine years.

Rev. Mr. McDonald's wife, Mrs. Nancy (Means) McDonald, was born in Adams County, Ohio, and came with her parents at an early day to Illinois, settling near Paris, Edgar County. Her marriage was performed in Edgar County. Her death occurred in 1880, when she was sixty-seven years of age. Rev. and Mrs. McDonald were the parents of thirteen children, nine of whom lived to reach mature years.

Newell S. McDonald, who was the ninth child of this family, received his education in the public schools of Illinois, at Lee's Academy and Indian Point. In 1869 he began to work for the Wabash Railroad at Attica, Ind. Here he remained for five years. He then returned to Coles County, where he began farming and handling grain. He yet owns a farm of 160 acres, although other affairs occupy his time and attention, and he resides in Charleston. For ten years his brother, J. T. McDonald, and himself conducted a tile factory in Pleasant Grove Township.

On December 23, 1871, Mr. McDonald was married to Mattie, daughter of Calvin and Abigail Love, of Peru, Ind., and of this union six children were born, of whom four are living: Nellie, wife of Lewis Chancey; Louis, who graduated in 1904 from the Eastern Illinois Normal School and is now in Y. M. C. A. work at Elgin, Ill.; Alice, also a graduate of the Normal School, and now engaged in teaching at Anderson, Ind., and Mary, a student at the Normal. In his political views Mr. McDonald is a Republican, and generally attends as a delegate all County and State Conventions. In 1889 he was appointed Deputy County Clerk; in 1893 he was made Deputy County Treasurer. He has served as Supervisor a number of terms, as Town Clerk, Clerk of the County Board and Board of Review, and in 1903 was given his present position of Deputy Circuit Clerk. Mr. McDonald belongs to the Masons (Royal Arch Chapter of Mattoon, No. 85); the Modern Woodmen, Knights of Pythias, and Ben Hur fraternities. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

McGREGOR, William, farmer, Morgan Township, Coles County, was born in Scotland March 3, 1839, the son of Alexander and Margaret McGregor, who emigrated to America and settled in Coles County in 1842. Mr. McGregor received his education in America, and early showed an aptitude for the life of a farmer. In September, 1862, he enlisted in Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with which he served until discharged, in 1863.

On February 16, 1865, Mr. McGregor was married to Phebe J., daughter of Robert Galbreath, of Indiana, and to them three children were born, one of whom is living, viz.: Alva N., who married Nancy L. Stiff, and has one son, Walter Cecil. Mrs. McGregor died on February 3, 1880. In his political views Mr. McGregor is a Republican, and is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

McGURTY, J. E., business man, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston in 1859, the son of Owen and Catherine (McMahan) McGurty, who came to Coles County in 1856, where the father owned considerable land in Seven Hickory Township. Both parents are deceased, the father's death occurring in 1895 and the mother's in 1901. J. E. McGurty was educated in the public schools, and remained on his father's farm until 1886. He then went to California, where he remained one year, when he returned to Charleston, and for one year was in the employ of Fuller Brothers. In 1889 he entered the liquor business, being for a short time the owner of the Charleston Hotel.

In 1859 Mr. McGurty was married to Maggie, daughter of Edward and Mary Dougherty, early settlers of Illinois. In his political views Mr. McGurty is a Democrat. He has served as City Alderman for four years, for twenty years has been a member of the Catholic Knights of Illinois and belongs to the Catholic Church.

McNUTT, John, Jr., lawyer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., in 1872, the son of John and Camelia (Wells) McNutt. The subject of this sketch graduated from the State University at Champaign in 1894, and then, deciding to practice law, he took a course at the Northwestern College of Law, graduating from that institution in 1895. The following year he began his profession in Mattoon. He was elected City Attorney in 1899, serving for two years in this capacity. On December 31, 1901, Mr. McNutt was united in marriage to Clementine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eichhorn, of Delaware, Ohio.

In his political views Mr. McNutt is affiliated with the Republican party. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, to the Knights of Pythias and to the Elks fraternities.

McPHERON, Charley A., blacksmith, Loxa, Ill., was born in Humboldt Township, Coles County, October 2, 1874, the son of Samuel B. and Mittie (Ashbrook) McPherson. In his youth Mr. McPherson was brought by his parents to Lafayette Township, Coles County, and there received his education. He then began to work upon a farm, which he continued until 1896, when he opened a blacksmith and general repair shop, which has continued to occupy his attention until the present time.

On April 22, 1896, Mr. McPherson was married to Minnie B., daughter of Hiram and Josephine Osborne, and of this union two children have been born: Earl and Marguerite. In his political affiliations Mr. McPherson is a Democrat. He is a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church at Loxa.

McPHERSON, 'Squire Henry, merchant, Trilla, Coles County, Ill., was born in Mooresville, Ind., January 21, 1846, the son of O. H. and Polly (Matthews) McPherson, of North Carolina and Indiana, respectively. The father is deceased, but the mother is yet living. Mr. McPherson's youth was spent on the home farm. When the Civil War broke out he enlisted in Company K, First Indiana Heavy Artillery, in which he served until January, 1866. Returning to Coles County in 1867, he began teaching school, and with this he alternated farming operations for a period of fifteen years.

He built the first house in the village of Trilla, and since he became a merchant there in 1882 he has been prominently connected with its growth and development.

On September 25, 1870, Mr. McPherson was united in marriage to Miss C. A. Fox, daughter of Nicholas and Margaret Fox, of North Carolina. The one child born of this union is now deceased. In his political views Mr. McPherson is a Republican, and for the past twenty-eight years he has held the office of Justice of the Peace, being still in that position at the present time. He was also the first Postmaster at Trilla. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and to the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a regular supporter of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

MENAUGH, John F., Cashier Oakland National Bank, Oakland Ill., was born in Brown County, Ohio, September 21, 1851, the son of William R. and Susan (Cochran) Menaugh, natives of Ohio. It was in the year 1876 that Mr. Menaugh came to Coles County, where he clerked in a general store until 1888, and for five years thereafter was engaged in the grocery business at Oakland. Since then he has been identified with the Oakland National Bank.

On September 21, 1892, Mr. Menaugh was united in marriage to Kate, daughter of Dr. Hiram and Harriet Rutherford, of Oakland. He is a Republican in his political views, is a member of the Masonic order and of the Modern Woodmen of America, and belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

MENKE, Francis M., the genial and popular proprietor of the New Park Hotel in Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in Paris, Edgar County, Ill., September 8, 1857, and received his mental training in the public schools of that town. He is a son of Peter L. and Margaret (Mitchell) Menke, the former born in Dayton, Ohio.

For thirteen years previous to engaging in his present occupation, Mr. Menke conducted a well-equipped restaurant, where he catered to the taste of a large patronage, and became generally known as a restaurateur of rare skill and tact. He possesses in a marked degree those characteristics so essential to a successful hotel-keeper, hearty good nature, suavity of manner and sound discretion. He assumed his present position July 15, 1905, and the new enterprise proved a success from its inception.

On January 3, 1885, Mr. Menke was wedded to Anna Sinsabaugh, who was born in Mattoon, where, in girlhood, she enjoyed the advantages of the public schools. This union has been the source of four children, namely: Earl, Leta, Harvey (deceased) and Marie.

As to religion, Mr. Menke accepts the creed of the Congregational Church; in politics is a Republican and prominent in the local councils of his party. In 1892 he was elected Mayor of Mattoon and gave the city a creditable administration. Fraternally Mr. Menke is identified with the B. P. O. E., K. of P. and Knights and Ladies of Honor.

MERRITT, W. D., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Russell County, Va., July 4, 1836, the son of Silas and Eliza Merritt, natives of Virginia, who moved to Kentucky at an early day, where the mother died. The father then went to Missouri, later locating in Charleston, Ill., where his decease occurred. W. D. Merritt came to Charleston in September, 1856, and for fourteen years thereafter was employed in the grocery business and in carpenter work. In 1870 he moved to his present home on his farm of 320 acres, and has since been engaged in agricultural pursuits.

On May 27, 1866, Mr. Merritt was married to Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Snyder, of New Albany, Ind., and of this union three children have been born: William Willard, a carpenter in Charleston; Alice, wife of George Lonthan, and Nellie, who was the wife of Thomas E. Snyder. Mr. and Mrs. Lonthan have two children, Opal and Irene. Nellie, who is deceased, left one daughter, Pearl. In his political views Mr. Merritt is a Democrat. He has served four years as Constable in Charleston and as Justice of the Peace in Hutton Township for the same period, and has also been Commissioner of Highways for six years.

Mr. Merritt belongs to Kickapoo Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Charleston, and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church at Charleston.

MESSER, Amos H., real estate dealer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Laconia, N. H., November 18, 1849, the son of Harrison and Mary G. (Gillman) Messer, natives of New Hampshire. Mr. Messer, the father, was well known in early days as the driver of the stage which made the trip from New Hampshire to the White Mountain resorts. Afterward he became a contractor and builder for the Boston, Concord & Montreal Railroad, as well as for lines in Ohio and likewise for the Terre Haute & Alton Road. He contracted for various bridges and did considerable work for William Mattoon, for whom the town of that name was called. After a useful life he was killed on the ninth of February, 1864.

Amos H. Messer came with his mother to Mattoon in 1859, and his education was gained in the public schools near his home. In 1862 the family located on a farm in Mattoon Township, where they remained until 1888, at which time they removed to Mattoon City. The old homestead, with its 400 acres of land, is still owned by the family.

On May 22, 1892, Mr. Messer was married to Sarah, daughter of Ben Flowers, who came from Washington County, Ohio, to Shelby County, Ill., in 1862. Mr. and Mrs. Messer are the parents of one son, Harrison, who is employed as a conductor by the Pullman Palace Car Company. Mr. Messer established a real estate business in 1900, and is interested in the firm of Messer & Flower in Mattoon. In his political views he is a Republican. In 1894 he was elected Sheriff by the largest majority of any office-holder in the county. In 1891 he was elected Alderman of Mattoon. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity, being now the only charter member connected with Palestine Lodge, which he joined in 1874. He belongs also to the Elks and to the Knights of Pythias orders.

He is a member of the Masonic fraternity at Etna, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MILES, Tarleton C. (deceased), was born in Frankfort, Ky., May 1, 1825, the son of James and Isabelle (Tarleton) Miles. The father was a physician and surgeon. Mr. Miles received his education in the public schools. He came to Coles County in 1848, settling near Charleston, and for a number of years was employed in farming, after which he engaged in mercantile pursuits in Charleston. Later he studied the veterinary course and began practice in this profession. In time he became known as one of the most skilled and notable horse surgeons in this country. He was sent for from Maine to California, and even on the European Continent and in Great Britain he exercised his skill. He made many friends and was the recipient of many handsome gifts in recognition of his skill and his many social qualities. His gifts included gold watches, chains, gold-headed canes, etc., all of which he prized because of their associations. He was familiarly styled "Farmer Miles" by his friends and associates. He had been an army officer, serving with distinction during the late Civil War. He wrote and published several important treatises on animal surgery, which are recognized as standard works on this subject today.

On October 3, 1848, Mr. Miles was married to Sophia Oden Van Deren, and of this union six children were born: Isaac J., William V., Martha, Ella (a teacher in the public schools of Charleston); Ida T., wife of Dr. Albert Gaiser, of Tecumseh, Neb.; Maye R. and Tarleton V., of Texas. Mr. Miles gave all his children good educations. In his political views he was a Republican, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His death occurred March 5, 1902, and that of his wife in 1885.

MILES, William V., veterinary surgeon, Charleston, was born in Charleston, Ill., October 9, 1857, the son of Tarleton Charles and Sophia Olive (Van Deren) Miles, a sketch of whose lives will be found on another page of this volume. Mr. Miles received his education in the common schools and is a graduate of the High School of Charleston. In 1884 he graduated from the College of Veterinary Surgeons, of Chicago, Ill., after which he began the practice of his profession, making his home in Charleston, and responding to calls in the city and surrounding territory. In this work he has been very successful. He also engages in farming operations to a considerable extent.

On June 12, 1889, Mr. Miles was married to Jennie, oldest daughter of Captain W. E. Adams, a soldier in the Civil War. Of this union two children have been born: Sophia Olive and Mary Barbara. In his political views Mr. Miles is a Republican and has been Assessor of Charleston Township for two years. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

MILLAR, W. Edwin, County Superintendent of Schools, Charleston, Ill., was born in Lafayette Township July 9, 1862, the son of Garrett V. and Mary (Knowles) Millar, natives of Virginia, who came to Coles County about 1853, settling in "Dead Man's Grove," Lafayette Township, where they were well known farmers, and where they continued to reside until 1896, when the family removed to Texas, locating near Dallas. Mr. Millar received his education in the public schools, with a later course at the State University at Champaign. He studied civil engineering and worked at this profession from 1886 to 1903.

On September 21, 1892, Mr. Millar was married to Carrie, daughter of J. B. and Elizabeth Zimmerman, of Oakland Township, and of this union one child is living, Julian Z. In his political affiliations Mr. Millar is a Democrat. He has always taken an active interest in educational affairs, and in the fall of 1902 was elected County Superintendent of Schools. He is a member of the Baptist Church.

MILLER, B. B., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in the same locality February 6, 1849, the son of B. B. and Elizabeth Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were natives of the same province in Germany. They came to America on the same vessel, went to Ohio, where they were united in marriage and where they resided for seven years previous to moving to Coles County. B. B. Miller, Jr., received his education in Hutton Township, remaining with his parents and assisting in the work upon the farm until 1870, when he branched out in life for himself. At present he owns twenty acres, besides which he has a quarter interest in the homestead of ninety-two acres, and operates 105 acres which is the property of his father-in-law.

On April 10, 1871, Mr. Miller was married to Angeline, daughter of C. R. Martin, and of this union four children have been born: Julia, wife of B. F. Wickham; Daisy, wife of John Anderson; Harmon, who married Lilly Alexander, and Edna, wife of Oscar Anderson. In his political affiliations Mr. Miller is a Democrat. He has served several terms as School Director and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church at Harrison.

Mr. Miller received his education in the public schools near his home, and in the Neoga High School, after which he taught for several terms in both Shelby and Cumberland Counties. In 1873 he moved to the State of Nebraska, in which, and in Colorado, he remained until 1890, at which time he returned to Mattoon. Since 1892 he has been custodian of the Dodge Grove Cemetery, and is also a member of the Association of American Superintendents.

On February 22, 1871, Mr. Miller was married to Martha, daughter of Abner and Angeline Wharton, natives of Ohio, and of this union six children were born, three of whom survive: Oscar C., Carrie G. and Frank C. In his political affiliations, Mr. Miller is a Republican. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America fraternity and is a member of the Methodist Church.

MINTER, Oscar L., proprietor of the Oakland (Ill.) "Messenger," Oakland, Coles County, Ill., was born in Hendricks County, Ind., April 12, 1863, the son of Richard T. and Jemima B. (Suitt) Minter, the former a native of Maysville, Ky., and the latter of the State of Ohio. The paternal grandfather was James Minter, and the grandfather on the mother's side was John Suitt, a native of Maryland. In early youth Mr. Minter attended the public schools, and afterwards became a pupil in Lee's Academy, at Loxa, Ill., where he completed his studies; subsequently engaged in teaching for eighteen years, when he became identified with journalism. The newspaper now owned and published by him was first called the "Ambraw Pilot," and was edited by Oscar J. Ricketts. Its title was afterwards changed to the "Oakland Eagle," under the editorship of Samuel Childers. The name was finally changed to the "Oakland Messenger," after which it was edited and published for a number of years by Rev. W. W. McIntosh, and later by McIntosh and McKinsey. In 1902 Mr. Minter bought the interest of Mr. McIntosh, and in 1904 that of Mr. McKinsey, becoming sole proprietor.

On June 12, 1895, Mr. Minter was united in marriage with Lurah Campbell, who was born in Ottumwa, Iowa, and received her mental culture in the United Brethren College, in Westfield, Ill. In politics, Mr. Minter is a Republican; is a member of the Presbyterian Church, and fraternally affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P. and M. W. A. orders. "The Messenger" is a sprightly, interesting and reliable paper, and has a good circulation in Coles County and vicinity.

MITCHELL, Charles D., architect, builder and contractor, Charleston, Ill., was born in Charleston July 17, 1863, the son of Samuel and Johanna (Luckenbill) Mitchell, both deceased. Charles D. was educated in the public schools of Charleston and then became an apprentice of Maxwell and Catlin, finishing his course in a correspondence school of Pennsylvania. Afterward he worked as a journeyman carpenter for a few years, but in 1892 established a permanent business. He has erected some of the best residences and buildings in Charleston, including the Public Library. His property is one of the most beautiful in town.

On December 21, 1883, Mr. Mitchell was married to Anna, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Nation, and of this union three children were born: Elizabeth A., Samuel A. and Charles, the last born, who is deceased. Mrs. Mitchell died in 1899. On June 16, 1891, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage to Flora E., daughter of Isaac and Lucinda Vaughn, of Vermont. Previous to her marriage Mrs. Mitchell was an instructor in the public schools of Charleston. In his political views Mr. Mitchell is a Republican. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen fraternity and also of the B. P. O. E.

MITCHELL, Charles R., dealer in grain, coal, hay and feed, Ashmore, Ill., was born two and one half miles northwest of Ashmore, Coles County, January 18, 1857, the son of William B. and Elizabeth (Zimmerman) Mitchell, natives of Owens County, Ind., and Augusta County, Va., respectively. He now resides in the village of Ashmore. His parents were married November 25, 1841, but both are now deceased, the mother's death occurring February 7, 1862, and the father's at Erie, Kan., April 6, 1886. With his father Mr. Mitchell went to Johnson County, Kan., in 1867; later both went to Erie, in the same State. In 1879 Mr. Mitchell returned alone to Ashmore, where he was variously employed until October, 1902, when he built his present grain elevator and embarked in a business which has grown very extensively. On December 25, 1883, he was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Josiah and Sarah Phelps, of Ashmore Township, and one child has been born of this union - Frankie.

In his political views Mr. Mitchell is a Republican, and he is now (1904) serving as President of the Village Board of Ashmore. He has been Assessor two terms, Collector for one term, and has served on the Board of Education. Fraternally he is a Mason, belonging to Blue Lodge and Chapter, and is also a Modern Woodman of America. Mr. Mitchell, his wife and daughter are members of the Presbyterian Church, in which he is also an elder.

MITCHELL, Isaac B., veteran of the Civil War, grocer and feed and seed dealer, Charleston, Ill., was born on the Mitchell farm one and a quarter miles east of Charleston, January 6, 1841, the son of James A. and Esther Mitchell, natives of Washington County, Tenn., who came to Coles County in 1833. The parents are both deceased, the father dying while on a visit to Tennessee in the year 1843. The mother died in Coles County in 1886.

Mr. Mitchell received his higher education at the old Charleston Academy, and in 1862 enlisted in Company C, Sixty-eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving his full term of enlistment. In June, 1864, he again enlisted, this time in Company A, One Hundred and Forty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry (100-days' regiment), receiving his discharge at the expiration of his term of enlistment. Returning to Coles County he engaged in teaching and in farming until 1868, when he entered the grocery business in partnership with his brother, A. C. Mitchell, whose interest in the business he purchased in 1875.

In December, 1866, Mr. Mitchell was united in marriage to Florida A. Miles, and to them have been born six children: John M. (deceased), who was a graduate of Wabash College, and who went to Beyrout, Syria, as a teacher in the Protestant College there, and who died abroad in 1899; Paul (deceased), Helen (deceased), Charles B., who is a partner with his father in the grocery and seed business; Richard R., an attorney at Denver, Colo., and Howard. Mr. Mitchell belongs to the Republican party in politics, and has served six years on the Board of Education and in the City Council for four years. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he has been an elder for several years.

MITCHELL, Richard Roberts, well-known attorney-at-law of Charleston, Coles County, Ill., and editor of the "Charleston Plaindealer-Herald," was born in Charleston, Ill., October 21, 1876, the son of Isaac B. and Florida A. (Miles) Mitchell, the former born in Charleston, Ill., and the latter in Franklin County, Ky. James A. and Margaret Esther (Collum) Mitchell, the paternal grandparents, were natives of Tennessee, Jonesboro, in that State, being the birthplace of the grandfather, as it was also of Elizabeth A. (Allison) Mitchell, the great-grandmother, whose husband, Robert Mitchell, was of Scotch nativity. On the maternal side the grandparents, John A. and Julia A. (Trotter) Miles, were Kentuckians, while John and Maria Asabel (Tarleton) Miles, the great-grandparents, were born respectively in South Carolina and Kentucky.

In boyhood the subject of this sketch attended the public schools of his native town, and at a later period took a course in the University of Michigan. In 1896 he commenced the study of law in Charleston, and in 1901 was admitted to the bar. He was chosen, at a special election held in April, 1899, Clerk of the Circuit Court for Coles County. This office he filled with ability, and to the satisfaction of his constituents. Some time after completing his term as Circuit Clerk, being possessed of an especial degree of literary talent and having an aptitude for newspaper work, he was offered the position of editor of the Charleston (Ill.) "Plaindealer-Herald," which he accepted in 1903. He is well informed on the topics of the day, and, being a facile, entertaining and instructive writer, has achieved signal success in this connection.

In politics Mr. Mitchell is a Republican of positive ideas, and is influential in the local councils of his party. His religious connection is with the Presbyterian Church. In fraternal circles he is identified with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P. and B. P. O. E. While still virtually little beyond the threshold of life, his accomplishments give ample assurance of an honorable and useful career.

MONTGOMERY, Alexander (deceased), was born near Huntsville, Ala., May 5, 1808, the son of Mr. and Mrs. James Montgomery. In the year 1827 the parents brought their family to Rockville, Ind., but two years later they came to Coles County, Ill., settling near Charleston, which place they left for a home in Lafayette Township. Here the son Alexander began life a poor man, but proved so successful in his vocation as a farmer that he became the owner of 700 acres of land. In 1871 he removed to Texas, but five years later returned with his family to Coles County, where he died March 24, 1877.

Mr. Montgomery was thrice married; first, to Margaret McCallister, by whom he had three children, two of whom are living, Eliza J. and Margaret. His second wife was Martha Ann Glass, who bore him one child, Elizabeth. The third wife, Mrs. Lucinda (Miller) Abbott, was a native of Kentucky, and of this union six children were born: Mary E., wife of C. P. Stiles of Texas; Leander E., who lives on the homestead; Martha M., on the home place; Robert D., William and Lewis Wanfield Benton, the last three being deceased. Mrs. Montgomery died about two months previous to her husband's decease.

MONTGOMERY, J. T., M. D., Charleston, was born in Greenfield, Dade County, Mo., October 18, 1852, the son of G. W. and Sarah A. (Rankin) Montgomery. The father, G. W. Montgomery, was a native of East Tennessee, of Scotch and Irish descent, and was born in July, 1824. He became a prominent Abolitionist and Federalist, and was a Cumberland Presbyterian minister. Mrs. Montgomery's parents were Welsh. In 1862 the family moved to Alton, Ill., but a year later went to Windsor, Shelby County, and in 1866 again removed to Oakland, Coles County. Rev. Montgomery preached for fifty years. In 1896 he settled in Charleston, where he retired from active labor in 1899. He and his wife were the parents of eleven children, four of the sons becoming Presbyterian ministers. Rev. Montgomery, Sr., died December 23, 1899. His widow yet survives (1905), residing in the city of Charleston.

DR. J. T. MONTGOMERY.

Dr. J. T. Montgomery attended school in Missouri and later in Alton, Windsor and Oakland, as well as at the old Normal College. Choosing medicine for his profession, he went to Chicago to enter upon his course of study, graduating from the Northwestern Medical College in 1876. He began practice in Oakland, Ill., later went to Burton, and, in 1882, came to Charleston. Here he organized and established the Charleston Sanatorium, which was opened in February, 1900. He was assisted in this undertaking for a time by Dr. Craig. Dr. Montgomery is a member of the Aesculapian Society of the Wabash Valley, and of the State Medical Association, and is also Surgeon for the Big Four and the International Railroads.

In October, 1876, Dr. Montgomery was married to Mary A. Gerard, of Hamilton, Ohio, and of this union five children were born—Emily, Mack G., Mary, John T. and George J. Mrs. Montgomery died in April, 1899. In October, 1902, Dr. Montgomery was united in marriage to Charlotte E. Wood, of Rockford, Ill., and they have one daughter, Charlotte. In his political views, Dr. Montgomery is a Republican, and has served as a member of the Board of Education for fifteen years. He is also on the Board of Pension Examiners, and a member of the Board of Agriculture. He belongs to the Masonic and Knights of Pythias fraternities, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

The Charleston Sanatorium.—On a six-acre lot, whose natural hill and wood have not been interfered with, rise the buildings erected by Dr. Montgomery for use as a Sanatorium. The large, well-ventilated rooms, the well-lighted hallways, high ceilings, the steam heat—in fact, all about this institution—suggest a peaceful, home-like atmosphere which must appeal to the rich of whatever school or system they may be a devotee. A thoroughly trained corps of nurses work under the general direction of Dr. J. T. Montgomery and his assistants. Incurable patients are not invited, but any one suffering from illness, not contagious, is received. The place is not specially for surgical cases, but is rather a general hospital where patients afflicted with nervous, acute or chronic diseases can receive trained service and all the advantages the well-conducted institution affords.

The privilege of the Sanatorium is extended to any reputable physician regardless of school or system of practice, and he can either take full control of his patient's case, or, if he desires, a mutual arrangement can be entered into whereby the resident doctor and attending staff can relieve him of all further care and responsibility for the time being. A competent chef has the culinary operations in charge, the nurses are scientifically trained, the medical skill is of the best, and all surroundings are such as to invite a tarry at this modern refuge for the sick. Charleston may well feel proud of its Sanatorium.

MOORE, A. F., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Adams County, Ohio, December 22, 1853, the son of John and Eliza J. (Grooms) Moore, natives of Ohio. Mr. Moore was educated in the public schools of Illinois, with an additional course at Westfield College, Clark County, Ill. He then selected agricultural pursuits as his vocation in life. He owns at present 132 acres of land, on which he is engaged in farming.

On March 26, 1874, Mr. Moore was married to Laura J., daughter of G. H. Ashworth, who resides with them. Mr. Moore is a Democrat in his political views, and has served as Assessor and Collector of his township. He was elected Supervisor in April, 1904. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias orders, besides being a Modern Woodman. He is a stockholder in the Humboldt National Bank, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He resides on Section 17, in Humboldt Township.

MOORE, Hosea D., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born in Adams County, Ohio, November 14, 1840, the son of Newton and Rebecca (Burkett) Moore, natives of Ohio. Mr. Moore was educated in the public schools of Ohio, and remained on his father's homestead until October, 1861, when he enlisted in Company B, Seventieth Regiment, Ohio Infantry. He served for three years, being promoted to Sergeant in the meantime. He was engaged in the battles of Shiloh, Vicksburg, Jackson, Mission Ridge and Antietam. His company disbanded at Chattanooga, Tenn.

In November, 1861, Mr. Moore was married to Lizzie Bayliss of Ohio. They were the parents of one child, who died in infancy. Mrs. Moore died, and on April 13, 1867, Mr. Moore was united in marriage to Sarah M., daughter of D. C. and Elizabeth (Argo) Thomas, who settled in Coles County in 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are the parents of thirteen children: Minnie, Flora, wife of Oscar Poorman; Cora, wife of L. Bones; Laura, Dr. A. N. Moore, of Mattoon; Emma, wife of William Seaman Charles; Rose, wife of B. Lidster; Nelly, John F., Blanche, Grace and Gertrude. Mr. Moore came to Coles County in 1865, purchased a farm, and now has 380 acres of land under cultivation. In his political views he is a Democrat. He belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MOORE, John, farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born in Adams County, Ohio, December 22, 1830, the son of Newton and Rebecca (Burkett) Moore. Both parents died in Ohio. Mr. Moore received his education in the public schools of his native State and in October of 1857 came to Coles County, Ill., where he purchased a quarter-section of land at $2.50 per acre. At present he is the owner of 2,565 acres of the finest farming land in the county. On it he makes a specialty of raising Polled-Angus cattle. He possesses a beautiful home near the village of Humboldt on Section 9 of the Township.

On July 11, 1852, Mr. Moore was married to

JOHN MOORE.

Eliza Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Grooms. Mrs. Moore's mother's maiden name was Batterfield. Mr. and Mrs. Moore became the parents of six children: Elmira Frances, wife of N. M. Beard, present Sheriff of Coles County; Newton Burkett, who is engaged in the transfer business at St. Louis, Mo.; Stephen A. Douglas; Ella, wife of Dr. J. McDougal; Identa May, wife of William Schrader, and John Edward, who died in May, 1904. Mrs. Moore died in November, 1895. In August, 1896, Mr. Moore was united in marriage to Mrs. Llewellyn Taylor, a widow lady, and of this union one child has been born, Emily, whose birthday occurs on October 9th.

In his political views Mr. Moore is a Democrat. He has served as School Director, is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and belongs to the Methodist Church, which he joined over forty years ago, being an officer in the same.

MOORE, John C., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Adams County, Ohio, November 30, 1860, the son of George and Rebecca (McKee) Moore, who came to Coles County, Ill., in 1865, where they purchased 160 acres of land on Section 9, Humboldt Township. To this they added from time to time until they had an estate of 1,260 acres. The father, George Moore, served as Treasurer of the township, and as Supervisor and Collector, later becoming Sheriff. They were the parents of eight children: Allie, deceased; Joseph N.; Jenny, wife of Walter Dunn; John C., G. W., Oscar (deceased), Stanley B. and Jessie W. The father died in 1900 and the mother in 1892.

John C. Moore was educated in the public schools, and afterwards chose the life of a farmer. He now owns 280 acres of land, with a fine residence and good improvements. He is an extensive raiser of stock.

On November 23, 1882, Mr. Moore was married to Lizzie H., daughter of Fred Weise, an early settler of Coles County. They are the parents of four children: Gus, Otto, Jenny and John B. In his political affiliations Mr. Moore is a Democrat. He has served as School Director, is a member of the Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MOORE, Oscar P., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Adams County, Ohio, July 1, 1880, the son of Thomas Newton and Mary Ann (Piatt) Moore, natives of Ohio. They were the parents of five children: Frank Rodney, Bert, Oscar P., Alice and Anna (deceased). Both parents are living.

Oscar P. Moore received his education in the public schools of Ohio. When he was sixteen years of age he came to Illinois, and three years later (1899) enlisted in Company F, Thirty-ninth Volunteer Infantry, which was sent to the Philippines. Here he served until 1901. In the spring of 1903 he settled down to farming on his father's estate on Section 23, Humboldt Township.

On February 25, 1903, Mr. Moore was married to Jessie, daughter of Andrew Jackson and Nora (Melton) Vest, of Indiana. In his political affiliations Mr. Moore is a Democrat. He belongs to the order of Knights of Pythias and Modern Woodmen, and is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

MOORE, Stanley B., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, Ill., June 24, 1869, the son of George and Rebecca (McKee) Moore, natives of Adams County, Ohio, who came to Coles County about 1860 with their family of six children: Joseph, Jenny (who is the wife of Walter Dunn), John C., George W., Stanley B. and Jessie W. In their new home the family prospered, and at the time of the father's death, which occurred August 25, 1899, he was the owner of 1,140 acres of land. The mother's decease occurred on June 2, 1890.

Stanley B. Moore received his education in the public schools, then chose to be a farmer. He now owns a well improved farm of 195 acres which boasts a cattle barn 64x50 in size. His residence adjoins the village of Humboldt, three blocks from the depot and postoffice.

On December 14, 1893, Mr. Moore was married to Mary, daughter of Samuel and Mahala Ruten, early settlers of Coles County, Ill. They are the parents of five children: Albert, Lora, Blanche, Glen and George.

In political affiliations Mr. Moore is a Democrat. He is Vice-President and Director of the Humboldt National Bank, a member of the orders of Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen, and belongs to the Christian Church. He is a Justice of the Peace for Humboldt Township.

MORAN, William, prosperous hardware dealer and prominent citizen of Mattoon, Ill., was born in County Carlow, Ireland, received his mental training in the public schools, and after coming to America established himself in business in Mattoon, where he has since become conspicuous in municipal affairs and has been closely identified with the leading interests of the city. Mr. Moran once made the race for Mayor of Mattoon, but was defeated by a small majority by William B. Dunlap, then President of the First National Bank. Subsequently he was elected Alderman from the Sixth Ward, the largest in the city, and was re-elected three times, holding office for four consecutive terms. During the administration of Mayor Charles B. Fry he served on the most important committees of the City Council, and was regarded as the leader of that body, frequently, in the absence of the Mayor or in case of his inability to attend the council meetings, being called upon by unanimous choice to act as Mayor pro tem. Fraternally Mr. Moran is affiliated with the B. P. O. E., I. O. O. F., M. W. A., and K. of P.

In 1882, Mr. Moran was united in marriage with Sarah J. Fitzgerald, a daughter of Martin and Mary (Dorsey) Fitzgerald, natives of Ireland, the latter having been born in County Tipperary. Mrs. Moran enjoys the distinction of being the second child born in the city of Mattoon after its incorporation. She received her education at St. Mary's of the Woods Academy, Terre Haute, Ind., and is one of the most devout and zealous members of the Church of the Immaculate Conception in Mattoon, taking an active part in all its work, and is also a member of the Women's Council. Four children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Moran, namely: William, Jr., Florence Loretto, Joseph and Leo. William Moran, Jr., has recently finished his college course. He attended the St. Bede's College, at Peru, Ill., for three years, completing the first, second and third years of the classical course, and then became a pupil in St. Viateur's College, at Bourmonnas, Ill., where he completed his classical studies. After taking a post-graduate course in philosophy, he is studying law. Florence Loretto attended St. Joseph's Parochial School, in Mattoon, Ill., until 1904, when she entered St. Xavier's Academy, in Chicago. Joseph died in infancy, and Leo is in attendance at St. Joseph's Parochial School, Mattoon.

Besides the conduct of his hardware business and the performance of his public duties, Mr. Moran devotes considerable time to the management of the estate of his wife's mother, who, at the time of her decease, was the second or third tax-payer in Mattoon, in point of amount. This relationship leads to a recital of the business career, domestic life and personal characteristics of one of the most remarkable women of humble degree who ever forsook her native land in girlhood to build up, through her own superb qualities of head and heart, a fortune in a strange country.

Fitzgerald-Montgomery, Mary (Dorsey), as before mentioned, was a native of Ireland, born March 20, 1820, in the town of New Inn, County Tipperary. The period of her childhood and early youth was spent in the vicinity of her birthplace. At the age of sixteen years she emigrated to the United States, leaving a sister in Ireland who still survives. A friendless, homeless, unsophisticated girl, with nothing to guide her but rare good sense and judgment and a wholesome aspiration to make her way in the world, Miss Dorsey located at Memphis, Tenn., and there began laying the foundation of what culminated in a marvelously successful business career. Renting a building in Memphis, she opened a hotel, which received its patronage chiefly from employes on a levee then in process of construction in the vicinity. While thus engaged, she became the wife of Martin Fitzgerald, a vigorous, energetic and well-disposed young man, who, like herself, was an emigrant from Ireland. About this period, the scourge of yellow fever smote the South, and shortly after their marriage, the young people journeyed northward, locating at Dubuque, Iowa. There they sojourned but a short time, when they went to Chicago, and there opened a hotel. After remaining in Chicago two years, early in 1857 they removed to Mattoon, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mattoon was then a village dot on a far-spreading prairie, and the life of the emigrant girl, once Mary Dorsey, was thereafter interwoven with its industrial development until it became a city of nearly 15,000 people. From the very outset she clearly foresaw its future and predicted its future. On arriving at Mattoon, the new-comers purchased the lot where now stands the fine three-story structure, known as No. 1811 Broadway Avenue. Then they built a hotel, the "Chicago House," an attractive and spacious building for those days, and also conducted a wholesale grocery. This building was later removed to the present site of Union Hall, in Mattoon, and was afterwards destroyed by fire, which swept away all the earthly possessions of Martin and Mary Fitzgerald—for they had no insurance. Undismayed by this bitter fortune, they started to retrieve their losses with varying success and, in the midst of this effort, in February, 1863, Martin Fitzgerald died. He and his wife were the parents of four children, namely: Mary Ann, who is still living at Mattoon; Martin and William, who died in infancy; and Sarah J., who became the wife of Mr. William Moran. Left a widow, with the cares of a growing business and the rearing of a family upon her hands, Mrs. Fitzgerald redoubled her efforts to succeed. Day and night she toiled with intense earnestness. By industry, perseverance and economy, she conducted her affairs successfully, investing her surplus in farm lands or city realty, and adhering to her faith in the future of Mattoon. That her judgment was unerring is attested by the fact that her fine business block on Western Avenue, her two other elegant brick structures on Broadway and numerous additional property holdings throughout the city, aggregate an approximate value of $100,000.

In 1888, Mrs. Fitzgerald was wedded to John Montgomery, whom she survived nearly ten years, he having passed away October 17, 1890.

Throughout her busy and eventful life, this remarkable woman was not so much absorbed in business as to neglect her charities. Her purse was always open to the poor and needy. No one ever solicited alms from her in the name of charity and was refused. She was a devout Catholic and a liberal contributor to the church, donating considerable amounts privately. In fact, all her benevolence was without ostentation. Since her death instances of her generosity, unknown even to the immediate family, have come to light through the recipients thereof. During her life-time, several orphans, who had been left without needed care, found tender, loving sympathy at her fireside. She took them in and guided and trained them with a mother's care until they were fitted for self-support. Some of these are now residents of Mattoon and useful members of the community, living monuments to the memory of this noble Christian woman. In appearance and manner, she was simple, plain and unassuming, and had a good word and cheerful smile for all. She died on April 15, 1900, and her place in the affection of the people was manifest in the mournful obsequies attending her mortal remains. From banker to street laborer, from mendicant to merchant, the mass of citizens, irrespective of class, color or creed, bowed in grief over her form prostrate in death. The reverend clergy from different cities lent their presence and rendered their pious offices at her funeral.

MORGAN, Thomas W., farmer and dealer in hay and grain, Trilla, Coles County, was born in Cumberland County, Ill., April 28, 1806. The son of C. D. and Sarah Morgan, natives of Indiana, who located in Cumberland County at an early date. The father is still living, the mother being deceased. Mr. Morgan was reared on a farm and has felt interest in agricultural pursuits all his life. He deals extensively also in hay and grain and is expert in the handling of live stock. He owns fifteen acres of land adjoining the village of Trilla, besides considerable town property.

On September 4, 1892, Mr. Morgan was united in marriage to May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Ozee, and of this union four children have been born: Edna, Blanche, Harold E., Carl N. and Martin T. Mrs. Morgan died on August 10, 1903. In his political views Mr. Morgan is affiliated with the Republican party and he has served as Clerk of the School Board of Trilla for a term of three years. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and an attendant of the Presbyterian Church services.

MUCHMORE, Clarence B., carpenter and contractor, Charleston, Ill., was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, November 23, 1872, the son of Morris and Charlotte (Craig) Muchmore, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. They were the parents of five children: George P., Frank A., Elmer A., Clarence B. and Adella B. Clarence B. Muchmore received his education in the schools near Cincinnati, and at the age of twelve years began to learn the carpenter's trade. He finished his apprenticeship at Cincinnati, and thereafter worked in that locality as a journeyman for nearly fifteen years. In 1897 Mr. Muchmore came to Charleston and associated himself with his brother, George P., in building and contracting. They have erected many of the finest residences and business blocks in the city, including the Opera House and Trower Block.

On September 5, 1900, Mr. Muchmore was married to Lucy A., daughter of Dennis Malone, of Vandalia, and they have one child, Maurice. In his political views Mr. Muchmore is a Democrat.

MUCHMORE, George P., contractor, Charleston, Ill., was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, December 1, 1863, the son of Morris and Charlotte (Craig) Muchmore, natives of Ohio and Indiana, respectively. His father, who was a contractor and builder, died at Cincinnati, Ohio, November 14, 1900, but the mother and a sister of Mr. Muchmore are now residing at Plainville, Ohio. George P. Muchmore was educated at Plainville, Ohio, and in his youth, chose his father's trade, at which he worked in Ohio for his father and later on his own account. He came to Coles County, Ill., in 1891, and began contracting and building at once. Since that time he has erected some of the best business houses, and many of the finest residences in Charleston. He also drew the plans for and built the Opera House in Charleston. He is also largely interested in real estate.

On January 4, 1893, Mr. Muchmore was married to Carrie B., daughter of Wilson and Sydney Goodman, and of this union two children have been born: Clara and Fern. In his political views Mr. Muchmore is a Democrat. He has served as Collector, and is now acting as Deputy Collector for the second term. He belongs to the Odd Fellows and the Elks fraternities.

MULLIKEN, E. M., merchant, Humboldt, Ill., was born in Jeffersontown, Ky., November 2, 1859, the son of James W. and Kate (Miller) Mulliken, natives of Indiana and Kentucky, who came to Champaign County, Ill., in 1862, moved near Hindsboro, Douglas County, in 1870, but are now (1904) residents of Arcola, Ill.

Mr. Mulliken was educated in the public schools, and remained with his parents on the farm until 1884, when he began clerking in a store at St. Joseph, Champaign County. Later he worked in Champaign City, and in the spring of 1886 moved to Arcola, where he worked for four years in the store of G. S. Tarbox. Afterward he engaged in the insurance business in that city. In 1891 he came to Humboldt, and bought out O. A. Harrison's hardware establishment. Since then he has built up an extensive business, his store carrying hardware, furniture, undertaking goods, and employing regularly three clerks. Mr. Mulliken was prominent in the organizing, in 1904, of the First National Bank of Humboldt, of which he is President, Stanley B. Moore Vice-President and J. W. Poorman Cashier. The bank owns its fine new building and does a general banking business. Mr. Mulliken is still interested in insurance matters.

On May 1, 1889, Mr. Mulliken was married to Annette, daughter of James and Anna Watson, of Arcola, and of this union three sons have been born: Paul M., Horace W. and Oscar Dale. In his political views Mr. Mulliken is a Republican. He is President of the School Board and is a Village Trustee; fraternally is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen and Court of Honor fraternities. He belongs to the Christian Church and is an elder in the same, being also Superintendent of its Sunday School.

MUNSON, George J., farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Franklin County, Ind., December 16, 1856, the son of Mathias and Kezia (Jones) Munson, natives of New Jersey and Indiana, respectively. In 1859 the family moved to what was then known as Coles, but is now a part of Douglas County, where the father purchased a farm. Here his death occurred in March, 1871. He had been a successful farmer and left an estate of 320 acres of land. He had served his township as School Director and as Road Commissioner. His wife's decease occurred in November, 1902. George J., their son, was educated in the public schools, and then took up agricultural pursuits. He has a fine 204-acre farm on Section 36, North Okaw Township, on which place he has a nice home.

On February 21, 1886, Mr. Munson was married to Ella, daughter of George and Mary Gillespie, of Rising Sun, Ind., and of this union four children have been born: Kezia, Edna, Hale C. and Agnes. In his political views Mr. Munson is a Democrat. He has served as Assessor of Arcola Township, Douglas County, two terms, and on the School Board. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen and belongs to the Baptist Church.

MURPHY, William, farmer, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Madison County, Ohio, October 28, 1858, the son of Peter and Catherine (Grady) Murphy, natives of Ireland, who came to America about 1848, being united in marriage at Penn Yan, N. Y. They went then to Ohio, where they resided for fourteen years, moving to Coles County in 1865, settling near the timber at Fuller's Point.

Two years later they moved to Section 19. Here the father farmed until his death on August 2, 1889. Mrs. Murphy died December 2, 1894. Of their fourteen children only five survive: Catherine, William, John, Mary (wife of R. Lambert) and Maggie. Clinton Murphy Wheatley, an adopted member of the family, also survives. Peter Murphy was a Democrat in his political views. He had served as School Director and was a member of the Catholic Church.

William Murphy, the subject of this sketch, received his education in the public schools near his home, and then began farming. He now owns a fine farm of 240 acres, with all necessary improvements. On February 9, 1897, Mr. Murphy was married to Mary Margaret, daughter of James and Louisa Higdon, of Kentucky, and of this union two children have been born: Clinton, on March 11, 1898, and Mary Edna, on May 29, 1903. In his political affiliations Mr. Murphy is a Democrat. He belongs to the Catholic Church.

NASH, Andrew J., Assistant Postmaster and merchant, Fuller, Ill., was born in Macoupin County, Ill., February 23, 1840, the son of A. On May 24, 1852, he was married to Matilda Robinson, of Johnson County, Ind., and to them were born six children, of whom two are now living, viz.: Alice, wife of Thomas Langston, and Sarah, wife of Joseph Tremble. Martin K. Phillips has served his township as Collector and Assessor and Road Commissioner, has also held the office of School Trustee and School Director and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church. He has spent his life in farming, but now devotes much of his time to gardening and horticulture. In politics he is a Democrat.

PHILLIPS, S. W., who is successfully engaged in the broom-corn business in Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in Knox County, Ohio, January 9, 1838, the son of Moses and Margaret E. (Fry) Phillips, natives of Pennsylvania. In youth the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the public schools of Ohio. He located in Mattoon in 1895 and began dealing in broom corn, in which he has met with successful results. He is regarded as a man of good qualifications as a merchant, and devotes his attention closely to his business concerns.

On December 21, 1898, Mr. Phillips was united in marriage with Alice Johnson, who was born in Humboldt, Coles County, Ill., and received her mental training in St. Mary's Episcopal Boarding School of Knoxville, Ill. Two children have resulted from this union: Martha Helen and Edwin Wendell.

On political questions Mr. Phillips takes his stand with the Republican party, and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias and the B. P. O. E.

PHIPPS, John Henry, farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born on Section 33, Lafayette Township, Coles County, June 1, 1842, the son of James and Sarah (Hedges) Phipps, natives of Wabash County, Ill., and among the pioneer settlers of Coles County. John Phipps, grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was a native of Germany, who, after emigrating to the United States, settled in Pennsylvania, later removing to Ohio, and thence to Wabash County, Ill. John Henry Phipps received his education in Lafayette Township, and for a number of years interested himself in farming operations. He then went to Mattoon and for three years was engaged in the grocery business. He was also connected with a hotel for three years, engaged in the real estate business for a like period, and for four years with the "Big Four" Railroad. Then returning to his 160-acre farm in Lafayette Township, he has since given his attention to farming.

On March 12, 1864, Mr. Phipps was married to Ann Elizabeth, daughter of Sheldon and Sarah Jeffries, and of this union one son has been born—Azariah J., who married Lissa Lashan, and has two children: Annetta and William Henry. In his political views Mr. Phipps is a Republican. Mrs. Phipps is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

PIERCE, Leroy W., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, was born in Cumberland County, Ill., August 10, 1872, the son of Addison and Charity (De Vare) Pierce, natives of Ohio, who came to Coles County in 1865 and who reside at this date in Charleston, Mr. Pierce has spent his life in agricultural pursuits. He owns at present eighty acres of fine land in Seven Hickory Township, and has added stock-raising to his general farming operations.

On December 4, 1895, Mr. Pierce was married to Anna, daughter of James and Laura Kieth, of Crawford County, Ill. They have no children. In his political affiliations Mr. Pierce is a Democrat, and has served one term as Town Collector. He is an attendant at the Methodist Episcopal Church.

PIERSON, Jackson H., farmer and stock-dealer, Oakland, Coles County, was born in Coles County February 23, 1875, the son of James and Susan (Brodie) Pierson, who were natives respectively of Ohio and Wisconsin. Mr. Pierson's youth was spent on the homestead, and since his boyhood he has followed the occupation of a farmer. He now owns 180 acres of land in East Oakland Township, where he handles stock in addition to the general work of a large farm. His home is in the city of Oakland.

On December 7, 1898, Mr. Pierson was united in marriage to Annie, daughter of W. L. Day, of Coles County, and of this union three children have been born: Ruth L., Paul P. and Gladys S. In his political views Mr. Pierson is a Republican. He is a member of Oakland Lodge, No. 245, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the American Home Circle.

PINKSTAFF, Dr. J. T., President of the Mattoon Inhalatorium, was born in Crawford County, Ill., August 25, 1872, the son of V. M. and S. E. Pinkstaff, natives of Illinois. V. M. Pinkstaff was a druggist, doing business at the time of his decease, in 1881, in Northern Texas. His widow now resides in Crawford County, Ill. J. T. Pinkstaff received his education in the public schools of Illinois, later attended the Northern Indiana Normal College at Valparaiso, then decided to study medicine, and graduated from the Barnes Medical College, at St. Louis, in 1897. He began the practice of his profession in Lawrence County, Ill., but came to Mattoon in 1902, and has there been very successful. His offices are fitted with the most modern appliances for the treatment of all lung and throat diseases, this being a specialty with Dr. Pinkstaff.

On March 12, 1893, Dr. Pinkstaff was married to J. B. Calvert, daughter of T. M. Calvert, a merchant at Birds, Ill., and of this union one child has been born, Virgil. In his political views the Doctor is a Republican. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen fraternity.

PIPER, Rev. James A. (deceased), was born in Palestine, Crawford County, Ill., the son of Edward H. and Ann Piper, natives of Kentucky. Mr. Piper received his education in the public schools of Illinois, supplemented by a classical course at Hanover College.

Deciding to enter the ministry he went to Princeton University, where he completed his course in the Theological Department, and in 1862 received his ordination as a minister of the Gospel.

During the Civil War Mr. Piper acted as Chaplain in a Military Hospital at Quincy, Ill., still later receiving there his first charge, serving for eight years as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of that City. The following three years were spent in Clinton, Ill., and in 1874 he came to Charleston as pastor of the church in that city which he served for twenty-five years, his ministerial labors covering a period of forty-one years.

In 1861, Mr. Piper was married to Martha Matthews, who died in 1872, leaving three children. Samuel M., Anna, and Mary. On November 22, 1882, he was united in marriage to Mary Grey, and of this union one son was born, Harold C., now deceased. Mr. Piper died March 14, 1903.

POWELL, Charles H., retired farmer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Ohio County, Ind., April 26, 1843, the son of James A. and Martha (Dodd) Powell, natives of Philadelphia and Kentucky, respectively, who came to Coles County in 1860, and who are now both deceased. Mr. Powell was educated in the schools near his home, and early made the acquaintance of hard work on a farm. In spite of this fact he chose an agricultural life, and is now the owner of 285 acres of land in Mattoon Township.

On October 11, 1866, he was married to Josephine, daughter of Alexander and Sarah Patterson, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively, who came to Coles County in 1872. Mr. and Mrs. Powell are the parents of three children, of whom two are living: Alice and Charles. In his political affiliations Mr. Powell is a Democrat. He and his family are members of the Christian Church.

RATHE, Theodore R., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born near Siegel, Cumberland County, Ill., December 12, 1882, the son of William Henry and Caroline (Bartels) Rathe, natives of Hanover, Germany, and Chicago, Ill., respectively. The father emigrated to America in 1866, when he was eighteen years of age. He had received a good education in the Fatherland and, after coming to Illinois, learned the carpenter's trade in Chicago, which, with farming operations, enabled him to earn means of support. In 1870 he moved to Siegel, but in the spring of 1887 he went onto the farm now owned by his son. Many good houses in the county attest his skill as a carpenter, including the home buildings among the number. He died September 13, 1903, leaving a widow and two children, and an estate consisting in part of 252 acres of land. The home farm of 172 acres adjacent is the property of the subject of this sketch, the remainder being owned by a sister, Emma, who is the wife of Gottlieb Wetzel. Another sister, Bertha, died in 1895, when but seventeen years of age.

Mr. Rathe was educated in the public schools and in the two colleges at Valparaiso, Ind. Most of his life has been spent on the homestead, Section 32, Humboldt Township. His mother, who is still living, resides in Mattoon. Mr. Rathe is a Republican in his political views, and is a member of the German Lutheran Church.

RECORD, Spencer H., manufacturer of tile and brick, Charleston, Ill., was born near Falmouth, Ky., December 16, 1847, the son of William S. and Martha Record, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Record's parents brought him to Charleston, Ill., in October of 1857, and here he spent his youth and received his education. On March 1, 1865, he enlisted in Company C, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until mustered out at Springfield, Ill., at the close of the war. Returning to Coles County, Mr. Record began to work on a farm, but in 1871 he entered a drug store as clerk, acting in this capacity for a period of six years. In 1877 he began the manufacture of tile and brick, gradually increasing his business capacity until he now possesses the largest plant of the kind in the county.

On February 5, 1874, Mr. Record was united in marriage to Elizabeth Emerson, of Decatur, Ill., and of this union eight children were born, those living being: Myrtle, Frank, Louie, Belle and Florence. Those deceased are: May, Clara and Charles. Mrs. Record's death occurred on March 20, 1890. On December 26, 1896, Mr. Record married Martha Huber of Charleston, and to them has been born one son, Paul.

In his political views Mr. Record is a Republican, and he has served as Assistant Supervisor for two terms, and in the City Council one term. He is a member of the Christian Church.

REDDEN, Charles A., a successful and substantial farmer of East Oakland Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Douglas County, Ill., the son of Joseph and Emily (Shelton) Redden, natives of Ohio. Joseph Redden moved to Illinois with his family and located in Douglas County, where he carried on farming successfully.

The subject of this sketch was reared on his father's farm, and in boyhood attended the district schools in the vicinity of his home. After his school days were over, he applied himself to farming which he has since followed.

Mr. Redden was united in marriage to Cynthia Coffey, who was born and schooled in Douglas County, Ill., and their union has resulted in two children: Hula and Frank. Politically, Mr. Redden is an earnest Republican; has served as Township Collector in Douglas County, and also as Township Clerk for two terms. In 1903 he was elected Mayor of Oakland, Ill., and ably and faithfully discharged the duties of that office.

REDDEN, William H., farmer, Oakland, Ill., was born in Douglas County, Ill., November 9, 1843, the son of William and Rebecca (Black) Redden, natives of Maryland, who located in Coles County in the 'twenties. Having been born and brought up on a farm Mr. Redden has always been more interested in agriculture than in any other line of work. For twenty-seven consecutive years he made a specialty of stock feeding. He has been very prosperous, and now owns 680 acres of land in what now constitutes a part of Douglas County. In 1891 he removed to Oakland, but continues to operate his farm.

On February 23, 1863, Mr. Redden was married to Margaret, daughter of William F. and Rebecca J. Murphy, natives of Ohio, who located in Coles County (now part of Douglas) in 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Redden are the parents of six children, of whom five are living: Zula M., Ella M., Jennie M., James W. and Charles A. In his political views Mr. Redden is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Church.

REDMAN, Charles, farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, was born in Clark County, Ill., September 13, 1860, the son of Lancaster L. and Catherine (Frazier) Redman, who came from Kentucky and located in Clark County in 1831. The father is yet living, but the mother is deceased. Brought up on the farm, the subject of this sketch received the usual common school education of that day, and when he became of age he chose agriculture for his life work. He owns at present eighty acres of land in Mattoon Township.

On March 4, 1888, Mr. Redman was united in marriage to Josephine, daughter of John J. and Alice (Enoch) Pennell, natives of Kentucky, but now residents of Clark County. Mr. and Mrs. Redman are the parents of two children: Glen O. and Flossie M. Mr. Redman is affiliated with the Republican party, and he and his wife are members of the Christian Church.

Mr. Rennels was educated in his native township, and from early youth familiarized himself with farm work, so that very naturally he chose agricultural pursuits for his vocation in life. In 1902 he rented 305 acres and built himself a home and now owns sixty acres of land in Hutton Township.

In June, 1892, Mr. Rennels was united in marriage to Sophia, daughter of Andrew and Mary Morty, of Ashmore, and of this union three children have been born: Gary, Mary and Carrie. Mr. Rennels is a Republican in his political affiliations, and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church at Providence.

RENNELS, J. Pennington, retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Hutton Township September 25, 1834, the son of James and Polly Rennels, who came to Coles County in 1832. Mr. Rennels received the customary public school education, and then decided to become a farmer. He has been prosperous in this undertaking, at present being the owner of 273 acres of land. He moved to Charleston in 1903 and since then has devoted considerable attention to the raising of stock.

On May 4, 1856, Mr. Rennels was married to Louisa, daughter of George and Eliza Smith, and of this union eleven children have been born, seven of whom survive: William E., Mary A., Martha E., Mildred A., Albert T., Nora and John P.

In his political views Mr. Rennels is a Republican, and is a member of the Separate Baptist Church.

RENNELS, William R., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in the same locality where he now resides, November 21, 1837, the son of James and Polly R. (Connolly) Rennels, the father born in Bourbon County, Ky., and the mother in Grayson County, N. C., since added to Virginia. The parents came to Coles County at an early day, and settled in Hutton Township in 1832, where they were well known and highly respected farmers. William R. Rennels was educated in the public schools near his home, and at an early age turned his attention to agricultural pursuits, starting out in life for himself in 1857. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until 1864, when he was discharged for physical disability resulting from wounds. At present he owns 100 acres of land, upon which he raises stock besides doing general farming.

On February 12, 1857, Mr. Rennels was married to Mary J. Gilbert and to them four children were born: Mandilla C. (deceased), Simon M., Mary A. and James W. Mrs. Rennels died November 7, 1868. On March 11, 1869, Mr. Rennels was married to Martha E. White, and they became the parents of two children, both deceased: Silas E. and E. Ellsworth. Mrs. Rennels died March 31, 1873. On April 7, 1874, Mr. Rennels was united to Mary J. Fox, and of this union three children have been born: William W., Vieve May and Ivory F.

In his political affiliations Mr. Rennels is a Republican, and has been School Director for many years. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic at Charleston. He is a member of the Separate Baptist Church, and has served as deacon in the same.

Mr. Rice's grandfather was a native of New York State and a soldier in the Revolutionary War. His father was born in New York October 15, 1787. Amos Rice, Sr., who was a soldier in the War of 1812, moved from New York to Indiana in 1816, settling in Vigo County, and becoming a river pilot on the boats running between Terre Haute and New Orleans. He came to Coles County with his family in 1852, settling on land in North Okaw Township purchased of the railroad company, and located near the present home of his son Amos. He was twice married, first to Mrs. Martha Hatton, and they became the parents of three children: Catherine, Mary Jane and Frank. His second marriage was to Miss Sarah Compton, daughter of John and Lucinda Compton, of Ohio. Her father was a soldier in the Black Hawk War. The children of the second marriage were ten in number: Abraham, William, Nancy L., John, Amos, Job C., Sarah, Eliza, Arthur and Walter. Their father died August 10, 1872, at the age of 85. He had been a prominent and successful farmer. Politically he was a Democrat, and was a member of the Missionary Baptist Church.

Amos Rice, Jr., the subject of this sketch, received his education in the public schools and early began the life of a farmer's son, remaining on the homestead until his father's decease, when his brother Job and himself undertook the management of the estate for a term of five years. He now owns 300 acres of valuable land, the residence and all improvements having been made by himself. He is known as an extensive raiser of stock.

On December 24, 1867, Mr. Rice was married to Miss Sarah Checkley, the sister of his brother's wife, and of this union five children were born: Lucinda L., William G., Sarah C., Clara J. and Jennie L. Their mother died May 16, 1888. On July 16, 1890, Mr. Rice married Cornelia M. Shinn, who died May 9, 1893. On March 6, 1895, Mr. Rice was married to Miss Fannie Fears. Mr. Rosebraugh's youth was spent on the homestead where he was born, and he attended the district schools and worked on the farm alternately until his education was completed. In 1890 he moved onto the farm which he now occupies, and which consists of 130 acres. Here he has made a specialty of raising Poland-China swine and fancy and draft horses. He is also interested in the nursery firm of Noble & Rosebraugh.

On November 2, 1882, Mr. Rosebraugh was united in marriage to Elizabeth K., daughter of Sherman and Rebecca Popham, of Charleston, Ill., and of this union nine children have been born: Myrtle, wife of Eb. Pierce; Robert, rural mail-carrier; Ethel, Mary, Charles, Clifford, Lola, Ray and Ivan.

In his political views Mr. Rosebraugh is affiliated with the Republican party and is a member of the United Brethren Church, in which he served for a long term as class leader. In August, 1894, he was made a delegate to the General Conference of this denomination.

ROY, James M., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Kentucky December 9, 1835, the son of Washington and Fanny Roy, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County, Ill., in 1861, where both died within four days of each other, on March 8 and March 12, 1885. Mr. Roy was brought up a farmer's lad, and, unlike many in the same condition, when he became old enough to work for himself he decided to become a farmer. He has been successful in his chosen field and to-day owns 120 acres of fine land in Paradise Township.

On February 1, 1887, Mr. Roy was married to Maggie, daughter of Robert and Marion (Lowrey) Clark, natives of Scotland, who came to the United States in 1835, settling in Effingham County, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Roy are the parents of two children, both being deceased. In his political views Mr. Roy is a Democrat. He has served seven years as School Director, belongs to the order of I. O. O. F. and is a believer in the doctrines of the Missionary Baptist Church.

RUDY, Captain Charles E., of Simpson & Rudy, buggy dealers, Mattoon, Ill., was born near Arcola, Douglas County, Ill., October 14, 1860, the son of Jacob O. and Persia J. Rudy, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. Captain Rudy was educated in the schools near his home and remained with his parents until he was nearly eighteen years of age, when for a period of three years he tried civil engineering. His next venture was as a clerk in the Motive Department of the "Big Four" Railroad at Mattoon. Here he remained for four years. Afterwards he was general storekeeper for the Peoria, Decatur & Eastern Railroad at Mattoon, but after twenty-four months' service resigned this position and took up the book business, which he followed for three years.

On December 27, 1887, Mr. Rudy was married to Jessie, daughter of E. C. and Eunice Caldwell, of Indiana, and of this union three children have been born, two of whom are living: Owen C. and Helen E. For many years Mr. Rudy has taken an active interest in military affairs. He has been a member of the Illinois National Guard since the organization of Company E, in 1891, and for the past twelve years has been Captain of the company; hence his title. On May 20, 1898, he entered the United States service as Captain of Company E, Fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, (I. N. G.), and with his regiment served during the Spanish-American war until mustered out May 2, 1899. Three months of this service was spent in active duty in Cuba. Of the 106 men who entered service with him he brought all back in good form.

For a number of years Captain Rudy has been a member of the firm of Simpson & Rudy, who are engaged in the sale of buggies and farming implements. He owns 160 acres of land in North Okaw Township, is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Elks fraternities, and in his political views Captain Rudy is a Republican.

RUTHERFORD, Dr. Hiram (deceased), was born in Dauphin County, Pa., December 27, 1815, the son of William and Sarah (Swan) Rutherford, natives of the same county. The Doctor received his primary education in the common schools, and at the age of eighteen began reading medicine under the supervision of a brother at Harrisburg, Pa. After three years of this study he entered the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, graduating therefrom in 1838. He began practicing at Millersburg, Pa., but in 1843 came to Illinois, driving overland in a buggy with his young wife, locating at Oakland the same year, and here the remainder of his life was spent.

On April 4, 1843, shortly before coming West, Dr. Rutherford was united in marriage to Lucinda Bowman, of Millersburg, Pa., who was born April 22, 1821. Mrs. Rutherford died September 12, 1843, leaving one son, John.

DR. HIRAM RUTHERFORD.

On April 25, 1848, the Doctor married Harriet Hutchinson, of Springfield, Ill., and of this union nine children were born, of whom six are living: Cyrus, Thomas, Kate, Wilson, Anna and Martin.

During his life the Doctor was a staunch Republican in his politics. He served on the Board of Supervisors for a period of seven years, as School Director for a considerable time, and as Township Treasurer for nearly fifty years. He was prominent in the organization of the National Bank of Oakland, of which he was a director for many years. His death occurred April 30, 1900.

RUTHERFORD, John, President of the Oakland National Bank, was born in Oakland

June 21, 1841. After attaining his majority he engaged for five years in mercantile pursuits, afterwards entering the bank, and in this business he has been engaged thirty-two years. On April 4, 1882, Mr. Rutherford was married to Catherine, daughter of Henry Nash, a native of Virginia, and to them have been born two children: Eval L. and Hiram J.

RUTHERFORD, Wilson, farmer, East Oakland Township, Coles County, was born in Oakland, Ill., March 2, 1860, the son of Hiram and Harriet (Hutchinson) Rutherford. Until he was twenty years of age, Mr. Rutherford remained with his parents and attended the home schools. Upon attaining his majority he chose agriculture for his life work, and has followed that vocation until the present time. He now owns 160 acres of land.

On December 25, 1893, Mr. Rutherford was united in marriage to Tena, daughter of Marion and Elizabeth Cash, and of this union two children have been born: Elizabeth and Harriet. Mr. Rutherford belongs to the Masonic order and in his political views is a Republican.

SANDERS, James K. (deceased), was born in Indiana April 14, 1843, the son of Azariah and Hannah (Sawyer) Sanders, natives of Kentucky, who came to Coles County in 1857. James K. Sanders was educated in the public schools near his home, and remained with his parents until in 1862, when he enlisted in Company I, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and in which he served until discharged on account of physical disability in 1864. He then returned to Coles County and engaged in farming, and at the time of his death owned about 200 acres of land in Paradise Township.

On July 2, 1866, Mr. Sanders was married to Phoebe H., daughter of John and Elizabeth Larue, natives of Hardin County, Ky., who came to Coles County about 1832. Of this union six children were born, two of whom are now living: Lola E., wife of John Duffenbaugh, and Azariah J., who is managing the homestead where his mother yet resides. He is a member of Blue Lodge, A. F. & A. M., also of the Eastern Star. In his political views he is a Republican.

James K. Sanders died January 10, 1898. He was a Republican in his politics, and a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Masonic fraternities. He belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which his widow is still a member.

SANDERS, John W., farmer, Mattoon Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Indiana February 1, 1847, the son of Azariah and Hannah (Sawyer) Sanders, natives of Hardin County, Ky., who came to Coles County at an early date. The subject of this sketch has followed the occupation of farming and stock-raising during his business life. He is the owner of a 200-acre farm in Mattoon Township.

In November of 1879 Mr. Sanders was united in marriage to Sophronia, daughter of John Ledgwood, a native of Tennessee, and of this union three children have been born, two of whom are living: Anna M. and Jennie H. For ten years he remained in this place, when he removed to East Oakland, and there secured 140 acres, to which he has made additions until to-day he owns 190 acres, upon which he devotes most of his time and labor.

On February 28, 1884, Mr. Stewart was married to Josephine V., daughter of Isaac and Margaret Humphrey, of Washington County, Ind. Five children were born of this union: Walter L. (deceased), Elmer E., Bessie L., Minnie L. and Flora C. (deceased). In his political views Mr. Stewart is a Democrat. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Home Forum and the Modern Woodmen of America, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

STEWART, William Anderson, farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in Coles County, near his present home, January 31, 1847, the son of John H. and Matilda Stewart, natives of Kentucky, who were among the pioneer settlers of Coles County. Mr. Stewart received his education in the schools near his home, and remained on the farm with his parents until 1870, when he established a home of his own. Early choosing the life of a farmer, he has shown by his success the wisdom of this selection. He owns at present eighty acres of land in Hutton Township and, in addition, operates rented property.

In 1870 Mr. Stewart was married to Armina, daughter of Henry and Sarah Litner, and of this union eleven children have been born: Bertha, Alice, Docie, Christie, Ezra, Lizzie, Givie, Samuel, Stella, Oscar and Adry. In his political affiliations Mr. Stewart is a Democrat. He is a member of the Union Baptist Church at Liberty.

STITES, Thomas J., grain and coal dealer, Bushton, Morgan Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Hamilton County, Ohio, December 19, 1845, the son of William and Edith Stites, natives of Ohio, and relatives of Major Benjamin, one of the pioneer settlers of that State. The family came to Coles County in 1872, purchasing a place ten miles north of Charleston. Both parents are now deceased. Mr. Stites received his education in the public schools, and spent his time in farming until 1883, when he engaged in the grain and general mercantile business at Bushton. Later he sold out his interest in the store, and has since devoted his attention to dealing in coal and grain.

On August 23, 1870, Mr. Stites was married to Edith, daughter of Constantine and Hannah Stites, natives of Ohio, both of whom are deceased. Of this union two daughters and one son were born. Maude, the only one living, is a resident of Miamisburg, Ohio. Mrs. Stites died in January, 1885. On December 18, 1887, Mr. Stites was united to Eliza J., daughter of William and Miriam Sublette, natives of Maryland and Illinois, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Stites are the parents of one daughter, Olive F. Mr. Stites is a Republican in his political affiliations, has been School Director two terms and has served as Postmaster of Bushton for four years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, while his wife belongs to the Christian Church.

STODDERT, Franklin, farmer, Charleston Township, Coles County, was born in Coles

County February 27, 1853, the son of Richard and Catherine (Riser) Stoddert, natives of Kentucky and Ohio, respectively, who settled in Charleston about 1831. Mr. Stoddert was educated in the public schools, and having shown an interest in agricultural matters from childhood, he at length settled down into the business of stock-raising and general farming. He owns a well-improved farm of 120 acres two miles north of Charleston. Mr. Stoddert has never married. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, and in his religious views is in sympathy with all orthodox denominations.

STONE, Rev. Murray, minister and farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, was born in the same place where he now resides December 4, 1858, the son of Dr. William and Elizabeth (Teats) Stone, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively. The father, who was a pioneer physician, died in Hutton Township in 1862. The mother survived until 1882. In his sixth year Murray Stone was taken by his mother to Cumberland County, Ill., where he received his primary education, which was supplemented by one term at Lee's Academy at Loxa, and one year in the State Normal College at Normal, Ill. He then began teaching, and has followed that vocation until he has 166½ months to his credit. He is likewise interested in farming, and is the owner of 120 acres of land. In 1894 he was ordained a minister of the Baptist Church in the Ambraw Association. In 1902 he served as pastor of the Union Church, and in 1903-04 of the Clear Creek Church. He is also an active power in Sunday School work.

On December 25, 1884, Mr. Stone was married to Elizabeth A., daughter of Henry Rennels, and of this union three children have been born: Mary, Ethel and Ruth. Mr. and Mrs. Stone had an infant son born to them January 17, 1905, who died January 25th following. In his political views Mr. Stone is a Republican, and is a member of the Odd Fellows' Lodge at Hutton.

STRICKLER, Clarence A., physician and surgeon, Etna, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Hardin County, Ky., November 4, 1856, the son of George W. and Ruth E. (Talbot) Strickler, natives of Kentucky, where the mother now resides, the father being deceased. Until his nineteenth year Mr. Strickler remained at home. Deciding then to study medicine he attended the Louisville Medical College during the years 1877, 1878 and 1879, graduating in February of the latter year. In 1893 he came to Etna, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession.

On October 20, 1881, Dr. Strickler was married to Anna M., daughter of H. S. Bishop, of Litchfield, Ky., and of this union two children were born: Ernest A. and Eva R. Mrs. Strickler died November 12, 1898. On December 24, 1903, Dr. Strickler was united to Mattie S., daughter of James Crawford, of Hardin County, Ky. Dr. Strickler is an independent in his political relations. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen and to the Court of Honor, and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The father came to the United States in 1835 or 1836 and located in Coles County, Ill., in 1865. He is now a resident of Oklahoma. The mother is deceased.

Mr. John M. Strong has spent his life on the home farm and owns at present 158½ acres of land in Mattoon Township. He was married March 25, 1883, to Elizabeth, daughter of George and Elizabeth Fink, natives of New York, and they are the parents of five children, of whom four are living: William O., John A., Mary and Grace E. Mr. Strong is a Democrat in his political views, has served two terms as Town Collector in Lafayette Township and is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

STUBBINS, L. C., City Engineer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Mattoon August 9, 1876, the son of John and Eudora (Denny) Stubbins, natives of Indiana, where they were married and where one daughter was born. In 1875 Mr. Stubbins, Sr., and the family came to Coles County, where he became the proprietor of the Dole House, at Mattoon, and where for twenty-five years he carried on a prosperous hotel business. He retired to private life in 1901, his death occurring November 9, 1902. Mr. Stubbins was considered one of the best hotel managers in the central part of Illinois.

L. C. Stubbins received his education in the public schools of Mattoon with a two years' course later at the State University at Champaign, Ill. The following eighteen months were spent in surveying in Louisiana and Mississippi.

Desiring to complete his education, Mr. Stubbins entered Cornell College at Ithaca, N. Y. When he left this institution he resumed surveying, this time his field of activity being among the coal mines in West Virginia. In July, 1901, he received the appointment of mining engineer for the Dominion Iron & Steel Company, on the coast of Newfoundland, but the death of his father in 1902 necessitated his return to Illinois. In January, 1903, he opened his present office in the Demaree Block, Mattoon, and in April following received the appointment of City Engineer. As a civil engineer he is very proficient.

On October 28, 1903, Mr. Stubbins was married to Flora Howell, of Mattoon. In his political views Mr. Stubbins is a Republican, belongs to the order of Elks and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

STULL, E. D., who is successfully engaged in the livery business in Charleston, Coles County, Ill., was born September 5, 1864, in Cumberland County, Ill., where in boyhood he received his mental training in the public schools. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Stull, natives of Cumberland County, Ill. The paternal grandfather, Lawrence Stull, was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. Stull has been engaged in the livery business for twelve years, five years of this period being spent in Toledo, Ohio, and about five years in Kansas, Edgar County, Ill., whence he moved to Charleston, Ill., in September, 1902, and has there continued in the same line. He has a thoroughly equipped stable, operates a fine stock of horses, and his mature experience in catering to the driving public, together with his expertness in horse management, have enabled him to secure and retain a profitable patronage. In addition to the operation of his livery and feed barn, Mr. Stull is also engaged in the hardware business, in which he has also built up a flourishing trade.

On July 23, 1899, Mr. Stull was united in marriage with Myrtle Kilder, who was born and schooled in Edgar County, Ill. On political issues he is a supporter of the Democratic party; fraternally he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M. and the B. P. O. E.

STUMP, Millard Fillmore, farmer, Lafayette Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Licking County, Ohio, August 15, 1852, the son of Louis and Susan (Whitour) Stump, natives of Ohio. The father died in Ohio, and the widow in 1865 brought her family to Illinois and located in Loxa, Coles County. Here the subject of the sketch spent his boyhood and for a period of nine years worked as a farm hand on Frank Jones' place. He then rented land, which he worked until 1891, when he purchased the sixty-acre farm on which he now resides.

On March 8, 1876, Mr. Stump was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of John and Catherine Cuffie, natives of Pennsylvania. There have been no children born to Mr. and Mrs. Stump. In his political views Mr. Stump is a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Salem.

SUMMERLIN, Adolf, the well-known and able editor of the "Mattoon Commercial" and proprietor of the Mattoon Book Bindery, was born in Keosauqua, Iowa, August 24, 1851, the son of Rufus and Isabella (McBride) Summerlin, the former a native of Wilkes County, N. C., and the latter of the State of Kentucky. Rufus Summerlin was born March 1, 1826, and came with his parents to Illinois in 1833, the family first locating in Hamilton County. A year later they removed to Alton, Ill., where they remained until 1836, going thence to Van Buren County, Iowa. When twenty years of age Rufus Summerlin left home and learned the printer's trade in the office of the "Iowa Democrat," published at Keosauqua, by James Shepperd. Mr. Summerlin served in the Mexican War, enlisting April 8, 1847, and remaining in service until its close. In 1853, in company with Seth Willington, he purchased the "Iowa Democrat," which three years later he sold out. In 1859 he established the "Jefferson Democrat," at Memphis, Mo., and afterwards the "Memphis (Mo.) Dispatch." In 1864 he purchased the "Shelby County (Ill.) Leader," which he conducted for six years in Shelbyville, and subsequently bought a half interest in the "Springfield (Mo.) Leader." Locating in Mattoon in 1872, he and his son, Adolf, purchased the "Commercial." Rufus Summerlin was Postmaster at Toledo, Ill., under Cleveland's first administration.

In early boyhood, the subject of this sketch received his mental training in the common schools of Iowa and Shelbyville, Ill., and when but nine years of age, commenced learning the printer's trade in the office of the "Memphis (Mo.) Dispatch." When he was sixteen years old, he was entrusted with the management of the mechanical department of the "Shelbyville (Ill.) Leader," and a year later was promoted to the position of editor. At the age of eighteen years, he began reading law with Thornton & Hall, of Shelbyville, and in 1870 went to Springfield, Mo., where he completed his legal studies in the office of Gov. John S. Phelps, of Missouri. He located in Mattoon in August, 1872, and finding the town without a Democratic paper, he and his father purchased the material of the "Commercial," before mentioned, issuing the first number under their management October 3, 1872. In 1876 Adolf Summerlin bought out his father's interest, and since then the paper has been conducted under his supervision.

On October 15, 1878, Mr. Summerlin was united in marriage with Lucy Townley, who was born in Moultrie County, Ill., where she received her girlhood's mental training in the public schools. Politically, Mr. Summerlin is an Independent Democrat, and was twice nominated for the State Legislature by the Democratic and People's parties. For two years he served as Assistant Supervisor of his township, and for a like period was chairman of the Board of Supervisors. He was Overseer of the Poor for one term. In 1886 he was the Democratic nominee for County Judge, and later, the nominee of his party for City Attorney; also headed the ticket of the People's party as its candidate for the Judgeship of Mattoon's first City Court.

In religion, Mr. Summerlin adheres to the faith of the Methodist Church, and in fraternal circles he is affiliated with the A. F. & A. M., K. of P., I. O. O. F., Eagles, and B. P. O. E.

VANSE, James, Jr., a well-known and successful lawyer, of Mattoon, Coles County, Ill., was born in Ross County, Ohio, November 13, 1857, the son of E. W. and Hannah D. (Miller) Vanse, the former born in Ross County, Ohio, and the latter a native of Virginia. The maternal grandparents, James and Eliza (Harmes) Miller, were natives of Virginia.

E. W. Vanse, the father of James, moved from Ross County, Ohio, to a farm southeast of Mattoon, Ill., in March, 1863, and has since lived continuously in or near Mattoon. He was elected to the Illinois Legislature in 1874, when Elisha M. Haines was Speaker of the Lower House. His wife died February 9, 1894.

In boyhood, James Vanse received his elementary training in the district schools of Coles County, completing his education in Wabash College. He was admitted to the bar in Ross County, Ohio, in 1880, and in 1894 began practice in Mattoon, where he has since been actively engaged. He is a lawyer of recognized ability, thorough and painstaking in the preparation of his cases, and faithful to the interest of his clients, and as a consequence enjoys the confidence of litigants who seek his counsel.

On May 2, 1893, Mr. Vanse was united in marriage with Anna Belle Cassell, who was born in Rolling Prairie, Ind., and, after attending the district schools in early girlhood, perfected her mental culture in the Mattoon High School. One child, Mildred Vanse, has been the result of this union.

On political issues, Mr. Vanse supports the principles of the Democratic party. Fraternally, he is identified with the B. P. O. E.

VANMETER, Dr. Samuel, was born in Grayson County, Ky., November 8, 1824. He was the son of John and Catherine (Keller) VanMeter. The father died in 1827 and the mother removed with her family to Coles County in 1830. The boy Samuel attended the little log cabin schools of the neighborhood and assisted his mother in such work as fell to the lot of the pioneers. When about fifteen years of age he was apprenticed to a tanner, but he soon tired of that, and felt that he had capacity for something better. He was taken into the office of Dr. T. B. Trower, at Charleston, as office boy and general helper, and while there put in his spare time studying medical works. After spending five years with Dr. Trower he engaged in other pursuits until 1849, when he went overland to California. He returned in about eighteen months and again went into the office of Dr. Trower, this time to prepare himself in earnest for the practice of medicine. He began his professional career in 1854, and soon built up a wide practice all over the country. About 1867 he founded the Illinois Infirmary, at Charleston, an institution which enjoyed a national reputation, patients coming from all parts of the United States for treatment. About 1877 he retired from active practice.

October 8, 1848, Dr. VanMeter was married to Miss Frances E. Hutchason, of Greensburg, Ky. While visiting relatives in Charleston, in 1847, she had become acquainted with the young man, and the resulting attachment culminated in a wedding at Greensburg the following year. Three children were born of this union: Fannie R., who married John W. Ogden and died in 1870; Kate, now Mrs. C. C. Rogers, of Mattoon, and John, now of Mattoon.

Dr. VanMeter had a remarkable personality. His lithe, slender figure, straight, coal-black hair, black eyes and swarthy complexion, attracted attention wherever he went. He was a man of boundless energy, and, as a boy, was the wonder of all his schoolmates by reason of his originality and daring. He was a natural mimic, brimming over with animal spirits and constantly surprising by his witty comments and retorts. Many stories are told by his friends in this connection.

He was a Democrat in politics, and his later years were spent in quiet, and in constant devotion to the Christian Church, of which he was a member. He died at his home in Charleston, September 18, 1902.

VOIGT, John F., Jr., lawyer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Mattoon, September 7, 1869, the son of John F. Voigt, Sr., who came to Mattoon in 1860 when the town was but a village, and established a business which later grew into the Mattoon Carriage Works.

Mr. Voigt worked and attended public school by turns, until in 1888 he was able to graduate from the Mattoon High School with the honors of his class. In 1890 he became a student at the Illinois College at Jacksonville, remaining for one year. After twelve months spent in teaching, he became a student at Chicago University, from which he was graduated in 1896. He also graduated from the Chicago College of Law, having worked his way through both institutions by his own industry and perseverance. He at once returned to Mattoon, and hung out his shingle, where he was soon elected City Attorney. In 1900 he was elected State's Attorney of Coles County.

In 1902, Mr. Voigt was elected Second Vice-President of the State Bar Association, and Second Vice-President of the Illinois States' Attorney Association. He was a delegate to the Universal Congress of Lawyers and Jurists in 1904.

He is a Republican in his political views, and is a member of the orders of Elks, A. F. & A. M. and I. O. O. F., and of the Chi Psi fraternity of Chicago University. Mr. Voigt is an elder in the Presbyterian Church.

WALL, John, farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, was born in Charleston, Ill., February 22, 1856, the son of John and Margaret (Kohe) Wall, natives of County Kilkenny, Ireland, who emigrated to America in 1848, settling in Coles County in 1855. They were the parents of two children: Elizabeth, wife of William Grant, and John. In course of time these parents moved to the farm now owned by their son. They are both deceased, the mother's death occurring May 26, 1880, and the father's, February 22, 1888. John Wall now owns 100 acres of land, and rents an additional eighty acres on which he raises stock and broom corn.

On July 17, 1882, Mr. Wall was married to Mary, daughter of Daniel and Mary Faris. Mrs. Faris died January 17, 1878; her husband, who was born in 1821, still survives. Mr. and Mrs. Wall are the parents of six children: Mary M., Nellie, John Aloysius, Daniel Joseph, Esther Gertrude and Elizabeth. In his political views Mr. Wall is a Democrat. The family are members of the Catholic Church.

WATERS, F. E., grain dealer, Ashmore, Coles County, Ill., was born in Saint Charles County, Mo., December 2, 1871, the son of George W. and Mary Waters, who had moved to Kansas, Ill., in 1873, in which place the young man remained until his education was completed. Engaging in the milling business with his father until 1898, he afterward became associated with O. R. Mitchell in grain dealing, this being his present employment.

July 15, 1894, Mr. Waters was united in marriage to Emma, daughter of Isaac and Susan Flora, and of this union two children were born: Florence M. and Drucilla. Mr. Waters is affiliated with the Republican party and has served as Alderman one term. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and also to the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WATSON, William B., County Surveyor, Coles County, Charleston, Ill., was born in Putnam county, Ind., September 21, 1863, the son of Isaac N. and Helen (Bartlett) Watson, natives of that State. Mr. Watson was educated in the public and high schools of Terre Haute, with later courses at Central Indiana Normal and DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind. He became proficient in the science of civil engineering, which he taught in the schools of Putnamville for a time, afterward for six years being engaged in teaching in Coles County, one year in Cumberland County and eight years in Putnam County, Ind. He next studied law, and for a period practiced with John M. Hays.

On September 16, 1894, Mr. Watson was married to Maggie E., daughter of James and Maud Mahala (Davis) Adkins of Charleston, and of this union three children have been born: Nellie C., Vernie and Wayne B. Mr. Watson was elected County Surveyor in 1896; is the present City Engineer and is still filling the office of County Surveyor. In his political views Mr. Watson is a Republican. He is prominent in political affairs and is generally a delegate to all county conventions of his party. He belongs to the Masonic fraternity and was reared in the Presbyterian denomination.

WEAVER, L. D., sign painter, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Robinson, Crawford County, Ill., September 25, 1849, the son of Robert and Mary (Cullum) Weaver. During the entire Civil War, young Weaver was active as a newsboy in the city of St. Louis. At the close of the war he learned the painter's trade and went to Charleston to engage in it, but in 1871 located in Mattoon, where for a considerable time he was engaged in both house and sign painting. Now, however, he devotes his attention exclusively to the painting of signs.

On March 7, 1877, Mr. Weaver was married to Hattie E., the daughter of Eli P. (senior) and Mary (Shaw) Ashbrook, natives of Ohio. Of this union five children have been born: Minnie E., Myrtle, Julius, Lottie and Augusta. In his political opinions Mr. Weaver is a Republican. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

WESTRUP, Charles, farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Hanover, Germany, in December, 1853, the son of Frederick Westrup. The father died when his son was but ten years of age. Mr. Westrup received his education in the schools of his native land, after which he learned the baker's trade. He came to America in 1871, locating first in Cincinnati, Ohio, afterward going to Richmond, Ind., in both of which cities he worked at his trade. In 1877 he came to Coles County and purchased his present fine farm on Section 32, Humboldt Township. He now owns 280 acres in the home farm, and 320 acres in Section 24.

On December 5, 1878, Mr. Westrup was married to Helene, daughter of Aril Van Dalen, an early settler of Coles County. Of this union nine children have been born: Frederick, Bert, Anna, Christine, Carl, Elsie, Freda, Emily and Max.

Mr. and Mrs. Westrup narrowly escaped death at the time of the terrible Galveston flood, having gone for a two years' stay to Texas, in the hopes of benefiting Mrs. Westrup's health. One daughter, who was with them at the time, has been an invalid ever since from the nervous shock her system received. In his political views Mr. Westrup is a Democrat. He is a member of the Drainage Commission.

WHALEN, William, farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Ireland in 1827, the son of Timothy and Mary Whalen, natives of Ireland. The father emigrated to the United States in 1840, remaining for a time in Ohio when (1840) he settled in Edgar County, Ill. William Whalen came to Coles County in 1874, and was there engaged in farming for many years. He owns at present eighty acres in Seven Hickory Township.

On January 27, 1857, Mr. Whalen was married to Mary Masterson, whose parents were natives of Ireland, but who emigrated to America in 1856. Mr. and Mrs. Whalen are the parents of eight children, five of whom are living: Timothy, Joseph, John, Margaret and Edward. In his political views Mr. Whalen is a Democrat, and he belongs to the Catholic Church.

WHEATLY, Carlos, President of the Charleston Monument Company, was born in Coles County, May 13, 1857, the son of James and Mary E. (Work) Wheatly, natives of Indiana. The grandfather, Walter Wheatly, was a Kentuckian. The father, James Wheatly, was born August 9, 1826, and he and his wife came to Coles County in 1852 and settled on a farm in Seven Hickory Township. They retired to Charleston in 1891, where Mrs. Wheatly still resides. James, her husband, died April 28, 1903, before his decease, James Wheatly had secured nearly 1,600 acres of land, which was known as about the finest to be found in the county. In 1892 he assisted in organizing the Charleston State Bank, and was its President from 1899 until his decease. Carlos Wheatly was born on his father's farm. He received his education in the public schools of Illinois and then assisted on the homestead. In 1899 he went to Charleston to reside and in 1903 became an active partner in, and President of, the Charleston Monument Company. He has never neglected his farming interests, and owns to-day an aggregate of nearly 500 acres of land.

On October 10, 1882, Mr. Wheatly was married to Clara, daughter of William and Caroline McGuire, early settlers of St. Clair County, Ill., and of this union one son has been born: Carlos Walter Wheatly, born April 8, 1887, who is attending the Charleston High School. Mr. Wheat-ly is a stockholder in the Charleston State Bank. In his political views, he is a Republican. He is a member of the Christian Church.

WHIPPLE, Charles E., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides, July 20, 1867, the son of Ezra and Elizabeth (Kerns) Whipple, natives of Illinois and North Carolina, respectively. Mrs. Whipple's father was Henry T. Kerns, who was a soldier in the Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and died during the Civil War. Her husband, Ezra Whipple, enlisted in Company K, Seventy-ninth Illinois Infantry, serving for three years, being wounded during the battle of Resaca, Georgia, in May, 1864. Afterward for a considerable time he acted as clerk in the army hospital. Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Whipple had two children: C. E. and Dora May, who died in infancy. Mr. Whipple's death occurred August 8, 1872. His widow still survives. Charles E. Whipple attended the schools near his home and in the village of Humboldt, afterward choosing the lot of a farmer. He now owns 160 acres of prairie land, 32½ of timber land, and rents a farm of forty acres.

On April 2, 1890, Mr. Whipple was married to Eliza Bell, daughter of Mosier and Celia J. Jones, of Hickory Township, and of this union five children have been born: Maudie Ethel, Clarence Earl, Mary Eula, Mina Elsie and William Edward. In his political views, Mr. Whipple is a Republican. He has served as School Director, and is a member of the Christian Church.

WHISNAN, Andrew J., retired farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Monroe County, Ind., April 3, 1839, the son of John and Lucinda (Wright) Whisnau, natives of Indiana. Until his ninth year, Mr. Whisnau remained in his native State, when his parents removed to Cumberland County, Ill. Here he remained until 1855, when he went to Texas. The following year saw him again in Illinois, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Cumberland County until 1871, when he went to Pleasant Grove Township, Coles County. Purchasing 200 acres of land in his new home, he lived the life of an industrious and prosperous farmer, until in 1902, when he moved to the city of Charleston, and retired from active labor.

In February, 1868, Mr. Whisnau was married to Mary, daughter of R. F. Best, and of this union four children were born: Cora, Lizzie, William and May. Mrs. Whisnau died June 4, 1877, and on January 19, 1878, Mr. Whisnau was united in marriage to Mary E., daughter of Ephraim and Margaret Harwood. In his political views Mr. Whisnau is a Democrat. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, being a member of the official Board.

WHITE, John M., plumber, Charleston, Ill., was born in Boston, Mass., December 8, 1874, the son of Thomas C. and Agnes (Maxwell) White, natives of Boston, Mass., and of England, respectively. Thomas C. White, the father, moved to Northern Michigan in 1888, remaining there for six years. John M. White received his education in the public schools of Michigan, and then learned the plumber's trade, studying the science of heating as well. For some time he worked as a journeyman, but in 1900 came to Charleston and established a permanent business, including all kinds of plumbing, heating apparatus, tinning, etc. His father, Thomas C. White, superintends the latter operations. Their building is situated at 609-613 South Sixth Street, Charleston. Theirs is the first exclusive plumbing establishment opened in the city. The firm name is the White Plumbing and Heating Company.

On January 14, 1900, Mr. White was married to Lelia, daughter of Charles and Bertha Pabst, of Madison County, Ill. In his political views Mr. White is a Republican. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen, Odd Fellows and Elks fraternities.

WHITE, Monroe, farmer, Charleston, Ill., was born in Hutton Township, Coles County, August 9, 1844, the son of Silas and Mary J. (Boone) White. The mother was a descendant of the historic Daniel Boone. Both parents were born in Indiana, and settled in Coles County in 1842, on land secured from the Government in 1837 and 1839. The paternal grandfather of the subject of this sketch came to Illinois at an early date and settled near Charleston, but afterwards moved to Douglas County, where he died in the 'seventies. Silas White owned 250 acres of land in Hutton Township. He and his wife were the parents of ten children. Both parents are now deceased.

Monroe White was the second child in this family. He was educated in the district schools and in the Academy at Charleston, Ill., after which he adopted an agricultural life. He owns the farm in Hutton Township which his father entered in 1837 and 1839. He moved to Charleston in 1887.

On November 16, 1865, Mr. White was married to Mary E., daughter of John P. and Lucy D. Hall, natives of Kentucky. John P. Hall's father, Michael Hall, came to Coles County in 1833. Mr. and Mrs. White are the parents of seven children: Sarah, wife of Elmer Wilson, farmer in Coles County; Alice, at home; Milly E., a teacher in the public schools; Ellen, wife of Dr. E. E. Richardson, of Mattoon; Mahala J., a teacher in the public schools; Charity E., wife of Earl E. Alexander, and John S. In his political views Mr. White is a Republican. He has served as Assessor for three years, and nine years as School Director in Pleasant Grove Township; also served as member of the City Council from 1890 to 1896. The family worship at the Church of God.

WHITESEL, John A., farmer, Seven Hickory Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County, Ill., December 5, 1860, the son of George and Jemima (McIntyre) Whitesel, natives of Ohio, who came to Coles County in 1853. The mother is deceased, but the father is still living and resides in Missouri. After completing his education Mr. Whitesel chose the life of a farmer, and at present is the owner of 100 acres in Seven Hickory Township.

On September 26, 1894, Mr. Whitesel was united in marriage to Ida, daughter of Joseph and Anna Newby, natives of Indiana and Illinois, respectively, and of this union seven children have been born, six of whom are living: George J., Ritta T., Harry A., Esther Grace, John A. and Hazel Ida. In his political affiliations Mr. Whitesel is a Republican and is now serving his second term as School Director. He is a member of Prospect Lodge, No. 636, I. O. O. F., at Humboldt, and of the M. W. A. fraternity. He and his family belong to the Methodist Church.

WHITMER, A., farmer, Humboldt Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Perry County, Ohio, December 26, 1832, the son of Peter and Elizabeth Whitmer, natives of Ohio, where both died. The father was twice married and was the parent of fifteen children. His six sons were soldiers in the Civil War.

Mr. Whitmer was educated in the schools of the Buckeye State, and remained on his father's homestead until 1854, when he went to Yankton, S. D., where for four years he carried on a trade with the Indians. He next went to Nevada City, Colo., but left there in 1864 to return to Ohio. He came to Coles County in 1865, and purchased his present farm on Section 15, Humboldt Township, in 1870. He has a good residence, employs help and labors himself.

On November 1, 1864, Mr. Whitmer was married to C. J. Bugh, daughter of Jacob and Rachel Bugh, of Ohio, and four children have been born of this union, two of whom are now living: Eva E., wife of Lewis E. Galtbreath, and Randolph C., who is a railroad man.

In politics Mr. Whitmer is a Populist, believing that principle of sound government is that which seeks to place political power in the hands of the people and to work out a system of equal and exact justice to all, without special favors to any. He has been School Director for six years, and Collector for twelve months. Mrs. Whitmer is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WICKHAM, W. F., farmer, Hutton Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Wapello County, Iowa, December 17, 1867, the son of O. B. and Catherine (Walters) Wickham, natives of Ohio and Virginia, respectively. The family went to Iowa in 1865, but three years later moved to Coles County, Ill., settling in Ashmore Township. Both parents are deceased, the mother's death occurring in 1873 and the fathers, in 1894.

W. F. Wickham received his education in Ashmore Township and very early began work on the farm. In 1881 he came to Hutton Township, but removed to Seven Hickory Township in 1889. Two years later saw him once again a resident of Hutton Township, where he is the owner of 457 acres of land. Besides this he owns eighty acres in Clinton County, Ill., and operates 280 acres in Hutton and 270 acres in Ashmore Townships, so that it will be seen that he is an extensive farmer, besides being a raiser and seller of live stock.

On March 31, 1889, Mr. Wickham was married to Julia A., daughter of B. B. and Angelina Miller, and of this union six children have been born: Ersie, Ray, Gertrude, Carroll, Edith and Mabel. In his political views Mr. Wickham is a Republican. He is now (1904) serving his second term as Supervisor of Hutton Township. He is a member of Kickapoo Lodge, No. 90, I. O. O. F., at Charleston, and belongs to the Modern Woodmen Lodge of the same city.

WILKINS, Leroy, farmer, Arcola Township, Douglas County, near Humboldt, Coles County, Ill., was born in Perry County, Ohio, March 1, 1840, the son of John and Mary (Bowers) Wilkins, natives of Ohio. Their son moved to Coles County, Ill., in 1867, purchasing eighty acres of land, which he yet owns. In 1877 he moved to Douglas County and bought the farm where he now resides. He owns at present 200 acres. He has a fine residence and all necessary improvements.

On October 11, 1863, Mr. Wilkins was married to Mary E., daughter of Peter and Maria (Poorman) Bowman, natives of Pennsylvania. Of this union twelve children have been born, three dying in infancy. Those living are: Clarence E.; Etta Viola, wife of Elmer Walker; Orville C., Owen A., John P., Murray A., Samuel T. and Theodore. In his political views Mr. Wilkins is a Republican. He has served many years as School Director, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILLIAMS, James H., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, was born in Culpepper County, Va., June 12, 1826, the son of William and Elizabeth (Templer) Williams, who came from Virginia to Ohio, and thence to Coles County, Ill., in 1837. Mr. Williams spent his youth on the home farm, but when the war broke out he could hardly fail to follow in the footsteps of his ancestors, for his grandfather had served in the Revolutionary War as a brigade commander, while his father commanded a regiment under General Jackson during the War of 1812. So in 1862 the subject of this sketch enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and served his country until the close of the war, being discharged at Nashville, Tenn. After the war he returned to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture, and at present owns 160 acres in Paradise Township.

On April 12, 1883, Mr. Williams was united in marriage to Mary, daughter of Oliver Newcomb, of Vermont, and to them have been born one son, Oliver, who died at the age of eight years. Mr. Williams is affiliated with the Republican party in his political views, and has served as Commissioner of Highways for thirteen years. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILSON, Charles Edward, banker, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Greensburg, Green County, Ky., May 1, 1849, the only child of Thomas J.

and Lucy Ann (Hutchason) Wilson, who were natives of Kentucky, and were married in Greensburg, that State, June 8, 1848. His grandparents on both the paternal and maternal sides, were children of pioneer parents who emigrated from Virginia to Kentucky at an early day. His maternal grandmother, whose maiden name was Nancy (or Ann) Rogers, belonged to a family which furnished many soldiers to the Colonies during the War of the Revolution, including Col. George Rogers Clark, the leader of the expedition against Kaskaskia, in 1778, which resulted in the conquest of the "Illinois Country," and his brother, Gen. William Clark, the celebrated explorer, who, in conjunction with Captain Lewis, led the famous Clark and Lewis expedition across the plains and the Rocky Mountains to the mouth of the Columbia River in 1804, and who later became a Governor of Missouri Territory.

The subject of this sketch, at eight years of age (1857), removed with his parents to Charleston, Coles County, Ill., and there his mother died on January 12, 1859. Two years later his father removed to Ashmore, in the same county, where he died October 12, 1863. Mr. Wilson was educated mainly in the common schools at Charleston, although for two winters he attended a private academy in that place taught by Alanson Carroll. From 1862 until the death of his father in 1865

he lived with the latter in Ashmore, but owing to the condition of his health, did not attend school during this time. After his father's death he went to live with his uncle, Benjamin M. Hutchason, in Charleston, and during the winter of 1865-66 attended a private school in that place taught by Rev. Mr. Mitchell, an Episcopal minister—this being the last school which he attended. In May, 1867, he went to Omaha, Neb., by wagon, in company with relatives named Rogers, remaining there until the spring of 1868, when he returned to Charleston and there obtained a position as salesman in a queensware store kept by Vanison Craig, which he continued to occupy nearly two years. He then became bookkeeper for George Tucker, the first manufacturer of brick in Coles County to use machinery in molding and pressing the product of his factory. The brick in the row of buildings on the north side of Broadway, west of Seventeenth Street, in Mattoon, were manufactured by Mr. Tucker, and were counted and shipped from Charleston by Mr. Wilson for his employer.

In 1871 Mr. Wilson accepted a position as bookkeeper in the infirmary of Dr. S. Van Meter, but later became interested in other business enterprises, in 1876 becoming a Director of the Second National Bank of Charleston, retaining this position until he sold his stock in the bank in 1881. In 1878 he became associated with George Steigman and Thomas Stoddert, under the firm name of Steigman, Wilson & Co., in the pork-packing business, buying the pork houses built by Messrs. Hill & Co. in Charleston, and continuing in this business two or three years.

In 1879 Mr. Wilson was elected Mayor of Charleston for a term of two years, but about the expiration of his term (1881), removed to Chicago, where he remained three years, when, in 1884, he returned to Coles County to become Cashier of the First National Bank of Mattoon, a position upon which he entered in April of the latter year. On July 21, 1887, he retired from this position to accept that of President of the Mattoon National Bank, which he has held continuously to the present time. Soon after coming to Mattoon, he was elected a member of the School Board for the West Side District, and after the consolidation of the East and West Side Districts, in 1888, became President of the Mattoon School Board. He was a member of the School Board continuously until 1892, serving as its Secretary for the last two years of this period, and in 1894 again became its President. In 1895 he was elected Mayor of Mattoon, serving a term of two years. Other official positions held by him include those of Vice-President of the Illinois Bankers' Association—which he held from 1892 to 1900—and member of the Executive Council of that Association, which he occupied from 1902 to 1905. Politically Mr. Wilson has always been a Republican, and has been a delegate from his county to nearly every Republican State Convention since 1878. He also served as Chairman of the Coles County Republican Central Committee for six years.

On November 4, 1873, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Emily Johnston, daughter of Isaiah H. Johnston, then President of the Second National Bank of Charleston, and to them have been born three daughters: Olive, now Mrs. Arthur L. Davis; Clotilde, Mrs. C. D. Kingman; and Emily, Mrs. Hadley Baldwin.

Besides devoting his attention closely to the banking business for a period of nearly twenty-two years, he has manifested his interest in all public enterprises affecting the prosperity and welfare of his city and county. This has been especially demonstrated in the time and labor conscientiously devoted to the preparation of the matter embraced in the preceding chapters of this volume, dealing with the general and local history of Coles County—a work which will be more and more highly appreciated as time passes.—Selby.

WILSON, Frank E., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in Coles County January 8, 1873, the son of George W. and Mary (Myers) Wilson, of Maryland and Indiana, respectively, who came as early as 1837 to Coles County, Ill. Selecting agriculture as his profession, Mr. Wilson has followed this pursuit all his life, and at present owns 100 acres of land in Paradise Township.

On November 29, 1893, Mr. Wilson was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob and Nevada LaRue, natives of Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were born two children, one of whom died in infancy. The other, George L. Wilson, was born August 14, 1904.

In his political views a Republican, Mr. Wilson has served his party one term as Assessor and one as Collector; also as Town Clerk. He is a member of Wabash Lodge, No. 179, A. F. & A. M., and also of the M. W. A. He and his wife belong to the Christian Church, in which Mr. Wilson has been elder for six years.

WILSON, George D., lawyer, Mattoon, Ill., was born in Mattoon, Ill., January 26, 1875, the son of Matthew and Margaret Wilson, natives of Ireland, who came to Coles County in 1857. Matthew Wilson was a butcher by occupation, but the latter part of his life was spent upon his farm in Mattoon Township. His death occurred in the spring of 1900.

George D. Wilson received his education in the public schools near his home, graduating from the Mattoon High School in 1893. He then went to the Blackburn University, at Carlinville, Ill., graduating therefrom in 1896. For two years he read law with Col. Horace Clark of Mattoon, and in December of 1898 was admitted to the bar. For twelve months he worked in the office of Clark & Scott, when he was admitted to the firm, which then became Clark, Scott & Wilson. In 1901 he embarked in business for himself, and is conducting a prosperous law practice.

On June 20, 1900, Mr. Wilson was married to Maud, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Breesee and formerly a teacher in the public schools. One child has been born of this union. Roland O. In his political views Mr. Wilson is a Republican, and is now serving his second term in the City Council, being on the Judicial and Financial Committees. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church.

WILSON, John, Justice of the Peace and merchant, Cook's Mills, North Okaw Township, Coles County, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, March 8, 1840, the son of Frederick and Fredericka Zeppelin, natives of the same province, who at an early age placed their son in the care of an uncle, Oscar Wilson by name, from whom the lad took his surname. In 1857 young Wilson emigrated to the United States, settling in New York City, where he remained until he enlisted in Company D, Fourth United States Cavalry, March 12, 1861. He was captured by the enemy at West Point, Miss., February 22, 1864, and was taken with many others to the celebrated Andersonville Prison, being removed later to Florence, S. C., where he was detained until January 1, 1865. He next returned to Indiana, but at the expiration of his thirty days' furlough went to Gravelly Springs, Miss., and received his discharge.

Returning to Indiana, he was united in marriage, on April 2, 1865, to Sarah A. Prince, daughter of John Prince, of Lawrence County, Ind. That same spring Mr. Wilson went with his bride to Cumberland County, Ill., but in 1872 went to Cook's Mills and there engaged in farming operations until 1881, when he became interested in general mercantile pursuits, in which he is at present engaged. Mr. Wilson in his political views is a Democrat. He has served five years as Town Clerk, as Supervisor for two years and was Postmaster at Cook's Mills for four years under President Cleveland. He is now serving his third term as Justice of the Peace. Mr. Wilson belongs to the Grand Army of the Republic and to Bluff Lodge, No. 605, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Missionary Baptist Church, serving as Trustee in the same.

WILSON, John A., farmer, Paradise Township, Coles County, Ill., was born in the township where he now resides March 16, 1842, the son of John A. and Elizabeth (Norris) Wilson, natives of Maryland, who came to Coles County in 1837. Mr. Wilson remained on the farm with his parents until his twentieth year, when on August 9, 1862, he enlisted in Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-third Illinois Volunteer Infantry, serving until he was discharged June 28, 1865. He then returned to Coles County and began farming operations, which he has carried on ever since. He now owns 100 acres in Paradise Township.

On December 3, 1868, Mr. Wilson was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Oliver and Mary Jones, natives of Kentucky, and of this union ten children have been born, five of whom are living: William S., Mary E., John O., Martha L. and Charles B. WITHINGTON, Joseph, a well-known and respected citizen of Mattoon, Ill., where he has resided since 1868, was born in Newbury, Mass., May 4, 1834, the son of Leonard and Caroline (Noyes) Withington, natives, respectively, of Roxbury and Newburyport, Mass. His ancestors as far back as the great-grandparents were New Englanders. His grandfather, Joseph Withington, and his grandmother, Elizabeth (White) Withington, were natives of Dorchester, Mass., as were also his great-grandparents, Philip and Abigail (Weeks) Withington. On the maternal side the grandparents, Nathan and Sarah (Niles) Noyes, were born, respectively, in Newbury, Mass., and West Fairlie, Vt. while Samuel and Hannah (Poore) Noyes, the great-grandparents, were natives of the same place.

The boyhood of the subject of this sketch was spent in the town of his birth, and there his early mental training was received in Dummer Academy. In 1849 he came to Moultrie County, Ill., whence he moved to St. Louis, Mo., in 1853, and thence to Mattoon in 1856. In 1861 his service in the Civil War began, and he was mustered out as Captain of Infantry in the fall of 1864. He moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1866, and thence to Charleston, Ill., in 1867, in 1868 settling in Mattoon, where, and in its vicinity, he has since continued to reside. During this long period Mr. Withington has had a varied experience in occupations, but in all the pursuits in which he has been engaged has maintained a blameless reputation, and has borne himself with such diligence, competence, integrity and fidelity to his sense of duty, as to command the confidence and respect of the whole circle of his acquaintance. He has been successively a school teacher, lumber dealer, railroader, farmer, hardware merchant, flour merchant, clerk, bookkeeper, etc.

Religiously Mr. Withington has a leaning to the Congregational Church, to which all his brothers and sisters belonged. Politically he has been an unswerving supporter of the Republican party. In fraternal circles he is identified with the A. F. & A. M. and the G. A. R.
